" The common council requests Mayor Clinton "to write to the Members of the Legislature from this City respecting the memorial sent to the Legislature from this Board relative to the Government house and grounds thereunto belonging [see F 6] urging them to have a Law passed to authorize the Comptroller to grant to this board a Lease for the same in perpetuity."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 478. Clinton wrote on March 20, saying in part: "The advantages to the State which will result from the measure are obvious. The House will never be used in future for a Governm^t House. It is now going so rapidly to decay and ruin that all the rent received for some years back will be insufficient to put it in a state of repair. A Custom House will probably be built in a few years by the United States when the present building unless repaired at an enormous expence will be totally unproductive. If it is let to the Corporation the State will receive a certain income the House will be kept in good repair the beauty and health of the City will encrease by a proper improvement of the adjoining Grounds and our Citizens will generally feel gratified by a measure so conducive to the ornament and safety of the City."—De Witt Clinton Letter Books (MS), I: 244–45. See Mr 31.

Mar. 28 Stephen Gould & Co. establish a semi-weekly called The Corrector. This was edited by "Toby Tickler, Esq.," was of quarto size, and was published primarily in the interest of the Burr faction. The last issue located is that of April 26, 1804.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 395.

31 John Woodworth, attorney-general, makes a report to the assembly on the common council's petition in regard to the government house (see F 6). He agrees that "some disposition different from the present is expedient," and suggests that the state either sell the premises to the city at a fair price or lease them, "not in perpetuity, but for a term of years at a reasonable rent," on condition that the city officials "make all necessary repairs at their own expence, during the continuance of the term." The report is referred to a committee.—Assemb. Jour., 27th sess., 269–71. For the committee's report, see Ap 6.

Apr. — At about this time, A. P. A. Maulouin established a tri-weekly entitled Moniteur Français. It was a general newspaper of quarto size printed entirely in French except for a few English advertisements. Only one issue, that of Nov. 29, 1804, has been located.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 462.

1 A "Plan of the Corporation Ground from the Park to Chamber Street," surveyed and signed by "Joseph f^r Mangin," bears this date. It shows the ground plan and position of the buildings in the Park, and the surrounding streets. The plan is inscribed "Acc[ession] No. 121," in the files of the bureau of engineering, division of design (the former "Bureau of Design and Survey"), in Municipal B'ld'g.

3 The common council orders that the committee on repairs cause curb-stones to be substituted for "the timber which has been laid round the park for the purpose of supporting the side walk," which "has become rotten and unable to sustain the earth which in consequence thereof is becoming gullied."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 486. On April 9, the board advanced $300 to this committee "for repairs at the Park."—Ibid., III: 494.

" The common council appoints the street com'r and comptroller a committee "to inquire and report to this board the most proper mode of filling in the Collect."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 489. See Ap 4, My 12, Jl 11, D 12, 1803. See, further, D 31, 1804; Mr 25, 1805.

5 By act of the legislature, the right to vote in New York City is extended to male citizens of 21 "who shall have resided in the said city for the space of six months [it was formerly three months] preceding said election, and shall during that time have rented a tenement of the yearly value of twenty-five dollars [formerly $50], and have paid any taxes."

Also, more stringent regulations of elections are made. Election inspectors are required, under oath or affirmation, to act "honestly, faithfully and impartially." Before the opening of the polls the following proclamation has to be made three times: "Hear ye! hear ye! hear ye! the poll of this election is opened, and all manner of persons attending the same are strictly charged and commanded, by the authority and in the name of the people of this state, to keep the peace thereof during their attendance at this election, upon pain of imprisonment." Such imprisonment is in no case to continue beyond "six hours after the canvass of such election shall be finished."

Polls are to be open "only between the rising and setting of the sun," and the opening hour must not be later than 10.

The ballot "shall be a paper ticket, containing the name of a person for alderman, and the name of a person for assistant" of the given ward; also "the name of such other officer or officers as shall be to be chosen in the ward . . . or such and so many of them respectively as he [the voter] shall think proper to vote for, severally written on the same paper ticket." The "said paper ticket shall be so folded or closed as to conceal the writing thereon," and the inspector receiving the same "shall cause the name of the elector to be entered in the poll list by the clerk and shall cause the ballot, without suffering the same to be inspected, to be put into a box to be provided for the purpose, with a sufficient lock thereto."

In case any one shall challenge a voter as "unqualified for the purpose," the latter may cast his vote only after testifying to his qualifications under oath.

After "finally closing the poll" (the election may take place "for two days successively, including the first"), the inspectors first count the "ballots unopened," to make sure the number does not "exceed the number of electors contained in the poll list." In 1804 Apr. 5 case it does, the inspectors are called upon to "draw out and destroy unopened so many of the said ballots as shall amount to the excess." The canvass of the ballots must be completed "on the day subsequent to the closing of the poll or sooner," and a certified return made to the city clerk.

A penalty of $500 is prescribed in the case of a person who "shall by bribery, menace, or other corrupt means . . . directly or indirectly attempt to influence any elector of this city in giving his vote or ballot, or deter him from giving the same."

In order that elections may not be subject to interference, it is prescribed that the militia may not be ordered "to appear or exercise on any day during any election;" also that, on such a day, no "officer or minister of justice may serve any civil process . . . on any person entitled to vote."—Laws of N. Y. (1804), chap. 62. The law was passed in spite of the objections of the council of revision.—Assemb. Jour., 27th sess., 287, 294–95; Senate Jour., 27th sess. Commenting on this fact, a newspaper said:

"The whole strength of the prevailing party appears to have been brought to bear on this question in obsequious obedience to the commands of His High Mightiness [De Witt Clinton] who presides over our City. The pretended republicans of the day bow with submission to the arbitrary dictates of this pride-swollen chieftain; in this consists the essence of that independence of sentiment to which they make such an everlasting prattling. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 10, 1804. For a collection of contemporary references to the struggle for this charter revision, see N. Y. H. S. Collections (1885), 297–364.

6 The committee to which was referred the attorney-general's report on the common council's petition for a lease of the government house informs the assembly that "it appears to your committee, from an enquiry into the present situation of said building, it will shortly stand in need of considerable repairs; that it is not probable said buildings will hereafter be wanted for any public purpose by this state, and that it may be expected said building will be more productive to this state, if leased for a term of years to the said applicants, than if left in its present situation; but as the present session of the legislature is very near a close, your Committee are of opinion, that it will be advisable to postpone the consideration of this subject until the next meeting of the legislature."—Assemb. Jour., 27th sess., 313. See D 17.

" "The German Society of the City of New York" is incorporated for the purpose of assisting German immigrants. The charter is to run to 1825.—Laws of N. Y., 1804, chap. 64; The Picture of N. Y. (1807), 125. The charter and by-laws, including a list of members, were published in 1808.—See copy in N. Y. P. L.

7 The legislature passes an act for the appointment of a court reporter by the justices of the supreme court. His duties shall be to report the cases decided by them and by the court for the trial of impeachments and correction of errors, and to cause such reports to be published after each term. His salary is to be $850; and he shall, at his own expense, deliver a number of copies of the printed reports to the secretary of state, sufficient to furnish one copy for the use of each of the courts of common pleas in the several counties of the state.—Laws of N. Y. (1804), chap. 68.

9 The common council passes another resolution (see Jl 18, 1803) that the board's counsel, Richard Harison, be requested to prepare a petition to Justice Kent for the appointment of persons to estimate and assess the damages which the city has sustained by the Manhattan Co.'s "having taken up the pavement and dug up the Streets in this City to place the conduit pipes . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 493. On April 23, the board ordered that their attorney cause copies of this petition to be made, and, together with notice of its presentation to Justice Kent, to be served upon the president and directors of the Manhattan Co.—Ibid., III: 503.

16 The Manhattan Co. having named a committee to meet a committee of the common council regarding damages to the streets (see Ap 9), the board appoints a committee for that purpose.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 494.

" The common council grants the petition of certain parents by relieving them of fines imposed upon them "in consequence of their Children playing in the Streets on a Sunday."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 495.

" The ferry from Catherine Slip to Brooklyn, called "the upper Ferry," is placed under the same regulations as the Fly Market ferry, which is called the "lower" ferry.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 495, 496. See, further, Ap 15, 1805.

Apr. 16 A committee of the common council recommends that the project of a "Tunnel, through Lispenards Meadow" be relinquished, and, instead, that "a Street at least One hundred feet wide be laid out through which a Canal of twenty five feet wide shall be immediately cut the sides of which to be built up with heavy timber." The report is confirmed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 496–97, 505, 509, 515, 531. See Je 4; D 31.

" The common council directs the corporation counsel to give his opinion on the question "whether in case of a fire happening in the City it is lawful for a member of this board or of any of the Engineers for the purpose of suppressing or stopping the progress of a Fire to order any building to be pulled down. And how far in point of law such person would be justifiable in ordering the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 499.

23 The common council orders that the chief engineer "be directed to order one of the Fire Engines to be sent for the use of the Town of Harlaem."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 503, 622.

May — About this time, John Stevens constructed a steamboat which made several trips between Hoboken and New York, and had an ordinary speed of four miles an hour.—Hist. Mag., 1st ser., III: 5; Dunbar, Hist. of Travel in Am., 356. It was a small open boat propelled by a wheel at the stern.

4 "M. Jerome Bonaparte [see N 19, 1803] and his lady" arrive in New York "in their coach and six, followed by his surgeon and secretary in a curricle and four, attended by footmen, out-riders, etc. in a very handsome style." Monsieur and Madame Bonaparte took up their residence in Greenwich St., with "M. Manitault, late prefect of St. Domingo." Their suite engaged apartments "at Mrs. Kenzies."—*N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. 7 Thomas Moore, the Irish poet, writes to his mother on this day, on his arrival at New York from Bermuda: "the novelty of this strange place keeps me in a bustle of spirits and curiosity. The oddest things I have seen yet, however, are young Buonaparte and his bride [see My 4] . . . I go to the theatre this evening, and to a concert to-morrow evening. Such a place! such people! barren and secluded as poor Bermuda is, I think it a paradise to any spot in America that I have seen. If there is less barrenness of soil here, there is more than enough of barrenness in intellect, taste, and all in which heart is concerned."—Russell, Memoirs, Journal & Correspondence of Thomas Moore, I: 158–59. See My 11.

" The development of the shore front at Bloomingdale begins. The common council refers to the comptroller a petition of Jacob Harsen for a water grant opposite his ground there.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 507. On June 18, the board decided to make the grant, "for the purpose of erecting a Dock and making other improvements for a landing place," at the rate of six pence per foot for the first 50 years, and 25 cents per foot forever thereafter.—Ibid., III: 547; Mott, The N. Y. of Yesterday (1908). Harsen applied for an additional grant on Aug. 20.—Ibid., III: 589.

The grant to Harsen was followed by similar grants at Bloomingdale to James Striker on July 2 (ibid., III: 558), and to Jacob Schieffelin on Aug. 6 (ibid., III: 575, 585) on the same terms.

" The committees representing the Manhattan Co. and the common council agree upon three unbiased persons to fix the damages done by the company to the streets.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 507–8.

" The common council receives an application from the Tammany Soc. asking the board's concurrence in taking measures to celebrate, on May 12 (q.v.), "the cession of the Province of Louisiania and its dependencies to the United States." The board appoints a committee to confer with the society on the subject.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 509, 516.

" The street commissioner reports a suitable regulation to be made of Broadway "from the Stone Bridge to Prince Street, according to the profile thereof herewith submitted." (The profile is not now found with the report.) It is thus described: "beginning at the Stone Bridge at an elevation of ten feet above the level of low water, thence ascending to Prince Street with an ascent of one inch and three fourths of an inch on ten feet.

"This regulation is predicated on a late resolution of the Common council adopting the report of a Committee of which Alderman Van Zandt was chairman, recommending a Canal of 25 feet in breadth to be extended from the North River to the Collect, the bottom of which it is presumed is intended to be on a level with low water, throughout its extent."—From the original report

1804 May 7 in metal file No. 23, city clerk's record-room. The report is adopted by the common council.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 510, 571. See also My 28. Two remonstrances, dated June 28, 1804, and July 16, 1804, respectively, against the proposed regulation of Broadway are preserved in metal file No. 23, city clerk's record-room. Another remonstrance, without date, is in file No. 25. It is signed by Alex. Ross, John Cassedy, and others. This one avers that the street will become impassible in rainy weather (by the proposed regulation) "from Dr Livingston's to the northward, and from the Hospital to the southward."

" The common council appoints a committee "to inquire into the rights of the Corporation to the Soil as far as low-water mark on the Jersey Shore."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 512. See My 21.

9 Early this morning the state prison was discovered to be on fire, and in spite of the "active exertions of our citizens," the flames destroyed "the roof and the garret floor on the north wing, and the north part of the front, to within a few feet of the centre of the building." The damage is estimated at $15,000 or $20,000. The fire was caused by the prisoners.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., My 9, 1804.

10 A citizen in a communication to one of the newspapers complains about "the present situation of the lamp-posts." He says: "From the manner in which the lamps are now suspended, the oil is continually dripping from them down on the posts, and these being situated on the edge of the side-walks, frequently obstruct the passengers and salute them with a daub composed of oil and dust, to the no small damage of coats and gowns. This inconvenience might be easily avoided by a different mode of fixing the lamps—for instance, instead of the present one, a bar of iron might run from the top of the post horizontally, (either into the street or laterally with it) 10 or 12 inches long, at the end of which may be fixed the square to receive the lamp, this would effectually remedy the evil, and facilitate the lighting by placing the ladder on the bar. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 10, 1804.

It is also ordered "that the Committee of Leases have the Pond on the East Side of Mr Lispenard's Garden filled up."—Ibid.

And it is resolved that the "Committee for procuring a Lot for a Church, be authorized to treat with the Trustees of the Lutheran Congregation for their Lot in Broadway."—Ibid. See, further, Je 14.

11 Thomas Moore (see My 7) writes to his mother from "Aboard the Boston, Sandy Hook," saying in part: "The environs of New York are pretty, from the number of little fanciful wooden houses that are scattered, to the distance of six to eight miles round the city; but when one reflects upon the cause of this, and that these houses are the retreats of the terrified, desponding inhabitants from the wilderness of death which every autumn produces in the city, there is very little pleasure in the prospect; and, notwithstanding the rich fields, and the various blossoms in their orchards, I prefer the barren, breezy rock of Bermuda to whole continents of such dearly purchased fertility."—Russell, Memoirs, Journal & Correspondence of Thomas Moore, I: 159–60. Moore returned to New York in June (q. v., 26).

12 The acquisition of Louisiana is celebrated. There is a general suspension of business. At sunrise "a Grand National Salute" is fired from the cannon of the Battery and returned by the fort on Governor's Island. The American flag is hoisted "on the Battery, City-Hall, Great Wigwam, Meshonic Hall, City Hotel, Union Hotel, Shipping in the Harbor and all public places." Bells are rung. A procession is formed in the Park,—consisting of horse, artillery, and infantry, with city officials headed by the mayor and sheriff, and accompanied by the marshals and constables with their staffs of office. Col. Van Zandt rides in the lead as herald, mounted on a white horse richly caparisoned, bearing a white silk banner, ornamented with palm and orange blossoms and on which is inscribed: "Extension of the Empire of Freedom in the Peaceful, Honorable, and Glorious Acquisition of the Immense and Fertile Region of Louisiana, December 20th, 1803, 28th Year of American Independence, and in the Presidency of Thomas Jefferson." A map, made of white cambric muslin, 15 feet in length by 9 in width, of the Mississippi, comprehending Louisiana and the Western states, is carried in the centre of the Tammany Society by its members. The procession moved from the Park through Chatham, Pearl, Wall, Broad and Beaver Sts. to the Battery where a circle was formed; salutes were fired from the cannon in honour of the three nations, and returned by the fort; between the salutes the bands of music, united, played "Bonaparte's March," a Spanish piece, and "Hail Columbia;" and the uniform troops fired by platoons and battalion. Then the procession returned by Broadway to the Park, formed in a circle, a feu-de-joie was fired, and three cheers were given, accompanied by drums and fifes.—Aurora Gen. Adv., My 12, 1804. The treaty, which was concluded April 30, 1803, transferring Louisiana to the United States for $15,000,000, was ratified by Napoleon in May, and by the United States in October, 1803.—Winsor, VII: 165, 479, 543, 547, 556.

14 The congregation of the French Church du St. Esprit (see My 30, 1803), meets to form a corporation as a "Protestant Episcopal Church according to the rites and ceremonies of the protestant Episcopal Church in the United States."—Collections of the Huguenot Soc. of Am., I: 430–31.

" The common council approves the street commissioner's plans for digging out and regulating Grand St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 514, 570. See Je 14, 1803.

" The common council orders that bulkheads be built across Charlotte Slip and George's Slip, and that the slips be filled in with earth.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 516, 519, 540.

21 The common council orders that Mangin, Loss, and Stilwell, city surveyors, "be directed to ascertain what is the precise difference of level between the Waters of the North and East Rivers."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 519.

" The common council raises the salary of the street com'r to $1,750 a year, it being necessary that he relinquish all other occupations which may interfere with this employment.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 520.

" The common council receives legal opinions, from Richard Harison and Robert Troup, dated May 17 and 19, respectively, regarding the jurisdictional rights, etc. of the city in the Jersey shore. These are presented in response to the following statement of facts submitted by the board for their consideration:

"The Proprietors of Powles Hook [the present Jersey City] having it in Contemplation as appears from their advertisement dated the 5th instant, to sell lots, and to build wharves, in order to promote the success of their establishment. It becomes interesting to the Corporation of the City of New York to ascertain how far their rights will be infringed by the sale of the land under the water, and by the erection of Wharves."

For this purpose, the board submitted to these lawyers four questions: (1) "Have the Corporation a right, or title to the land under the water opposite to, and adjoining Powles Hook?" Harison's answer to this is: No; it was not given to them by their charters or other means that he is acquainted with. Troup's answer, likewise, is No.

(2) "If the Corporation have not a right, or title to the land does the same belong to the State of New York?" To this both agreed in the affirmative. Troup's answer presents the following historical résumé: "I observe that the grant of King Charles II to the Duke of York, bearing date the 12th March 1664 grants to the Duke, the whole of Hudsons river, and the subsequent release of the Duke to Lord Berkeley and Sir George Carteret bearing date the 24th June in the same year bounds the Colony of New Jersey. On the East partly by the Main Sea, and partly by Hudsons River, And the several acts of the Legislatures of the colonies of New York and New Jersey for establishing the boundary line between the Colonies. the one passed the 16 February 1771 and the other the 26 Septr 1772 determine that the N. West boundary line of the Colony of New Jersey and the S. West boundary line of the colony of New York shall be a straight line from the fork or branch formed by the junction of the Stream or Waters called the Mahackmack with the river called the Delaware or Fishkill to a rock on the Westside of Hudsons River marked by the Surveyors, in the latitude of forty one degrees. These different documents I have attentively considered, and I think a sound construction of them warrants an opinion that the right and title to the land under the water opposite to and adjoining Powles Hook are vested in the People of the State of New York."

Minutes of the
New York Historical Society.

New York Nov.r 20th 1804.

The following Persons viz.t Robert Benson, Orville Winston, Rev.d William Linn, Rev.d Samuel Miller, Rev.d John N. Abeel, Rev.d John M. Mason, [redacted], Doctor David Hosack, Anthony Bleecker, Jamaica Bayard, Peter Stuyvesant and John Pintard being assembled in the Picture Room of the City Hall of the City of New York, agreed to form themselves into a Society the principal designs of which should be to collect and preserve whatever may relate to the natural, civil or ecclesiastical History of the United States in general and of this State in particular and appointed Mr. Benson, Doctor Miller and Mr. Pintard a Committee to prepare and report a draft of a Constitution.

The Meeting then adjourned until Monday evening the 10th of December next.

MS. MINUTES OF ORGANIZATION MEETING OF NEW YORK HISTORICAL SOCIETY, NOV. 20, 1804. SEE P. 1428.

1804 May 21 covered with water opposite to and adjoining Powles Hook?" Harison and Troup agree that such jurisdiction is vested in the corporation, because, as Harison says, "their charter extends the City to the west shore of Hudsons river or to the West bounds of the Colony of New York." Harison gives this added reason: "Because the County of New York according to the Act of the Legislature dividing the State into counties is bounded by the State of New Jersey to the Westward or the west side of Hudsons River."

(4). "If the Corporation possess a right of Jurisdiction over the Land, can wharves be built unless by their permission, and under their directions?" Again they agree. Harison answers thus: "I incline to the opinion that no Wharves can lawfully be built on the west side of Hudsons River opposite to Powles Hook unless by the permission, and under the directions of the Corporation, nor at any rate, without a grant from the State, for the Land to be covered by them." Troup answers: ". . . by the express terms of the Charter the wharfage of all wharves within the limits of the City is granted to the Corporation, and it appears to me a fair conclusion from the Charter that the Corporation is entitled to exercise its discretion as to the places where and the manner in which the wharves shall be built; I am Consequently of opinion that every attempt to build a wharf beyond low water mark (and probably beyond high water mark) on land covered with water, opposite to and adjoining Powles Hook unless by the permission and under the directions of the Corporation, will be an infringement of their Jurisdictional Rights."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 520–23. See, further, ibid., III: 533–34; but cf. 552. On Oct. 22, Troup was paid $40 for his opinion.—Ibid., III: 620. On Feb. 25, 1805 (q.v.), Troup's opinion was subjected to further inquiry.

22 Stages leave New York daily except Sundays for Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington. These are a "Diligence Stage," a "Commercial Coachee," and a "United States Mail Stage," belonging to the same proprietors, who have a stage office at No. 1 Cortlandt St.—Daily Adv., My 22, 1804.

" The mayor's office is removed to the "Picture Room" in the "City Hotel" (error for city hall—see N 20).—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 22, 1804.

28 The common council creates a road committee composed of the aldermen and assistants of the Seventh and Ninth Wards and the street com'r, whose duties shall be to have the management of the "working of the roads, and making new ones."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 529–31.

" The common council adopts plans to alter and open the lower end of Fair (Fulton) St. so as to carry it into Pearl St. opposite to the head of Beekman Slip.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 531, 570.

It also opens negotiations to open Beekman St. and carry it through from Pearl St. to East River.—Ibid., III: 531. See, further, Je 11.

" The common council appoints a committee to carry out an order "that the Broadway and Bowery roads be carried through agreeably to a map or plan thereof marked N° 2, and in the possession of the Street Commissioner."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 531–32. See, further, Je 25 and Ag 6.

" The common council requests the comptroller and street com'r "to enquire into the State of the public grounds near the arsenal."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 532. On June 18, they reported regarding the occasion for erecting the arsenal at the city's expense in 1797, the legislature's repaying the city for this expense and appointing a state agent to take charge of the building, the erecting of an armory shop and a dwelling at the present time on the grounds, etc. The board decided that so much of the ground as was not necessary for an arsenal yard should be under the control of the city, and ordered the city attorney to begin ejectment suits against all persons who withheld it.—Ibid., III: 545–46. On June 25, the board ordered that the attorney, who in consequence had brought suit to eject John McLean, take the advice of the board's counsel.—Ibid., III: 550. The arsenal was the first state arsenal, at Park Row and Tryon Row.—L. M. R. K., III: 923. It was transferred to the Free School Society in 1808.—Ibid., III: 940.

" The common council orders that the street com'r and comptroller "be requested to procure a proper map or plan of the ground in the neighbourhood of the Collect belonging to this Board, And that the Comptroller be requested to consider and report with regard to the most advantageous Method of disposing thereof."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 532. See also Ap 4, 1803. May 28

The French frigates "Didon" and "Cybele" arrive at New York.—De Witt Clinton Letter Books (MS.), I: 258 (in Columbia Univ. Library). See Je 11. The frigates came for the purpose of transporting Jerome Bonaparte (see My 4) back to France (see Je 25 and 26). June 4

The common council refers to the road committee a petition "that the road Art Street at the corner of Sandy hill and the Broadway" be repaired.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 533. On June 18, the committee reported a suitable regulation to drain the neighbourhood of this road into the East River, the road, which lies in a hollow, being sometimes impassable with water.—Ibid., III: 546. See Je 25 and Ag 6. "

The common council resolves "that a Bulk head be built across the Fly Market Slip in a line with the middle of South Street, that the interval be filled in with good, and wholesome earth," at the same time extending the sewer to the bulkhead.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 536. "

The common council orders that the road committee "take immediate measures to work the cross road [marginal note reads 'Harsenville Road'] from Kings bridge road between Jones & Walkers to the Bloomingdale road."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 538. On July 10, the board accepted the lowest proposal offered "for widening and improving the Road near Alderman Harsens in Bloomingdale to the middle road."—Ibid., III: 565. "

The common council appoints a committee "to employ some suitable person to report the plan of a Tunnel or canal most proper to drain the waters from the low lands, between the East and the North Rivers."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 538. "

Two British vessels of war, the "Leander" and the "Boston," come inside the Hook every evening and go out again every morning, presumably to watch for the "Cybele" and "Didon" (see Je 4), the French frigates, which linger at the watering place (Staten Island), waiting, it is thought, "an opportunity to elude these vigilant centinels."—Boston Gaz., Je 14, 1804. As the French ships "Didon" and "Cybele," which arrived here on June 4 (q.v.), intend to sail "with the first fair wind," Clinton requests the British consul general to detain the British ships now in the port for 24 hours after the departure of the French.—De Witt Clinton Letter Books (MS.), I: 258. 17

B. Henry Latrobe writes from Newcastle, Del., to a committee of the common council that his work for the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal Company will prevent his accepting their invitation to New York. He adds: "You will, I am sure, pardon a few suggestions which I will, on this occasion offer for your consideration. During my stay in New York on occasion of the proposed erection of your city Hall,—I had leisure generally to consider the natural advantages offered by the positions of high & low ground on both Your rivers. The Marsh, now the object of your deliberations struck me as giving to the city or to its proprietors an opportunity of establishing a system of dry & wet docks, which, with those natural advantages which New York possesses beyond any other city in the United States, would preclude all possible rivalry in commercial conveniencies, by any other port.—I also observed that the space which might be occupied by docks was daily nar- "

1804 June 17 rowed by the encrease of small buildings around.—The Corporation having turned their attention to this Spot may now give a direction to the manner in which its improvement shall be managed, which will either destroy or realize every prospect of commercial importance which shall in future attach to it. If converted into building ground, it will always be the sink of the lowest orders of Society from its depressed situation, while the higher ground will invite the residence of the more respectable inhabitants. If converted into wet or dry docks, capable of being scoured by openings into the North or East river, it will be the means of securing the Vessels from all danger of frost, & yield all those advantages to commerce which have been the constant consequence of Docks to every City in which docks have been constructed.

"In recommending this Ground as the best site for Docks, I have only to observe that I have in view such a construction of them, as shall prevent any possible Wash from the surrounding Ground from running into them. The whole drainage of the City may be better and quite as easily got rid of.

"In respect to your immediate measures I respectfully suggest that the most oeconomical mode of getting rid of the stagnant Water of the Marsh, & the Wash of the surrounding Grounds and that which will leave the best opening for any future improvement of the Ground must be, by a judicious system of open Canals or drains, sunk a little below low Water Mark and communicating with a sap or Sluice the Selle of which must also be below low Water Mark about 18 inches. Perhaps however some such Sluice exists already."—Wynant Van Zandt Papers (MS.), in N. Y. P. L.

18 As the commanders of the British armed vessels within the port of New York have "violated the territory of the United States, in impressing eighteen men from on board the Ship Pitt within the jurisdiction of this State," and in so doing have violated also the quarantine and revenue laws, Mayor Clinton informs Col. Barclay, the British consul-general, that he is under the necessity of reporting such conduct to the United States government. In a letter of the same date to the wardens of the port, Clinton says: "Having reason to suppose that the Cambrian and Driver, vessels of war of Great Britain, will endeavor to violate the law of Nations by Sailing from this Port shortly after the French Frigates and after a request to the contrary communicated by me to the British Consul General [see Je 17], I will thank you to issue your orders immediately to the Pilots & prohibit them from conducting British vessels of War out of the Port until the expiration of Twenty four hours after the Sailing of the French Frigates."—De Witt Clinton Letter Books (MS.), I: 259–61. It authorises the committee, which was appointed on Feb. 9 (q. v.) to purchase a site for a new church, to buy the lot on Broadway belonging to the Lutherans, together with the lease of the hotel. —Ibid. See, further, Ag 9. See also Pl. 68-a. Grace Church was erected on this property.

25 James Madison informs De Witt Clinton that "The outrage which has been committed by the British Officers in the Harbour of New York, against the authority both of the United States and the laws of the State [see Je 18], will be made the subject of every proper representation and requisition to the British Government." He adds: "A correspondence has just been opened between the British Minister here, and the Department of State, relating to the proposed departure of the French frigates in the Harbour of New York [see Je 17], and their claim to the benefit of the rule of 24 hours against the British Ships of War there [see Je 19]."—Letters to De Witt Clinton (MS.), II: 79.

June 25 In a letter to Madison, Clinton says: "Our Port is still blockaded by the Cambrian and Boston Frigates which continue stationed in the Bay about two miles this side of the Hook. The sloop of War Driver is cruising just outside of the Bar and yesterday brought a vessel to [,] which was coming into Port."—De Witt Clinton Letter Books (MS.), I: 272. John Johnston, a New York merchant, whose sympathies were with the British, wrote some time in this month to a friend in Scotland: "two French Frigates, the Diden & Cybelle [see Je 4] came to this Port for the purpose of conveying home Mons. Jerome Bone [see My 4], the first Consul's Brother—He had just got on board with his Lady,—an American, whom he married since his arrival [Elizabeth Patterson of Baltimore], when to their consternation the British Frigate Cambrian & The Driver Sloop of War appeared in the mouth of the river. This so scared poor Bone., . . . that the same night he quietly disembarked his baggage, of which Mme. Jerome may be reckoned a part & slunk up to the City. . . . To make the matter still worse, the Driver being since gone, the Boston has succeeded her . . . so to all appearance the poor french are reduced to the dreadful alternative of either fighting or laying in the Harbor. It does my heart good to see the cowardly Poltroons lying close alonside the Battery whilst our brave countrymen, although inferior in force, are cruising off the Harbor and daring them to come out."—De Forest, John Johnston of New York, Merchant.

" The committee, reporting on Dr. Hosack's memorial of March 19 (q. v.), expresses the opinion that "the establishment of a Botanic Garden will be attended with great Public Utility while at the same time the improvements which will necessarily be made upon those grounds will very greatly enhance the value of the adjacent grounds belonging to this Corporation." The committee therefore recommends "that a grant be made to Dr Hosack of the leased Lots which he holds from the Corporation upon the same terms which he purchased the adjacent fee simple lots from this Board payable in 2. 3 & 4 years. With interest."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 553. The report was confirmed at the next meeting, and the comptroller was authorised to make the grant. —Ibid., III: 558, 581, 582–83. 11 Alexander Hamilton is shot and mortally wounded in a duel with Aaron Burr at Weehawken.—Eve. Post, Jl 12 and 16, 1804. See A. Pl. 20-a, Vol. III.

One of the Morrises, writing to his uncle, John Rutherfurd, on July 12, thus commented on the tragedy: "Before this comes to hand you will have heard of the melancholy event which took place on the shore of your State yesterday morning and which will before you read this have terminated in the death of the best man who survived our Washington. I forebore yesterday of giving you information of this unhappy affair because in the general consternation which prevailed throughout the city it was impossible to ascertain the truth of the numberless reports. At every corner and in every place where groups of people had assembled a different relation of the affair was given and nothing appeared certain but the gloom which covered the brow of every one. Judge Pendleton and William P. Van Ness were the seconds. It appears that near a fortnight had been consumed in an attempt on the part of Hamilton to prevent the necessity of its coming to a fatal issue, and on the part of Burr to bring it to that close. Report has it that he has been practicing with his pistols at Richmond Hill for more than a week past and it is certain that immediately after Hamilton fell Burr and his Second left the ground without attempting to afford any assistance and that he returned to Richmond Hill, where he was yesterday transacting business with all the unconcern imaginable. Gen. Hamilton did not fire at Burr nor did he intend to do so, his pistol went off when he fell through the agony of his wound. The bullet entered his right side and lodged near his spine. No attempts have been made nor will be made to extract it. I saw Dr. Post who had just come from Bayard's where the General lies and he says that it is impossible that he can live out the day. Mrs. Hamilton was in a state of perfect distraction when she arrived at the house. Almost all the gentlemen of consequence in both parties went yesterday to see how he was and everyone laments the misfortune as if he were a near relative. Among the great number of reports in circulation, that of Burr having shot himself which was pretty generally believed last evening was not the least ridiculous and may serve as a specimen of the natural proneness of mankind to exaggeration on occasions like this. In proportion to the violence with which Burr is execrated by all persons of every party, except his very few intimates, will be the zeal with which they will unite to do the highest honors to his memory."—Rutherfurd, Family Records and Events, 231–33. 12 Alexander Hamilton dies. The whole city is in gloom.—Eve. Post, Jl 12 and 13, 1804. Gouverneur Morris, having learned of the duel on July 11, comes to New York on this day and goes to the bedside of Hamilton in Greenwich St. In his diary he writes: "When I arrive he is speechless. The scene is too powerful for me, so that I am obliged to walk in the garden to take breath. After having composed myself, I return and sit by his side till he expires . . . This evening I am asked to pronounce a funeral oration. I promise to do so if I can possibly command myself. . . . I am wholly unmanned by this day's spectacle."—Diary and Letters of Gouverneur Morris (N. Y., 1888), II: 455–59. De Voe's chronological Index (MS.) to newspaper references, II: 45 (in N. Y. H. 13 The common council passes the following resolutions: "Resolved unanimously that the Common Council of the City of New York entertain the most unfeigned sorrow and regret for the death of their fellow citizen Alexander Hamilton [see Jl 11 and 12], and with a view to pay all the respect due to his past life and future memory and to afford the most unequivocal testimony of the great loss which in the opinion of the Common Council not only this City, but the State of New York and the United States have sustained by the death of this great and good Man the Common Council do, unanimously Recommend that the usual business of the day, for tomorrow be dispensed with by all classes of inhabitants.

"And, resolved, unanimously that the Ordinance prohibiting the tolling of Bells, at funerals, be on this occasion suspended, and that it be recommended to those who have charge of the Church Bells in this City to cause them to be muffled and tolled at suitable intervals during the day of his interment.

"And also resolved unanimously that the members of the Common Council will in a body attend and join in the funeral procession of the deceased at the time and place appointed." A committee is appointed "to make such arrangements on the behalf and at the expence of the Common Council . . . for performing the funeral obsequies of the deceased Alexander Hamilton as the said Committee shall judge necessary and expedient."—*M. 29 Robert Sutcliff, an English Quaker visiting America on business, gives this account of his arrival at New York:

"After a tedious time spent in the gulf stream, we at length arrived on the coast of North America; and on 1st day morning, the 29th of the 7th Month, we were favoured with the sight of Long Island. . . .

"The next morning, about four o'clock, 7th Month, 30th, I was waked by the report of a great gun, which was followed by considerable bustle upon deck. After getting up, I understood that a shot had been fired over us by an English frigate, called the Boston, which in company with the Leander and Cambrian men of war, and Driver sloop of war, was then cruizing near us; and as the cannon-ball that was fired over us, was an earnest of what we might expect if we did not stop to receive an officer from the frigate, the top-sails were immediately backed, and we shortened sail that they might have an opportunity of coming to us. A Lieutenant and Midshipman were sent on board. After spending about half an hour in conversation with us, and exchanging intelligence and newspapers, they left the ship; and, at parting, observed that they 1804 July 29 believed all our seamen were citizens of the United States, and therefore did not wish to examine them; but that they hoped we would not hoist our sails until we had a signal from the frigate; which was complied with . . .

"The different ships of war, which I have just mentioned, made a very gay appearance; for the weather being fine and clear, and but little wind, they had most of their sails spread; and continued sailing to and fro before Sandyhook. . . . Their object was to watch two French frigates then lying in New-York, . . . and, at the same time, to examine all American ships in order to discover if there were any of the subjects of Great Britain serving on board, with a view to impress them. . . .

"In sailing up to New-York, we passed by the two French frigates, called the Didon and the Sybille. They appeared to be very full of men. Soon after 4 o'clock in the afternoon we arrived at that city . . . In passing through the streets to our lodgings, I was struck with the great variety of fruit exposed for sale; such as pine-apples, melons of various kinds, peaches, &c. &c. Melons and pine-apples I bought for 3d. or 4d. each, and other fruit in proportion. . . .

"7th Month 31st, 1804. This morning I was conducted by my companions to one of the Public Baths kept in the city of New York. These Baths are upon a plan I had not seen before. On each side of a long and spacious passage, is a range of small rooms, in each of which is a Bath sufficient to accommodate one person; with suitable conveniences for dressing and undressing. On the side of each Bath are two brass cocks, the one furnishing warm and the other cold water; so that the bather may have the water at what temperature he pleases. There is also a valve, by means of which, if there is more water than is pleasant, he may let part of it out. Some of these Baths are made of white marble; and are so constructed that a person may lie down or sit in them. . . . There are also Baths in a different part of the house set apart for females." Sutcliff left for Philadelphia on August 3.—Sutcliff, Travels in some parts of North America in the Years 1804, 1805, & 1806 (Phila., 1812), 20–24.

30 Clinton writes to Madison that a newspaper of this date states that "an American Brig from Bordeaux was taken by the Cambrian [see Je 25] on Thursday last off the Hook and ordered into Halifax and that Six passengers were recently impressed in another Vessel by the Same Frigate."—De Witt Clinton Letter Books (MS.), I: 285.

" Probably as a result of a communication from Dr. Miller and Dr. Jones, presented to the common council on July 23 and referred to the health committee, "suggesting an improvement in the method of obtaining a weekly report of the deaths in this City," an ordinance is passed "for procuring regular Bills of Mortality in the City of New York" (see My 23, 1803).

Its preamble states that "accurate registers of deaths and diseases contribute towards ascertaining the causes which are fatal to human existence, furnish means for various important calculations, and form authentic records to enable posterity to prove the disease of their ancestors, relatives and Connexions;" and that "the Bills of Mortality heretofore published in this City have been attended with beneficial consequences towards allaying false apprehensions of pestilential sickness."

The principal feature of this ordinance is the death certificate required of the attending physician. Every sexton or other person in charge of a cemetery shall make no burial without receiving a note in writing signed by the physician or a member of the family giving name and apparent age of the deceased, cause of death, etc. Each sexton shall keep a weekly register of the persons buried; and shall make out a weekly return to an inspector in a certain form, a draught of which is contained in the ordinance; and the inspector shall cause these returns to be published in the newspapers. Heavy penalties are prescribed for failure to perform the requirements of the ordinance.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), 572, 576–78.

" The board also orders that "the Inspector" shall "devise such plan as he may judge most expedient for obtaining accurate lists of births and marriages within this City and County and report an ordinance in conformity thereto." The stated reason for ordering this is that "a Register of Births and Marriages within this City is essentially necessary towards ascertaining the augmentation of Population, the State of Society and other important purposes."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 578. Such ordinance was reported and passed on Aug. 6 (q. v.).

The city executes a deed to Dr. Hosack for the land of his "Botanic Garden" (see S 13, 1802).—M. C. C. (1784–1831) III: 583. For this land Hosack paid $4,807.36 in money and an annual quit rent of 16 bushels of wheat.—Brown, The Elgin Botanic Garden, etc., 6, citing record in comptroller's office. See F 9, 1805. Aug. 6

" Upon the recommendation of the health committee, the common council resolves "that in every street where there are public wells suitable persons shall be employed in each Ward under the direction of the Street Commissioner and Inspector who shall three days in every week, as long as it shall be judged expedient, pump a sufficient quantity of Water in order to cleanse the kennels, and where it may be necessary to conduct the water across the Streets, canvas hose, or wooden leaders shall be provided for the purpose. Such inhabitants, as are provided with pumps in the yards of their buildings are hereby enjoined to cooperate at the time when the public pumps are employed as aforesaid and to cause the kennels before their respective houses to be scoured during Such operation. And all families are moreover directed to cause the foot walks before their several houses to be swept and watered every morning and evening during the remainder of the summer season." The board also appoints a committee "to devise an effectual plan for furnishing this City with a more abundant supply of water for public exigencies."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 583–84, 594–95. See, further, S 10 and 17, O 22 and 29.

" The common council resolves "that meteorological observations of the State of the Atmosphere be made at the Alms house every day at three different times and be published weekly with the Bills of Mortality [see Jl 30]; that the same shall be performed by the Physician of the alms house who shall receive a yearly compensation of 52 dollars for his trouble and that he be authorized to purchase suitable instruments for that purpose at the expence of this board."

It is also ordered "that the salary of the Physician of the Alms house be increased to $500 per annum from the first day of May last."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 584.

The following payments appear among city warrants, probably referring to the equipment for the meteorological observatory: Ag 20, to Porri. Rinaldi & Co., $35, "for a barometer and Thermometer;" S 24, to R. Belden, $8, "for a Thermometer;" O 8, to Rich. Furman, $187.43, "for Observatory."—Ibid., III: 593, 610, 616. See N 7.

" Street Com'r Jos. Browne reports to the common council that part of the contract has been executed for filling in and regulating Art St. at the intersection of Broadway (see Je 4 and 25); that there is a lack of earth in the vicinity to complete it, and that it cannot be finished until the purpose is executed first "to extend Broadway to Bowery road near the Elm Tree" (see My 28). He recommends, and the board decides, "that he be authorized, to receive cessions of the ground for the Street so intended to be run from such of the proprietors as are willing to cede the same, And that the Attorney of the Board may be directed to pursue the legal measures for obtaining the ground for this Street from such of the proprietors as are not willing to accede to this measure." (See the protest of Splingler and others of June 25).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 584–85. See also a petition, of Aug. 27, of Alexander Ross and others against "the regulations lately made in the upper part of Broadway" (ibid., III: 594); their heavy expenses to conform to the regulation were, however, met by payments from the city by order of Oct. 22 (ibid., III: 619, 620). See, further, F 18, 1805.

On Aug. 20, a payment of $300 was made to Hulsart & Stagg (see Je 25) toward "filling in the intersection of Broadway & Art Street."—Ibid., III: 593.

" The common council passes an ordinance "for providing a Register of Births and Marriages in the City of New York" (see Jl 30). Physicians and midwives are required to report their names and residences at the city inspector's office. Each is to keep a record of births that occur under his or her care, and to furnish it to the inspector. The inspector is to keep the register, and this shall be open during office hours for the inspection of the public. He shall also keep the register of marriages, in the manner specified in the ordinance, for which purpose he shall apply to the clergy, who are enjoined to keep accurate records of them. In January, annually, the inspector shall exhibit to the common council a return of the whole number of births and marriages that have 1804 occurred in the city during the preceding year.—M. C. C. (1784– Ag 6 1831), III: 586–87.

" The common council orders that the city inspector report the condition of the Oswego and Exchange Markets with his opinion whether they should be wholly or partly taken down.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 476, 479, 588. On Aug. 20, the board ordered that the Oswego Market be demolished.—Ibid., III: 592, 595, 606; De Voe, Market Book, 340. See S 17.

9 Trinity vestry orders "that the Expence of erecting a Stage in Front of Trinity Church, and Mr Collister's Account for tolling the Bells for the Funeral of the late Genl Hamilton . . . be paid. . ."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

It also appoints a committee "to have a Tomb Stone erected over the Grave of the late Genl Hamilton, with a suitable Inscription."—Ibid. See O 16, 1806.

"Mr Bayard from the Committee for buying Ground for a new Church reported that they could have the Ground belonging to the Lutheran Congregation on Broadway."—Ibid. See Je 22; see, further, Ja 24 and F 14, 1805.

10 The common council appoints a committee "to prepare a repast for the Osage Indians now in this City" to be given on Aug. 11.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 589. One "collation to the Osage Chiefs" cost $157.59 (ibid., III: 600); another, $332.43 (ibid., III: 603).

18 James C. Lawrence, who "drew the plan of St. Paul's Church Steeple in this city [see O 3, 1793], and superintended the building," dies at Brooklyn.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 20, 1804.

20 The common council authorises the comptroller to receive from the Manhattan Co. the sum of money found due and awarded to the city "on account of the injury done to the public streets by laying the conduit pipes of the said Company."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 591.

23 "Green vegetation" now "mantles the surface of the Collect."—Com. Adv., Ag 24, 1805.

27 On this day and Sept. 17, the mayor issued warrants totalling $115.37 to pay John Pintard for the "expence of exploring the source of the River Bronx."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 597, 606. See also O 29.

" The common council orders "that the Bowery Lane be continued of the breadth of One hundred feet from the corner of Lovells house to the middle road agreeably to the map presented by the Street Commissioner . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 596, 619.

" A piece of ground at the intersection of Duane and Hudson Sts. having been ceded to the city by Trinity corporation (see Je 20, 1797), for the purpose of having it fenced, sodded, and ornamented with trees "as promotive of health and recreation," the common council grants a petition that it be so treated, and adopts a recommendation that "the old fence which lies in the gaol yard and which was lately removed from the place where the City hall is building," be appropriated to fence the place "provided the Inhabitants in the vicinity of it, will raise a sufficient fund to complete the inclosure and the Ornaments intended."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 596. On Dec. 24, the fence having been previously "inadvertantly sold," the board orders that, instead, $100 be presented to G. V. Ludlow to be used toward ornamenting the lots.—Ibid., III: 655. This became the present Duane St. Park (L. M. R. K., III: 969), not St. John's Park, as indicated in ibid., III: 97.

Sept. The common council orders "that the Committee appointed
10 to explore the source of the Bronx and other rivers in Westchester County [see Ag 27] be authorized to employ a Surveyor to assist them."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 602.

17 The common council orders that the Exchange Market, as well as the Oswego Market be taken down.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III, 594, 606. The Oswego Market was not demolished until 1811 (q. v., My 6 and 20).—L. M. R. K., III: 959. Regarding, the Exchange Market, see O 8.

26 "Bust of General Hamilton. This day the Plaister cast from the celebrated Bust by Ceracchi, will be exhibited by Mr. Dixey for public inspection, at the Tontine Coffee-house. . . ."—Merc. Adv., S 26, 1804, citing the Eve. Post. See My, 1805.

29 Notice is published that on Oct. 1, the "Mail Pilot," the "Diligence," and "Commercial" lines of stages will begin running between Powles Hook and the cities of Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington.—N. Y. Com. Adv., S 29, 1804, et seq. See 1805.

Oct. Washington Irving, describing, in 1809, a walk on the Battery — at this time, thus referred to the flagstaff there: "The standard of our city, which, like a choice handkerchief, is reserved for days of gala, hung motionless on the flag staff, which forms the handle to a gigantic churn."—The Knickerbocker Hist. (1809), I: 159–63.

8 The common council orders "that the resolution for taking down the Exchange market [see S 17] be rescinded and that the said market be removed as nearly as possible to the Slip opposite thereto And that the Committee of public repairs take measures to carry this resolution into effect and made a stairs and that the Slip be kept open for the use of the Market."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 614; De Voe, Market Book, 374.

" The street com'r, in a report to the common council, shows a diagram of Maiden Lane from Broadway to Pearl St., and points out "the narrowness and crookedness of this Street," showing that it is "capable of great improvement and at a very easy rate by gradually widening and straightening it when the present buildings shall be removed." He recommends, and the board decides, that "when any of the buildings in this Street shall be taken down those thereafter erected shall be built to front on the dotted line as designated in the diagram," and "that the ground so to be taken to widen the said Street shall be appraised and paid for conformably to the Act of the Legislature in such case made and provided."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 614.

22 The common council resolves "that the Counsel of this Board be requested to make a case between this Corporation and the Manhattan Company relative to the damages done to the Streets by the lateral pipes for conducting water to the houses in this City to obtain the opinion of the Supreme Court in Conformity to the agreement of submission."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 619.

" The American Hotel, corner of Cortlandt and Greenwich Sts., is opened.—Com. Adv., O 22, 1804.

27 The Philharmonic Society meets in the City Hotel on Broadway.—Daily Adv., O 27, 1804. The first monthly concert of the season was advertised in November.—Ibid., N 8, 1804.

29 The street com'r refers to the common council "a Map of the north side of the City from the Battery to the State Prison, conformably to a resolution of the Common Council on which the blocks between Washington and West Streets from Murray Street to the State Prison are made of uniform depth of One hundred and ninety feet."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 621. The original MS. report of the street commissioner is preserved in metal file No. 25, city clerk's record-room. The map, dated Oct. 22, is filed in the topographical bureau, borough president's office, as Map No. 117.

" Upon the recommendation of the inspector, the common council agrees that its members will "view the situation of the River Bronx and Rye Pond in Westchester County to enable them the better to decide upon the practicability of conveying the water to this City for public uses."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 622. On Nov. 5, payment of $184 was made to John Pintard for "expences of visiting the Bronx."—Ibid., III: 626. See also Ag 27, N 10.

Nov. Aaron Burr, now in Washington, writes to his son-in-law, Joseph
5 Alston: "My house [Richmond Hill] and furniture have been sold for about twenty-five thousand dollars. Seven or eight thousand dollars of debts remain unpaid. My agents have not collected any of my debts, nor sold any of the detached lots. The library and the wine remain. They will, I think, become your property."—Davis, Memoirs of Aaron Burr, II: 349.

" The common council refers to the chief engineer a communication from Mr. Banche "respecting a proper method of ringing the Bells so as to distinguish from their sound the place in which a fire happens."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 623. See Ja 14, 1805.

6 Thomas Jefferson and George Clinton, Democratic Republicans, are elected president and vice-president over the Federalist candidates, Chas. C. Pinckney and Rufus King.—McKee, National Conventions and Platforms, 10-12.

7 The city's meteorological observatory (see Ag 6) was situated at this period in the garden of the almshouse, where the wind, temperature, and rainfall were noted and reported to the press.—N. Y. Herald, N 7, 1804.

10 Joseph Browne writes to Wynant Van Zandt, chairman of the committee for supplying the city with water, his observations regarding the Bronx River as a source of supply, and the proposed mode of conducting the water to the city, and the probable cost. The geography of the region, and measurements of the ponds which supply the river; the engineering works (dams, gates, aqueducts, 1804 Nov. 10 iron pipes, reservoirs, etc.) all are explained, with estimates of the expense of each of these, totalling $263,820.—From the original letter in metal file No. 22, city clerk's record-room.

14 "The act for incorporating the district of land hitherto known as Powles Hook, and erecting the same into a city, by the name and distinction of the City of Jersey, has passed both houses of the legislature of that state."—Com. Adv., N 14, 1804. On Dec. 10, trustees of "the Associates of the Jersey Company" were elected. —Ibid., D 11, 1804.

16 Jonathan Mason of Massachusetts, member of congress and United States senator, on a trip from Boston to Savannah, stops in New York, and writes in his journal his impressions of the city and an account of the social attentions accorded him. He is much impressed by the growing improvement of the city, stating: "The progress of this city is, as usual, beyond all calculation—seven hundred buildings erected the last twelve months; and Broadway, beyond all dispute, is the best street for length, width, position and buildings in America . . . The people are rich, live well, and fashionable, by no means handsome, mostly of Dutch extraction. Their mode of business and their talents by comparison with other cities, in my opinion, suffer. They have not so much information so generally diffused as the New England States have and their present paucity of characters to fill their offices shows it."—"Diary of the Hon. Jonathan Mason," in Mass. Hist. Soc. Proc., 2d ser., II: 8.

19 Rufus King, in behalf of the directors of the "American Academy of Arts," presents a petition to the common council, asking for quarters in the upper part of the city hall.—Wynant Van Zandt Papers (MS.) in N. Y. P. L.; M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 629. On Nov. 29, the common council resolved "that whenever the new Hall shall be completed a part of the upper floor ought to be assigned to the use of the Academy of Arts."—Ibid., III: 633. The collections of this "Academy" were kept on the second floor of the old custom-house until 1816, when they were removed to the Eastern End of the "N. Y. Institution," back of the city hall.—Blunt's guide (1817), 97–98. It is interesting to note, however, that, since 1915, the present art commission has occupied the entire upper floor of the city hall.

20 The New York Historical Society is organized by eleven men, who meet in the "Picture Room of the City Hall" in Wall St. and resolve to form themselves into a society, "the principal design of which should be to collect and preserve whatever may relate to the natural, civil or ecclesiastical History of the United States in general and of this State in particular." The plan of the organization originated with John Pintard. The other founders included Egbert Benson, De Witt Clinton, Dr. David Hosack, and Peter G. Stuyvesant.—Kelby, The N. Y. Hist. Soc., 1804–1904, 1–2. On Dec. 10, the constitution and the present name of the institution were agreed upon. Officers were elected on Jan. 14, 1805.—Ibid., 2–3. The society was incorporated on Feb. 10, 1809 (q. v.). For the beginning of its library, see Ap 13, 1807. Regarding the foundation of the society, see also John Pintard, founder of the N. Y. H. S., an address by Gen. Jas. Grant Wilson, Dec. 3, 1901 (printed for the soc., 1902), 25.

" At the annual city election on this and the following day, the Republicans for the first time get control of the common council.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 22 and 29, 1804. The editor of the Post offers the following comment: "Such is the first chapter of Democracy in the history of our charter, the Common Council having been always Federal till this election. And no person will deny that it would probably always have remained so, had not those who now feel power seen fit to make repeated inroads upon the charter for the express purpose of producing the present result. As the business of the common council is principally conversant with the property, and not the persons of the citizens, the charter had, with perfect propriety, vested the right of electing that body in the freeholders only; but though this might be good sense and justice, it was not pure democracy. The claims of liberty and equality are not to be satisfied short of universal empire. Therefore the police of our city is henceforward to be managed by such good patriots as shall be chosen by all such 'unhappy fugitives from distress arriving in this land' as by any means 'can rent a tenement of the yearly value of $25.;' by such of our 'Indian neighbours' as may chuse to come to reside among us; and lastly their elections will in no small degree depend on that class of people 'who secrete less by the kidnies and more by the glands of the skin, which gives them a strong and disagreeable colour' . . . The truth is, Democracy and Jeffersonianism reign triumphant through the land, and men of character, of sense, and of property, have nothing left but to set down quietly and let the torrent rage. Perhaps the time is not far distant when a sense of common danger shall come suddenly upon those who have resigned themselves to a stupid indifference, & shall stimulate them to rise in their might, as one man; till then it seems useless for a few individuals, more patriotic than the rest, to be making constant and fruitless efforts at mock elections, to stem the tide.

Nov. 20 "And now, since the party opposed to us have got all power and influence into their hands and have nothing to do but to make a fair division of the loaves and fishes among themselves, may we not at least indulge the hope that 'Revenge and malice will at length grow weary'."—Ibid., N 22, 1804. For the division of "the loaves and fishes," see D 24.

21 "I see not many handsome ladies in this city, most of them comely; but the inhabitants generally cannot be said to be handsome. They live well and are hospitable. They are wealthy; they feel conscious of all their advantages, and they rate them full high. There are a great many young men in the city, but not disposed to matrimony."—"Diary of the Hon. Jonathan Mason," in Mass. Hist. Soc. Proc., 2d ser., II: 10.

26 "This day about eight hundred militia in uniform, in celebration of the evacuation of the city by the British troops. They made a soldier-like appearance, but I do not think equal to the volunteer companies of Boston, but superior to our militia. They are made up of the draymen and the mechanics in general. They were reviewed by the mayor of the city . . .

"I received a polite card from the Corporation to their public dinner on this day; but being engaged with my family, I declined it."—"Diary of the Hon. Jonathan Mason," in Mass. Hist. Soc. Proc., 2d ser., II: 10.

29 The common council appoints a committee "to wait on Colonel Trumbull and employ him in behalf of this Board and at their expence to paint a full length likeness of the late General Hamilton and a half length of the Chief Magistrates of this City since the Revolution."—Wynant Van Zandt Papers (MS.); M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 636. On Jan. 28, 1805, $500 was paid to Trumbull on account.—Ibid., III: 680. On April 22, 1805, $700 was paid him as "balance of his account for paintings."—Ibid., III: 736. The Trumbull portrait of Hamilton, now in the city hall, was delivered in 1805.—Cat. of Works of Art Belonging to the City of N. Y. 5.

Dec. 3 The common council authorises the mayor to vote on behalf of the board at the next election for twelve directors of the Manhattan Co., thus representing the stock in the company owned by the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 645.

" The common council orders that the city chamberlain be directed to keep all city funds in the Bank of the Manhattan Co.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 646. Cf. Ja 16.

10 The common council resolves that the Morning Chronicle be discontinued as one of the advertising mediums of the board, and that the American Citizen be substituted in its place.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 648.

" The common council appoints a committee "to report a plan and to determine the most eligible spot for building a Vault and erecting a monumental Stone over the remains of the unfortunate men who perished on board the Jersey and other prison ships in the Harbour of New York during our Revolutionary War."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 649–50. There appears to be no report of this committee. The subject was revived by the Tammany Society in 1808 (q. v., F 1).

" The mayor issues his warrant to pay $25 to Fenwick Lyle "for a Coffin for the late General Hamilton."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 650. The original voucher for this is filed in the record-room of the comptroller's office, Hall of Records. See also Ag 20.

11 Lispenard's brewery in Greenwich St. is destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Herald, D 12, 1804.

17 The common council appoints a committee to report "a suitable petition to the Legislature praying for a lease in perpetuity of the Government House and Ground in the rear thereunto appertaining" (see F 6).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 652. On Jan. 14, 1805, the board authorised this committee "to have a survey thereof made at the expence of the Board."—Ibid., III: 666. On Feb. 4, the petition was ready to receive the city seal and be 1804 transmitted to the legislature.—Ibid., III: 681. See, further,

D 17 F 8, 13 and 25, 1805.

" The common council orders that a stove be provided for the common council chamber; also that the city inspector "procure proper Curtains to preserve the paintings of General Washington and Governor Clinton from Injury."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 652.

18 A fire, starting at No. 104 Front St., consumes 17 buildings in Front St., 12 in Wall St., 4 on Jones Wharf, and 8 three-storey brick buildings in Water St. The "Old Coffee House" (the Merchants'), at the south-east corner of Wall and Water Sts., owned by the widow of Geo. Douglass, and occupied by Edward Borden, is destroyed.—See N. Y. Herald, D 19, which gives a list of the owners of the buildings. The territory covered by the fire was from the west side of Coffee House Slip, on Water St., to Gouverneur's Lane, down East River, and, crossing Wall St., including the houses on the east side of the slip. The loss was $2,000,000. Most of the buildings were of wood. In their places, "fire-proof" brick buildings were afterwards erected.—Aurora (Phila.), D 20, 1804; Man. Com. Coun., (1853), 467; Costello, Our Firemen (1887), 64, 207.

The floating engine, introduced by Mr. Howell, was operated successfully in extinguishing this fire. On account of the low tide, a scanty supply of water was obtained from the pumps and cisterns in the neighbourhood; and the Manhattan plugs were covered with ice and snow, and "could not be found." The Howell machine was brought to the end of the adjacent wharf, and "afforded a copious, sufficient and incessant stream of water from all the Engines within four hundred yards." The newspaper report of the event gives an account of Mr. Howell's trip to Europe to obtain the engines, on a pledge from "the late Mr. Gouverneur" to start a subscription to compensate him; but on Howell's return Mr. Gouverneur "was no more," and, after repeated trials, the three engines were bought by the city at cost. The engines were then "laid aside as useless," till one of them was "brought up to the State-Prison fire," which it extinguished "as by a miracle." . . .—N. Y. Herald, D 19, 1804; and see ibid., D 22 and 26, 1804. See also 1797. For city expenses connected with the fire, and proposed improvements in the fire department, see M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 658, 661, 676.

20 This day is set apart as one of thanksgiving for the preservation of the city "from the ravages of Pestilence," and for other blessings.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 645, 651.

24 The Republican majority in the common council (see N 20) begins to displace its political foes with political friends. The offices of superintendent of scavengers, superintendent of repairs, overseer of roads, attorney of the corporation, and captains of the night watch are declared "rendered vacant" and new incumbents are agreed on. "Measurers of Grain, of Lime, of Coal, of Timber, and Boards, Weighmasters, Guagers, and Inspectors of Wood" are ordered "to return their respective Commissions . . . on or before the first Monday of January next."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 657–58. Valentine says this meeting was preceded by the first Republican caucus ever held in this city, at which Mayor Clinton presided, and he gives the minutes as they were recorded by J. Wartman, secretary. With unanimity they agreed upon the removal of all office holders except the keepers of the city hall, the city prison, and the almshouse. A committee was named "to prepare a list of offices and officers under the Corporation, with the salary;" also a committee "to receive and report applications for offices."—Man Com. Coun. (1854), 451–52. See Ja 14. Later (see D 14, 1807), a "Committee on Applications for Offices" became a regular "Standing Committee" of the common council.

" On report of the chief engineer, the common council orders that the engine-houses be furnished with stoves.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 653.

" The common council authorises the mayor to issue a proclamation offering a reward of $500 "for the discovery of any Conspiracy to set fire to the City," and a like reward "for the discovery of any persons who may have wilfully perpetrated the fire on the 18 instant," and also a like reward "for the discovery of any person who may have set fire to buildings since that period," to be paid on the conviction of the offenders.

The increase in the city watch, directed by the mayor, is ordered to be continued. Captains of the watch in the first district are ordered to be "particularly attentive to the neighbourhood of Burling Slip."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 653–54. See Ja 7, 1805. Dec. 24

" The president and directors of the Manhattan Company appoint a committee to confer with a committee of the common council "on the subject of transferring the Water Works of the Company to the said Corporation."—Wynant Van Zandt Papers (MS). Nothing, however, came of this. The project was revived in 1807 (q.v., D 28). See also O 15, 1806.

31 In this year there were 2,125 deaths in the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 500–2.

" Warrants on the city treasury during 1804 show the following payments for dirt carted into the Collect: Jan. 30, $1,000; Feb. 15, $1,000; Feb. 27, $1,000; Mar. 5, $600; Mar. 19, $1,000; Ap. 9, $1,000; Ap. 23, $1,000; May 21, $500; May 28, $1,000; June 11, $1,000 and $674 (bal. on Ruckel contract); July 2, $1,000; July 30, $1,000; Aug. 20, $1,000; Oct. 8, $1,000; total, $13,774.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 457, 466, 472, 473, 478, 489, 503, 524, 532, 542 (bis), 563, 581, 593, 616.

— Jones's New York Mercantile and General Directory, for the 30th Year of American Independence, and of our Lord, 1805–6, made its first and only appearance this year. The author was John F. Jones. It contained also an almanac for 1805 by Abraham Shoemaker, with a separate title.

— Longworth's Am. Almanack, N. Y. Register, and City Directory (1805), 73–78, contains a lengthy description of the city in this year.

— At about this time, a traveller, writing home, describes his visit to New York, in part as follows: ". . . We find the inhabitants polite, gay, and hospitable, but not so dissipated as those at Charlestown. Entertainments are frequent among them; and, as strangers, we were always invited. The furniture and apartments of the genteelest houses, as well as the style of the table, are in the English fashion. . . .

"There are no grand public buildings, . . .

"There are three market places; but, except a more plentiful supply of fish, they are inferior, in every respect, to those of Philadelphia.

"The inhabitants are very benvolent, as appears from the number of well-regulated charitable establishments; particularly the hospital and dispensary. The prison is a modern building, adapted to the security and health of its unfortunate inmates. . . .

"The slaves are treated with great mildness; but still they are slaves, and their masters have not sufficient generosity to give them their liberty. . . ."—Wakefield, Excursions in N. Am. Described in Letters from a Gentleman and his young Companion to their Friends in Eng. (London, 1806), 170–71.

— In this year, Col. Jonathan Williams surveyed New York Harbour under the direction of the secretary of war.—Picture of N. Y. (1807), 5. See also D, 1807.

— About this time, Wm. Satchwell Leney, an English engraver, settled in New York, and soon flourished as an engraver of portraits. About 1812 he was associated with Wm. Rollinson in engraving bank-notes.—Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper & Steel, I: 161–62. See also Dunlap, Hist. of the Arts of Design, II: 382–83. Leney was the engraver of Pl. 88, Vol. III.

— In this year, interments ceased in the Jewish (Shearith Israel) burial-ground at New Bowery near Oliver St. See 1784.

In this year, a Jewish cemetery, 50 x 100 ft., was consecrated on Milligan St., Greenwich Village. In 1829, this street became 11th St.—Pub. of the Am. Jewish Hist. Soc., No. 6, 132.

The third site of this cemetery, in 1829, was in 21st St., where, west of Sixth Ave., a portion of it can still be seen.—L. M. R. K., III: 927. See also Peterson, Landmarks of N. Y. (1923), 66.

— In this year, Broadway was permanently regulated between Canal and Prince Sts., and in the following year between Prince and Great Jones St. In the course of 1807, the regulation extended to Astor Place.—For an account of these and other improvements along Broadway, see Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 612 passim.

— The original reports of the health committee for 1805 are preserved in metal file No. 29, city clerk's record-room.

— In this year, John Contoit opened the "New York Garden," on Broadway near Park Place, having previously been proprietor of Montagnie's Garden (see 1802).—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 548. See 1809.

— Affairs of the city hall in 1805, began with an order, 1805 — on Jan. 7, that the building committee for the hall be authorised to advance $200 on the contract for marble on sufficient security.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 662.

Then followed another criticism of McComb, which was disposed of by him in a manner befitting his abilities and authoritative position. It was a communication received by the common council on Jan. 21 from a "Mr. Delebagaire" recommending that an artist or architect named Jarrier be employed.—Ibid., III: 674. De Labigarre's original letter is filed with "Sundry Papers" in bundle labelled "Building Accounts of N. Y. City Hall for 1806," in record-room, Hall of Records. McComb has this entry in his diary regarding it: "The following letter was received by the Corporation & referred to the Building Committee. The B. Committee handed it to me on Friday 8th Febʸ 1805. Requesting me to have a conversation with Mʳ Jarrier to know if he is a man of Tallents & whith [sic] he would be of service as a councellor." The letter is entered in full. It is addressed to "The Honbˡ Maturin Livingston Esqʳ, City Recorder," and began: "Several publications lately made upon the building of the new city hall having excited our citizens, I should think it prudent and very advisable to suggest to the corporation the importance of appointing an able artist as inspector general of the said building to oversee on the works and from time to time recommend such methods or improvements as he may judge proper." The writer continued with a mention of "Mr. Pierre Thomas Jarrier, son of a distinguished artist of Parris [sic]." Following his copy of the letter in his diary McComb wrote: "The above letter I returned the next day to Alderman Montagnie assuring him that I could not in justice to myself have any conversation with Mr. Jarrier."

On Feb. 25, the board referred to the building committee a petition from Thomas Smyth "to be employed as Blacksmith at the new City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 692. He was appointed on March 25.—McComb's Diary.

On March 5, McComb informed the build. com. that "Mʳ Jnº Lamair" had told him "that he would attend to the Carvers business," and the appointment of Lemaire was made on March 8 at $4 a day.—McComb's Diary. For the text of Lemaire's application for this work, see Mr 1, 1805.

On April 9, fourteen "Carmen employed to cart Stone and Marble for the New City Hall" petitioned for an increase in pay to 25 cents a load, because they received that much when working for private individuals, and on April 26 a committee of the "Journeymen Stone Ctutters" asked for an extra shilling a day, stating that they had been offered such an increase by some of the master stone-cutters and that "three fourths of the Journeymen employed in the Shops have the wages we solicit." McComb, on April 29, advised the building committee to refuse the request of the stone-cutters because, "when we consider that this is a Steady job both summer & winter & that they receve [sic] their money regularly every week, I believe they cannot better themselves." He thought that the carmen's petition should be rejected also, for, "taking the job altogether they get a much better price than they generally do for carting to Private buildings." The original memorials and report are filed with "Sundry Papers" in bundle labelled "Building Accounts of N. Y. City Hall for 1806," in record-room Hall of Records.

On Sept. 12, Arthur Smith, one of the master masons, appointed March 29, 1803, "quits the Hall" a second time on account of fever, the former occasion being for several weeks prior to Oct. 23, 1803.—See McComb's Diary.

During this period, Mangin was active in the city's service, principally as a surveyor, in spite of his being superseded by McComb in the construction programme for the city hall.—See D 16, 30, 1805; F 20, Mr 17, 1806, in M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 115, 120, 143, 164.

During 1805, the board issued warrants to the building committee for the following sums: Ja 7, $5,000; Mr 7, $2,000; Mr 25, $3,000; Ap 22, $4,000; My 20, $4,000; Je 17, $2,000; Je 24, $2,000; Jl 8, $2,000; Ag 12, $2,000; S 25, $4,000; O 30, $6,000; D 2, $3,000; D 9, $3,000; D 23, $3,000; D 30, $4,000; total, $49,000.—Ibid., III: 665, 701, 715, 736; IV: 5, 18, 23, 41, 59, 82, 87, 105, 109, 117, 120.

Jan. 1 — By this date, the additions and alterations to the New York Hospital had been completed. "Besides the addition of a third story [see F 1, 1803] with a new roof and cupalo, the house had in other respects, been materially improved, so as to afford room for the reception of a larger number of patients, and also for the better accommodation of maniacs."—Assemb. Jour. (1804–5), 100.

4 — "Several extensive flour mills" at Red Hook are mentioned in a description of New York harbour. On the east end of Staten Island, near The Narrows, are "Signal Poles, erected upon the scite of an ancient fort," at the expense of the city of New York, "to give information of vessels arriving from sea, ships of war, (distinguishing friends from foes) and vessels cast ashore." Around these are "a great number of private poles, erected by merchants at their individual expense [see My 21, 1802], to convey intelligence respecting their own vessels . . ."—Daily Adv., Ja 4, 1805.

7 — The common council grants a petition of John Lemaire "to be employed in making and Gilding Frames to the paintings to be executed by Colonel Trumbull," and orders that it be done under Trumbull's direction.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 662. On April 15, he was paid $297 "for Picture frames."—Ibid., III: 732. Regarding these Trumbull paintings, see Jl 10, and N 29, 1804.

" — A committee of the common council reports recommendations to improve the fire department service and equipment. These are: 1. That one more floating engine be procured of the same power as that now in use, and that "two other engines of like power, to go on wheels, be constructed," because "at some seasons the Ice or other causes may wholly prevent the floating Engines from moving." 2. That certain engines be sold at auction and replaced by new ones, "of equal power with the largest now in use, except the floating Engine" (implying that the floating engine is the most powerful in the service). 3. That there be but two sizes of leaders (hose to connect the engine with the water supply), and that the size of connecting screws be standardized. 4. Immediate repairs when needed. 5. "That the Committee of Repairs procure for each member of this Board [the common council], a Staff, at least seven feet long, with a large golden flame at the top, and also for each member a convenient Speaking trumpet, which shall be the badge of Office to be borne at fires, that the same shall remain the property of the Board, and when any change in office takes place, the badges used by any member shall be handed to his immediate successor in Office. . . ." The recommendations are adopted.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 662–64. An ordinance to that end was passed on Jan. 17.—Ibid., III: 672.

" — For more than a month following this date the city advanced large sums at frequent intervals for the relief of the poor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 665, 672, 676, 680, 683, 688, 698, 701.

14 — In a report to the legislature, John M'Lean, commissary of military stores, says: "Great inconvenience is experienced for want of a small magazine in the vicinity of New-York. The one there belongs to the corporation of the city, and is the common repository of the powder of private merchants and the United States, with which that of the state often gets intermixed. A convenient lot for this purpose was granted by the corporation near Old Potter's field, which will revert unless one is erected on it."—Assemb. Jour., 28th sess., 107–8.

" — The common council resolves that "a Bell of 60 or 80 lbˢ weight, and about the tone of G in the scale of vocal musick, be erected and hung on the top of the North-western extremity of the Hudson market; and another of the like weight and and tone on the eastern end of the market in Brannon [Spring] Street [see Jl 22 and O 27, 1800]; and that the said Bells be protected from the violence of the Weather and other casualties, by small and neat, but temporary Cupalo's."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 653, 667.

" — The common council resolves "that the Street Commissioner be instructed to report an estimate of the expence of making a map of the Island of New York, exhibiting a distinct view of the real property therein belonging to this Corporation, and of the roads thereof."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 668. Cf. Ja 3 and Mr 19, 1804; see, further, F 13, 1805; Ja 20 and F 3, 1806.

" — The common council orders that the street commissioner "be instructed to cause maps of this City to be struck from the plate belonging to the Board on good paper, and to deliver one such map to each member of the Board."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 668.

" — The common council orders "that the sale of all Lands the property of the Corporation, and all Leases of the same be by 1805 Ja 14 public auction, and not otherwise without the special order of the Common Council."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 668.

" The street commissioner and comptroller report on an application made by Jos. F. Mangin, "requesting payment for certain maps which he states to have been formerly made by him for the use of the Board." It is ordered that the comptroller be authorised to pay him $33, "upon his giving a receipt in full of all demands." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 668. On March 25, Mangin was paid $73 for surveying.—Ibid., III: 711. See also Ja 30, 1804.

" The Republican majority in the common council continues (see D 24, 1804) to divide political spoils among its friends; among the officers displaced are the comptroller and the street commissioner.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 669–70.

17 The city's laws and ordinances passed and published on this day were published this year by Cheatham, with the title Laws and Ordinances, ordained and established by the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty of the City of New-York, in Common Council Convened, for the Good Rule and Government of the Inhabitants and Residents of the Said City.

" The common council grants an application of the city clerk and the comptroller for the use of one of the upper rooms in the city hall for their office.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 672.

18 Clinton transmits to the president "a project for the defence of this Port" made by a Mr. Lacarriere. He says: "The peculiarly defenceless Situation of this City will be my apology for making this communication."—De Witt Clinton Letter-Books (MS.), I: 303.

" "The Southern boundary of the City & County of New York is a line drawn from the South Side of the Red Hook on Long Island across the North River so as to include Nutten Island Bedlows Island Bucking Island and the Oyster Islands to Low Water Mark on the West Side of Hudsons River."—De Witt Clinton Letter-Books (MS.), I: 307.

24 "Resolved that the Clerk of this Board [Trinity vestry] inform Messrs Mathew Clarkson, Herman LeRoy, Peter Schermerhorn, Henry Rogers and Gulian Ludlow that they have been nominated as proper Persons to be Trustees for a new Church [Grace], until the same can be incorporated according to Law, and request to know whether they will act as such."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See F 14.

28 A "very uncommon fall of snow" compels the common council to issue orders to the public not to carry snow from yards, alleys, etc. into the streets, "except for the express purpose of being immediately carted into the river;" as they would become impassable, and cause imminent hazard in case of fire.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 679.

30 The legislature passes a law authorising the common council "to take down and remove the wooden bastions at the battery and Rhinelander's wharf . . . and appropriate the same for fuel for the use of the poor;" also to "cause the superfluous earth where the said bastions are erected, to be removed and disposed of for the use of the said poor."—Laws of N. Y. (1805), chap. 3; Man. Com. Coun. (1868), 575. See also descrip. of Pl. 56, I: 429, and M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 680.

Feb. 1 Philadelphia mails from New York are delayed, because the ferry boats to Paulus Hook have been frequently compelled to return to New York on account of floating ice. These boats are not properly constructed to meet this condition, being "of that kind which in Pennsylvania are called horse-boats and are exceedingly clumsy."—Aurora for the Country (Phila.), F 1, 1805.

4 The common council grants an application of J. B. Delacoste for permission to use the library room in the city hall "for the exhibition of his Cabinet of Natural History." The com'r of public repairs is authorised "to dispose of such Old Furniture and Lumber in the Library room as is useless."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 681. See F 16.

" The common council orders that the city clerk and the city attorney draft a petition and a bill, to be presented to the legislature, "authorizing persons who shall hereafter erect three story Brick Dwelling houses and stores in the City of New York to place one half of the foundations thereof on the adjacent Lots, and directing that the owners of such adjacent Lots, shall pay one half of the value thereof whenever they shall propose to use the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 682. On Feb. 13, the board postponed consideration of a report on the subject.—Ibid., III: 686. No law relating to this subject was passed by the legislature in 1805 or 1806.

Feb. 4 A broadside, "Printed by G. & R. Waite, No. 64, & No. 38, Maiden-Lane," entitled "Prices Of Work agreed upon by the Society of Master Blacksmiths of the City and County of New-York," shows their charges for making various kinds of iron fixtures for houses and mills. It is on file with "Sundry Papers" in a bundle labelled "Building Accounts of N. Y. City Hall for 1806," in the record-room, dep't of finance, Hall of Records.

5 A committee of the assembly suggests that, in order to raise a permanent fund for the support of professors at Union College, "the government house, and the house lately occupied by the secretary of state, situated in the city of New-York, belonging to the people of this state, be sold by the Commissioners of the land-office, subject to the provisions of the act passed the 16th of March, 1790 [q. v.], at the best price that can be obtained for the same, and upon such terms as they shall judge best. . . .

"Your committee have been induced to report in favor of disposing of the buildings in New-York, in consequence of information, that the houses are rapidly decaying, and much out of repair; and learning that the corporation of the city of New-York were inclined to purchase the government-house, they suppose it may be sold for a fair price."—Assemb. Jour., 28th sess., 83–84. However, the law relative to Union College, passed on March 30, provided that the money should be raised by lotteries.—Laws of N. Y. (1805).

8 "Dr Hosack has a valuable Botanic establishment in the vicinity of the City [see Je 25, 1804] which does honor to us and will be of real utility to the Country. It is the only institution of the kind in the United States."—De Witt Clinton Letter-Books (MS.), I: 312. Hosack's botanic garden extended along the present 5th Ave. from 47th to 51st St.—L. M. R. K., III: 946.

9 "A petition from the mayor, aldermen and commonalty of the city of New-York, praying for a lease in perpetuity of the building and ground thereunto appertaining, commonly called the government-house, situate in the said city," is read in assembly and referred to a committee.—Assemb. Jour., 28th sess., 95. On Feb. 21, the assembly resolved to refer the petition to a joint committee of both houses.—Ibid., 28th sess., 139. The senate concurred in this resolution on Feb. 22.—Senate Jour., 28th sess., 64. Thereafter during the session there is no mention of the subject. See Mr 17, 1806.

13 The common council appoints a committee to report what improvements and alterations "are proper to be made on the Battery, and also their ideas relative to extending, docking out, and filling in on the ground under water adjoining to the same, so as to render the whole a commodious military parade, and a public walk, and that the said Committee be authorized to employ a surveyor."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 684. See F 28.

" The street commissioner and one or more of the city surveyors are directed "to ascertain, from time to time, by actual surveys or otherwise, the true Angles and corners of the several Streets of this City, and their relative positions to adjacent buildings known to be correctly situated, and report to this Board, with a Map, Plan, Diagram, or description of the same; which being agreed to by this Board, shall be entered as matter of record, for the general government of the surveyors, and Inhabitants of this City." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 686–87. No such map has been found. It is possible that the Commissioners Map of 1811 eventually embodied this proposed survey.—See Ja 20, F 3, Je 2 and 30, O 20, 1806; Ja 26, F 16, Mr 4 and Ap 3, 1807.

" The common council adopts a recommendation of the street com'r that a committee of city surveyors be appointed "to ascertain the best method of fixing a standard to correct the measure of the Chains, Rods, and Cords, used in surveying, as well as the best method of fixing up or determining upon certain Objects bearing a true North and South direction to each other, whereby the Several Compasses and other Instruments used in taking courses may be adjusted; . . . which . . . shall remain as Standards for the future government of the surveyors of this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 687–88.

14 Trinity vestry directs the trustees (see Ja 24) to present plans and estimates for a church to be built "on the Ground lately purchased for that Purpose in the Broadway."—Trin. Min. (MS.). Trinity bought the land from the Lutheran congregation for 1805 £6,000.—Jour. of the Lutheran Church (1796–1821), 113. The Feb. Second Lutheran Church had formerly stood there; Grace Church

14 was erected on this site.—L. M. R. K., III: 929. See Ap 11 and Je 1.

Because the purchasers of lots on Hudson Square will want the streets regulated, the vestry also decides to cede to the city part of Hudson, Beach, and Varick Sts.—Trin. Min. (MS.); descrip. of Pl. 106-a, III: 608.

16 The Provident Society, Mutual Benefit Society, Benevolent Society, and Albion Benevolent Society, are incorporated by the same act of the legislature.—Laws of N. Y. (1805), chap. 9; Picture of N. Y. (1807), 104.

" Delacoste, the proprietor of the "Cabinet of Natural History" (see F 4), announces that his collection will soon be transferred to the old library room in the city hall, as he has conveyed it to the mayor and to Dr. David Hosack, as trustees for the subscribers to a loan to be raised to extend the collection.—Am. Cit., F 16, 1805. A catalogue of this collection, issued by Delacoste in 1804, is in N. Y. P. L.

18 The city clerk and city attorney report to the common council the draft of an act "for the better government of this City." The text of it is not entered in the minutes. A motion is lost "to strike out such part of the fourth section thereof as directs that Commission, Stock exchange, and Insurance Brokers, shall hereafter be appointed and licensed by the Common Council." The board orders "that the said Bill, together with the memorial, praying, that the same may be passed, be properly authenticated, and transmitted to the Legislature."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 689–90. On Feb. 25, a motion was again made in the common council to amend the fourth section of the bill "by striking out the words Commission, Stock, Exchange and Insurance Brokers," and again it was lost.—Ibid., III: 696.

" The common council resolves "that in future it shall not be lawful for the Keeper of the City Prison to demand or receive fees from persons confined in his Custody." He shall hereafter receive an annual salary of $1,250, in lieu of all fees.

The board makes it unlawful for the keeper "to receive any slave or keep such slave in Custody upon the application of the Master or Mistress, without the order of a Magistrate or competent tribunal given in due course of Law." The committee to revise the laws is instructed to embody these amendments.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 691.

" The common council orders that the city clerk be instructed "to cause 300 copies of the Charter of this City to be printed, and also to collect such acts, and sections of acts, of the Legislature, as have either altered the said charter, or vested additional powers in the Common Council, to be printed with the same or as an appendix thereto."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 691.

" The street com'r reports "upon the propriety of proceeding to the regulation of the upper part of the Broadway" (see Jl 2 and Ag 6, 1804). The common council orders "that he be authorized to receive the necessary Cessions for that purpose, And to take measures to have the Street opened."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 691. See, further, Ap 22, 1805.

" The common council resolves "that the Street Commissioner be directed to report to this Board at the next meeting thereof a list of the owners of the land in the direction of the Canal or Tunnel intended by the survey of Charles Loss in February 1803; together with the quantity of Land they are willing to cede to the Corporation, in order to carry the design of effectually drawing that part of the City, into effect."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 691–92. On Feb. 25, he reported on the subject, but consideration thereof was postponed.—Ibid., III: 697; descrip. of Pl. 83-b, III: 561. See Mr 18.

19 Recent acts of the legislature for the encouragement of schools having been passed in 1795 and 1801, "The Society for establishing a Free School in the City of New York, for the education of such poor children as do not belong to or are not provided for by any religious society," is organized at the house of John Murray. De Witt Clinton is elected president. The society was incorporated April 9, 1805 (q. v.). From this time until 1853, the public schools of New York were under its care. The society's corporate name was changed in 1808 (q. v., Ap 1) to "The Free School Society of New York," and in 1826 to "The Public School Society."—Our Common Schools; Their Rise and Progress (1886).

22 The Park Theatre closes temporarily, and William Dunlap retires as manager. The performers, under the direction of Messrs. Feb.
Johnson and Tyler, reopened the theatre on March 4 (q. v.).— 22
Dunlap, Hist. of the Am. Theatre (1832), 326.

Nearly 200 of the inhabitants and freeholders of the Fifth 25
Ward petition the common council for a market at the foot of Duane St. Their memorial states "That the Corporation of Trinity Church, having some years [ago] ceded to your Honorable Board certain lots of ground, with a view that a public market should be erected at the lower end of Duane Street; that when it should cease to be used for that purpose, it should revert to the donors. The petitioners have for some time past been in the expectation of seeing some measures adopted towards the accomplishment of that object, but have been disappointed. That the population of this part of the city having of late years greatly increased and still continuing to increase with great rapidity, your Honorable Board must no doubt see the propriety of extending to the inhabitants of this district an equal facility of procuring the necessaries of life as their fellow-citizens enjoy in the other wards. They beg leave to state that this vacant space remains entirely unoccupied, and they can conceive no purpose to which it can be applied with equal propriety as to that of a public market." The petition is referred to a committee.—De Voe, Market Book, 390; M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 693. For the committee's report, see My 13.

Judge Robt. Troup gives further opinion "respecting the " Jurisdictional rights of the Corporation on the Jersey shore." His opinion of May 19 (see May 21), 1804, stated that the city had a right of jurisdiction, at least as far as low-water mark, over the land covered with water opposite to and adjoining Powles Hook. The question which he now answers is: "As Wharves have been erected within those limits, without the permission of the Corporation, and as their Jurisdictional rights are in other respects called in question," what is "the most eligible mode of asserting and vindicating those rights," and, for that purpose, will it be indispensable "to obtain a grant of the soil?" He states the legal remedies, and explains them in a judicial opinion, which is entered in full in the minutes.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 693–95, 712–13, 714–15, 716.

The common council orders that the mayor be requested to go " to Albany and endeavour to secure the passage of bills agreed to by this board.

He is also empowered "to purchase or lease the Government house and ground adjoining thereto for the use of this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 696. See F 13, 1805 and Mr 17, 1806.

The common council orders "that the grass grounds appertaining to the Parks and Battery, be manured . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 696. This is an early, if not the first, order for this kind of care of the city parks.

An editorial on the Battery states: "It is contemplated to 28 enlarge this handsome spot very considerably, and to render it more suitable for a parade-ground and promenade, as well as to do away [with] the danger to vessels arising from the rocks which lie in every direction in front of it. Boats were yesterday employed in taking soundings to the distance of at least 150 feet from the edge; and probably the work of enlarging will soon commence."—Daily Adv., F 28, 1805. See Mr 25.

There are to be sold at auction, at the Tontine Coffee House, " six lots belonging to Trinity corporation, lying on the west side of Hudson Sq. between Hubert and Laight Sts. They are each 29 feet front by 175 feet in depth. The lease is to run for 99 years, at a rental of $15 per annum.—Daily Adv., F 27, 1805.

On or about this date, John Lemaire made the following un- Mar.
dated application for the position of sculptor of stone and wood 1 carvings for the new city hall:

"To the Honorable the building committee of the Corporation of the City of New York The Petition of John Lemaire Respectfully Sheweth

"That your petitioner is informed that considerable carving in wood and Marble, will be wanted for the City Hall, that is now erecting. As he has from his infancy, been brought up to that business, & has worked in several of the principal cities of Europe, viz in Paris, Bordeau, Nantz, & sever[al?] years in London, and has been eleven years in this City, where much of his work is to be seen; He therefore considers himself every way qualified to undertake the conducting & execution of the carving which may be 1805 Mar. 1 wanted & upon as reasonable terms as can be afforded. Should your honorable Body think proper to appoint him the Master Carver of the said building it will be a favor for which your petitioner as in duty bound will ever pray.

"We the Subscribers being well acquainted with Mr John Lemaire and knowing him to be an honest, sober & industrious Citizen and a perfect Master of the Carving business we recommend him & beg your honorable body to grant his petition." The petition has 25 signatures, including that of Mangin, but not that of McComb.—From the original MS. filed with "Sundry Papers" in bundle labelled "Building Accounts of N. Y. City Hall for 1806," in record-room, Hall of Records. See also My 26, 1803; et seq. and Pl. 75, Vol. I.

2 Congress appropriates $60,000 for building 25 gun-boats "for the better protection of the ports and harbors of the United States."—Laws of U. S., 8th sess., chap. 89.

" The legislature passes an act "to continue the Provision for the Public Hospital in the City of New York." By this, the appropriation made in the act of March 20, 1801 (q.v.), is continued for the next five years.—Laws of N. Y. (1805), chap. 21. This law was repealed by the act of March 14, 1806 (q.v.).

4 The common council ordered, on Feb. 28, that, on March 4, the day for re-inaugurating President Jefferson, "it be recommended to the Owners and masters of Vessels in this Harbour to display their colours during the day, that a national salute be fired at the Battery at noon, that the Bells of the respective Churches in this City be rung for one hour, commencing at noon, and that the Common Council will make provision for payment of the expences, attending the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 699; McMaster, III: 198.

" "The attention of the Patrons of the Drama, is respectfully solicited to the present state of the New-York Theatre.

"The Performers, having suffered inconvenience from the interruption of the business of the Theatre [see F 22], destroying not only the reasonable expectations from their respective contracts, but also the customary remuneration from the public at the close of the Season, will open the Theatre under the management of Messrs. Johnson and Tyler; . . ." A programme is announced for this evening.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 4, 1805. See Ap 22.

6 A petition of Dr. David Hosack of New York City "praying for a loan of a sum of money, to enable him to maintain a botanical garden near the said city," is read in the state senate and referred to a committee.—Senate Jour., 28th sess., 83. On March 15, the committee reported favourably and a bill was introduced "for the support of a botanical garden within the city and county of New York." The senate adjourned, however, before the bill was passed.—Ibid., 28th sess., 95, 97, 102. See Ja 28, 1806.

7 The common council refers to the ferry committee a memorial of Abraham Cannon "for leave to establish a ferry from Grand Street, to Morrells point."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 700. See, further, Mr 25.

" The common council refers to a committee a petition of Henry Rutgers and others "that measures may be adopted to prevent the evils arising from the too great number of Taverns in the City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 701.

11 The common council orders "that the Inspector be directed to have maps of the City put on rollers, for the use of the members . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 703.

" The common council directs the street commissioner and city inspector "to survey Water Street and Front Street, between the old Slip, and the Coffee-house Slip, where buildings were destroyed by the late fire, with a view to ascertain whether any improvements can be made in the Streets."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 703–4.

" The street commissioner reports an ordinance "for making the side walks in the Bowery, between Bullock and Art Streets." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 704.

" The common council adopts new regulations for leasing the ferries.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 704–5.

18 The common council grants an application, made by Rufus King in behalf of the Academy of Arts, "for liberty to deposit Statues belonging to the Society, in a vacant place in the City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 707.

" "The Committee upon the subject of the Tunnel" presents a report in favour of an open canal, to pass through a street of 100 ft. in breadth, and the council resolves "that a Street of 100 feet in Breadth be accordingly laid out; that the Street Commissioner be authorized to receive Cessions for that purpose, from the proprietors who are willing to cede, and that legal measures be taken to procure any deficiency of Ground which may be necessary for that purpose; and that a Canal of [blank] feet in breadth, and [blank] feet in depth be constructed of Brick or stone, under the direction of the Street Commissioner."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 708. Reference is to Canal St. See Ap 15. Mar. 18

The common council orders that the street com'r be requested, "at the expence of the applicants for a new ferry, from Grand Street to Bushwick, to direct a survey to be made for the purpose of ascertaining the distances across the river, the course of the tides, and eddies, and the situation of points and reefs, in order to enable the Board to determine with accuracy, which is the most proper place for a Ferry, across the East river, from Corlaers hook."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 713. See My 27. 25

The city ordinance regulating sales at auction is amended. The sheriff and other officers are permitted "to sell goods taken on Execution, at the Horse market, near the new Watch house, at the Exchange market, at the house of —— Burgois, in Greenwich Street, near Vesey Street, at the corner of the Park, near Saint Pauls church, and at no other place, Excepting, nevertheless, that they be respectively permitted to sell Lumber, which may be taken in Execution, at, or near the place, where the same shall be seized . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 714. "

The common council resolves "that the exterior walk round the Battery, be raised, at least, Six Inches above the present heighth, and the whole covered with gravel; and that the remainder of the Timber, and materials of which the batteries were constructed, be removed—and that the Superintendant of repairs carry the same into effect."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 714. See Je 17. "

The common council appoints a committee "to examine the situation of the Collect; for the purpose of removing nuisances occasioned thereby."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 714. For the committee's report, see Ap 1. "

The Merchants' Bank (see Ap 7, 1803) is incorporated by act of the legislature.—Laws of N. Y. (1805), chap. 43. For a discussion of the struggle of the bank to secure this charter, see Hubert, The Merchants' National Bank, 1803–1903, 52–74. 26

The following orders signed by Solomon Van Rensselær, adjutant-general, are issued from headquarters at Albany: "The commander in chief conceiving an organization of the Artillery, Tending to introduce an uniformity of discipline, and to excite emulation, by affording the same means of promotion to the officers attached to that service that exists in the infantry to be an essential ingredient in the military establishment, orders and directs, that the various artillery corps throughout the state be consolidated into one division, to be commanded by Major-General Ebenezer Stevens—That said division be divided into the brigades, to be denominated the first, second and third brigades of artillery. That the first brigade be commanded by Brigadier General Jacob Morton, and consists of the first and second regiments of artillery in the city of New-York, and the battalion to be commanded by Major John Ten Eyck; that the regiment of artillery commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Peter Curtenius, in the city of New-York, be denominated the first regiment of artillery, and consists of two battalions, the first to be commanded by Major John C. Ludlow, as first major of said regiment, and the second by Major James Manning, as second major of said regiment." Much detailed information follows regarding various state military bodies.—Com. Adv., Ap 16, 1805. 27

The duties paid at the port of New York during four years commencing April 1, 1801, and ending March 31, 1805, amounted to $12,862,020.14. Philadelphia in the same time produced $7,777,965.14; Boston, $6,408,400.28; Baltimore, $3,861,963.08; and Charleston, $3,061,693.54. "This shows the comparative trade of the five largest commercial towns in America."—Janson, C. W., The Stranger in Am. (1807), 92. 31

"I was informed, that a piece of ground in the park, which, seven years ago, was not worth fifty dollars, had been recently disposed of, for the purpose of building upon, for five hundred pounds, currency of the state, which is eight shillings to the dollar."—Ibid., 93.

A petition of Abraham Shoemaker "for liberty to conduct the Ap 1

1805 Apr. 1 Water of the late Tea Water Pump into Orange Street" is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 715. On May 6, the petition was granted "during the pleasure of the Common Council" provided Shoemaker "construct his works under the direction of the Street Commissioner."—Ibid., III: 746.

" The street commissioner having recently received an offer of several thousand loads of dirt if taken away immediately, the common council revives a resolution of May 12, 1803 (q. v.), authorising him to buy dirt for filling in the Collect at five cents a cart-load.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 718.

"The Committee to whom it was referred to examine into the state of the collect" reports that it is "filled with the bodies of dead animals, and dangerous to the health of the Citizens in its vicinity." The board orders that the superintendent of scavengers "cause the carcasses of dead animals and other substances liable to putrefaction to be removed and buried," and that the street commissioner "cause Tunnels or sewers to be made and pass through the dam to carry off the water; and that he cause the head of the collect to be filled in with good and wholesome Earth."—Ibid., III: 719, 727; Com. Adv., Ap 6, 1805; Man. Com. Coun. (1860), 565. See also the board's contract with a Mr. Crumb, who undertakes to remove dirt into the Collect.—Ibid. See, further, D 31.

2 The legislature passes "An Act to raise a Fund for the Encouragement of Common Schools." This provides that the net proceeds from the sale of the next 500,000 acres of vacant state land shall be appropriated as a permanent fund for this purpose. The comptroller is authorised to lend this money at six per cent. until the annual interest arising from the fund amounts to $50,000, after which this interest "shall be distributed and applied for the support of common schools in such manner as the legislature shall direct."—Laws of N. Y. (1805), chap. 66.

" A petition is being circulated for signatures, asking the common council "to cut a road from the corner of old Potter's-field across the swamp near the Powder-house, and to extend to the new Harlem road on the hill." Objection is made to it by a citizen because it is of no benefit, an expense which the city cannot afford, and unjust to the private owners of the property.—Daily Adv., Ap 2, 1805.

5 The "Swift-Sure Stage, A New Line, Running between New-York and Philadelphia" (cf. S 29, 1804), is inaugurated. "Fare . . . through, 5 Dollars—Way passengers, 6 cents per mile—150 wt. of baggage the same as a passenger, with the usual allowance of 14 lb. gratis. All goods and baggage, at the risk of the owners, unless insured and receipted for by the clerk of said stage. Baggage insured in this Stage for one per cent. . . . S. Pierson, Woolley & Co."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ap 5; and Com. Adv., Ap 30, 1805. See also 1805. Accompanying the ads. of this stage-line, is a small wood-cut view of a stage-coach, differing in design from that of the "Mail Pilot," etc., first noticed on S 29, 1804 (q. v.). Edward Bardin, now at 44 Pine St., became one of the New York ticket-agents.—See a second ad. of this stage-line in ibid., Ag 8, 1805.

8 Alexander Hamilton's country-seat, "The Grange," is sold at public auction at the Tontine Coffee House to Archibald Gracie for $30,500.—Merc. Adv., Ap 9, 1805. For a descrip. of "The Grange," see 18th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1913), 150–54. See also descrip. of Pl. 153-c, III: 774.

9 The legislature directs the secretary of state "to cause such of the records in his office which are written in the Dutch language, and which shall be designated by the person administering the government of this state, to be translated into English, and to be transcribed in proper books to be provided for that purpose, which translations when so transcribed, shall be deposited in the office of the secretary of this state as part of the records thereof."—Laws of N. Y. (1805), chap. 96. James Van Ingen of Albany was appointed to make the translations.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 24, 1805. In April and November of this year, Van Ingen gave receipts for certain of the Dutch records, but though these remained in his hands for a number of years, no translations were made.—Van Laer, The Translation and Publication of the MS. Dutch Rec. of N. Neth. with an Account of previous Attempts at Translation (1910), 10. The matter was taken up again in 1813 (q. v., Ap 6).

" The legislature incorporates "The Society for establishing a free school in the city of New-York, for the education of such poor children as do not belong to or are not provided for by any religious society."—Laws of N. Y. (1805), chap. 108. The society was organized on Feb. 19 (q. v.). Apr. 9

" "The Society of Tammany or Columbian order, in the city of New-York" is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1805), chap. 115; Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City, appendix 12. See Jl 15.

Trinity vestry appoints a committee "to obtain proper Estimates of the Expence that will attend the building a Church upon the Plan furnished by Mr West."—Trin. Min. (MS.). The corner-stone of the church (Grace) was laid at Broadway and Rector St. on March 18, 1806 (q. v.), and the building consecrated on Dec. 21, 1808 (q. v.). 11

The Corlaers Hook ferry is established. It operates between Corlear's Hook and Williamsburgh, L. I.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ap 15, 1805. 15

The street commissioner is ordered to "cause the line of Canal Street to be run," and to "give notice to the proprietors, not to build in such a manner as to interfere with the regulation of that Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 730. For the commissioner's notice, see My 4. "

The ferries are leased to the highest bidders as follows: Fly Market ferry, to Josiah Browne, $3,050; Catharine Slip ferry, to Dirck Amerman, $1,275; Old Wehawk ferry, to Garret Neefie, $50; Bulls ferry, to Garret Neefie, $20; Hoboken ferry, to Peter Voorhis, $350; New Wehawk ferry, to Charles Earle, $50.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 731. For the last-named ferry, see L. M. R. K., III: 942–43. "

The common council orders that the street com'r examine and report the best places "for laying out three roads between the two and seven mile stones, running from the East to Hudson River, and crossing the middle road as nearly as possible at right Angles."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 731. See Ap 29.

The corner-stone of a new coffee-house is laid by Edw. Bardin on the site of the Merchant's Coffee House, which was destroyed by fire on Dec. 4 last (q. v.). Bardin names it "the Phœnix Coffee-House," because it rose from the flames and ashes of the old house.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ap 20, 1805; L. M. R. K., III: 980. See, further, D 20. 18

Delacroix publishes a notice that "the Garden, lately known by the name of Vauxhall" (on the old Bayard place), "is at present open, and will continue to be so for the whole of this season. 20

"The New Vauxhall [see Ja 30, 1804], facing the Bowery and Broadway, will be ready for the reception of company in the course of the next month, and will be opened by a grand gala, in the style of London Vauxhall."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ap 20, 1805. See, further, Je 5.

"Mr Hodgkinson has taken the New-York Theatre on a lease of five years."—Boston Gaz., Ap 22, 1805. See Ap 23, 1806. 22

The street commissioner's reports to the common council that "he has obtained the consent of all the proprietors of ground through which Broadway is to be extend[ed] (between Art Street & the Tulip tree) to cede to the Corporation their proportion of the ground for said street, except David Dunham & Thomas & Samuel Burling & those occupying as tenants under them. Mr Springler however will not cede [see also Je 25 and Ag 6, 1804] unless he is exonerated from all further costs, as Broadway will run lengthways through his ground & leave him a gore on the Bowery road." "

The street commissioner believes it will be necessary for the sheriff's jury to determine the compensation to be granted for the desired land. The board orders that measures be taken accordingly.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 734.

On receiving a report of the road committee, the common council orders, among other things, that the Abingdon Road "be continued through by Bishop Moores to the North river;" that "Main Cross Roads, at Inclenburgh, from River to river to be opened;" and the same "at Harsens."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 736–37. 29

Henry A. Coster purchases the property at the north-west corner of 30th St. and First Ave., originally part of the Kip's Bay Farm. Shortly after this, he erected the well-known Coster mansion there.—Liber Deeds, LXXI: 141; L. M. R. K., III: 949. The house is shown on Pl. 153-d, Vol. III. In 1835 (q. v.), it was sold to Anson G. Phelps, in whose possession the property extended from Third Ave. to the East River, and from 29th to half way between 33d and 34th Sts. First Ave. and the side streets were not opened in this neighbourhood until about 1852.—Stokes Records, I: 13, et seq. 30

In this month, the stockholders of the Tontine Coffee House My—

1805 May — appointed a committee to inspect its accounts. The committee's report (MS.), reviewing the financial affairs of the establishment from 1798, is now preserved in a volume lettered New York Tontine Coffee House, containing papers relating to the tontine, presented to the N. Y. H. S. by John Watts De Peyster, May 3, 1892. See, further, S 7.

4 "A menage of living Animals and Birds is forming in this city, for public exhibition. . . . They are to be seen at the upper end of Broadway road, near the Fire Engine, and a little beyond Dr. Livingstone's home."—N. Y. Com. Adv., My 17, 1805.

" John S. Hunn, street commissioner, issues the following notice: "The Corporation of the City of New-York having declared Canal Street to be one hundred feet wide [see Mr 18] from Hudson's River to Rynder-street, near the Collect Pond, and the same being now staked out; all persons are hereby for[e]warned building or improving upon any part of the said street, on pain of having their buildings removed without compensation, and incuring the fines for infringing on the laws which will in all cases be rigorously enforced."—Am. Cit., My 9, 1805. See D 30.

6 The New England Society is organized and holds its first public meeting at the City Hotel. Subsequent meetings, for some years, were held at Ross's Hotel (Broad St.), the Tontine Coffee House (Wall St.), Bardin's Long Room (Broad St.), and Benjamin Butler's (Wall St.). In 1812, the Society settled at Niblo's Bank Coffee House.—Mag. of Am. Hist. (1884), XI: 33–37. See D 21.

" The common council grants a petition of Abraham Shoemaker "to erect his Waterworks in such manner as to convey the water into the Carts in Orange Street." He formerly "took the Water from Chatham Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 746.

13 The committee to which was referred the petition for a market at the foot of Duane St. (see F 25) reports favourably, saying that "Trinity Church having declared and reserved this place for a market, the present proprietors of the property around it purchased at an advanced price in consequence, and the improvements in the neighborhood will warrant a market to be erected." The report, however, is recommitted and the committee is ordered to inform the board regarding "the expence of the said market, and of extending the wharf."—De Voe, Market Book, 390–91; M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 749. The market was not built until 1807 (q.v., Ap 27).

" "The Corporation of the Presbyterian Church having requested that the engine house standing on their ground in Nassau Street may be removed," the common council orders "that the engine House in the City Hall yard [on Wall St.] be extended, so as to admit the deposit [there] of the engine [which is now] on the said ground belonging to the Presbyterian Church."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 749.

" The common council orders "that the assessors in the respective wards of this City when making their assessments be requested to add a separate column to their Books, and to insert therein a list of the houses which have been built during the preceding year, and are now building, in order to discover and ascertain the progress of improvement in this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 751.

20 The market committee reports concerning a petition of Jacamiah Ackerly and others for a new fish market at Catharine Slip that "the request of the petitioners ought to be granted, and that by driving about half a dozen piles in the Slip on the Easterly side thereof and by raising the Market about 18 inches from the present plates on the Slip and to be 30 feet on Water Street and 18 feet on the Slip, and would be no inconvenience to the Ferry, and by Standing so high from the Water, Market Boats could safely lay under the market and by having a stairs under one end of the market would be a great convenience to the Fishermen and Market Boats, and we are of opinion that the expence would not exceed 500 Dollars." The report is confirmed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), III: 729; IV: 3. A fish market at Catharine Slip had been suggested as early as 1803.—Ibid., III: 247.

" Charles Loss makes a survey to ascertain the best direction for a new road along the North or Hudson River. This shows the shore as far east as the Bloomingdale Road, including the original buildings and farms, several of which are in perspective, notably the little church at Harsenville. See original in the old office of engineer of street openings (now bureau of topography, borough president's office).

23 The board of health passes the following resolution: "That all vessels which may have arrived at this port, from any port or place in the West-Indies, since the 18th of May instant, be directed forthwith to leave the wharves, and haul out into the stream, to the distance of at least three hundred yards from that part of the island, which lies southward of a line drawn from the house owned and occupied by William Bayard, on the north river, and Stuyvesant's dock upon the east river, and that the same regulation shall be observed, with respect to all vessels which may hereafter arrive from the West Indies, under the penalty of being prosecuted according to law."—Hardie, Account of the Malignant Fever which prevailed in the City of N. Y. during the Autumn of 1805, 22–23. See Jl 11. May 23

The street commissioner reports on a survey which he has directed to be made "across the East River at Corlaers hook with a view of ascertaining the distance, situation, course of the tides and eddies and other circumstances in order to determine the place most proper for a permanent ferry" (see Mr 25). Loss and Stilwell have made the survey, the map or plan of which the commissioner submits, with Mr. Loss's report, which states "That the distance from the foot of Grand Street to Morrells Landing is 3000 feet, while the distance from Bullock Street to Woodhulls is 3560 feet." The tides, eddies, reefs, etc. are also described. From all of which the commissioner believes "that the foot of Grand Street would be the most convenient and eligible place for a public ferry. It is not only the widest street in that part of the City but it also receives the greatest number of intersecting Streets and affords the readiest communication with other parts of the town. A public bason is reserved at the foot of Grand Street in the East River, and in all probability whenever a Market is erected, it will be built at that place," and it appears probable to the commissioner "from the reservation of a bason that it must have been the original intention of the Corporation to establish the ferry there." The board appointed a committee to pass upon several applications for ferry rights, in view of this report.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 8–9. The committee's long report, on July 1, sustained the findings of the commissioner, with full recommendations respecting the adjustment of grants to ferry lessees.—Ibid., IV: 26–36. See Jl 29. 27

The common council orders that Spring St., from Brannon St. to Broadway, be increased in width from 50 to 61 feet.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 9. On July 22, Charles Loss and others petitioned "that Brannon Street may be continued of the breadth of sixty-five feet according to the Cession thereof."—Ibid., IV: 47. Brannon St. was the same as Spring St.—See L. M. R. K., III: 994. "

The common council orders that the committee of repairs be directed "to build a machine for the purpose of driving Piles."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 10. "

Trinity vestry passes a resolution that "the Lease of the Lot of Ground, in the Rear of the Land lately belonging to the Lutherans [see F 14], be bought . . . and conveyed in Fee to the Trustees to whom the said adjoining Land has been conveyed."—Trin. Min. (MS.). This was the site of Grace Church.—L. M. R. K., III: 933. See also Pl. 81-b, Vol. III. June 1

A treaty of peace is concluded between Tripoli and the United States.—Laws of U. S., 9th cong., 1st sess., 167–77; Winsor, VII: 375. See My 14, 1801, and F 6, 1802. 4

"A private letter from Paris, states that his majesty the Emperor Napoleon has presented to Mr. Livingston, late minister from the United States to the French Court, on behalf of the Academy of Arts [see Je 7, 1803], established in this city, and of which his majesty is an honorary member, a very valuable Collection, estimated at fifty thousand livres, 10,000 dollars."—*N. The common council resolves that the street com'r "lay before the board a plan for opening Beekman Street in continuation to Water Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 15. 17

The common council resolves "that all future meetings of this Board be held with open doors."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 16. A motion was lost, however, "that the future meetings of this Board be held in some large and convenient room sufficient to accommodate such Citizens as may choose to attend to hear the proceedings."—Ibid. On Jan. 12, 1807, the board decided to meet in "the front Court room in the City Hall."—Ibid., IV: 337. Before Dec. 17, 1770 (q.v.), the custom was to close doors. "

1805 June 17 The common council resolves to grant permission to Mr. Keefe "under the direction of the Alderman and Assistant of the first ward to erect a temporary shed around the flag staff on the Battery and an awning above the Stone work Surrounding the same to be continued during the pleasure of the Common Council." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 16–17. See also ibid., IV: 116, 156, 345. This is the earliest record of the presumable use of the flagstaff as a refreshment stand.—Descrip. of Pl. 59, I: 435; L. M. R. K., III: 962.

" On appointing a committee of arrangements for the celebration of the Fourth of July, the common council directs it "to report a permanent system for the celebration of that day."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 17.

" The common council pays David Longworth $188.08 "for City Maps."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 18.

It pays James Hardie $80 "for making indexes."—Ibid.

24 The common council orders that Broadway along the Park be paved.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 20.

" The common council resolves "that in all cases when assessments are made for the repairing any pavement or the repaving of any Street the pavement of which has been injured by the Manhattan Water Works that a proportion of the money received by this board from the said Company on account of damages to the pavements be allowed to the persons on whom the assessment shall be laid."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 20.

" A committee report states that "there is no dock near the village of Harlaem." The common council adopts a recommendation that Benj. Vredenburgh be permitted to erect one according to stated specifications, and to rent it at $15 per annum until a permanent regulation be made respecting docks and slips at Harlem.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 22.

25 "Opening of the New Vaux hall, on Tuesday, the 25th inst. J. Delacroix informs his Friends and the Public that his new Garden in the Bowery will be opened on the above Evening:—The labor and expence of this establishment has exceeded that of any similar one in the United States, and its arrangements it is hoped cannot but prove satisfactory; he has at a very considerable risk and expence, procured from Europe a choice selection of Statues and Busts, mostly from the first models of Antiquity, and worthy the attention of Amateurs. The walks are ornamented with Pillars, Arches, Pedestals, Figures, &c. the whole of which when illuminated, cannot fail to create pleasure. A large and elevated Orchestra is erected for the Concerts, which will be in the best stile, and composed of the best performers the City can produce. Nothing has been spared which could contribute to render it a genteel and entertaining place of resort, and the proprietor hopes, that the encouragement he has every reason to expect, will be exemplified on the evening of its consecration to the pleasure of the citizens.

30 Jacob Harsen having erected a small wooden building for a house of worship on his land about five miles from the city hall, near the North River, it is consecrated on this day.—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 33. The church stood on the west side of the Bloomingdale Road, between the present 69th and 70th Sts., now (1908) "the site of the Nevada apartment-house." It was a small frame building painted white, and had a cupola shaped like an umbrella.—Mott, New York of Yesterday (1908), 163. June 30

The church organization was formed on Sept. 9 of the same year, taking the name of "The Harsenville Church." This later became known as the Bloomingdale Dutch Church. The house of worship was conveyed to this organization by Mr. Harsen. The first pastor, Rev. Alex. Gunn, was called on May 21, 1808. A new church was erected in 1814–16, at Broadway and 68th St. The old church was consumed by fire in 1832.—Greenleaf; Mott; and Liber Deeds, LXXIV: 178. The market committee makes the following report to the common council: "I That the ground on which Hudson market now stands is too valuable to be appropriated for a market, and is situated in a Street too important for the purpose. July 1

"II That the said Market is in a state of Decay will be useless in two or three Years. it being built upon a construction that is inconvenient to the public not productive of such a revenue as a new one upon an approved plan will undoubtedly be

"III That the Corporation Slip is at present a Nuisance. it being so Shallow, that a considerable part of the bottom lays bare at Low Water which renders it dangerous to the health of the Citizens in that part of the City, that the dock around it is rotten and has part of it already given way. The Committee therefore, are of opinion it will be for the public advantage to run a New bulkhead across the Slip in the manner laid down in a map now presented drawn by Mr Mangin, and proceed to fill up the same, and to Erect a substantial and commodious market, on the ground to be filled up, to be built of Brick &c." The report is confirmed. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 24–25, 40. The report was not carried out at this time, however, "in consequence of leases of several of the lots, which they proposed to use or sell, not having expired." —De Voe, Market Book, 324, 326. The board of health issues an address to the citizens of New York calling attention to "the measures, which are now in operation for the purpose of providing against malignant and pestilential diseases." The regulations include the examination of incoming vessels at the quarantine ground, a prohibition against ships from the West Indies or South America coming up to the city between June 1 and Oct. 1 (see My 23), the removal of sick persons, regular cleansing of streets, ban on burial south of Pump and Nicholas Sts. of people who die of the fever, etc. Between June 1 and Nov. 1, all hides, foreign cotton, and damaged coffee are excluded from the city, and no pickled or salted beef may be deposited to the southward of Lispenard's Meadow and Grand St.; between June 1 and Sept. 30, no oysters are allowed in the city.—Hardie, *Account of the Malignant Fever which prevailed in the City of N. 15 A correspondent writes to one of the papers: "In answer to your enquiries when and how it happened that the reading the Declaration of Independence made a part of the ceremonial in observing the 4th of July, if my memory serves me it was as follows. About the year 1785 [see Ap 30, 1787] a Society was formed in this city. There was a tradition that a Sagamore of some note had once lived on the Banks of the Schuylkill, whose name was Tammany; him the Society took as their patron or Saint. They had understood his birthday came on the first of May, this therefore was their great anniversary, but always observed according to the old [error for "new"] style on the 12th instead of the 1st of the month. The society was divided into as many tribes as there were states, each tribe distinguished by the name of a state. The members are divided or classed into Sachems, warriors, hunters, etc. In their processions they always walked in Indian or single file, and many of them completely dressed like Indians, with their faces painted or smeared, and they were decorated with bows, arrows, tomahawks, and long calumets or smoking pipes, & for a covering, a cap or bladder nicely fitted on the head, so as to make it a proper depilous skull. Those of them who appeared in hat, Jacket and breeches, and left their faces white, wore buck's tails in their hats. Their place of meeting was called the wigwam. In short they affected to be Indians throughout. Besides being called the Sons of Tammany, or Saint Tammany, they also took the appellation of the Columbian Order. This Society, it seems, resolved in 1791 [error for 1790 q. v., Jl 4], to celebrate the 4th of July, and to have an Oration on the occasion in one of the Churches; at which time Grand Sachem read the Declaration of Independence. How it might have been in the other states I do not know, but I believe you will be safe in asserting that this was the first time it was ever read in this State in celebrating the anniversary of the Independence or on other public occasions. When Genet in 1793, set up his Democratic Societies so many of these Sons of Saint Tammany joined the one in this city, that the Saint Tammany and the Democratic Societies became almost entirely blended together. Indeed a number of the members had long since perceived the foolery of the thing, and such as were Federalists wholly quitted it in 1793.

29 The common council offers a premium of $500 "for the first quantity of good pit coals not less than ten Chaldrons which shall be brought to this City having been taken from any pit or mine in this State, within ten miles of the Sea Shore or of any part of Hudsons River below the town of Waterford in the County of Saratoga."—*M. The common council refers to the street com'r a petition of Trinity Church "for a foot of ground along the fence of the yard of St Pauls Church."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 60. A lease for 63 yrs. is granted.—Ibid., IV: 67. 19

At the same meeting, the street com'r reported that Mr. Barrow, representing Trinity, had applied to him "for permission to set their intended Brick Wall on the North Side of St Pauls Church one foot further in Vesey Street, to preserve a row of valuable trees unfortunately placed too near the present fence.

"Vesey Street is about 64 feet wide, These trees are large and beautiful; and it would be a pity to cut them down. No inconvenience would result from granting the request, as the walks on that side of the Street will be unincumbered with stoops or cellar doors.

". . . they will leave out an equal number of Square feet in Church Street, if this application is granted." The board votes to grant it.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 62–63.

The comptroller and street com'r have conferred with owners of the land along Leonard St. between Broadway and Elm St., desired by the city to widen Leonard St. The lowest price they will take is that paid to Mr. Quackenbos (which was at the rate of $2,300 for about 160 ft.). This would exceed $5,000, and as this is deemed too high, the board adopts the recommendation that the 10 ft. strip "be taken by the usual mode."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 63. "

The board of health informs the public that "Ten cases of Malignant Fever have occurred since Monday last; five cases of a doubtful nature, some of which have been removed into the country or Marine Hospital, and four deaths." The board adds: "The part of the city which, at present, appears to be the principal seat of the disease, is Water and Front-streets, between the Fly-Market and Old-slip."—Hardie, *Account of the Malignant Fever which prevailed in in City of N. The city inspector's office is removed from Federal Hall to the office of the board of health at the corner of Broadway and Chambers St., because of the disease in the city. Theodorus Bailey, the postmaster (see Ja 2 1804), publishes a notice that: "The Post Office is removed to Greenwich nearly opposite to the State Prison." A single letter-box "for the reception of letters to be forwarded by the mail," was left at the City Hotel in Broadway. Collections were made at this letter-box twice daily, when the letters deposited there were taken "to the Post Office."—Com. Adv., S 10, 1805. This temporary removal was due to the epidemic. 10

The following notice is issued: "The Board of Health have made a considerable augmentation of the watch in the exposed parts of the city, and will not fail to make further arrangements from time to time as the public exigencies may require. 12

"They have also given special directions for the preservation of the city against fire. They, therefore, trust, that their fellow-citizens will feel perfectly satisfied, that every possible precaution

1805 Sept. 12 has been adopted for the public security. The great amount of property, at present in the village of Greenwich stored in wooden buildings is exposed to considerable hazard from fire.

"The fire wardens of the eighth ward are especially enjoined to use every precautionary measure, with the utmost promptitude and vigilance and report to the board."—Hardie, op. cit., 94.

13 The number of cases of the malignant fever is very much increased. The disease is very fatal. About 50,000 persons, all that could afford to leave the city, have left. The principal part of those who remain are "Poor Mechanics, Small Grocers, Draymen and Blacks." Tents have been erected from Greenwich across to Broadway, "forming a street for the reception of persons and goods." These tents are nearly all occupied, by about 10,000 people. Sixty wagons and most of the drays from the city are employed in moving goods, and the roads are crowded with men, women and children, mostly on foot, flying from the city. Some cases of the fever followed the fugitives to Greenwich. The "rich and middling people conducted towards the poor with a liberality and benevolence honorable to humanity." The situation, however, was "distressing beyond description."—New England Palladium (Boston), S 17, 1805.

The demand for houses at Greenwich "is scarcely greater than the rapidity with which they are raised." On a spot "where yesterday you saw nothing but a green turf, to-morrow you behold a store. . . . By night as well as by day, the saw is heard and the hammer resounds, and the consequence is that the village begins to assume the appearance of a town."—Repertory (Boston), S 20, 1805.

14 The board of health announces that it has formed a "decided opinion" that the principal seat of the prevailing disease is between Burling Slip and Old Slip as far west as Pearl St. "It is matter of extreme regret, that the repeated admonitions of the board, to remove from this quarter have been disregarded by a number of individuals. . . . To obviate every plea of necessity, and to discharge the duties they owe to humanity, the board have erected buildings for the reception and accommodation of the indigent, at Bellevue gate, where they will be supplied with provisions by the Commissioners of the Alms-House. Such as are able to remove without assistance, are enjoined to go into the country, and not into the healthy parts of the city. . . . All persons who do not comply forthwith, with this advice of the board, to remove from the above described part of the city, which is deemed the principal seat of the disease, and which does not contain more than 33 acres, will be considered guilty of a wanton exposure of their lives, and will justify the board in resorting to compulsory measures."—Hardie, *Account of the Malignant Fever which prevailed in the City of N. Jacob De la Montagnie, treasurer of the board of health, pays another bill of $1,674.99 "on Acct. of the Asylum at Bellevue gate."—Ibid. Other bills for the same object are preserved in the same file.

18 John Jay writes to John Murray, Jr., about the "African free school" in New York City. He says: "It is in my opinion a charitable and useful institution, and well entitled to encouragement and support. From your account of its present embarrassments I am induced to think that, in order to its being and remaining on a respectable and permanent footing, some vigorous and well devised measures should be taken to obtain adequate and durable funds. The uncertain donations occasionally solicited and expected from charitable but scattered and unconnected individuals will probably be always incompetent, and must obviously be too precarious to afford ground for reasonably calculating the prudence and extent of expenditures. Robert Sutcliff (see Jl 29, 1804) returns to New York. He writes: "As the yellow fever had for some time prevailed at New-York, I was desirous of being put on shore at Brooklyn, on Long Island; but, the night being dark with wind and rain, I could not prevail upon the Captain of the packet to land me; nor could I obtain a boat of any kind to take me over. I was therefore under the necessity of going to New-York, where all was silent and solitary; and what used to be the busiest parts, were now without an inhabitant to be seen. "

"Having landed at Quince's wharf, I went along Water-street to the Fly-market Wharf, hoping to meet with the ferry-boat; but here likewise all was silence and solitude. I then went through the whole length of Fly-market, which had the appearance of having been untrodden for weeks past; the light of some lamps shewing the boarded floor to be as clean as that of a parlour. From the Fly-market, I crossed Pearl-street, into Maiden-lane, and went on to Broad-way, to the City Hotel, a large spacious inn; where I was the only guest. When I was here last; the house was crowded with company; so much had this awful visitation varied the scene in every part of this busy city. Some of its inhabitants, with whom I had been well acquainted, had been suddenly taken away by the ravages of that dreadful disease. . . . I passed through Greenwich, a village to which the business of New-York, together with the banks and public offices, were removed on account of the yellow fever. The bustle and confusion occasioned thereby is not easily conceived. For the accommodation of the merchants, many temporary wooden buildings were erected."—Sutcliff, Travels in some parts of N. Am. in the years 1804, 1805, & 1806 (Phila., 1812), 113–15.

In one of a series of letters to the press concerning the general health of New York City, "A Householder" discusses on this date the "natural situation, &c. of York Island, and of the alterations made in it by art." He says in part: "In the south western part of the island a hill or ridge of ground began where the new City Hall is now building, and extended to the place where fort George formerly stood, and which now is occupied by the government house. From this ridge the descent was generally rather steep and rugged on the right towards the North river, the former shore of which was then beneath a high bank, and is now for a considerable distance occupied by Greenwich-street. Towards the south and south-east the descent was somewhat more gradual, and the distance longer to the East river. Several small streams took their origin in the south eastern side of the ridge, and ran to the East river, shaping the ground in their course into little vallies, and leaving corresponding heights and ridges of ground between them. Broad-street, Maiden-lane, Ferry-street, and Roosevelt-street, are formed by the buildings which would be naturally placed along the opposite sides of such creeks. Wall, Pine, John, Beekman and the upper part of Pearl-streets, show the direction of the high grounds between. Pearl-street, which is less winding than the natural shore of the East river, was a part of its distance first formed by buildings on the upper side only facing the water, and leaving a road between them and the shore. This road was first directed as the convenience of travelling required, sometimes passing over a point of land, as at Hanover square and Beekman-street, and at others meeting from the shore to avoid a marsh as at the vlie where Fly-market now stands, and which was a marsh or salt meadow made by the mouth of the small creek coming 22

1805 Oct. 22 down Maiden-lane. The tide must have flowed up this creek to about the foot of Liberty-street. Eastward of the upper part of Pearl-street, the ground suddenly sunk into a spacious level, a part of which was a swamp within the memory of living persons.

"On the north side of the hill first mentioned, the ground descends to the Collect which was a pond of many acres about equally distant from the two rivers. Its outlet, which is to the westward, forms the extensive low grounds in the neighbourhood of Mr Lispenard's. The head of this pond and of the creek that ran through Roosevelt-street, are separated only by a low barrier of earth which might easily be cut through, and thus unite the two rivers. The ground west of the Bowery, as far north as Bunker's Hill, descend[s] towards the Collect, which thus receives the surplus water of several hundred acres of land.

"This Collect is now filling up with earth and is to be sold and built upon. . . .

"A part of the low end of Pearl-street and of some streets crossing it, all of Water, Front, and South-streets, are built where the water once flowed, on ground made by constructing wharves which have always been composed of logs, loose stones, and earth. The tract of land thus made, reckoning only from the Battery to the beginning of Cherry-street, may contain about ninety acres. Those docks next the shore were built first, and built without any expectation that others were to be extended beyond them. They were at first raised no higher than was then deemed necessary to defend them from being overflowed. . . . But the weight of buildings, the operation of water which is known to penetrate through all the crevices of these docks and wharves, and the aid of time, which moulders all perishable substances, do, as I believe, gradually sink and press down all the ground thus made. The oldest sink first and most.—Thus there is a perpetual tendency in all these grounds to assume a form descending inwards, that is, from the river and towards Pearl-street. The lower part of Pine-street afforded till lately an example to prove the justice of this remark. . . ."—Repub. Watch Tower, O 23, 1805; descrip. of Frontispiece II, Vol. III, p. 540. See O 24.

24 "A Householder," continuing his discussion of the general health of the city, now takes up "the means in our power to remedy the bad qualities of the city air, and first of Canals." He says:

"The first measure I propose is that canals be opened in the following directions, viz:—One through the Fly-market, Maiden Lane, and Courtland-street, connecting the two rivers: one thro' the Collect, and its outlet, and through Roosevelt-street, connecting the two rivers also; and one through Water-street to Peck-slip, or even to Corlear's Hook if necessary. . . . From the present appearances we may conclude, that the vlie formerly began near the foot of Liberty-street, and extended in oblique direction across the intervening squares at the left to Gold-street, and near to the foot of the hill of John-street; on the other hand it extended but little further west than Maiden-lane now runs—I have never been informed . . . how far it reached in front to the water—the difference between a marsh and a wharf is not worth noticing. Thus the whole of Maiden-lane, from Liberty-street downwards and all Pearl street, from the Fly-market to Burling-slip (except a few houses on the upper side) are built upon a swamp.

"Maiden-lane is now itself a common sewer, or a receptacle of filth for a very extensive and crowded part of the city, reaching with few exceptions from John to Pine street, and from Broadway to the East river. It may be questioned whether this district is not more thickly inhabited than any other in the city of equal extant. Its neighbourhood has often been, and upon our present system always will be unhealthy. I repeat, that the waters of the marsh are not drained, the filth on the surface of it is not washed away. It stagnates, ferments, putrifies, and is finally decomposed upon the spot. If there is no poison in the exhalations which arise from this and from the marsh below, our ideas are all wrong, but if there is any, the inhabitants, work, eat, sleep, and move in the midst of it.

"The canal I propose through Maiden-lane is obviously a remedy for all these evils. It will immediately receive the water and all substances it bears along, as it comes rapidly down the descending streets and sewers. It will afford an opportunity to drain every neighbouring cellar and sunken place to a point as low as the tide water will permit; and the drain will not be circuitous, but direct—there will be neither place for the filth to be deposited nor time for it to pu[t]rify."—Repub. Watch Tower, O 26, 1805. See N 4. Oct. 24

"The Board of Health have the satisfaction to announce to their fellow-citizens, that, in their opinion, every reasonable cause of danger from malignant fever has ceased, and that they may return to their respective homes with every probability of perfect safety. The Board recommend, however, that precautionary measures be taken to ventilate their dwellings."—Hardie, op. cit., 99. 25

"A householder" writes to the press some interesting observations regarding the expense and time of building public edifices: —"Building is a bottomless pit. No man of sense ever thought of estimating beforehand the real expense of a great public building undertaken by a public body. Some have imagined that after the most liberal estimates made by the architects it would approach probably to triple or fourfold the amount of their computation. Thus if the expense was estimated at 160,000 dollars (as I think I have heard that of the new City hall was) such persons have imagined that 480,000 or 640,000 might be assumed as giving some idea of the true amount. Such methods and all others that I have ever heard of are fallacious. Be the building a Palace, Cathedral, or a Capitol, it usually exhausts after some years the patience and finances of the King, Church or Republic that undertakes it. The obvious reason is that there is no limit to the fancy of architects, or the claims of contractors, and that public bodies can exercise little countroul [sic] over the expenditures. Hence such buildings are either never finished, or are only resumed at long intervals when new men rise up, who have not before exhausted their strength against mountains of marble. The temples of Egypt that outdate all history were left unfinished. The greatest palaces of Europe are unfinished. There are Cathedrals that have been 500 years in building. The Capitol at Washington, and I believe that at Richmond, also are unfinished. Our City-hall will long remain in the same situation. Like the buildings usually undertaken by public men or bodies it is an object far beyond our resources. If the State of Virginia has already employed twenty years upon her Capitol, and the power and resources of the United States have been able in twelve years to raise but one wing of theirs, when does the single City of New-York expect to finish a work so much more disproportionate to its means then those buildings were to the resources of the nation and state that undertook them? Public buildings are the bottomless pit of finance. . . ."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., N 4, 1805. Nov. 4

In still another letter to the press, "A Householder" states: "I beg leave . . . to re-state in different words the leading feature (not the only one) in which the canals I advocate differ in their effect from all others. It is this—a canal from the land to the river must in its whole course be higher than the tide water in order to give a sufficient descent. It must be for the most part of its length, much higher, unless it is intended to be always choaked with filth. It can therefore drain no grounds so low as the river-marsh. A canal on the contrary from river to river is level; the floor is always below the ebb tide and therefore it may drain the grounds and cellars through its whole extent with the greatest possible descent to a point as low, as the rivers themselves; and may receive the wash of the adjoining streets with the same advantage. The application of this to the canal through the Collect is very remarkable. Of all the level and low grounds through which that would pass, I believe there is none, either towards the east or north rivers which can be drained without it, or which cannot be perfectly drained with it. Let it be added that these grounds, if not made uninhabitable, will one day compose a very populous part of the city. "

". . . There is not much to add on the . . . importance of the canal through Water-street. Yet this alone may determine the fate of the whole city. On the made ground in front of Pearl-street there are usually contained perhaps 20,000 people, including those whose daily occupations bring them there from other parts of the town. If fever is epidemic, on that ground only, the evil is enough to break up the city—If contagious, its ravages will be the more extensive. If the canal through Water-street was open, the streets and drains of this vast mass of wharves might be regulated with an ample descent each way to the water—The 1805 Nov. 4 place would not be a deposit for filth of the rest of the town, and the inhabitants might with absolute certainty keep their streets clean, their drains and sewers pure and their grounds dry down to the level of tide water. This can be done in no other way. . . .

"It has been shown from premises which cannot be greatly erroneous that the expense of such a canal as I propose through Maiden Lane & Courtlandt-street would be not more than 55,000 dollars for about half a mile. . . ."—Repub. Watch Tower, N 6, 1805.

8 Josiah Quincy, travelling from Massachusetts to Washington, D. C., stops in New York and records in his diary under this date: "Went with Dr. Hosack to view his botanic garden and greenhouse. It is only the second year since its commencement, consequently the institution is but in an infant state. The greenhouse is twenty feet high and broad, sixty-three feet long. The whole number of acres destined for the establishment, twenty acres. His collections, considering the time, numerous and various in species."—Life of Josiah Quincy, by his son, 81.

9 Josiah Quincy, continuing his diary, writes: "Dined with Mr. Gracie, at his country-seat, about eight miles from New York. Gracie is a merchant of eminence. . . . His seat is upon the East River, opposite the famous pass called Hell Gate. The scene is beautiful beyond description. A deep, broad, rapid stream glances with an arrowy fleetness by the shore, hurrying along every species of vessel which the extensive commerce of the country affords. The water, broken by the rocks which lie in the midst of the current, presents a continual scene of turbulent waves, dashing, foaming, and spending their force upon the rocks. The various courses every vessel has to shape, in order to escape from the dangers of the pass, present a constant change and novelty in this enchanting scene. The shores of Long Island, full of cultivated prospects, and interspersed with elegant country-seats, bound the distant view. The mansion-house is elegant, in the modern style, and the grounds laid out with taste in gardens."—Life of Josiah Quincy, by his son, 81–82.

" Closed after John Hyde's death on Sept. 14 (q. v.), the Tontine Coffee House was to be reopened on this day by Thos. Vaughan. His notice adds: "The ordinary [table d'hôte] as usual, at half past 2 o'clock."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., N 9, 1805. See, further, My 1, 1808.

12 John Pintard, city inspector, in a report to the board of health concerning the cases treated at Bellevue during the fever epidemic, says: "The Buildings called Hospitals erected at Bellevue appear to have been set upon the spur of the occasion, and on the presumption that the fever would never recur again. Fatal experience has proved otherwise, and points to the conviction, that we may expect repeated attacks from this insidious disease. The wards, the one appropriated for the men especially, are every way inadequate to the wants of the patients or the comfort of the nurses and physicians. The buildings are on too contracted a scale—of materials too slight to repeal the summer heat or autumn cold. The crouded state of the Hospital, during the last season, must have had an unfavourable influence on the spirits of the patients. Those newly arrived were evidently depressed by the surrounding scenes of malady, and the groans and shrieks of convulsed and dying subjects. The senses were evidently offended, and the atmosphere rendered impure in consequence of the wards being so overcrouded. More extensive accommodation is absolutely necessary against another season. . . .

"To render this establishment . . . extensively useful, and to relieve such persons as may be in circumstances to pay for comfortable accommodation, a Pay Hospital with suitable distinct apartments might be advantageously erected. . . .

"Perhaps in regarding the proposed improvements at Bellevue Hospital, it might be of moment to consider whether a change of the establishment to some other ground, appertaining to the Corporation, would not be eligible. The scite at Bellevue might in all probability, be sold for a sum adequate to very extensive improvements."—Hardie, op. cit., 112–17. See N 13.

13 The board of health issues an address to the public reviewing its activities during the late epidemic. The announcement states that 600 cases of fever were reported to the board. and 262 deaths occurred. Of the 64 patients sent to the Marine Hospital, 28 died; and of the 149 taken care of at Bellevue, 52 died.—Hardie, op. cit., 100–7. Nov. 13

The common council passes an ordinance for the appointment of a board of health. The mayor, recorder, commissioners of the health office, city inspector, and five aldermen are appointed to constitute such board.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 107. 9

The treasurer lays before the trustees a schedule of the real and personal property of Columbia College. The real property consists of the grant made by Trinity Church on May 13, 1755 (q. v.), and the water lots granted by the city on Aug. 16, 1770 (q. v.). The personal property is in bonds.—Hist. of Columbia Univ. (1754–1904), 84–85. 14

The common council approves a petition to congress asking that the port and harbour of New York be placed "in a State of proper and sufficient defence," and orders that it be transmitted.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 108, 112. Though the memorial is not printed in the minutes, it is probably the one which is among the De Witt Clinton papers in Columbia Univ. Library. This is dated merely 1805, and reads in part: "It is well known that we can be approached by hostile vessels in two ways—that frigates of force can proceed thro the sound totally uninterrupted by any fortifications—that ships of the line can, by the way of Sandy Hook, and with a favorable wind, arrive here in a few hours from the ocean—and that there is nothing to oppose their progress but a few works on Governor's and Ellis's Island which are totally inadequate to repel the attacks or to prevent the advances of any enemy 16

"It is equally well known that this City in relation to the internal and external commerce & the revenues of the Country is very important to the Union—And that it is in a Situation the most defenceless of any must be universally acknowledged

"At the beginning of the revolutionary war this place was among the first attacked by the enemy and it is highly probable that on the commencement of hostilities with a maritime power, the first blow will be aimed at it. Invited by its proximity to the ocean—by its unprotected Situation—by its extensive commerce & great wealth—and by the distressing consequences which would result to the revenue & general prosperity of the Country, an enemy would have every inducement to make it the earliest and principal object of attack."—De Witt Clinton Letter-Books (MS.), I: 325–26. The petition was read in congress on Dec. 23 and referred.—Annals of Cong., 9th cong., 1st sess., 302. See also Mr 12, 1806.

The common council lays out streets in the section near the two-mile stone, encompassed by Broadway, Art St., The Bowery, and Bleecker St., according to a plan proposed by David Jones. Jones St. and Bond St. are the new streets introduced here into the city plan. Also, Minthorne St. is extended, and "the Center Street called Mulberry (or Catherine Street)" is continued "to Art Street and parallel to Broadway." The direction of Bleecker St. is altered to "run from the Bowery more northerly until it comes out in Broadway at a point opposite to the Mouth of David Street," whereby "there will be almost a straight communication from the East River to the State Prison." Another street 50 or 60 ft. wide, is to be opened from Broadway to The Bowery between Bleecker and Prince Sts. (This later became Houston St.)—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 113–14. For the opening of Houston St., see L. M. R. K., III: 1006, under "North St." "

The Phœnix Coffee House, on the south-east corner of Wall and Water Sts. (see Ap 18), is nearly completed, and will soon be opened. "We believe no pains or expence has been spared in raising this magnificent five story building, and rendering it replete with every ornament and convenience. From Mr. Bardin's long established reputation as a landlord, we have every reason to believe the Phœnix Coffee House, will become the resort of men of pleasure, of the Merchants and strangers of distinction."—*N. 26 At a general meeting of merchants at the Tontine Coffee House, a memorial addressed to Pres. Jefferson and congress is agreed to, stating the ruinous consequences to U. S. commerce which will follow upon an acceptance of certain newly defined British principles, and complaining of piratical attacks upon American vessels in the West Indies and even on our own coasts. The merchants add: "If our personal interests and local attachments have not greatly misdirected our opinions, the defenceless situation of the port of New York ought to excite the anxious solicitude of every friend of his country; our river is the only commercial avenue to a fertile and populous country, which is rapidly rising into importance; it is here that one-third of the revenue of the Union is collected, and this proportion is understood to be relatively increasing. . . . Without recurring to the experience of past times for proofs, that no nation can long maintain an extensive commerce without well defended seaports and an efficient military marine, we are admonished, by the new and portentious aspect of Europe, and the alarming prevalence of piracy in the West Indies, that energetic measures of defence have become undispensibly necessary. . . ."—Annals of Cong., 9th cong., 2nd sess., 805–13.

On Jan. 6, 1806, this memorial was presented to the senate by Samuel Latham Mitchill and to the house of representatives by De Witt Clinton. In each house it was referred to a committee. —Ibid., 9th cong., 1st sess., 45, 333. For the report of the senate committee, see Ja 28, 1806. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1868), 876.

— From a description of the city as it was in 1806, the following items have been selected:

A burial-ground was established at the head of Varick St.

Spring St. was marked out, and a row of houses was built on it. An object of curiosity here was a well, in which had been found the body of a Miss Sands, for whose murder one Levi Weeks was placed on trial. The circumstances of the case awakened an interest which continued for fifty years. (See D 29, 1799.)

The ship-yards were between Corlaer's Hook and what was later Stanton St., and between Corlaer's Hook and Catharine St. Above Corlaer's Hook and below Stanton St. was a locality called Manhattan Island, where there were ship-yards. A large ship-house here was owned by Adam and Noah Brown, who, with Christian Bergh, were the leading ship-builders of the period.

A "Council of Appointment," consisting of one senator chosen by the legislature from each of the former four great districts of the state (see Revised Laws of 1813), with the governor of the state as presiding officer, appointed the mayor, recorder, sheriff, coroner, county clerk, all judges, justices, masters and examiners in chancery, all port wardens, harbour masters, auctioneers, notaries, militia officers, inspectors of grain or produce, and chancellor. 1806 —

The county was governed by a board of supervisors, composed of mayor, recorder, and ten aldermen, and by other county officers.

The common council consisted of the mayor, recorder, and aldermen. The mayor appointed the city marshals, and granted licenses to cartmen, porters, pawnbrokers, and liquor-sellers. He was presiding officer of the court of sessions.

The judiciary arrangement was as follows: A court in each ward, for civil cases to the extent of $25.00, was held by a ward justice. A marine court, having jurisdiction to the extent of $100.00, and in cases of assault and battery on the high seas having jurisdiction without limit as to amount, was held by three justices. A mayor's court, with jurisdiction in civil cases to $250, was held by the recorder. The supreme court of the state had jurisdiction, without limit as to the amount involved, in civil common law cases, and had appellate power in civil and criminal cases. One of the supreme court judges, with two aldermen, held a court of "oyer and terminer" (to hear and determine). Another of these judges held supreme court circuits in the counties, and sittings in New York, to try issues of fact; these "circuit courts" and "courts of sittings" being termed "nisi prius courts." The court of chancery had unlimited jurisdiction in equity cases throughout the state. The chancellor presided, holding two terms in New York and two in Albany each year.

The street cries of New York—those of the milkman, the baker, the bellman, the chimney-sweep, and others—were distinctive, and are well described in this summary of city features of 1806.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 417–29.

About 1806, the residence at No. 7 State St. was built by — Moses Rogers. During the Civil War it was taken by the government for military uses, and afterwards became the office of the pilot commissioners. It is now the mission of Our Lady of the Rosary.—Mott, Old Buildings of N. Y. City (1907); descrip. of Pl. 164-a, III: 846; L. M. R. K., III: 951.

No meetings of the Chamber of Commerce were held between — 1806 and 1817 (q. v., Mr 4). "Undoubtedly the commercial depression and internal dissensions attending the controversy with Great Britain, which resulted in the War of 1812, had much to do with this."—Bishop, A Chron. of 150 Years: The Chamber of Commerce of the State of N. Y., 1768–1918, 51.

In this year, most of Fort Jay on Governor's Island was de- — molished, and a reconstruction known as Fort Columbus was begun on the site.—Pres. Jefferson's message of Jan. 6, 1809 (q. v.).

City hall records for 1806 are as follows: On March 10, the com- — mon council appropriated $20,000, and on March 17 $22,250, for building operations during the ensuing year.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 154, 161.

On April 10, McComb entered in his diary in full a copy of a letter referred to him by the building committee from a discharged carver named Richard Hazard, which alleged that boys were doing the carvers' work, and that pieces of capitals were broken off and cemented on.—McComb's Diary. On April 14, the common council referred to the building committee a petition of Hazard's that he "be reinstated in employment as a Carver at the New City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 179. On April 20, McComb replied to the committee that the work was being carefully done and the apprentices making good progress, adding: "I have visited the Carvers shop almost daily & have been always pleased with Mr Lemairs' attention, mode of working and finishing the Capitals. Work which is not surpassed by any in the United States—& I presume but seldom seen better executed in Europe—and which for proportion and neatness of workmanship will serve as models for Carvers in the future."—McComb's Diary.

On May 5, the building committee made a report to the common council respecting the contract of Johnson & Stevens for marble. This contained figures aiming to show that there was some doubt of the ability of this firm to fulfill its contract. On the committee's recommendation, the board resolved to advance $1,500 to the firm on sufficient security, the firm agreeing to deliver marble to this amount by Sept. 1, together with a quantity of marble already due amounting to $1,570.52; leaving a balance still due the city of $2,000, secured by mortgage on the quarry. This action was taken on receiving a letter from the firm, dated April 28, showing that the firm's resources were exhausted in trying to fulfill the contract.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 193–96.

1806 — On July 28, Le Maire was authorised to employ "an additional Apprentice."—Ibid., IV: 254.

On Aug. 7, McComb noted that Mayor Clinton, asked to see the plans; "it was the first time I ever heard that he expressed a wish to know what was going on, or what kind of a building it was to be."—McComb's Diary. On Nov. 28, Jas. Fairlie, chairman of the building committee (appointed Dec. 5, 1805), reported to the board a financial statement of the condition of the city hall contract in its then state of progress.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 303–4. On Dec. 15, McComb stated that a new building committee was appointed, consisting of Van Zandt (chairman), Selah Strong, Miller, Torbert, LeRoy, Mott, and Morris.—Ibid.

During 1806, the board issued warrants in favour of the building committee, as follows: Ja 20, $3,000; F 20, $2,000; Mr 17, $2,000; Ap 21, $3,000; Je 16, $2,000; Je 16, $1,500 (for marble); Jl 7 (for marble), $2,400; Jl 28, $2,000; Aug. 25, $2,000; O 6, $2,500; O 20, $1,000; O 27, $1,000; D 8, $1,200; D 15, $3,000; total, $28,400.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 128, 143, 164, 184, 232, 243, 255, 264, 279, 284, 286, 314, 320.

— In this year, Thomas Sully, of Richmond, came to New York to continue his career as a painter. For an account of his later work, see Dunlap (Goodspeed ed.), II: 234–51.

Jan. 4 John Trumbull informs Alderman Van Zandt that he "has finished portraits of Mr Duane, & Mr E. Livingston which compleats the Commission with which he was charged on the part of the Corporation." He requests "an Order on the City Treasurer for the Amount, say Two Hundred Dollars."—Wynant Van Zandt Papers (MS.). Trumbull was paid $200 on Jan. 6.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 122.

6 About 1,300 Catholics of New York City address a petition to the legislature stating that "the form of oath prescribed to be taken previously on entering on any office, civil or military, in this State, by subjecting them to a religious test, to which their consciences are opposed, operates on them as an absolute disqualification." They ask that "the obnoxious part of the law" be repealed.—Farley, Hist. of St. Patrick's Cathedral, 37–39. The petition was granted by the passage, on Feb. 6, of "An Act to amend the Act entitled 'An Act concerning oaths.'"—Laws of N. Y. (1806), chap. 3.

" The common council orders "that the Lamp Committee be directed to try the Experiment of reflecting Lamps suspended in the middle of Streets, and also to examine the practicability of lighting the City by Furnaces."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 121.

" The common council examines the possibility of paying off the city's debt to the Manhattan Co.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 122. See Ap 21.

13 The common council orders "that the Mayor be authorized to cloathe and pay the expences of certain Southern Indians now in this City and to defray the expence of their passage home."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 124. On Jan. 27, the board voted a gift of $30 for them.—Ibid., IV: 131.

" The common council appoints a committee "to draft and report a petition to the Legislature to raise the sum of $100,000 by a lottery or lotteries to defray the extraordinary expences of this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 125. Their draft of such petition was adopted on Jan. 20, and the board ordered that it be transmitted under seal.—Ibid., IV: 126. On Feb. 17, the legislature passed an act to enable New York City "to raise monies by tax."—Laws of N. Y. (1806), chap. 15.

20 The committee of the board of health, recommends:

1. "That the introduction of a copious supply of pure and wholesome water as well for domestic use, as for the purpose of sprinkling the streets and cleansing the kennels, during the summer season, is essentially necessary. . . . The experience of all old and large cities proves, that water procured from any source within their limits, or in their neighbourhood, is impure and unwholesome. . . . All schemes therefore, for procuring potable and culinary water from any source within the city, or in the neighbourhood, ought to be rejected, and some arrangement devised as soon as possible, at whatever expence, to bring it in sufficient quantity, and of the greatest purity, from some river or stream, that arises at a distance. . . ."

2. "That common sewers ought to be constructed in such streets of this city as are of sufficient descent to the river, in order to drain cellars and low grounds, and to discharge kitchen and backwater under ground as much as possible. . . ."

3. "That the line of wharves along our shores ought to be faced with solid stone masonry, constructed in such manner as to be impervious to water. . . ." Jan. 20

4. "That the interment of dead bodies within the city ought to be prohibited. . . ."

5. "That the planting of trees and other healthy vegetables ought to be encouraged. . . ."

6. "That a scientific and skilful engineer should be employed to assist in projecting and executing the several objects embraced in this report. . . ."

7. "That all cellars subject to the influence of tides or backwater, should be filled up level with the streets, and that all lots should be regulated in such manner as to discharge the water freely into the streets. . . ."

8. "And whereas various houses, in different parts of the city, have on the recurrence of every malignant fever, proved to be the principal seats of disease, and the graves of their tenants, the committee suggest the propriety of prohibiting the same to be let or occupied as dwelling houses, that they be converted into warehouses, and that any injury sustained by the proprietors be defrayed by the public."

9. "That no further encroachment be made into Hudson river, than what may be absolutely necessary for public basons and quays; and that no buildings be erected beyond the present boundary of Washington-street."

10. "That more extensive accommodations ought to be provided at Bellevue Hospital for the reception of sick patients; and that a pay hospital be erected for the accommodation of such persons, whose circumstances may afford the expence."

The committee also recommends more stringent quarantine measures.—Miller, Report on The Malignant Disease which prevailed in the City of N. Y. in the Autumn of 1805, 89–96.

" "The Committee appointed by the Society of Cincinnati, for erecting a Statue of the late General Washington, in this city [see D 15, 1802], have received proposals from a celebrated artist in Europe, for executing the work, in such a manner, which they believe will be agreeable to the subscribers. But they have postponed a definite arrangement, until they have collected sufficient funds to justify their entering into a positive contract for the purpose. They, therefore, earnestly request that the money already subscribed [see D 15, 1802] and unpaid may be immediately paid to the Branch Bank; and further subscriptions are solicited to enable them to meet the necessary expense.

"The proposed Statue will not only be a monument of veneration for that great and good man, but will also be highly ornamental to this opulent city."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ja 20, 1806; N. Y. H. S. Quarterly Bull., July, 1921. See Ja 27.

" The common council resolves "that it is highly important that a correct Survey and map be made of the Island of New York [see Ja 14 and F 13, 1805], laying down as well the individual as the Corporation property, and also the heighths, valleys, roads, and wharves." The resolution is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 128. See F 3, Je 2 and 30, O 20, 1806; Ja 26, F 16, Mr 4 and Ap 3, 1807.

27 "We are happy to learn that arrangements are making, for erecting in the city of New-York, a statue of Washington [see Ja 20]. This most laudable undertaking, has suffered a temporary suspension, but is now revived. . . . The corporation of the city have assigned a conspicuous place in the Park. . . . One of the most eminent artists of the age has been consulted, and nothing is now wanting to the completion of the enterprize, but an adequate subscription. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 27, 1806. This attempt, like the first (see D 15, 1802), failed. The matter was suggested again in 1811 (q. v., D 7).

28 The committee of the U. S. senate to which was referred the memorial of the New York merchants (see D 26, 1805) makes a report on that part of the memorial which refers to the "defenceless situation of the port of New York." The report states in part: "Early in the history of North America, the harbor of New York was discovered by the Dutch to be a convenient place of resort for ships. Subsequent experience has proved the judgment of the Hollanders to have been good. The place where the North river forms a junction with Long Island Sound, is as well, if not better, adapted to navigation and trade, than any which the Atlantic coast affords.

"The city, at the head of the harbor, is about twenty seven miles from the ocean. The ebb and flow of the tide is about six 1806 Jan. 28 feet. The saltness of the water is not much inferior to that of the neighboring sea. . . .

". . . Governor's Island has been already much improved by military works, and is the spot on which Fort Jay, and the principal other fortifications, have been erected. Bedlow Island, though very small has also been considered proper for defensive operations, and in some degree prepared to annoy an enemy. On Manhattan Island, where the city of New York stands, there was once a fort and battery. These have been demolished of late years, under a conviction of their unfitness, as have likewise some more recent breast-works and parapets, which though constructed but eight or nine years ago, were, within a twelvemonth, destroyed by the people who made them. . . .

"To the saltness, depth, and swiftness of the current, is to be ascribed the openness of the harbor of New York during the winter. In 1780, its surface was covered by a thick, strong, covering of ice. The like has never happened since . . .; and it is remarkable, that, while the Delaware, Patapsco, and Potomac, are frozen, and Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Alexandria, are secured, thereby from the fleets of the invader, the bay of New York, though situated further to the northward, possesses, commonly, no such protection, but is accessible from the ocean with but trifling impediment. . . ." The committee further proves the insecurity of New York by reviewing the ease with which it was captured by the Dutch in 1673 and by the British in 1776. In consideration of all these facts it commends a moderate appropriation for "further military improvements on the sites already purchased, and which the State may hereafter purchase and surrender; in full confidence at the same time, that a due proportion of the heavy artillery, armed ships, and gun-boats of the nation, will be stationed at the harbor of New York." The report is ordered "to lie for consideration."—Annals of Cong., 9th cong., 1st sess., 76–78. See also N. Y. Com. Adv., F 1, 1806. For the action of congress, see Ap 21.

" Gov. Lewis, in an address to the legislature at the opening of the session, says: "Application was made to the legislature at their last session, by a gentleman of the city of New-York, for aid in the support of a Botanic Garden [see Mr 6, 1805] which he had recently established. At the request of some of the members, I, in the course of last summer, paid it two visits, and am so satisfied with the plan and arrangement, that I cannot but believe, if not permitted to languish, it will be productive of great general utility. The objects of the proprietor are, a collection of the indigenous, and the introduction of exotic plants, shrubs, &c. and by an intercourse with similar establishments, which are arising in the eastern and southern states, to insure the useful and ornamental products of southern to northern, and of northern to southern climes. In the article of grasses, I was pleased to see a collection of one hundred and fifty different kinds. A portion of the ground is alotted to agricultural experiments, which cannot but be beneficial to an agricultural people. . . . in a country young as ours, the experimental sciences cannot be expected to arrive at any degree of excellence without the patronage and bounty of government; for individual fortune is not adequate to the task."—Senate Jour., 29th sess., 8. A bill was passed in the senate for giving Dr. Hosack an annual allowance to help him defray the expenses of the garden, but it was killed in the assembly.—Ibid., 29th sess., 11, 21, 35, 40, 41; Assemb. Jour., 29th sess., 102, 104 et seq.

29 "Dyde's London Hotel. Facing the Park, near the Theatre" is advertised to be opened on Feb. 1. It "will be conducted in the true Old English Style, the principles of which are civility, cleanliness, comfort and good cheer. . . . A Public Dinner will be set on Table every day precisely a quarter before 3 o'clock—A Supper at half past 9. . . . This house has an elegant ball room, that will accommodate about one hundred and twenty persons. . . ." It "stands unequalled by any other in the city, for its pleasant and healthy situation."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ja 29, 1806. On April 10, Dyde published a priced menu. The hotel "stands on high ground, is itself a lofty building, and from facing the Park, enjoys every advantage of ventilation, coolness and pure air." This notice gives the address as "Park Street" (the later Park Row).—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 10, 1806. See, further, My 10.

Feb. 1 The bridge over the Delaware at Trenton is formally opened, and passage between Philadelphia and New York can now be made by stage all the way, instead of by stage and boat.—Scharf & Westcott, Hist. of Phila., I: 524.

Feb. 1 The "Miranda Expedition" puts to sea on the armed trader "Leander," which, after being laden at New York with war materials, and by deception passing the customs officials; and after dropping down to Staten Island, where she received Gen. Francisco De Miranda and troops on board, proceeded towards South America. The object of the expedition was to free Caracas from Spanish oppression. In due time the vessel arrived at Jacmel, and was joined by two others. These two were attacked and captured by the Spanish, but the "Leander" escaped with Miranda. Some of the men of this expedition were recruited at New York "for service in the United States," to form a cavalry company by the name of "President's Guards," whose duty was to guard the president while travelling, and to guard the mail at New Orleans. Sixty prisoners, captured by the Spanish were tried for piracy, and their officers executed. Efforts were made by those imprisoned to secure the interposition of the government of the United States for their pardon.—De Voe, Market Book, 213–16. Other particulars of this abortive enterprise were disclosed in the trials of Col. Wm. Smith and Samuel G. Ogden, of New York.—Am. Citizen, Jl 24, 25, 26, 29, 30, 31, and Ag 1, 1806. Some of the earlier history of Miranda was related by Thomas Paine.—Ibid., Mr 29, 1806. The names of those deluded by Miranda were published in the N. Y. Eve. Post, F 20, 1808. See also Trials of Wm. S. Smith & Samuel G. Ogden, for misdemeanours had in the Circuit Court of the U. S. for the N. Y. District in July, 1806 (N. Y., 1807); and Sherman, A General Account of Miranda's Expedition (N. Y., 1808).

" The committee on the proposed survey and map of Manhattan Island (see Ja 20) reports the draught of an act for the appointment of commissioners "to regulate and lay out Streets in this City beyond certain limits." The bill was referred to a new committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 133–34. See, further, Je 2.

6 The legislature passes an act to incorporate "the Trustees of the Marine Hospital, called the Sailor's Snug Harbor, in the City of New-York" (see Je 1, 1801).—Laws of N. Y. (1806), chap. 4.

10 The common council pays Thomas Burling $2,575. "for ground taken to continue Broadway."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 139.

" The common council appoints a committee "to examine and report upon the present state of the Collect."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 138.

11 Joseph Tyler (see D 22, 1801) advertises for sale the 8-years' unexpired lease of the place he occupies, now called "Washington Gardens," containing nearly two acres of ground, with stables, green houses, etc., which, he says, is a "well known and profitable stand for business."—Am. Cit., F 11, 1806. Soon after, he resigned the place to his two sons.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 3, 1806.

17 The comptroller, Benj. Romaine, presents to the common council the following facts and observations on the subject of water-rights: "By the charter, the corporation hold the land in fee, from high to low water mark around the whole island, and from high to low water mark on Nassau Island from the East side of the Wallabout, to the West side of Red Hook.—They also hold by the same charter the fee right of 400 feet into the water, beyond low water mark, from a certain point beginning at Bestaver's Killitie (or creek) on the North river, from thence around the point of the Battery up the East river to a point considerably above Willett's dock. It has been the general custom of the Board to grant their soil under the water to individuals who held the marginal uplands. Previous to the revolution, and even within a few years since, these water rights were thought of little, and in many situations of no value, in consequence of the cheapness of the land already formed by nature, compared with the expence of docking into the river. . . . It is however daily increasing in value. . . . A recent sale of lands at public auction by the corporation of Trinity Church near the State Prison, proves the correctness of the forgoing observation. Eighteen lots, joining on the river (some a very short distance from Greenwich-street to high water mark) were sold for $57,800 being on an average $3,211 each.—And I am informed that the purchaser was induced to give this price, because, by getting the water grant from the corporation of New York, he could make 78 lots—at, by no means an adequate price, paid for the upland. . . . The first grant was given in the year 1734, reserving a quit rent of 1s. 6d per foot in front, on the river. Other grants have been given on the 1806 Feb. 17 North river, from the Battery to Chamber street from high to low water mark, and from thence 200 feet into the river; the rents reserved on these grants are from three-pence to one shilling per foot. These grants were all made previous to the year 1765, excepting one, which was made to the Episcopal Church in 1773. . . . The Corporation of the Trinity Church have obtained a promise of a grant, for all the soil under the water, lying between Chamber and Read-streets, on the North river. The late Frederick Rhinelander procured the promise from the Corporation of Trinity Church of this water, and also a promise from the Corporation of New-York of the same, for 42 years without any quit rent at all: after this time to pay a quit of one shilling per foot forever after; only for obligating himself to keep Greenwich-street or road, passable for carriages of pleasure and burthen to a certain distance. . . ."—Am. Citizen, Ag 26, 1806; M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 140. See Ag 26.

20 The common council pays Jos. F. Mangin $25 "for a Suit of colours."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 143.

24 John Pintard, city inspector, reports to the common council the city's population as 75,770. This is in a tabulated statement arranged by wards, which shows the number of white inhabitants, "people of colour and negroes," and slaves, male and female, all separately counted, and the totals of each; also the number of persons in each ward who retired from the city during the malignant fever in 1805, their total being 26,996 (see also Miller's Report on The Malignant Disease which prevailed in the City of N. Y. in the Autumn of 1805, 98); and the number of aliens in each ward.

According to the census taken by order of congress in 1801, he says, the population then amounted to 60,489. There is therefore an increase of 15,281 in the five years from 1801 to 1806, which is at the rate of about 25 percent. This census has been taken by order of the common council to ascertain the number and names of inhabitants eligible for jury duty in the city and county of New York, agreeable to an act of the legislature of March 31, 1801.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 146, 186–87. See, further, D 1, 1807.

" The common council appoints assessors to assess the expense "of opening Broadway in continuation above Art Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 144.

It refers to the alderman and assistant of the Eighth Ward a report of the street commissioner "relative to the laying out Streets in the upper part of Broadway."—Ibid., IV: 145.

" The common council orders the purchase of "the improvements of Mr. Smith at Horns hooks ferry . . ., the buildings and improvements at $750 and the Scows and boats at $250."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 145.

" The common council orders that Varick St. be opened from Brannon (Spring) to Budd (Van Dam) St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 145. See, further, Ja 11, 1808; and L. M. R. K., III: 1011.

Mar. 3 The common council passes a resolution to instruct the superintendent of repairs, under the direction of the alderman and assistant of the First Ward, to "cause the Battery to be manured and to provide Lombardy Poplars to replace such trees as may be deficient, and to cause the trees now on the same to be trimmed in such a manner as may benefit them."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 148.

" The common council orders that the lamp committee "cause an experiment to be made by putting reflectors in such number of small Lamps as they may think proper."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 148.

" The common council having appointed a committee "to aid the Street Commissioner in projecting two streets on the west side of Broadway between Art and Bleecker Street," makes the recommendation which the board confirms "that a Street be run from Broadway to Bastaven Killitie . . . opposite the South lines of Jones Street, to be called Amity Street, in lieu of Amity Street which lay diagonally to the South of it and which they recommend to be shut up."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 149, 162.

" The common council resolves that White, Walker, and Sugar Loaf (Franklin) Sts. "be run straight from Church Street to Elm Street and be respectively fifty feet in breadth and that Elm Street be continued straight from Leonard Street to Pitt Street and be of the breadth of Sixty feet."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 149.

" The common council refuses to compensate Peter Schermerhorn for damages which he alleges he sustained by the filling in of the Collect.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 150–51.

Mar. 3 The board also passes ordinances "to compel M[r] Lynch, the representatives of Edward Livingston and others to fill in their ground adjoining the Collect."—Ibid., VI: 151.

" On report of the street commissioner, the common council orders that "precepts issue" for opening Orchard, North, Arundel, and Stanton Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 151.

" The comptroller reports to the common council that "the house at the Corner of Wall & Broad Streets" was "sold" at auction on March 1,—that is, was leased for five years, at $250 a year, the lessee to keep the property in repair and pay all taxes and assessments.—From the original report (MS.) in metal file No. 27, city clerk's record-room. This was the old watch-house, at the south-east corner.—L. M. R. K., III: 973.

10 The common council passes an ordinance "to regulate the measure of Coals," by making the city's standard the same as that used by the U. S. government at the custom-house.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 153.

" The common council appropriates $20,000 "towards the expences of building the New City hall, for a year" beginning on this day, and resolves that this shall include "all debts and contracts incurred by reason of the said building."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 154. This appropriation appears to have been increased, on March 17, to $22,250. For other facts relating to the construction of the city hall, see items under several dates in 1800 to 1803 inclusive, and at the beginning of each year thereafter.

" The common council appoints a committee to entertain the Osage Indians.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 154.

12 The common council appoints a committee "to confer with a Committee of the Merchants relative to petitioning for fortifying the port and Harbour of this City." The board also agrees to the draft of a memorial to congress and one to the legislature to fortify the harbour.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 157. See also D 16, 1805.

" The common council determines that the city's lots at "Enklebergh" and on the Bloomingdale Road shall be sold "in perpetuity subject to an annual rent of twenty bushels of good Merchantable Winter Wheat on each Lot."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 159–60

14 The legislature passes an act for the "better and more permanent Support of the Hospital in the City of New-York," which provides: 1st—That the treasurer pay to the society of the hospital an annual sum of $12,500 until the year 1857; 2d—That the act passed on March 2, 1805 (q. v.), be repealed; 3d—That the governors of the hospital make an annual report of the state of that institution to the legislature.—Laws of N. Y. (1805), chap. 54.

17 The Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts is incorporated. —Scharf & Westcott, Hist. of Phila., I: 521.

" The common council orders "that the Building in the Alms house Yard which was erected for the use of the Carpenters engaged at the New City Hall, may be used by the Military Companies for a Drill room."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 162.

" The common council resolves "that the Bloomingdale Road from its junction with the Albany Post road to St[e]uben Street be of the Width of 80 feet and that the same be made as straight as the circumstances will admit by taking in and leaving out parts of the present Road . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 164.

" The common council refers to the committee of finance a report from the attorney regarding the opening of Canal St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 163.

" The common council authorises the mayor "to purchase the Government house and grounds thereunto appertaining in fee simple absolute provided that the same can be procured without any Condition in relation to its tenure."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 163. See Ja 26, 1807.

18 The foundation-stone of Grace Church, on Broadway, at the south-west corner of Rector St., is laid.—From inscription on the original stone, preserved in the present Grace Church; N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Mr 19, 1806. The church was consecrated on Dec. 21, 1808 (q. v.). See also descrip. of Pl. 101-a, III: 598.

21 Inhabitants of New York memorialize congress, asking "that permanent defences for the City and Port of New-York, may be speedily commenced, on a scale that will insure protection, against national hostility; and, as a security against predatory incursions, that this harbour may be made the station of such ships of war, as are not otherwise employed."—From the original undated memorial (printed) with signatures, filed in the N. Y. H. S., with MSS. and plans "for Defence of New York, 1807," which were 1806 presented to this society in 1810 by Dr. Samuel L. Mitchill. The

Mar. memorial was printed under this date in Exec. Doc., 9th cong.,
21 1st sess.

26 Congress prohibits the importation from Great Britain or her dependencies, or from any other country, of certain articles of British manufacture. The act is to take effect Nov. 15.—Laws of U. S., 9th cong., chap. 29. On Dec. 19, congress suspended the act until the following July 1.—Ibid., 9th cong. chap. 46. See also Annals of N. Am., 498, 500. In March, 1807, it was suspended until December. Commissioners to England had concluded a treaty, but this was rejected by the president.—Ibid., 501.

31 Dr. Gardner Jones petitions the common council "that the name of Jones Street may be continued to the Street formerly ceded by him to the Board."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 168. See My 19.

Apr. "A Plan For creating a Military Position for the Defence of 1 the Port and City of New-York" is published in the N. Y. Eve. Post, signed "A Citizen." In December, 1806, the author reprinted the article as a broadside, with an introduction explaining his desire to give it "additional publicity," as he deemed the subject of "very great importance to the City." A copy of this broadside or circular is in the archives of the N. Y. H. S. among the papers and plans relating to the city's defence which were presented to this society by Dr. Mitchill in 1810; it bears the hand-written signature "John B. Coles." The plan is based upon "Loss's map drawn from an actual survey, made by him and Captain Isaac Chauncy of the navy, in 1798." It consists of a ship channel made by artificial reefs, and an artificial island constructed at an advantageous point for "a castle or other military works."

" The common council adopts a plan of lots for "the Corporation property at Rhinelanders [wharf] where the fort lately was situate." A part of the ground is laid out as a depository for manure.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 171.

" A plan of the corporation ground (City Hall Park) bounded by Broadway, Chambers, and Chatham Sts., bears this date.—See original (map No. 121), in bureau of topography, borough president's office, Municipal Bldg.

" In an advertisement offering it for rent, Corre's Columbia Garden (see My 5, 1798) is described as a "Three Story Brick House, No. 8 State-street, facing the Battery."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 1, 1806. See, further, My 19. Corre also conducts the Mount Vernon Garden on Leonard St., near Broadway.—See My 14, 1800.

2 The legislature incorporates the "Highland Turnpike Company," which is to make a "good and sufficient" road from Kingsbridge to the city of Hudson.—Laws of N. Y. (1806), chap. 119. This company was projected as early as 1802.—Com. Adv., N 26, 1802, and Ja 21, 1803; Daily Adv., N 27, 1802.

5 A printed broadside or circular, bearing this date, advertises the "Hærlem, Bloomingdale & New-York Stage" of Thomas Richardson & Co. This stage started "from Marrener's Inn, at Hærlem, every morning at 8 o'clock, for New-York; and from Baker's Porter-House, Wall-street, New-York, for Hærlem, at 8 o'clock in the afternoon." It took "the Hærlem road" one day and "Bloomingdale" the next. The fare was fifty cents each way. Seats in the stage were engaged "at the Bar of either of the above Houses."—From an original broadside, printed by "Southwick & Hardcastle," No. 2 Wall St., owned by Dr. Samuel A. Green.

" Thomas Hodgkinson advertises that he has taken the "Punch & Porter House," lately kept by J. H. Williams at No. 17 Fair (Fulton) St., and calls it the "Shakespeare Tavern." Williams publishes a card about his removal to a "Punch & Porter House," at 14 John St., "late Coon's."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 5, 1806. Cf. O 22. Hodgkinson made his tavern a place of "genteel resort" (ibid.); it gained the patronage of clubs and societies, until the business outgrew the quarters at this address. For his change of location, see Ap 5, 1809.

7 A committee of the common council, appointed to recommend "the mode in which the residue of the Common Lands should be disposed of" reports, and the board confirms the recommendations except as to the "Dove Lots." Regarding these, it appoints a committee to report "whether any and what proportion of the Dove lots ought to be sold in perpetuity and what part of the same ought to be reserved."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 175.

The common council resolves "that it be particularly recom- Apr.
mended to the inhabitants of the Bowery Lane, and all others 7 residing in Streets not less than 40 feet in Width to plant trees in front of their respective houses and lots, not more than twelve feet apart . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 175; Am. Cit., Ap 9, 1806.

The common council orders that a new fire-engine house be " erected on the ground of "the new Dutch Church in Liberty Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 176.

The death of Maj.-Gen. Horatio Gates occurs. His funeral is 10 to be held on April 11 from No. 59 Broadway.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 10, 1806. He was 78 years of age. For sketch of his life, see Merc. Adv., Ap 11 and 17, 1806.

The common council appropriates $600 for the erection of a 14 soup-house.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 178. See also ibid., IV: 211, 240.

The common council appoints a committee to direct the work " of running out and marking "the line of partition as settled by the Commissioners of 1774" between New York and Harlem.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 178. In its report, on April 21, the committee described landmarks encountered in making a survey, following the course marked by the commissioners, and recommended "that at least four square stones be set in this line and noted as the division line by writing the words New York on one side & the word Harlem on the other." Confirmed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 187–88.

Congress appropriates $150,000 for fortifying the harbours 21 of the United States and $250,000 for building gun-boats.—Laws of U. S., 9th cong., chap. 47; Man. Com. Coun. (1868), 876.

The common council refers to a committee an application of "
John Hills, which states that "he is in possession of a military plan to prevent this City from attack."—M. C. C. (1784-1831), IV: 181. This may have been the same John Hills who drew a plan in 1785 from surveys made in 1782, which plan is now deposited in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. It was reproduced in the Man. Com. Coun. for 1848 and 1857.

The common council changes the name of Bullock St., in the "
Seventh Ward, to Broome St. after the lieutenant-governor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 181–82.

The common council orders payment of $100 to Miss Vaillant "
"towards a suit of colours."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 184.

The common council orders that an account of the Manhattan "
Co. for water furnished to the city "be referred to arbitration;" that John Macomb (McComb) be appointed arbitrator on behalf of the board, and "that the arbitrators be authorized to appoint an umpire."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 181. The comptroller reports that there is enough money in the treasury "to discharge $20,000 of the debt due to the Manhattan Company," with interest, and the board orders payment.—Ibid., IV: 182.

The common council refers to a committee an account pre- " sented by the comptroller for filling in the Collect.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 183.

"The Theatre in this city has been purchased by Messrs. 23
John K. Beekman and John Jacob Astor, for the sum of 50,000 dollars. These gentlemen intend to enlarge the audience-part of the house and finish the building in a handsome manner. Mr. [Thomas] Cooper is engaged as manager."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ap 23, 1806. See Ag 28, 1807.

The British ship "Leander" (of 60 guns) fires upon the Amer- 24 ican sloop "Richard" a quarter of a mile off Sandy Hook, killing "John Pearce," the brother of the master of the sloop.—Com. Adv., Ap 26 and 28, 1806; N. Y. Spectator, My 3, 1806. With the "Leander" were the "Cumbrian" (38 guns) and "Driver," "bringing to and overhauling every vessel which passes.."—Boston Gaz., My 1, 1806.

"As soon as the death of Mr. Peirce [sic] was known, volunteers chartered and went on board a pilot boat, and brought back the vessel that was on her way with provisions for the ships of war, and sent the provisions to the Poor-house amidst the huzzas of all classes. Other gentlemen armed themselves in the afternoon and sailed in the Patriot Pilot Boat, in pursuit of the vessels that have been captured, and ordered for Halifax. The fullest meeting ever known in this city, at the Tontine Coffee-House, have expressed their opinion on this occasion in the most spirited manner.

"The Resolutions, voted at this meeting, are the following:—

"Resolved, That the citizens of the United States are of right, 1806 Apr. 24 and according to the constitution and laws of the land entitled to the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property: that it is the primary and most important duty of government to defend, preserve, and protect the same.

"Resolved, That it is upon the strength and resources of the United States, that we can alone, under Providence, rely for national safety and the maintenance of national rights.

"Resolved, That the repeated outrages committed by foreign ships of war at the mouths of our harbors, merit the resentment and indignation of every friend to his country.

"Resolved that an administration which consents to pay money to avoid foreign insolence, or to prevent the violation of national rights, while it sells and dismantles its naval force, instead of encreasing and preserving it for the defence of our ports and commerce, prostrates the national honor, endangers the public safety, and invites both injustice and insult.

"Resolved, That the suffering of foreign armed ships to station themselves off our harbor, and there to stop, search, and capture our vessels, to impress, wound, and murder our citizens, is a gross and criminal neglect of the highest duties of government, and that an Administration which patiently permits the same, is not entitled to the confidence of a brave and free people

"Resolved, That the body of Merchants who foresaw the impending danger, and petitioned Congress and the State Legislature to afford protection to this city and its lawful commerce, have merited the approbation of their fellow citizens.

"Resolved, That the Memorials of the Merchants and Citizens to Congress, have been neglected, and that we perceived on the part of the members of the Senate and Assembly from this city such exertions and zeal as were expected of them to engage the interposition and influence of the State legislature with Congress for the protection of our defenceless city.

"Resolved, That so long as the British ships of war which have assumed a station at the entrance of this port are suffered to remain there, it is earnestly recommended that no supplies, provisions, or succours of any kind, should be afforded them from our markets, nor any intercourse held with them in any shape whatever, and that our pilot-boats should abstain from visiting them.

"Resolved, That the murder of John Pearce, one of our fellow-citizens by a shot from a British ship of war, at the entrance of our harbour, and within half a mile of the shore, while he was engaged in peaceably navigating a coasting vessel laden with provisions for our market, was an act that excites our detestation and abhorrence, and calls upon our government for the adoption of prompt and vigorous measures to prevent a repetition of such wanton and inhuman conduct, and so flagrant a violation of our national sovereignty.

"Resolved, That we will attend the funeral of the deceased, and that it be recommended to the ships in the harbour to display the customary signs of mourning.

"Resolved, That this meeting approve the conduct of those persons who intercepted the supplies which were sent from this city to those vessels who now blockade our harbour, and who have murdered our fellow-citizen, John Pearce."—From N. Y. news in ibid., My 1, 1806 See also memoranda from the diary of John Pintard regarding the Pearce (or Pierce) case, in Man. Com. Coun. (1860), 620–24. See, further, Ap 26.

26 The mayor lays before the common council affidavits "respecting the atrocious conduct of the British, in murdering John Pierce [see Ap 24] one of our fellow Citizens, while on board the Sloop Richard one of our Coasting Vessels, near Sandy Hook, and also in violating the jurisdictional Rights of the United States." The board resolves that Pierce "be interred with the assent of his relations at the public expence on Monday next at 12 O'Clock;" also that it "will attend the funeral in a body;" "that all the Captains of American Vessels in the harbor be requested to hoist their colors half mast on that day," and "that our fellow Citizens generally be invited to unite with us on this melancholy occasion."

The board commends the mayor for promptly giving to the president of the United States "a statement of the improper conduct of the British Ships of War off our port;" and requests the mayor "to obtain such further information as may be practicable respecting illegal Captures, impressments and detentions off our port by the said Ship and to transmit the same to the national executive in full confidence that proper measures will be adopted for the vindication of our national honour and interest."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 185. See Ap 28. The funeral expenses, paid on May 12, were $441.83 —Ibid, IV: 205 Apr. 26

The common council agrees to the draft of a memorial to be sent to the president, "praying that a naval force to consist of three or more frigates may be immediately sent to the protection of our port and harbour."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 186. 28

J. & C. J. Delacroix announce that "Vauxhall Garden, in the Bowery" (see Ja 30, 1804; Ap 20, Je 5 and 25, Jl 4, and Ag 8, 1805), is now open for the season; admittance two shillings, "which entitles the purchaser to its value in any refreshments." "A Summer Theatre is erecting" here which will be opened in July.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 2, 1806; L. M. R. K., III: 981; Brown, Hist. of the N. Y. Stage, I: 172; M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 184. The common council resolves "that an entire new road to be called Hudson Avenue be laid out and Opened from Bank Street at Greenwich," 80 ft. wide, along a route defined in the resolution, and extending northward "until it intersects the Cross Road commonly called Harsens Road and that it be continued . . . until it comes into the old Bloomingdale road;" also "that the cross Road Aforesaid be opened to the North River."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 197. This "entire new road" never was made. Evidently "Hudson Avenue" was the same as Hudson Street, which is an 80 foot street. For history of this street see L. M. R. K., III: 1002–3. When the Commissioner's Plan went into effect, and after Hudson St. was extended as far as Ninth Ave., that avenue became its logical continuation. Apropos of Hudson St., the opening and benefit and damage maps of that important thoroughfare are not now to be found; on that account, the survey departments of title companies have been often at a loss for needed data in preparing titles on Hudson St. 5

Harsen's Road never was extended to the North River. It reached the Bloomingdale Road between 71st and 72d Sts. The cutting through of the numbered streets as proposed by the Commissioners' Plan superseded all such earlier plans.

Mount Pitt, which is about "a mile and a half from the Park, and stands at the east end of Grand-street, which leads from the Bowery, overlooking the Belvidere House, commanding a fine view of the Narrows, Hellgate, &c," is opened by William Whetheroft "in a new style, for the reception of company."—*Com. The advertisements of "Mount Pitt" (also called "Ranelagh Gardens") show that this resort and Dyde's Hotel are in some way associated. Whetheroft (or Wheatcroft) says that his boarders will have "the advantage of dining at Dyde's Hotel, in the Park [see Ja 29] if they wish;" while the ad. of Dyde's Hotel, which began to appear in the issue of June 23, states that its dining-room had "a full view of the Park," and that a balloon will ascend "from Ranelagh Gardens, late Mount Pitt, on Saturday next, the 28th inst. at 6 o'clock in the afternoon. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 23, 1806. For Mount Pitt, see also My 2, 1807.

" The common council orders that the street commissioner take immediate measures for: 1. Finishing "the regulation of the Middle Road, from the South side of the Bridge near the powder house to John Murray's gate, agreeably to the profile," following directions recorded in the minutes. (This Middle Road was the present Fifth Ave.)

2. Erecting "a substantial Stone Bridge across the road above mentioned in place of the present Bridge with Walls on each side about ten feet high in the Centre, and one hundred and fifty feet long; besides a parapet wall three feet high and two feet thick above the surface of the Road. The arch must be seven feet high, five feet wide, and fifty feet long, and be laid with good Masons Work in lime and sand. The side Walls are to be put up dry, faced on each side, battered, and sufficiently thick to resist the pressure of the earth which will be filled in between them."

3. Erecting "a substantial arched Bridge of Stone on the Middle Road, over the stream South of Mr Post's in lieu of the present Bridge. The arch is to be eight feet high, five feet broad, and sixty feet in length across the road, and laid in lime and sand. The side Walls are to be put up dry, battered as aforesaid, and to be about twelve feet high, besides three feet parapet, two feet thick, and two hundred feet in length, on each side. . . ."

" The street commissioner delivers to the common council a map of the ground between Greenwich Lane and the Bowery Road, which he has prepared. The board adopts it, and directs him to cause the streets, portrayed thereon, "to be surveyed & staked out at the several Corners, to enable the proprietors to ascertain with precision the quantity of Ground that will be taken from them for that purpose."

The board also directs that "the Street leading from the intersection of Hammond Street & Greenwich Lane to the mouth of the lane between Samuel Burling & Thomas Burlings land on the Bowery be opened of the breadth of sixty feet."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 209–10, 216.

" The common council grants permission to Abraham Cannon and others "at their own expence to erect a Market by the name of Grand Street Market, at the foot of Grand Street under the direction of the Alderman an[d] assistant of the Ward and at such place as they may appoint upon condition that the same shall be the property of this Board and in all respects subject to its controul."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 207. This market was commonly called the "Corlaers Hook Market."—De Voe, Market Book, 387–88. See also L. M. R. K., III: 959. The market was demolished in 1819 (q. v., Ag 23 and S 6).

" In an ad. for the sale of ice at his Columbia Garden (see Ap 1), Joseph Corre says that "of latter years the water in the Collect has been in a putrid state, to make the Ice unfit to be made use of in liquors," and that he "has, at a very great expence, procured ice from a fresh spring above three miles from the city." He offers this ice at Columbia Garden by subscription, at $15, "each subscriber to be allowed eight pounds of Ice per day, to be delivered from seven o'clock in the morning until four in the afternoon; to be continued until the 20th day of September next. Ice at that rate will cost no more than a penny and a half per pound."—Am. Cit., My 19, 1806. This is the earliest mention found of a business of this kind in New York.

" The common council directs the street commissioner to open "the outlet of Bestavers Killatie through Village Street to the Hudson River," for which purpose the owners and occupants of the lots benefitted are to be assessed.—*M. " The common council orders that "the Cross Street running from Magazine to Anthony Street" be made a specified width.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 226. "The Cross Street" was the present Park St. As it appears with the name Cross St. on Pl. 64, Vol. I, it must have been laid out prior to 1797. Magazine St. was the name of the present Pearl St., and Anthony that of Worth St.—See L. M. R. K., III: 992 (Anthony), 997 (Cross), 1005 (Magazine), 1012 (Worth).

The common council adopts a programme of events for celebrating the thirtieth anniversary of the independence of the United States. One feature is "That the Brass Ordinance taken from the enemy during the revolutionary War, be removed from the Arsenal to the Battery on the afternoon of the 3d of July and be returned to the Arsenal on the afternoon of the 5th."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 234. This ordnance was afterwards kept in the new arsenal on Fifth Ave., opposite 64th St.—See N 15, 1848; Je 9, 1857. 23

The committee on the proposed survey of "the Island of 30

1806 June 30 New York" (see Je 2) reports "that the obtaining a correct Map of this Island is a matter of very great importance to the public, and that Mr Hassler and the person associated with him are commended as possessing the Talents requisite for making such survey and Map—The Committee therefore recommend that they be employed for three months beginning at such time in the ensuing month as may be agreeable to them and in such place or places and in such manner as may be directed by the Committee who will examine their Work and furnish them from time to time with such advice & directions as will render the same on the Score of accuracy & dispatch most to the advantage of the Corporation." The report also contains an estimate of expense beyond which it cannot go,—namely, $5 a day for Mr. Hassler's services, and $4 a day for his associate's, they to find their own instruments, and be allowed $1 a day for their subsistence. Allowance is also to be made for the employment of four chain-bearers and flagmen. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 238–39. July 2 "Deklyne's Tavern," on Hammond St., Greenwich, is mentioned in an advertisement for the sale of adjoining lots.—Spectator, Jl 2, 1806. In 1800, Deklyn had established a ferry from his wharf at Hammond St. (W. 11th St.) to New Jersey, known as "Greenwich Ferry."—L. M. R. K., III: 942.

3 "The synagogue lot, after the last purchase was made, July 3, 1806, was an irregular oblong, 86.4 feet front on the present South William street line, and running through to a narrower front on the present Beaver street line. The second synagogue was built on the site of the 'first,' at the south-western corner of the plot, near the Mill street front and the Alexander line. It was in the form of an oblong like the original synagogue, but running east and west, while the synagogue of 1729 ran north and south, with an entrance on its western side. Entrance to the new building was at the western end, the door being close to the line of the lot. East of the synagogue on the Mill street front, at the present No. 18 South William street, was the parsonage. North of the synagogue was the woman's building, with a space between the two where the ceremonies of the Feast of Tabernacles were held. Bridging this space was a closed passageway affording access to the synagogue galleries from the second story of the woman's building. Near the woman's building, and in the rear of the parsonage, was the house occupied by the sexton. Back of this, at No. 42 Beaver street, at the point where the old line of Princess street took a deep jog to the south, was the home of Moses Seixias. The rest of the synagogue plot was an open court or yard through which the people passed and repassed to and from the synagogue. The Mill street front was closed by a high fence which extended beyond the synagogue to the parsonage yard and the public entrance to the lot was through Beaver street, then much narrower than at present. The present site of the entrance could be found by measuring out into Beaver street, opposite the line between numbers 38 and 40, a distance of fifteen feet. If the exact spot is sought where the synagogue of 1729 stood, it can be found by measuring westerly along the north line of South William street from the southwest corner of the Peter Goelet building, a distance of fifty feet. The old line of Mill street ran out into South William street here three or four feet, so that a stake driven at this point close to the line of the buildings at Nos. 22–24 South William street would stand within the quadrangle formed by the foundations of the synagogue and near its southeast corner."—Pubs., Am. Jewish Hist. Soc., III: 53–54.

4 In a column-long advertisement, a "splendid fête," to be held at Vauxhall Garden, in the Bowery, is described. There is to be shown "an accurate representation of the Grand Procession Which was given by the Citizens of New-York in honor of the adoption of the Constitution; the whole executed in Paintings, the figures, horses, &c. &c. as large as life, and will move before the spectators by machinery, in the same order as in the original procession; the description and order taken from a gazette of the year 1788."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 30, 1806. Reference is made in this announcement to "an account of the procession published by Messrs. Waites." This was a 6-cent pamphlet, first advertised on June 23 by G. & R. Waite, who kept a book-store and lottery office at No. 38 Maiden Lane.—Ibid., Je 23, 1806. It is unknown to Evans. See, further, Ag, 1806; Je 6, 1807. July 4

The common council directs the comptroller to negotiate a loan from the Manhattan Co. for $20,000.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 242. On Aug. 18, another of $10,000 was ordered.—Ibid., IV: 261. Again, on Sept. 1, a further loan of $15,000 was sought. —Ibid., IV: 265. 7

Manhattanville is "now forming in the Ninth Ward of this city, on the Bloomingdale road, in front of Haerlem Cove on the North river." The corporation of New York has "opened a road, or avenue, thro the same from the North to the East-river. . . . The proprietors of the soil are now laying out the streets, which are to be wide and open, to the Hudson-river, where vessels of 300 tons may lie in safety. A handsome Academy has just been built on the main street."—Spectator, Jl 9, 1806; descrip. of Pl. 112, III: 616. See also L. M. R. K., III: 987, and Commissioners'. Map, Pl. 79, Vol. I. Three maps, on file in the bureau of topography, dep't of public works, without date, but evidently of this period, show this locality. Map No. 171 shows "Manhattanville as surveyed and laid out by Adolphus Loss, and divided among the proprietors, sold and leased;" Map No. 172 shows the new streets there; and Map No. 175 shows the streets and dimensions. Advertisements for the sale of property there were published on Feb. 4 and June 9, 1807 (q.v.). In 1836, the legislature passed an act to settle the plan of Manhattanville. 9

Trinity vestry grants the petition of William Jauncey and others for "Aid towards building a Church at Bloomingdale." This aid is to be given "When the Church is completed."—Trin. Min. (MS.). Reference is made here, doubtless, to St. Michael's P. E. Church, the corner-stone of which was laid on a plot of land, 150 by 75 feet, just north of 99th St., and east of the Bloomingdale Road. The church was completed the following year, and consecrated on July 27, 1807.—Annals of St. Michael's, 7, 9; Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 74. 10

By a vote of 11 to 4, the common council directs the market committee to assign free of charge to 14 Republican butchers, stalls in that part of the Fly Market called the Fish Market.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 250. This favouritism caused much comment.—De Voe, Market Book, 221–22. 21

The market committee reports to the common council regarding the order for butchers' stands in the Fish Market (see Jl 21), "That they have deliberately Considered the nature of the duty enjoined on them (and with all due deferance to the Judgment of this Board) do give it as their opinion that it wo[d] be improper and unjust to give away these stalls to any Individual whatsoever in as much as an offer has been made for one of those middle Stalls at the rate of 120 Dollars per Annum and numbers of Butchers stand ready to give the same amount Yearly for the remainder of them (and more money if required) they are clearly of an opinion that a considerable revenue may be derived to the Corporation funds by Leassing the said Stalls for L. 3. 5 or 7 Years to give away these Stalls in the manner Contemplated by the Resolution of last monday [Jl 21] will Certainly cause a very great Clamor and discontent by the Citizens (with an exception only of those who are immediately Interested therein) Besides they are further of an Opinion that there is no immediate necessity of such a measure going into Effect at this time for until the Slip is filled up settled and compleated there will be evidently a want of Room for the Country People bringing into Market their Supplies of every kind, as also a deficiency for the use of the Fishermen's Stalls &c." The board, thereupon, by a vote of ten to seven, resolves that execution of the order of July 21 be postponed until "proper accommodations are made for the Fish market." A motion to rescind the order is lost. The market committee is directed to present "at the next meeting a plan for a Fish Market to be erected at the East end of 28 1806 Jl 28 Aug. — the present Fish market."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 252–54. See D 15.

A description of New York City is written by "a resident of Philadelphia;" it is, in part, as follows: "After tea, I walked through a part of the City, and fairly lost myself. It has, at least some parts of it, a very brilliant appearance in the evening, particularly Broadway. The shops are mostely open and very handsomely lighted, which gives then [sic] an air of great splendour. There appear to be many handsome walks here, at least they appear so at night. Opposite to my lodgings stand two houses which were built towards the conclusion of the Seventeenth Century, as I am informed by the iron dates annexed to the wall. They are certainly uncouth enough, and are built with the gable ends fronting the street; from that part of it where the roof commences, a man might walk up the wall to the peak of the roof with tolerable safety, the mason having kindly built it so as to form steps of about ten inches in height. They were probably once thought handsome, but tastes are strangely altered, and the taste in which they were built was probably the taste of a Dutchman. [For types of Dutch houses in New York, see Man. Com. Coun. (1847), 346, 371; (1848), 384; (1850), 422, 443; (1853), 22, 378; (1858), 526; (1865), 341; (1866), 535.]

. . . [The writer here describes the kilns and factories of stone-ware pottery on the East River.]

"I am still perplexed to find my way through the crooked streets of this city, nor do I think I could obtain a tolerable knowledge of them in a month. The houses appear to me to be huddled together without regularity, like trees in a forest; and when I think I am traveling in the road I wish to go, I frequently find myself in one which runs in a contrary direction.

. . . [Here he describes an evening visit, by hackney-coach, to Vauxhall gardens; but refers to them again, infra.]

". . . I have not seen a waggon, cart, or dray, since my arrival? Those things which I have seen most resembling carts, are built, lightly, like those of Philadelphia, without front, side, or tail boards. They have posts at the corners with two other pieces annexed to the front ones, running longitudinally, to support the load. I have seen something like a dray, except that it is shorter, lighter, and [the] tail of it is about one and a half, or two feet from the ground; these have likewise supporters at the corners, where they carry any thing that requires packing, as bottles, &c. It is done by placing a bed on the car. I have seen no teams of horses, nor covered waggons, like those frequently seen at Philadelphia; and all the carmen wear long coarse linen frocks.

". . . he that visits New York, during the summer season, will probably see many sweating beneath a wooden yoke of labour. These are the venders of milk: instead of awkwardly travelling along, with a heavy bucket of milk in one hand only, they are thus accoutred. A piece of wood, which I call a yoke, about two feet long, is made to fit around the back of the neck, and rest upon the shoulders. To each end is affixed a chain, with a hook at the end. This chain is of such length as to enable them, the carriers, by stooping a little, to hook the handles of two large milk vessels, made of tin, resembling a grocer's tea-canister; containing three or four gallons of milk. One of these is thus carried on each side, to the houses of their customers. . . .

"There are no wharves here where fire-wood is regularly landed for sale; nor is it lawful to land it. It must be carried from the vessel to the car, and from thence to the house of the purchaser. It is said to be very dear. Pumps, of a large size, with long, clumsy, wooden handles, are found in the middle of many of the streets. Their removal is said to be gradually taking place, and it is expected they will soon be succeeded by something less clumsy and unsightly; they do not, however, furnish the inhabitants with all the water they use, the greater part being let through the streets and into the houses from the water-works of the Manhattan Company.

"There are few or no genteel Taverns in this city; or, if there are, I have seen none. There are, indeed, many of a superior kind, such as the Phoenix and Tontine Coffee-houses, hotels, &c., and a great number of what Philadelphians would call 'Sailor's lodging-houses' . . . Some of the Coffee-houses are very large, and have a fine appearance; here, public sales of various articles of merchandize are frequently held.

"The yards of the houses of this city are not so large and commodious generally, as those of Philadelphia. . . .

"Many of the wharves are large and convenient, and have extensive ranges of excellent brick stores erected on them; many are very narrow, and inconvenient in the extreme, and make a poor appearance. Aug. —

"I have visited New Federal Hall [the present city hall], or rather that part of it which is erected. When completed, it will be the largest and most elegant building I have seen. The lower story, or perhaps, more correctly speaking, the foundation, is built of a fine brown stone, which is brought from some part of New Jersey; what is called the back front of the edifice is of the same material. . . .

"Old Federal Hall is not a building to my taste; it has an old, but, to me, not a venerable appearance. . . .

"Trinity Church, in Broadway, is a dark colored stone building, ornamented with a steeple but little embellished; the windows are of the Gothic kind, having pointed arches, and apparently leaden sashes, and small glasses, such as were sometime since to be found in old buildings in Philadelphia. . . . [This was the second Trinity Church, preceding the present edifice.—See Pls. 54-a, 68-a, Vol. I.]

"The Park is a handsome walk, but cannot be compared without disadvantage to the Centre Square at Philadelphia. It is, nevertheless, a very agreeable place, in which one may be sheltered from the noonday heats, and enjoy the cool breeze of evening. As it is situated at or near the intersection of several fine streets, and commands a view of several public buildings, these circumstances may make it, in the opinion of some, superior to the one above mentioned, yet, as a walk, or as a garden, it must certainly yield to it: it has also the additional misfortune of being unfashionable . . .

"Many of the houses of this City are large and elegant, particularly those in part of Greenwich-street, Broadway, and a few others. They are generally covered with slate, or tile of various colours; they mostly have the projecting eave and richly decorated mouldings, cornices, &c., which contribute to give a building a grand and imposing appearance; like the houses of Philadelphia, they are built of various materials; the principal part are of bricks, few or none of marble; some white marble fascia and window heads in the Pennsylvania taste; these are few in number, and very many have no fascia at all, having the front wall plain, from the ground to the roof, which gives them a naked appearance; to me unpleasing, perhaps because I am unaccustomed to see them so.

"This morning I accompanied 'mine host' to the Fly-market, which is the principal one in this City; . . . It consists of three separate ranges, in one continued line, commencing at Pearl-street and ending near East-river, the whole forming a line perhaps as long as one of the ranges of the Philadelphia High-street-market. It generally resembles them also, but differs in particulars. The floors are of wood, which in wet weather makes them slippery and inconvenient. I do not find here that great plenty and variety of provisions in general, as at Philadelphia, nor are they quite so cheap. Fish, however, form an exception to this rule; they may be had in greater plenty, variety, and freshness. . . .

"I expected to be enabled to give you a more correct account of Vauxhall-gardens [on the Astor property—see Jl 4], and, therefore, visited them in the day-time; but when I arrived, found the gate shut; nor could all the noise I was able to make, by beating against it, induce those on the inside to admit me. The players were rehearsing. . . . [He describes the resort, nevertheless. The enclosed space is said to be "three acres." Admission to the "Summer Theatre," which stands "at the front of the grounds" (whether on the Broadway or Bowery side is not stated), is 50 cents "for Box, Pit, or Gallery"—these being "one and the same thing, for the spectators sit in the open air." See, further, Je 6, 1807.]

"During my stay at New York, I visited the Shakespeare Gallery, opposite the Park, which contains a large number of pictures representing the principal scenes in Shakespeare's plays. . . . There are likewise some good paintings; a full length picture of the venerable Washington, a bust portrait of Mr. Jay, one of David Garrick, said to be exquisite, and some others. . . ."—Man. Com. Coun. (1868), 828–40.

4 John Melish, a Scotchman who has travelled extensively, arrives at New York; the following are some of his remarks about the city: "I heard but little politics among those with whom I associated, but I observed a good deal in the newspapers, and two of 1806 Aug. 4 them were very coarse and scurrilous. They were on different sides of the political question, of course, and substituted abusive language and personal declamation for reasoning. . . .

"Party politics is here, as well as in Britain, a noisy subject; and the question between the parties not being well defined it is difficult to understand it. From the best account of it which I could procure, the schism seems to have taken place about the time of the adoption of the federal constitution, which gave rise to very animated discussions in which those who were in favour of it were styled federalists and those opposed to it antifederalists. It now receives the approbation of the whole community, but the distinction of parties continues, under the names of federalists and democrats. They equally lay claim to the title of republicans, and are often styled federal republicans and democratic republicans. It was in vain that I looked for a satisfactory account of the matter in the New York papers which I had an opportunity of seeing; but I observed, in one of them, that the federalists were styled the disciples of Washington, and the democrats the supporters of Jefferson. I thought I would discover the difference in the declared opinions of these two eminent characters. I accordingly turned to general Washington's Farewel Address, and Mr. Jefferson's Inaugural Speech, but the sentiments inculcated in these two papers appeared to me to be precisely the same. The one recognizes popular government, and recommends union, obedience to the laws, religion and morality, and to keep party spirit within bounds. The other declares, that the will of the majority, legally expressed, is the law of the land; and recommends harmony and affection, with the free exercise of reason, of religion, and of the press. Professing to act under these sentiments, it is somewhat singular that there should be a difference at all; but, to use the words of one of the characters above alluded to, 'every difference of opinion is not a difference of principle,' and the political question may be considered as essentially different from what it is in Britain. In Britain, the question between whig and tory is, whether the controuling power shall be vested in the people or in the crown. In America, it is whether it shall be vested in this or that set of men. . . .

"On the 20th of August, I was introduced to that celebrated character, Thomas Paine. He was confined in New York by a hurt in his leg, and lived in the house of a Mrs. Palmer, widow of the late deistical minister in that city. . . ."—Travels in the United States of America, in the years 1806 & 1807, and 1809, 1810, & 1811; including an account of passages betwixt America and Britain, and Travels through various parts of Great Britain, Ireland and Upper Canada, by John Melish (Phila., 1812), I: 55–68. 22 A survey of the harbour, bay, and Narrows of New York has been made, pursuant to an order of Gen. Dearborn, secretary of war, by Col. Jonathan Williams, of the corps of engineers; and a chart of the survey has been drawn by Capt. Alexander Macomb. It appears that the distance from the ferry at "Powle's" Hook to Governor's Island is 3,270 yds. The passage between Governor's Island and Long Island, sometimes called Buttermilk Channel, and within memory both narrow and shallow, is now 8 fathoms deep. The distance from Whitehall Slip to the wharf on Governor's Island is 300 yds.—Repertory, Ag 22, 1806, citing Nat. Intel.

From the "Water Office 18 Upper Chamber-street," John Fellows, superintendent of the "Manhattan Water Works" issues this notice: "Every part of the city where the aqueduct extends, has an ample supply of water; if there is a deficiency in a single house, it is the fault of the lateral pipe, which it is the duty of the proprietor or occupant to repair, or give notice thereof at the Water Office. Both the steam engines have lately undergone a thorough repair, and a constant and full supply in future may be confidently depended on. The aqueducts in various parts of the city have been opened and the sediment collected, discharged. The water is now clear and good. . . ." To prevent misunderstanding in future, "the regulations respecting the distribution of the water" are republished. These are practically the same as those printed on Nov. 14, 1799 (q.v.).—*Am. 24 "European Coffee House.—A city so populous and opulent as New-York, cannot but feel the want of a Coffee House, established on the same footing as those which exist in almost every city in Europe, and where Coffee, Punch, Lemonade, Orgeat, Ice Cream, and all sorts of Refreshments may be called for at any hour of the day, as well as old Wines of all Kinds, and of the best quality; genuine Martinico Cordials, particularly those strengthening and restorative Soups, so much renowned in Europe under the French appellation of Consommes, which may be carried on the sea and Kept safe during six months.

3 The common council resolves "that Thompson Street [L. M. R. K., III: 1010] be made to run parallel to Broadway from where it now crosses Spring Street and immediately easterly of a foundation laid by John Stevens at the corner of Spring Street, and that the intermediate streets between Thompson Street and Broadway be surveyed parallel thereto and in such a manner as to cause the deficiency of ground if any to be divided between the several blocks as equally as possible."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 288.

5 A citizen, who signs himself "Washington," in a published letter tries to awaken public sentiment and action in favour of measures of defence for New York City. He refers to the memorial to congress, last winter (see Mr 21), in which the citizens demanded "provision for Permanent Fortifications, a Naval Arsenal, and Ships of Force." The city, however, remains defenceless. He says that, "if we cannot protect ourselves, we shall certainly be the victims of foreign ambition;" and adds that "the revenue of this port, for one year, properly applied, would insure our security, and the expenditure, instead of impoverishing, would invigorate the industry of our citizens." He proposes that the inhabitants convene, by wards, and elect a committee in each ward, to form a general committee, representing all the citizens, for the purpose of preparing another memorial to congress, having the same object as the last one.—People's Friend, N 5, 1806. See N 12.

12 Doubtless prompted by the suggestion of "Washington" on Nov. 5 (q.v.), a meeting of Federal Republicans and others of the Sixth Ward, who are favourable to the purpose of fortifying the city and port, was called for this evening "at Trowbridge's Tavern, in the Bowery."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 12. The resolutions drawn up on this occasion state that nearly one third of the whole revenue of the United States is derived from the city and port of New York. —Ibid., N 13, 1806. See N 21.

19 The annual election of charter officers takes place and the Federalists gain the upper hand again in the common council.— Nov. N. Y. Eve. Post, N 20 and 21, 1806. Valentine, writing in 1854, 19 says that in this election "the Federalists mustered their forces for a vigorous contest and made nominations for all the wards excepting the Fifth, in which they threw their strength against the Democratic ticket, by supporting an independent nomination, headed by Roger Strong for Alderman. On the day of election, the contest was the most animated ever witnessed in this city, and the result was doubtful up to the moment of closing the polls. The Democrats were hopeless of the first three wards, but put forth their strongest efforts in the upper wards . . . toward evening it became apparent that the Fourth Ward was lost to the Democrats, that the Independent candidate was elected in the Fifth, and that the Ninth Ward was necessary to give the Democrats an equal number with the Federalists, viz., four to each. The news from the Ninth (which was the outer ward of the city, and the returns of which were difficult to be procured at an early period) was the topic of general inquiry. . . . It was finally ascertained that it had gone for the Federalists, by a small majority. Great rejoicing consequently ensued among the triumphant party."—Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 452–53; M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 300–2.

The new board was soon flooded with petitions from hungry Federalists seeking office; one Jacob Wright petitioned for "such office as he may be enabled satisfactorily to discharge," but thought he would like best "Superintendant of the alms house."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 313, 320, 323, 326, 332. A considerable portion of the time during the January sessions of the board was given up to removals from office and balloting for new incumbents.—Ibid., IV: 332–33, 337, 344–46.

The corporation of the city is urged to "proceed with diligence 25 in building and completing the new City Hall." Because of "the want of a more suitable house for holding the Courts of Justice than the present Old City-Hall, three of our principal streets are obliged to be chained up, upwards of 280 days in the year, in order to prevent the interruption of business by rattling of carriages." —*N. The common council receives a communication from Sir 1 James Jay "respecting an improved plan of this City, and also concerning the fortification of the harbour," and orders that it lie on the table.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 307. Sir James's letter was published later, portions of it being the following: ". . . Should our City increase for a few years more, as rapidly as it has done for some years past; and the new streets laid out as they have hitherto been, not on a deliberately formed plan, in which health, convenience and beauty are combined. . . . Disfigured with more narrow streets; more skew houses, the ridicule of strangers. . . . Lots over-built upon; no provision for plenty of water for domestic use, extinguishing fire, and clensing the streets; no proper means for carrying off filth; no places or spots of ground reserved for public buildings and other public uses; . . . To avoid therefore the future evils . . . it is proposed that all the ground that is not already built upon, extending from the present buildings to a certain distance northwards, should be accurately surveyed from low water mark in each river; that a survey should also be made to a certain distance below water, in order to ascertain the depth of water at different distances from the shore: that a map should be made from these surveys. . . ." —N. Y. Eve. Post, D 20, 1806.

The St. Andrew's Society of the State of New York celebrates " its anniversary. A published account of this states: "The report of the Committee appointed the last anniversary to superintend the erection of a Monument to the memory of their late illustrious brother, Major-General Alexander Hamilton, while it excited fresh pain in a wound which has never been closed, afforded them 1806 Dec. 1 the melancholy pleasure arising from an attempt to give permanent expression to their feelings. . . .

"The Monument is in the form of an obelisk, on a pedestal 4 feet square, and nearly 3 feet above the base. The obelisk itself is composed of four pieces of white marble, 8 feet in length and is surmounted by a flaming urn; the elevation of the whole structure fourteen, enclosed with a neat iron railing, the ground having been generously ceded to the St. Andrew's Society by Captain James Deas, one of its members [at Weehawken, on an eminence overlooking the river]. [See, however, Je 3, 1831.]

"The scite of the Monument commands a view of the city of New-York, and of the west side of the Island, and an extensive water prospect reaching from a point several miles above it in the North River, across the Bay, through the Narrows, to a point several miles below them. So that every inhabitant of the city, and every stranger who approaches our port, may see, at once, the Memorial which the Society has erected to the irreparable loss which America has sustained in the death of her most distinguished citizen. The front of the Pedestal bears the following inscription: 'On this spot Fell, July 11, 1804, Major-General Alexander Hamilton. As an expression of their affectionate regard to his Memory, And of their deep regret for his loss, The St. Andrew's Society of the state of New-York, have erected This Monument.' On the Reverse:

'Incorrupta Fides, undaque veritas,
Quando ullum inverrient parem?
Multis ille quidem flebilis occidet. [Hor.' "

" The common council resolves "that a large treble lamp be erected on the end of the Corporation pier lately built at the South end of the battery and that the same be lighted as the other lamps on the battery are."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 304.

8 The common council proposes to the churches that Dec. 25 be made a day of special thanksgiving and prayer, by reason of the city's "unusual exemption," during the past season, "from the Epidemic disease, which has proved so distressing in former years, An exemption which has extended, in a remarkable degree, to the other Cities and towns of the United States."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 308.

" Jacob McKeag reports to the common council "that his contract for the road [Horn's Hook ferry road] near Hellgate is completed," and that $600 is due him thereon; referred to the road committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 310.

" The common council orders "that Pitt Street upon the ground of the late Alderman Bayard be hereafter called and known by the name of Elm Street, so that Elm Street be continued and known by that name from Reed to Spring Streets." The board adopts an ordinance for regulating Elm St., and appoints assessors.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 311. Elm St. (see L. M. R. K., III: 998–99) is now Lafayette St. (ibid., III: 1004).

" The common council receives from the common council of Philadelphia a set of the laws of Pennsylvania, and authorises the city inspector "to purchase a complete edition of the laws of this State and transmit the same to the Common Council of Philadelphia."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 312.

15 The common council passes a resolution, the preamble of which avers: "Whereas the weak and defenceless Condition of the City and Port of New York and the Danger to which they must necessarily be exposed in case of an attack by an Enemy have Justly Excited the most Serious apprehension in the minds of the Citizens;

"And whereas it is the duty of the Common Council to Cooperate with them in their Earnest Endeavours to obtain an adequate defence for this City and Port . . . on which most important national interests must depend

"And whereas Congress being by the Constitution vested with the power are charged with the duty of providing for the Common defence, . . ." The board therefore appoints a committee to prepare a memorial to congress "Soliciting that Effectual means may be provided without delay to afford them that Security and protection their peculiar Situation and their Importance to the Union Eminently require."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 317–18. On Dec. 29, the board adopted the petition, and ordered that it be transmitted to congress.—Ibid., IV: 326.

" Benj. Romaine, the comptroller, is removed from office.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 319.

The board appoints a committee to enquire and report "by what means Richard Varick, Benjamin Romaine and Joshua Barker obtained Water Grants while trustees of the Corporate property of this City."—Ibid., IV: 320. See Ag 26. Dec. 15

The common council requires that, hereafter, certain city officials shall give the following security before entering upon their duties: the comptroller, the sum of $10,000; the street com'r, $4,000; supt. of the almshouse, $10,000; supt. of public repairs, $2,000.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 318. "

The common council refers to the canal committee a petition of John Jay and others "relative to raising the grounds near the Collect."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 315. "

The common council amends the law for the regulation of the city prison and bridewell by a new provision which requires that "there shall be two Turnkeys or Deputy Keepers," for their "better and safe keeping."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 316. "

John Pintard, the city inspector, reports his opinion to the common council that "it would Essentially conduce to the dispatch of Business and Especially to the Correctness of the work if the Job printing of the Public Offices under the Corporation were Executed by Book Printers, whose materials are generally more Suitable and whose time and attention are less Subject to interruption and delay than can possibly be the case with the Printers of daily News papers." The board, however, orders that it lie on the table.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 317. "

The common council rescinds its resolution of July 21 (q.v.) granting stands in the Fish Market to 14 butchers, and resolves that "a number of Butchers be removed from the upper to the lower [Fly] market and that in future all Poultry, Small meats etc be sold in the upper market near Pearl Street. That all stands Erected in the lower market and other good situations pay a yearly rent and that a Sufficient Fish Market be built close by the water." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 313, 318–19. "

From the committee's report of this date, on Miss Vaillant's petition for "further compensation for embroidering the two stands of colours presented by the Corporation to the Brigade of Artillery" (see N 24), it appears that $400 has already been paid to her for this work, and $25 to Mr. Mangin "for drafting the designs or patterns;" also that Gen. Morton advanced $18 "towards the purchasing silk for the Standards" (which remains unpaid). The committee recommends, and the board approves, that $50 be allowed to Gen. Morton, with request that he pay the surplus of $32 to Miss Vaillant in full satisfaction of her claim.—From original report (MS.), in metal file No. 27, city clerk's record-room. 22

The common council appoints a committee "to report upon the propriety of appropriating public Ground for the purpose of Erecting a building to Cover a Park of Heavy Artillery to be Erected by the General Government and also upon the propriety of appropriating certain parts of the intended projection of the Battery for the purpose of Constructing works for the defence of the City and further upon the propriety of providing a suitable scite on each side of the northern parts of this City on which Batteries may be built to destroy Vessels of War that may pass the other Batteries and attempt a Cannonade."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 325. For the committee's report, see Ja 5, 1807. 29

The city paid in 1806 a total of $10,775.45 for dirt, cartage, and labour in filling the Collect.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 184, 205, 232, 240, 251, 257, 264, 273, 286, 291, 295, 327. "

Monroe and Pinckney, as representatives of the U. S., sign a treaty of amity, commerce, and navigation with Great Britain. The treaty was rejected by Jefferson, without submitting it to the senate, because it did not contain provisions against the impressment of American seamen.—Winsor, VII: 273, 480–81, 519, and authorities there cited. — In this year, John Griscom, LL.D., opened a private school for boys and girls at 372 Pearl St., next to the Friends' meeting-house, and received a salary of $2,250 for the first year, from five friends whose children were placed under his care. The following year he leased a lot on Little Green St.—a portion of the graveyard attached to the Friends' meeting-house in Liberty St.; and, after the bodies were removed, he erected a substantial brick building, 30 by 40 feet, two storeys high, with an arched ceiling and a small observatory on top. This served for both school and lecture-hall.—Memoir of John Griscom, by John H. Griscom (1859). The house of refuge, the Bank for Savings, etc. were due largely to John Griscom.

— The Reformed Protestant Dutch Church in Garden St. (on the site of No. 41–51 Exchange Pl.), called since 1731 the South Church, is taken down (not burned, as stated in Corwin's Manual, 1902, p. 996).—De Witt's Discourse, 44. It was at once rebuilt. The new church was a stone building, 66 x 50 ft.—Greenleaf, Hist. of Churches of N. Y., 12; Hist. Sketch of the South Church (1887), 13. See also L. M. R. K., III: 936. — A summary of city hall records for 1807 is as follows: On Jan. 5, 1807, in response to a communication from McComb, the common council ordered that an advance of $3,000 be made to Johnson & Stevens on their contract for marble, on their giving security.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 328.

On March 9, the common council "Resolved that the Building Committee progress with building the New City Hall," and that the sum of $30,000 be appropriated for that purpose.—Ibid., IV: 375. Apparently, it was from these annual appropriations, at the beginning of each year, that warrants were subsequently issued during the year in favour of the building committee.

McComb's record-book, entitled Orders for Marble (now in N. Y. Hist. Soc.), closes with an entry of July 10, 1807, showing a total, in orders for marble since Nov. 3, 1803, of 32,039′–10″, and in deliveries, 33,274′–10″. His financial account with Johnson & Stevens shows payments for the marble delivered, at $1.06 per foot, amounting to $35,275.31.

By Nov. 25, 1807, the walls were up to the sills of the second storey windows.—McComb's Diary. On Dec. 1, the building committee (appointed Dec. 8, 1806) reported that the hall had been under way for about four years and a half and had cost $207,000, the annual expense being about $35,000 for the last two years.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 647–48.

The warrants issued by the common council during 1807 in favour of the building committee were: Ja 5, $1,000; Ja 19, $500; F 9, $1,000; F 18, $1,000; Mr 9, $1,000; Ap 6, $1,000 (on marble contract); Ap 6, $1,000; My 11, $2,000; My 18, $3,000; Je 29, $2,000; Jl 20, $2,500; Ag 17, $1,000; Ag 24, $1,000 (for marble); S 7, $1,000; S 28, $1,000; O 5, $1,000; O 12, $1,700; N 9, $5,000; N 16, $500; D 1, $7,842.99; D 14, $1,000; total, $37,042.99.—Ibid., IV: 334, 341, 351, 376, 382, 392, 414, 432, 486, 502, 539, 552, 560, 561, 578, 586, 594, 617, 636, 653, 672.

Jan. 5 The committee appointed on Dec. 29 (q. v.) reports to the common council "respecting the Cession of ground to the General Government for a Building to Cover a Park of Heavy Artillery," the substance of which is as follows: A communication from the secretary of war to the mayor had been referred to this committee, expressing the desire that the corporation should "appropriate a Suitable site for a building to Cover a Heavy Park of Artillery mounted on travelling Carriages;" also "certain parts of the intended projection of the Battery for the purpose of Constructing Batteries thereon for the protection of the City;" and also "a suitable site on each side of the northern part of the City for Erecting large wharves on which Batteries can be built for annoyance of any Vessels of War that may pass the other Batteries & attempt to Cannonade the City." The committee recommends the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved that this Board will cheerfully appropriate and make over to the United States so much ground in a Central part of the City formerly the Collect [now filled in] and now marked A as shall be necessary for buildings to Cover a Heavy Park of Artillery together with all the Carriages and apparatus suitable for the same, or if the Secretary of War shall prefer a place more distant from the populous part of the City for that purpose that he may be at liberty to Select a Sufficient quantity of ground at the Old Potters Field [see L. M. R. K., III: 924] about three miles from the City and also so much of the intended projection of the Battery being ground at present under Water & marked B as shall in the Judgment of an Engineer to be appointed on the part of the United States be proper for works of defence to the whole extent of the Corporation right viz about four hundred feet into the water;

"Also a suitable Site for Erecting a Battery & wharf on the North River near Rhinelanders & marked C including as much Land & ground under water as shall be necessary for those objects,"—all this being "on condition that the necessary measures be forthwith taken & continued on the part of the United States for carrying the contemplated Objects of fortifications & defence into complete Effect." Finally, "Resolved that the Mayor be requested to transmit without delay a Copy of the preceding report & resolutions to the Secretary of War." The report is signed by Nicholas Fish, chairman; W. Van Zandt, Jr., and J. D. Miller. It is confirmed by the common council.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 331–32. See Jl 13.

12 The common council refers to a committee an application from a committee of the American Academy of Arts requesting the consent and the concurrence of the board in behalf of their proposed request to the legislature for liberty to erect "a Building on the Public Ground fronting the Battery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 334. On Jan. 26, when the committee reported, the board decided that it would "lease to the Academy of Arts one or more Lots of ground on Broadway on such terms and conditions as shall hereafter be agreed on between this Board and the Academy of Arts."—Ibid., IV: 341. On Feb. 9, the board referred to the comptroller an application of Samuel M. Hopkins "that the Rent of Ground to be leased to the academy of Arts may be fixed."—Ibid., IV: 346. This proposal appears not to have been carried out.—See Blunt's Guide (1817).

26 Certain inhabitants of New York present a memorial to the common council in which they state that, "feeling the importance and propriety of having the Government House and the grounds 1807 Jan. 26 belonging thereto in the possession and under the direction of the Corporation of this City," they "learnt with great pleasure the endeavors which were made by your Honorable body at the last session of the Legislature to procure those grounds from the state —Your Memorialists beg leave respectfully to call your attention at this time to the subject and confiding in your zeal for the public good they trust you will at the ensuing session of the Legislature again use your exertions to accomplish an object in which the Health, comfort, and convenience of the Citizens of this place are so materially concerned, and your Memorialists would farther suggest the propriety of your having a survey taken of the said property to accompany your application to the Legislature for the information of the country members." The petition bears 84 signatures among which are those of Archibald Gracie, Robert Morris, Jr., Peter R. Livingston, and other prominent New Yorkers. The memorial is referred to a committee.—Wynant Van Zandt Papers (MS.); M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 341. On Feb. 2, the committee made a favourable report and presented an application to the legislature for the purchase of the government house. These were approved by the common council.—Ibid., IV: 357. See F 13.

" The common council appoints a committee "to revise the petition [see F 3, 1806] to appoint Commissioners for laying out the Streets in this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 344. See F 16.

" Morgan Lewis speaking of the progress of New York, in a speech read to both houses of the legislature, says in part:—

". . . in the year 1800 the exports from Philadelphia stood in a ratio to those of New-York of about seven to six. At the close of 1805, those of New-York were to those of Philadelphia as twelve to seven, nearly. Whence, it is natural to enquire, proceed these results?—which are the more remarkable, as Philadelphia has preserved her superiority in population; having considerably upwards of an hundred thousand inhabitants while New-York has little more than seventy." Gov. Lewis attributes this result to the improvement of roads and navigable streams.—Assem. Jour., 30th sess., 6.

Feb. 3 The governors of the New York hospital, in their report of expenditures during 1806, state that the sum of $12,423.15 has been appropriated "towards the new building now erecting for the accomodation of maniacs."—Senate Jour. (1807), 50. The building was finished by Feb. 17, 1809 (q. v.).

4 Building lots are advertised for sale "in Manhattan Ville (formerly Harlem Cove) 8 miles from the City Hall on the North river." Sales have already been made here, "principally to tradesmen." A two-storey frame house is being constructed, "for a house of entertainment," at the corner of "the Bloomingdale road and the new road from the north river to Harlem town." One "handsome wharf" was "carried out last fall." It is expected that "another will be completed the ensuing season;" also "that conveyances to and from the city by water will occur daily." A "convenient Academy" was also built here last season, and "an excellent school is constantly kept up, under the superintendance of trustees."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., F 4, 1807. Manhattanville is further described on June 8 (q. v.).

9 The comptroller reports to the common council the results of an examination of Mayor De Witt Clinton's accounts and vouchers. It shows that the mayor received, for the year ending Nov. 1, 1806, market fees, over and above the fees paid for collection and the expense of sweeping and cleaning the markets, to the amount of $7,423.05. The mayor retained one-half of this sum for his own use and paid to Dan. Phoenix, city treasurer, the balance of the account.

The account for money received and paid out of tavern licenses, for the year ending Nov. 1, 1806, shows that he received $6,956.25 for 1,759 licenses. He retained by agreement three-tenths of this sum ($2,086.875) for his own use. After paying various charges for printing, stationery, copies of charts and laws, etc., he paid to the city treasurer the balance of this account ($3,711.53).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 347–48. See F 16.

" The sugar-house in Pine St., belonging to Edmond Seaman, is destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Spectator, F 11, 1807.

16 The common council adopts a memorial (see Ja 26) to be presented to the legislature with the draught of a bill to enable the city to lay out streets and roads. The memorial points out "the necessity of projecting the streets and roads in such a manner as to unite regularity and order with the Public convenience and benefit, and in particular to promote the health of the City." Any regulation which the mayor, aldermen, and commonality might adopt, it is alleged, might "be disregarded or annulled by their successors." It is explained that "The diversity of sentiments and opinions which has heretofore existed and probably will always exist among the members of the Common Council, the incessant remonstrances of proprietors against plans however well devised or beneficial, wherein their individual interests do not concur, and the impossibility of completing those plans but by a tedious and expensive course or law, are obstacles of a serious and perplexing nature. . . . As these evils are continually accumulating by reason of our increasing population, and the rise of frequent subdivisions of property, your Memorialists find it necessary to appeal to the wisdom of the Legislature, for relief."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 353–54. See Mr 4. Feb. 16

" The common council adopts a petition and the draft of a bill, to be presented to the legislature, permitting the city to pay an annual salary of not less than $5,000 to the mayor instead of fees, etc. as formerly (see F 9); and that all the "Wages Rewards fees perquisites and Profits" now "claimed required demanded Accepted taken held and enjoyed" by the mayor may be collected by him and paid into the city treasury.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 356, 361.

19 Aaron Burr is arrested on a charge of treason, having arranged with Blennerhasset and others for an invasion of Mexico, the detachment of the western and southern states from the union, and the formation of an independent western empire. Burr was tried during the summer and autumn, but was acquitted.—McMaster, Hist. of People of U. S., III: 54–88.

20 Philip Milledoler and Bartholomew Ward are authorised by the legislature to build a free bridge from the land of the former in Harlem, across the Harlem River, to Great Barn Island (Wards Island), lying in the river and belonging to Ward.—Laws of N. Y., (1807), chap. 14. Such bridge was erected.—See advertisement, for sale of land on this island, in the Pub. Adv., S 2, 1808. See also F 19, 1812.

21 The sale of 24 Trinity Church lots is announced to take place at auction, at the Tontine Coffee House, on March 3. They are "on the west side of Greenwich St., beginning at the south corner of Gen. Jacob Morton's board fence, and adjoining the lots lately sold to John J. Astor, Esq., North of the same and through Mr. Morton's ground to high-water mark." The announcement states that "The city corporation having altered the present range of Greenwich-street, by giving it a more easterly direction, beginning at the last brick house on the east side of Greenwich-street, through Williamson's Nursery, in a direct line, passing the East front of Mr. Bayard's house, near three miles in length, and 66 feet wide, makes the situation of these lots particularly interesting."—N. Y. Com. Adv., F 21, 1807.

25 Dr. Samuel Latham Mitchill presents to the senate a petition of the inhabitants of New York City "stating the exposed and defenceless situation of their city, and praying that their harbor may be placed in a state of permanent and adequate defence." This is referred to a committee.—Annals of Cong., 9th cong., 2nd sess., 89.

27 The state gives $4,000 to the Free School Society (see F 19, 1805) for building a school-house, and $1,000 annually to promote its purposes.—Laws of N. Y. (1807), chap. 20. See Mr 4 and Ap 12.

28 John Stevens presents a petition to the state senate "stating that he has invented a plan of floating bridges over waters which do not admit of structures upon foundations resting upon the earth, which bridges could not be influenced by the agitation of waters, and praying that the legislature may grant him such encouragement and assistance as he may appear to deserve." This is referred to a committee.—Senate Jour., 30th sess., 62, 75. For the committee's report, see Mr 6.

Mar. 2 Congress prohibits the slave-trade after Jan. 1, 1808.—Laws of U. S., 9th. cong., chap. 67. See also Winsor, VII: 292, 325. See D 14.

" John M'Lean, commissary of military stores, writes to Andrew M'Cord, speaker of the assembly: "I understand there is a petition to your honorable body by the corporation of New-York, relative to the purchasing from the state the government house and ordnance yard, contiguous thereto [see F 13]. I deem it my duty to inform your honorable body, of the situation of that part of the 1807 Mar. 2 said property lying between the government house and ordnance yard, which was leased, agreeable to law, for the term of seven years, three years of said term are yet unexpired from the first day of May next; this property was leased to James W. Lent and Burton Rayun. On the said premises are three public stores, in which are deposited carriages for garrisons and field, and implements, cannon, &c. there is also in the ordnance yard all the heavy artillery, which was removed from the different garrisons, besides a large quantity of shot and shell, supposed to be, in the lowest estimate, about nine hundred tons.—The removal of these would be attended with a great expense, besides the expense of procuring another deposit for them. If, however, the petition extends to the purchasing the government house and land only, as far as the line to James W. Lent's building, there will be no inconvenience arise to the public property. I would further inform your honorable body, that there is a petition from the inhabitants in the vicinity of the magazine, and others about the suburbs of the city, requesting the removal of the said magazine from the present place, as that part of the city on which it now stands, is encreasing and thereby becoming dangerous, by having so much powder deposited therein."—Assemb. Jour., 30th sess., 282. See Mr 13.

3 Congress makes a further appropriation of $150,000 (see Ap 21, 1806) for fortifying the harbours of the United States.—Laws of U. S., 9th cong., chap. 82.

4 The common council directs the recorder to "instruct" the corporation counsel, now in Albany, to recommend the following persons to the council of appointment: Simeon De Witt, Gouverneur Morris, and John Rutherford, "as fit and proper persons to be appointed Commissioners of Streets and Roads in the City of New York," should the bill "Relative to improvements touching the laying out Streets and Roads in the City of New York," as petitioned for by this board (see F 16) become a law.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 368. See Ap 3.

" The common council adopts the draft of a petition to the legislature which recites that the board has received various representations regarding "the exposed and dangerous Situation of the Powder Magazine belonging to the City near the fresh Water Pond in the Ninth Ward," where "the Powder belonging to the State is kept." The members, having "assented to the keeping of the public Stores therein," do not think themselves "authorized to remove the same without the Concurrence of the Legislature."

The situation of this magazine "was not improper . . . when it was first established [see 1728], yet at present it is surrounded on all sides by Inhabitants at short distances." In "Seasons of general Sickness great numbers of the Poor are quartered near it by the City Corporation." When improvements are being made in that part of the city, necessitating "the blowing of Rocks," the magazine is endangered. "Causes of Alarm will probably increase with the increase of Inhabitants and improvement." The common council therefore asks "that the Legislature will be pleased to cause a Building to be provided for the keeping of the Powder belonging to the State in the Vicinity of Spyt den Duyvel or in some other place less dangerous to the public and more secure for the Military Stores . . .," and "that the said Powder may be removed to such other place. . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 364. See also L. M. R. K., III: 923. See, further, Ap 3.

" The common council approves the draft of a petition to be sent to the legislature for the suppression of offices "for the Insurance of Lottery Tickets." It recites the following facts:

"Many persons are thereby induced to venture small Sums in consideration of the large Amount to be returned in proportion without considering that the chances allowing for the disparity is nearly twenty five per Cent in favor of the Insurer. Success or ill fortune lead to the same consequences, the former increases the desire of gain, and lessens the appreciation of loss, the former [latter] incites to a continuation of the adventure, by the Anxiety to retrieve what has been lost a spirit of gambling is thus introduced in the Community and operates most on that part of it who have the least ability to support loss.

"The pernicious influence of these offices is extended even to Children, whose morals are thereby corrupted in the very bud, as well by the example of those more advanced in years, as by the facility with which they find the means of participating in the practice.

"At these Offices are to be found not only labouring poor, but even Mendicants, children and Servants who do not scruple to make a Crime the Instrument to enable them to become Adventurers. Mar. 4

"Whatever Motives of policy may justify the resort to Lotteries for supplies Your Memorialists believe that in their most unexceptionable form they produce Evils and your Honorable body will see how far those Evils must be increased by the means of the insurance System."

The petition further recites the fact that these conditions were reviewed by the "Grand Inquest" at the last "Court of Oyer and Terminer;" and asks that the legislature will correct the evil. A copy of the grand jury presentment is added to the petition.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 368–70. The law was passed by the legislature on April 7.—Ibid., IV: 64.

" The committee on "Grant of Lands," appointed February 16 reports as follows: "That . . . it appears that by a Law of the State certain Officers of the Government are authorized as Commissioners of the Land Office to make Grants of the Land under the Waters of navigable Rivers. It is also stated that the Legislature have since that Law was pass'd, by Grant authorized the Corporation to extend Wharves into the East River beyond the Line of the old Water Grant. Whether a gratuitous Grant is expected now or a Grant upon Valuable Consideration or what will be expected by the Legislature or the Commissioners of the Land Office in case of an Application to either or both is a matter upon which your Committee have not had the Opinion of any gentleman and consider the whole Subject as a matter of great importance to the City. . . ." The common council refers the report to the same committee to draft and report a memorial to the legislature.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 366. See Mr 9.

" The common council votes to the trustees of the free school (see F 19, 1805, and 1806), the sum of $500 and the use of the workshop on Broadway. The trustees prefer this arrangement to the gift of the piece of ground between the health-office and workshop, which was offered on Feb. 2.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 357–58, 363, 370; see also IV: 394–95. The petition of the trustees is among the Wynant Van Zandt Papers (MS.) in N. Y. P. L. The school opened on May 1 (q. v.).

6 The committee on the petition of John Stevens (see F 28) reports as follows: "That they have convened with the petitioner, who has shewn them the modle of his proposed bridges, explaining the principles by which they are supported, which in the opinion of the committee, may be applied to purposes highly beneficial to the public; that the petitioner is desirous of an act of incorporation to enable him and his associates to erect a floating bridge across the Hudson River from New-York to the opposite shore, and also one from the said city across the East River or Sound to Long Island, with drawbridges for vessels to pass; but as this project involves considerations of the highest importance, and as objections may be made against the same, by persons concerned in navigation, as well as others, the committee are of opinion, that the further consideration of the said petition be postponed; but that if the said petitioner shall deem it expedient to prefer a petition to the legislature at their next session, for an incorporation for the purpose of erecting the said bridges, it will be proper for him to publish in three of the newspapers printed in the city of New York . . . and two of the newspapers printed in the city of Albany . . . a copy of such petition and this report, for two months next preceding the second Tuesday of the next meeting of the legislature." The report is approved.—Senate Jour., 30th sess., 75. See D 5.

9 The committee of March 4 (q. v.) on a desired grant of land to the city reports, and the common council accepts, the draft of a petition to the legislature, which recites the following facts: "That for the purpose of enabling the Corporation of the City of New York from time to time to improve the Docks, Wharves, Keys and Slips, to be erected, or made, in & upon or contiguous to the Margin of the said City, or Manhattans Island, and to render said Improvements more uniform and convenient, and the Use of them more equal and beneficial to the Citizens and to the public in general, and for the better accommodation of Trade & Commerce

"Your Petitioners pray that a Grant may be made to the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New York, of the Lands covered with Water, of the perpendicular breadth & to comprehend four hundred Feet, along the Easterly Shore of the North or Hudsons River, contiguous to and adjoining the Lands of the said Mayor Aldermen and Commonalty at and from Low 1807 Mar. 9 Water Mark into the said River, from Bestavers Killetje, or rivulet, to Spyt den Duyvel Creek—And the Lands covered with Water, of the Perpendicular breadth and to comprehend four hundred feet along the Westerly Shore of the East River or Sound contiguous to and adjoining the Lands of the said Mayor Aldermen and Commonalty, at and from Low Water Mark, into the said River or Sound, from the North Side of Corlies Hook, at the Northerly boundary of the Lands covered with Water, Whereof the said Mayor Aldermen & Commonalty are now seized, to Spyt den Duyvel Creek aforesaid, and one fourth part in breadth of the Land covered with Water by said Creek, adjoining the Lands of the said Mayor Aldermen and Commonalty, the whole length of the same Creek, from the East River or Sound aforesaid, to the North or Hudsons River aforesaid. . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 370–71. A law authorising the grant was passed by the legislature on April 3.—Gerard, City Water Rights, Streets, and Real Estate, 73.

" The street commissioner reports an ordinance for filling Beekman Slip; confirmed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 374. In 1811, a pier was built at Beekman's Slip.—Ibid., VI: 593. On modern maps, the old Beekman's Slip is entirely covered by Fulton St., from Pearl St. to the East River. Beekman Slip still exists. See Jl 16, 1703, Ja 7, 1772; L. M. R. K., III: 988; Pl. 174.

" An advertisement, addressed "To Gentlemen Sportsmen of New York," announces a fox-hunt which will occur at Bloomingdale on March 17, in which, it is expected, "eighteen couple" of hounds will be engaged. John S. Taylor of that place has "a large full grown Wild Fox" for the chase.—Merc. Adv., Mr 12, 1807.

13 An assembly committee on the government house (see Ja 26) reports to the assembly that it would be for the public interest "to dispose of the land prayed for and the government house thereon to the corporation of the city of New York for a sum not less than sixty thousand dollars, restricting in the sale thereof the said corporation to the application of said premises to public purposes only, and that the money arising from the sale of the same ought to be applied towards establishing a manufactory of small arms in this state for the use of the militia." In accordance with this report a bill "for granting and conveying certain public lands in the city of New-York to the mayor, aldermen and commonalty of the said city" is introduced, read twice, and referred to a committee of the whole house.—Assemb. Jour., 30th sess., 78, 98, 190. On March 26, the bill was ordered to be engrossed, but on the 27th it was recommitted. On March 27, also, the assembly received John M'Lean's letter of March 2 (q.v.) on the subject, and referred it to the committee of the whole. Thereafter, during the session, there is no reference to the bill.—Ibid., 30th sess., 280, 281, 282. See Mr 14, 1808.

16 Marinus Willett takes the oaths as mayor of New York, succeeding De Witt Clinton (see O 29, 1803).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 376–77. Willett held the office for only one year (see F 22, 1808).

19 An argument in favour of gun-boats, for the defence of New York, is published, in reply to the representatives debating the subject in congress.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 19, 1807. The proposal was made as early as July 21, 1798 (q.v.).

20 By an act of the legislature, the governor, the lieutenant-governor, the chancellor, the chief-justice of the supreme court, and the mayor of New York City, are appointed commissioners with power to vest in the U. S. for fortifications such land on Staten and Long Islands "as they shall judge the safety and defence of the city and port of New York to require."—Laws of N. Y. (1807), chap. 51. Mar 20

" Robert Fulton, writing from Philadelphia to Secretary of War Dearborn, says: "I have now Ship Builders, Blacksmiths and Carpenters occupied at New York in building and executing the machinery of my Steam Boat, And I must return to that City in ten days to direct the work till finished, which probably will require 4 months. . . . Like every enthusiast I have no doubt of success. I therefore work with ardor, and when adjusting the parts of the machine, I cannot leave the men for a day. I am also preparing the engines for the experiment of blowing up a Vessel in the harbour of New York this Spring. The machines for this purpose are in great forwardness and I hope to convince the rational part of the inhabitants of our cities, that vessels of War shall never enter our harbours or approach our Coast but by our consent. . . ."—Sutcliffe, Robert Fulton and the "Clermont," 288–89. The original letter was sold with other Fulton MSS. and documents at Anderson's, April 26–27, 1921, by order of Mrs. Sutcliffe. The torpedo experiments took place on July 20 (q.v.); the steamboat was tried out on Aug. 9 (q.v.).

" The following abstract of the Laws & Ordinances relating to signs and incumbrances is published by the street com'r; probably as a result of the common council's decreeing on March 9 (M. C. C., 1784–1831, IV: 374) that it would be "rigorously enforced:"

"No cellar light is to extend more than one fifteenth part of the width of the street.

"No canopy, awning, shed, porch, portico, cellar door, platform, stoop or step is to extend more than one tenth part of the width of the street.

"No stoop, porch or platform is to be placed or suffered to remain in the street, except for the mere purpose of a passage into the house; and those are to have open backs or railings.

"No post is to be erected in any street.

"No cart or wheel-barrow is to be driven or wheeled along the walk.

"No wood is to be sawed, nor any coal or other thing piled on the walk.

"No goods, wares or merchandize are to be hung or placed a greater distance in the street than sixteen inches.

"No window or sign is to project more than one foot into the street.

"No carriages, timber, boards, casks, goods, wares, merchandize, or other thing, are to encumber the street or walk for more than one hour.

"No building is to be erected fronting a street, unless the lot is first surveyed.

"The inattention heretofore paid to the laws and ordinances of the Corporation, respecting incumbrances and encroachments on the streets, renders it necessary to inform the public that, after the first day of April next, the penalties for the non-observance of them will be rigorously inflicted, without respect of persons."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Mr 20, 1807.

21 It is expected that the number of new buildings erected this year will exceed those erected annually during the last few years. "Considerable preparations are making, especially in the suburbs, for private buildings. Three new churches will likewise be commenced; a Dutch church on the site of the Old Dutch church in Garden-street [see 1807]; a Presbyterian church in Cedar-street; and a Roman Catholic church on a site reserved for the purpose in their burial ground at the corner of Prince and Mulberry streets, on Bayard's ground. The New City Hall will also be elevated to the base of the second story windows. All these buildings, public and private, together with various other improvements, such as constructing wharves, paving and repairing streets, &c., &c. will not only afford ample imployment to mechanics of every class, and to industrious labourers in this city, but create an extensive demand for building materials, and circulate large sums of money throughout the community."—People's Friend, Mr 21, 1807.

23 A new assessment for the opening of Broadway from Art St. to the Bowery (above 14th St.) is presented to the common council by the street com'r. The board orders that it be published in the newspapers and by handbills put up in the neighbourhood.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 384; N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 28, 1807.

24 The ship "Galloway," of about 350 tons burden, and considered "by scientific men" to be "the handsomest modelled ship ever built in this country," is launched from the yard of Christian 1807 Mar. 24 Bergh, on the East River. The vessel is owned by Robert Lenox, James Lenox, and William Maitland, and is intended for the India trade.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Mr 25, 1807.

27 By act of the legislature "the clerk of the city and county of New-York" is to be "relieved, restrained and prohibited" from performing any duties "as clerk of the common council." This body is empowered "to appoint a clerk to be clerk of the common council of the city of New-York only."—Laws of N. Y. (1807–9), 91. For the first appointment under this law, see My 4.

30 The committee on disposing of the "Dove Lots" (see Mr 18) reports "that a public Square or open Space should be left through the Center of the Tract, from East to West, of two hundred & fifty feet to be denominated Hamilton Square, That the same should be intersected in the Center, by a public Street at right Angles thereto, and Paralel to the Boston and Harlaem Avenues, of Sixty feet and to be denominated Harlaem Avenue, that the remaining portion of the Land should be divided into twenty Eight Lotts of equal Size each Lot containing Sixty two feet Seven Inches front & Rear by three hundred & Sixty five feet in length, all which is particularly delineated in a Plan or Diagram hereunto annexed and to which the Committee beg leave to refer."

The committee "are further of Opinion that the Lots thus laid out should be sold at Public Auction . . . in fee Simple, . . . the Sale to take place on the Eighth day of April next . . . at the Tontine Coffee house," and subject to certain conditions as to the erection of buildings on the lots, etc. The common council confirms the report and orders that a reservation of 125 ft. square be taken from the rear of lots No. 17 and 15 "for a Church and Academy," and 15 ft. for a cartway, back of lot No. 15, leading from the street to lot No. 17.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 388–89, 391. Cf. the description in the sales advertisement in The People's Friend, Ap 3, 1807. See also Je 29.

" The common council asks the corporation counsel to deliver an opinion as to "whether . . . the Ground call'd Stuyvesant Street is or is not a public Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 391. See Ap 15.

" The city inspector reports that it is unnecessary to employ anyone "to take care of the Park," and the common council agrees.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 391. See, however, Je 8.

Apr. 3 Commissioners are appointed by the legislature to lay out streets and avenues throughout the upper part of the island.—Laws of N. Y. (1807), chap. 95. Previous legislation leading to the drafting of the plan on which the modern city of New York has been built (see Pl. 79, Vol. I) began with the following acts of the legislature: Laws of N. Y. (1787), chaps. 61 and 88; ibid. (1795), chap. 42; ibid. (1798), chap. 80; ibid. (1801), chap. 129. These gave full powers to lay out and regulate the buildings, streets, wharves, and slips of the city. On Jan. 14, 1805 (q. v.), the street commissioner was instructed "to report an estimate of the expense of making a map of the Island of New York, exhibiting a distinct view of the real property belonging to the Corporation, and of its roads;" and on Feb. 13, 1805 (q. v.), this commissioner, with one or more of the city surveyors, was directed "to ascertain from time to time, by actual survey or otherwise, the true angles and corners of the several streets of this City, and their relative positions to adjacent buildings known to be correctly situated, and to report to the Board, with a map, plan, diagram or description of the same, which, being agreed to by this Board, shall be entered as matter of record for the general government of the surveyors and inhabitants of the City." In conformity with this need, the board resolved, on June 30, 1806 (q. v.), to employ Mr. Hassler to make a survey and "Map of this island." Although Mr. Hassler undertook the employment, he was prevented by sickness from carrying it out (see O 20, 1806).

The difficulties which the city and private owners still found in conveying their land in conformity with any definite regulation of streets were expressed in a memorial to the legislature, recorded in the minutes of Feb. 16, 1807 (q. v.).

The desired relief was obtained with the passage of the act of April 3, 1807, "relative to Improvements, touching the laying out of Streets and Roads in the City of New York, and for other purposes."—Laws of N. Y. (1807), chap. 95; see also Bridges' book accompanying his map (1811). This act appoints three commissioners, Gouverneur Morris, Simeon De Witt (the surveyor-general), and John Rutherford, whose duty and powers should be, in the course of four years, to lay out "the leading streets and great avenues, of a width not less than 60 feet, and in general to lay out said streets, roads and public squares of such ample width as they may deem sufficient to secure a free and abundant circulation of air among said streets and public squares when the same shall be built upon." These streets, avenues, and squares were to be laid out within the part of the city "North of a line commencing at George Clinton's wharf on the Hudson River; thence through Fitzroy road, Greenwich lane, and Art Street; thence through North street in its then direction to the East River." (The wharf referred to was on North river at the foot of the present Gansevoort St.—Gerard, Treatise on the Title of the Corporation to the Streets, etc., 97.) The act requires that the commissioners "cause three similar maps of such streets and roads so to be laid out by them, and of the shores bounding the lands by them surveyed, to be made upon an extensive scale, accompanied with such field-notes and elucidatory remarks as the nature of the subject may require; which maps, accompanied by such field-notes and remarks shall be attested to by the said Commissioners, or any two of them, before any person authorized to take acknowledgements of deeds and conveyances and be filed,—one in the office of the Secretary of State, to remain of record, one other to be filed in the office of the Clerk of the City and County of New York, to remain of record, and the other of said maps to belong to the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New York; and that the said Commissioners shall erect suitable and durable monuments at the most conspicuous angles, or those which shall be the most eligible for that purpose, and upon the shores of the North and East rivers, to be noted on said maps; and that the said Commissioners shall take the elevations of the several intersections or squares above high-water mark within boundaries aforesaid, or so many of them as they may think sufficient, and shall delineate them, together with all such hills, valleys, inlets, and streams as may be necessary on the said maps, so to render the same explicit and intelligible." The commissioners' plans and surveys were to be "final and conclusive." Each commissioner was to receive not more than four dollars (besides all reasonable expenses for maps, field-notes, monuments, chain bearers, and assistants) for each day employed, such expenses to be met by the mayor, aldermen and commonalty from well-defined assessments.—Ibid. On June 27, 1807, the commissioners qualified before the mayor.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 27, 1807.

The map was finished and filed on April 1, 1811 (q. v.). The powers of the commissioners under the act of 1807 being limited to that part of the city north of the line of Gansevoort St., Greenwich Ave., Houston St., and Astor Pl., the power to lay out streets, etc., below that region still remained in the mayor, aldermen, etc. The powers of the latter have been modified or diverted, however, to other bodies by later laws.—Gerard's Treatise, 104. See also Hist. Mag., 2nd ser., III: 166 et seq. See, further, My 18 and Je 29.

" New York State appoints five commissioners to meet the five representatives of New Jersey (see N 2, 1806) and settle the boundaries between the two states.—Laws of N. Y. (1807), chap. 113. See O 12.

" As the common council of New York City has represented "that the powder magazine belonging to the said city, near the fresh water-pond, in the ninth ward, has, from the increased settlement in that neighbourhood, become dangerous to the inhabitants thereof" (see Mr 4), the state legislature appropriates $3,000 for the erection of a new magazine in another part of the city.—Laws of N. Y. (1807), chap. 118. See Ja 26 and Mr 11, 1808.

6 The common council permits Geo. Waite and Rob. N. Waite "to dig away part of a Hill near to the powder House and to remove the Earth from the same to their own Grounds."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 393.

9 The corporation of Trinity Church grants $500 towards finishing and covering the tower of St. Mark's Church.—Trin. Min. (MS.).

12 By resolution of the board of trustees of the "Society for establishing a free school in the city of New York, for the education of such poor children as do not belong to, or are not provided for by, any religious society," acknowledgment is made of "the receipt from Col. Harry Rutgers, of a deed of a valuable lot of ground, situated in Henry-street, and which has been generally bestowed as a scite [sic] for a School-house."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ap 13, 1807. The corner-stone of the school was laid on Oct. 22, 1810 (q. v.).

13 John Pintard, the recording secretary, informs the New York

1807 Apr. 13 Historical Soc. (see N 20, 1804) that he has in his possession a considerable number of books relating to the history of America, which he is willing to dispose of at the original cost. The following resolution is thereupon adopted: "Resolved, That the standing committee be authorized to purchase said books for the use of the Society."—Kelby, The N. Y. Hist. Soc., 1804–1904, 17. The collection thus purchased formed the nucleus of the society's library. "The liberal donations subsequently made, together with other purchases, soon formed a creditable library in the department of American history."—Ibid. See S 9, 1809; and D 13, 1813.

15 The corporation counsel (see Mr 30) delivers an opinion against Stuyvesant Street being a public street. After reviewing city ordinances, acts of the legislature, maps, etc. which have a bearing on the question, he says that "the Corporation may if they deem it proper, order this Street to be shut up, provided no Act was passed at the last Session of the Legislature which may deprive them of that Right."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 397–401.

" An advertisement of a "New Mode of Painting" appears in one of the newspapers. It reads: "Mr. Savage, No. 166 Greenwich-street, has prevailed on Miss Sally Rogers to remain until the first of May at his house, for the purpose of gratifying visitors, by her singular mode of using a pair of scissors in cutting paper, cloth, &c. &c. by her manner of writing, and above all, from her very extraordinary form of Painting. The circumstance of her effecting all this with her Mouth Alone, being deprived of the use of both hands, is pretty generally known, and needs but this remark, that Mr. Savage pledges his reputation as an artist, he has seen her drawing, specimens of design, taste, and execution, which astonished him, and will bear minute criticism.

"She is here, as in Boston and other places, visited by people of rank and information, who have found her person and features interesting and agreeable.

"Those Ladies and Gentlemen who wish to see her work, may be gratified every day, from 9 in the morning till 10 at night.—Admission 25 cents.

"N. B. A specimen of her work may be seen at David Longworth's, Shakespeare Gallery."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ap 15, 1807.

20 The comptroller reports to the corporation council the sale of Dove Lots Nos. 1 to 28. The prices secured range from $325 to $1,650 per lot, and total $20,935. The buyers' names are recorded.

The record also shows "Leases" of five parcels of "Corporation Lotts for 42 Years sold 15. April 1807." These are 4, 5, and 6 acres each, except one of a half-acre. The annual rental of these parcels is from $20 to $68.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 406.

24 Under the management of a Frenchman, Chenelette Dusseausoir, the City Hotel is given a new prominence in the city's life. 2 The Picture of New-York; or The Traveller's Guide through the Commercial Metropolis of the United States. By a Gentleman Residing in this City (Dr. Samuel L. Mitchill) is published by I. Riley & Co., and is for sale by Brisban and Brannon, City Hotel, Broadway.—Spectator, My 2, 1807. The following are some of the more important facts relating to New York, contained in this first of the city's guide-books:

Boatmen apply the whimsical names of the Pot, the Frying-Pan, and the Grid-Iron to sunken rocks at Hell-Gate; the other reefs there are Hog's Back, Hallet's Point Reef, Mill-Rock, Middle-Reef, and South-Rock.—Ibid., 19. May 2

Mechanic Hall, at the (north-west) corner of Broadway and Robinson St., is "one of the most genteel Hotels in the city."—Ibid., 109.

The trustees of the dispensary have the management of the "Kine Pock Institution," which is situated "adjoining the Presbyterian Church Yard, near the Park."—Ibid., 109, 114.

The "City Hospital" (or "New York Hospital") stands "on the center of the great square, formed by Broadway, and by Barley, Church, and Catherine-streets. . . . Within the inclosure are fine and healthy walks, and rests, for the convalescent patients. The approach to the hospital is between beautiful rows of elms. At the head of it is the porter's lodge. On the right an excellent kitchen-garden, to supply the house with vegetables; and on the left the stable, wood-house, and other offices." A separate building for the reception of lunatics "is now erecting."

The almshouse, on the north side of the Park "immediately behind the new city-hall," is "surrounded by open courts and gardens."—Ibid., 121.

The Humane Society has been given a lot of ground by the common council "adjoining the alms-house, and in the rear of the debtor's goal."—Ibid., 124.

There are 12 or more Masonic lodges and chapters in the city, many of which hold their meetings in St. John's Hall in Frankfort St.—Ibid., 124.

The city is amply supplied with newspapers. There are 8 dailies, 5 semi-weeklies, and 6 weeklies.—Ibid., 138–39.

The arts of printing, book-binding, and paper-making have been encouraged by the literary fairs held alternately at New York and Philadelphia for several years.—Ibid., 140.

The exterior of the theatre (the Park Theatre "on the south-east side of the park") is "rather in an unfinished condition;" but the interior is "well finished and decorated." It accommodates 1,200 spectators. "The boxes are exceedingly well adapted to the display of beauty and fashion" (see Pl. 91, Vol. III). It is "the most complete" theatre in the United States.—Ibid., 151–52.

The Park, in front of the new city hall, is planted "with elms, planes, willows, and catalpas, and the surrounding footwalk is encompassed with rows of poplars." It is a "beautiful grove," although the trees are "but young, and of few years growth."—Ibid., 155.

The "house and garden" named Ranelagh, "situated about the junction of Grand-street with Division-street, near Corlear's-hook," has generally been known by the name of "Mount Pitt" (see My 10, 1806). From the front of "this hotel" there is a view of the city and the East River. "At a short distance in front, are the ruins of a battery, erected during the revolutionary war, on the hill behind Belvidere." Behind Ranelagh, "are considerable remains of that entrenchment made by the enemy in 1781, across the island from Corlear's hook by Bayard's Hill to Lispenard's Brewery, to defend the city and garrison against the American army." The treaty of peace was concluded before the entrenchments were completed, and they remained in an unfinished condition.—Ibid., 155–56.

Vauxhall is a "fashionable place of resort,"—a garden, two miles from the city hall, on the Bowery Road. At the centre is a large equestrian statue of Washington; and trees, shrubs, gravel walks, and statuary are features of the place. There is an "orchestra built among the trees." The "large apparatus for fire-works, the artificial mound of earth to view them from, the numerous booths and boxes for the accommodation of company, refreshments of every kind, and above all, the buildings and scenery for public entertainment during the suspension of dramatic exercises in the great theatre at the park"—are provided by Delacroix, the proprietor.—Ibid., 156. The Vauxhall of Delacroix here described is the one on the Astor property (see Jan. 30, 1804; Ap 20, Je 5 and 25, 1805, etc.); although the Washington statue was first erected at his Vauxhall on the Bayard property (see Ag 8, 1803). See, further, Je 6.

On a tour to Kingsbridge, starting up the Bowery Road, one sees, beyond the Sailors' Snug Harbour, "the new building of the Manhattan company" on the right (see under "Banks" in L. M. R. K., Vol. III). "This is intended to accommodate all those who do business with the bank, in case sickness should cause the inhabitants to quit the lower wards of the city."—Ibid., 183–84. The rest of the tour to Kingsbridge is thus described:

1807 May 2 ". . . A small distance beyond, on the main post road, on the left is a powder house, and on the right, appears Rosehill, the residence of the late General Gates; at the northern approach of which are some wooden buildings erected by the common council for the temporary accommodation of the poor inhabitants during the endemic distemper of 1804 and 1805. By pursuing the road to the right, about a quarter of a mile, you reach Bellevue, a beautiful spot, which has been purchased for the reception of such sick inhabitants as are removed from their dwellings, in seasons of a prevailing endemic fever in the lower and more compact parts of the town. On the right, and by the water side a little to the northward, is a small cove called Kip's bay, around which are some handsome buildings. Returning to the main road and proceeding onward, you rise a moderate ascent called Incleberg, on the summit of which are several beautiful villas. The road for more than a league is not above one quarter of a mile from the margin of the east river, and the space between them is improved in an exquisite style, by the more wealthy inhabitants. The entrances to their country seats, frequently attract the attention of the passenger. A little beyond Smith's tavern there is a road to the ferry at Hellgate.—From the landing on this side, you may pass to Hallett's cove, within the limits of Newtown on Long-island. In crossing, you leave the narrow and rocky spit of land, called Blackwell's-island, a very short distance to the southward; and Hellgate, with its rocks, whirlpools, and currents, appears close to the northward and eastward. An excellent view of this picturesque and romantic spot may be obtained from the adjoining grounds of Mr. Archibald Gracie. His superb house and gardens, stand upon the very spot called Hornshook, upon which a fort erected by the Americans in 1776, stood till about the year 1794; when the present proprietor caused the remains of the military works to be levelled at great expense, and erected on their rocky base, his present elegant mansion and appurtenances. . . . It is by no means uncommon to see ships and even sloops laying bilged on the reefs, notwithstanding all the care and skill of the navigators. It is computed that during the mild season of the year, between five and six hundred sail of vessels go through this passage weekly. And they are not merely coasting craft, but brigs and ships of large size. A British frigate of 50 guns, coming from the eastward, was carried safe through Hellgate in 1776, to the city. . . . Porpoises are often seen sporting among the foam and eddies. And formerly, lobsters were taken in considerable numbers, in hoop-nets.

"Leaving this place, where you are surrounded with elegant villas, you return to the main road and pursue your ride to Haerlem village. Here you see the river of the same name, which separates the counties of New-York and Westchester. At this place the two counties are connected by a noble toll-bridge, erected, by legislative permission, by John B. Coles, esq. In this neighborhood is the race-ground, over which horses are run, at the period when sports of the turn are in fashion. And ascending from the plain or flat to the heights of Haerlem, you have an enchanting prospect of the surrounding country.

"Between the heights and Kingsbridge, a little to the left of the road, is the place where Fort Washington stood in 1776. . . .

"You return from the survey of Fort Washington and King's bridge to the place where the Bloomingdale road appears. You then take that course to town, and pass by the numerous villas with which Bloomingdale is adorned.

"This brings you back to the main road near Rosehill. Thence you take the right hand opening called Abingdon road, and pursue your ride to Greenwich. This village is near the Hudson on the west side of the island. It is the principal retreat of the inhabitants, when the city labours under local and endemic fevers. By a removal two or three miles, they find themselves safe from harm. In this place the bank of New York, and the Branch bank have buildings ready to receive their officers and ministers in cases of alarm and distemper. And many of the citizens have houses and places of business, to serve turn, while the sickness lasts. And as this always disappears on the occurrence of frost, the fugitives all return to town before the cold becomes severe. At this place too, you see the great penitentiary house, erected by the commonwealth, at a large expense, for the reception of criminals; thence called the State prison. . . .

"Having surveyed this thriving settlement, you may return to town by the Greenwich road, which will conduct you straight forward by Richmond hill, St. John's Church, the old Air Furnace, the Bare market, and the Albany bason, to the Battery; or you may proceed by the route of the public cemetery, or Potter's field, to the upper end of Broadway, and drive into town, leaving St. John's Church, the new Sugar-house, the New-York Hospital, the College, &c. on the right; and Bayard's hill, the Collect, the Manhattan waterworks, the County Prison for criminals, the new City-hall, the Park, Theatre, &c. on the left."—Ibid., 183–90.

This guide-book prompted Washington Irving to write his Knickerbocker History of New York (see D 4, 1809).

4 The common council, on receiving a certified copy of the act of the legislature "restraining the Clerk of the City and County of New York from acting as Clerk of the Common Council and enabling them to appoint their own Clerk" (see Mr 27), now appoints John Pintard to the office. He took the oath of office at the next meeting (May 11).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 413–14, 415; Man. Com. Coun. (1860), 610. See Je 1.

" In an annual report of the concerns of the institution, the trustees of the "Society for establishing a free school" etc., state that they have received contributions of "money, cloth, stockings, shoes and hats," as well as a deed from Col. Rutgers of a lot in Henry St. (see Ap 12). They mention the appropriation of the legislature (see F 27) and add: "The seminary is established on a plan which will educate five hundred children, with the facility that one tenth of that number are taught in the ordinary way: And it is confidently believed, not only from our experiment, but from that of a very celebrated institution, consisting of one thousand scholars, established by Joseph Lancaster, on a similar plan in London; that no mode hitherto adopted, so decidedly combines the two advantages of oeconomy in expence, and rapidity in improvement.

"The number of children owing to a want of a larger room, has not exceeded sixty-seven: the house furnished by the corporation, and now occupied by the school (see My 1) will accommodate two hundred, and this number, including the fifty from the almshouse, it is expected, will be very soon obtained."—Am. Cit., May 6, 1807.

" The common council directs the commissioner of repairs "to remove the two Pumps in Broadway, to the side of the Street in the Usual Mode, one between Courtland & Liberty Street the other opposite Cedar Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 413. Cf. Vol. I, p. 452.

11 The common council refers to the comptroller a letter from John Jacob Astor "requesting that a grant may be made him of the land under water fronting his property on Hudson Street, between Bastavers Killetje and Hetty Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 415. His property in this locality extended along the Hudson "from a point Fifty two feet south of King Street to Leroy Street, being three entire Blocks of two hundred feet each, with the exception of Fifty feet owned by Mr Bruce." He had recently purchased the property on the west side of Greenwich Street, between Brannon St. and the state prison. The water lots were granted to him on Nov. 2 from high-water mark to West St., with certain reservations for public basins.—Ibid., IV: 612–13, 629.

" The common council passes a resolution "that his Honour the Mayor be desired to request the favour of His Excellency Governor Lewis to permit Col. Trumbull to take his portrait for the use of the Corporation of this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 417.

" John H. Raub announces "that he has opened his house at the sign of the square and compass, between Marrenner's and Harlem-bridge." He calls it the "Harlem Coffee-House." His stables have accommodations for more than 30 horses.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 11, 1807.

12 Horse-racing is the sport of the period at Harlem (People's Friend, My 12, S 29, 1807); in the Bowery from the two-mile stone down to the watch-house (Com. Adv., Je 8, 9, 1807); and at the "New Market" course on Long Island (Columbian Centinel, O 17, 1807).

14 A committee report to the vestry of Trinity Church recommends that St. John's Church (see S 8, 1803) "be opened for public Worship with as little Delay as may be."—Trin. Min. (MS.). The church was opened on June 7 (q.v.).

18 While the work of the commissioners of 1807 was under way, perplexing problems arose regarding the surveys and maps of the city whenever grants of land were to be made or buildings erected. On May 18, 1807, the common council resolved to make no further grants of land under water (water lots), "North of the South line

1807 May 18 or bounds of that part of the city to be laid out by the Commissioners lately appointed by law, until after the survey of the said Commissioners shall be completed;" and that a complete survey of the shores of the rivers be obtained south of the south lines or bounds to show what water lots or grounds are granted, and what remain.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 427.

Again, on March 14, 1808, in a communication to the common council, the street commissioner pointed out what he believed was the necessity of applying to the legislature for adequate power for the corporation "to effect the permanent surveys, and to do justice to interested proprietors," and recommended that the board's attorney draft a bill for this purpose, introducing in it a clause directing the justices of the supreme court to appoint three persons, one of whom ought to be a surveyor, "to adjudge and finally determine upon the lines and monuments of any block or square laid out by direction of the Common Council, by virtue of the said Bill, in case a majority of the proprietors of the said property should object to the mensuration." The communication further stated that "Similar authority has been given by the Legislature to 'the Justices to nominate disinterested persons' in the Law lately appointing 'Commissioners of Streets and Roads'." This communication was referred to a committee of seven members (ibid., V: 55–56).

While their report was pending, the comptroller, on May 20, addressed the following recommendation to the board and the board confirmed it: "That the Street Commissioner and the Comptroller be authorized to procure suitable registers or Field books wherein to insert Maps and descriptions of all lands, plots of ground, Wharves, Docks and Slips and Ferries belonging to the Corporation, whether under lease or otherwise, designating the boundaries and such other circumstances attending them, as may give a full view of all the Corporate estate."—Ibid., V: 149–50.

On Feb. 13, 1809, the street commissioner again communicated with the council, making reference to his communication of Mar. 14, 1808, and stating that the committee then appointed had been prevented from acting before the adjournment of the last legislature. He explained that the proposed surveys "would only be made, as they now are, at the request of persons about to build, and that the charges would be borne by the persons requiring it." The bill which the committee proposed to send to the legislature, he said, had been re-drafted with alterations.—Ibid., V: 432–33.

The act of March 24, 1809, followed immediately, amending the acts of 1801 and 1807.—Laws of N. Y. (1809), chap. 103; see also Bridges' report, 1811. It provided remedies for complaints about cutting trees by surveyors, taking land for streets, and making assessments. See, further, Je 29.

" The street commissioner presents to the common council "a plan of Streets through the property of the Corporation of Trinity Church, between Brannon [Spring] and Christopher Streets, which that Corporation intend to cede to the Corporation of New York, and having agreed to name the Streets, as written upon the Map, they wish the Common Council to confirm the same in order that they may insert the true name in their deeds of sale.

"The alterations and arrangements upon the map are as follows. That the Street formerly called Budd Street, be called Vandam Street [after Anthony Vandam]; that the street formerly called Hetty Street, be called Charlton Street [Dr. Charlton], that the Street formerly called Hazard Street, be called King Street [Rufus King], that the Street formerly called Village Street, be called Hammersley Street [Andrew Hammersley], that the Street formerly called Morton Street, be called Clarkson Street [Gen. Matthew Clarkson]; and that the Three Streets immediately North of those above mentioned be called Leroy Street [Alderman Jacob Leroy], Morton Street [Gen. Jacob Morton], and Barrow Street [Thos. Barrow]." The board approves.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 422–23.

" A long statement and opinion of Richard Harison, counsellor of the board, on the assessment for opening Canal St. is submitted. This states that it had been decided by the city to extend the width of Canal St. and a jury, on Feb. 26, 1806, had awarded "sundry large sums to Several proprietors for their land taken for the aforesaid purpose, and for which sums the Corporation in several instances paid the money, and in others gave their bonds." In order to offset this expenditure by the city, an assessment was levied on property owners who would be benefitted by the regulation, the assessment to be in proportion to the advantages derived by the different property owners. Five persons were appointed assessors. The first determination of these assessors was to levy the whole of the amount within a district of 500 feet round Canal St., but the inhabitants of this area complained that others more remote would receive almost as much benefit, and the assessors agreed to extend the assessment "to all Streets from whence the water would ultimately empty into the Canal." The assessors then proceeded to levy on those within 500 ft., to meet the first necessary instalment upon the bonds, and a collector was appointed who secured $300 or $400. The assessors intended to levy on others later. The final opinion of Harison was that three of the assessors were self-interested, owning property within the territory to be benefitted, and would "therefore be interested not only in the Assessment last directed, but in regulating the proportions to be paid between Lots within the distance of five hundred feet round Canal Street." The former assessment (see Ag 25, 1806) is therefore rescinded, and the street commissioner is directed to report an ordinance for the appointment of new assessors.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 423–26. See Je 22. May 18

" The common council orders that Pitt, Ridge, and other streets in the vicinity of Corlear's Hook, be regulated.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 426. From 1800 to 1830 the hills at Corlear's Hook, some of them 80 feet high, were levelled.—Cozzens, A Geological Hist. of Manhattan, 24.

" The common council refers to the committee of the fire department a recommendation of the chief engineer "to provide Fire plugs in each Block of this city, on the principle of one lately constructed at the corner of William & Liberty Streets."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 420. See N 2.

25 The inhabitants of Broadway above Jones and Amity Sts. petition the common council to regulate Broadway to Art St. The street com'r is directed to prepare an ordinance for this purpose.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 434–35. He did so on June 1.—Ibid., IV: 445. See also ibid., IV: 487.

" The common council discharges a bond due to Peter Curtenius, assignee of Thos. Duggan, for opening Canal St., by payment of $1,894.50.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 438, 442.

June 1 The clerk (see My 4) informs the common council that he has "received from his predecessor Thomas Morris Esq[r] all the Minutes of the Common Council from the year 1675 to the present day, comprehended in seventeen Volumes Folio.

"In the apartment occupied by the Clerk of the Mayor's Court, there are several Boxes said to contain papers, deeds and documents belonging to the Corporation. A case, the property of M[r] Wortman, in the Comptroller's Office, contains a large proportion of Memorials, Petitions, Reports &c[a] which have been presented and acted upon within the last few years. All these papers require arrangement, and demand more room to render them of convenient access than the present office, jointly occupied by the Street Commissioner and the Clerk, affords."

Mr. Pintard (the clerk) therefore proposes "that a Committee be appointed to examine and see whether, without incurring any serious expence, some accommodation cannot be provided, within the City Hall, for repositing and arranging the public records in such manner as to render them more accessible." The board appoints a committee "to examine what accommodations" are "necessary for the Offices of this Board."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 446.

" At the request of the common council, Mayor Marinus Willett consents to sit to Col. Trumbull for his portrait.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 446–47. The portrait was painted by Trumbull in 1808, and now hangs in the City Hall.—Cat. of Works of Art Belonging to the City, 6.

" The common council resolves "that the Portraits of the several Mayors of this city and other portraits belonging to the Corporation be removed and placed in the Common Council Room under the care and direction of the Clerk of this Board."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 446.

" The street com'r reports to the common council that he has "discharged the labourers employed at the Collect, as they cannot work to advantage until Elm street be regulated."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 445.

4 Andrew Gentle publishes a notice concerning the "Elgin Botanic Garden." He says: "As it was the original design in forming this establishment to render it not only useful as a source of instruction to the students of medicine but beneficial to the public 1807 June 4 by the cultivation of those plants useful in diseases, by the introduction of foreign grasses, and by the cultivation of the best vegetables for the table; our citizens are now informed that they can be supplied with medicinal Herbs and Plants, and a large assortment of green and Hot House Plants etc."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Je 4, 1807.

6 An editorial says of Vauxhall Garden (which was opened for the season on May 9—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 9): "This elegant place of public amusement . . . may be justly said to rival in point of elegance and beauty any place of the same kind in the European world. . . . In the United States it is without a parallel, and in this City there is no place of public resort that offers so great attraction to the gay, the fashionable, and the pleasure-taking world. . . ."—People's Friend, Je 6, 1807. Cf. My 2; and see, further, Jl 4.

7 The first services in St. John's Chapel were to be held on this day.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 4, 1807. According to a report made on Jan. 12, 1809, it cost $172,833.64 to build the church.—Trin. Min. (MS.). See D 1, 1809. It is shown on Pl. 106-a, Vol. III, and is described in Onderdonk's Hist. of the Prot. Epis. Churches in the City of N. Y., Part IV: 61–64; and in the N. Y. Mirror, Ap 11, 1829.

8 The street commissioner presents to the common council "a map of a number of Streets through grounds belonging to Anthony L. Bleecker which he proposes to cede to the Corporation as public Streets, upon the same principles Mr Jay has consented to cede Canal Street to wit, on condition that their grounds shall not be assessed for opening Streets through the surrounding premises.

"This principle, he reported, might operate to the disadvantage of the Board where a very small donation of this kind was proffered. But it is very different where a large grant of streets are made, the proper widths and in the direction desired by the Corporation." On the commissioner's recommendation, the board accepts the proposed terms.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 453.

" Manhattanville (see F 4) is further described as follows: "This flourishing little town, pleasantly situated near the banks of the Hudson, about eight miles from the City-Hall, to the eyes of the . . . tourist, appears well worthy of observation. It was first projected and laid out into streets, about twelve months ago, by Mr. Schieffelin and others, since which, an Academy has been erected. . . . A very excellent public house has been built and opened, together with many private houses, and a ferry established to the opposite shore of the North River, there communicating with a road leading to the English Neighbourhood Hackinsack, etc., and a market is contemplated to be finished in the course of the present summer . . . indeed such is the pleasantness of the town plot, situated in the beautiful valley called Bloomingdale . . . that it cannot fail becoming a place of considerable consequence. . . . The Lots . . ., have very considerably advanced in price, but at this time are offered on such terms, as cannot fail being advantageous to the purchaser. A Stage is to run daily between the city and town, the rates of which are to be very low, and boats will ply constantly between the two places. There can be no doubt of a rise in the value of these lots, even should the city remain free from the epidemic, but in case it should again be visited by that dreadful scourge, a great advance in the value of these situations is certain and from the circumstances of its being in a degree under the patronage of the Corporation of the City of New York, facilitates its improvement, and is another inducement to the settler. . . ."—Pub. Adv., Je 9, 1807. See also L. M. R. K., III: 987.

" The common council refers to a committee a communication "from a Committee of the Highland Turnpike Company on the propriety of building a new bridge across Harlem river near Spittendevil, to correspond with the projected Turnpike road, commencing at Mr Alexander Macomb's in Westchester County."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 448, 470.

" One Francis Bibbins petitions the common council to be appointed "keeper of the Park." The petition is referred to the supt. of the almshouse with directions "to employ some suitable person, at the expence of this Board, to take charge of the Park."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 449. Cf. Mr 30.

" The common council refers to the committee of repairs a memorial of the Humane Soc. "requesting that some accommodation may be provided to separate male and female debtors confined in the goal of this city and county."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 449–50.

June 8 In straightening the line of the south side of Cortlandt St. between Greenwich and Washington Sts., city land is added to the lots adjacent. The minutes of the common council record the amounts which the several owners are to pay for these additions to their land; also a map of the ground.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 450–52. On June 29, a revision of the award, and a new map, were recorded.—Ibid., IV: 480–82, 487.

" The common council provides for four additional watchmen in Greenwich Village.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 452.

11 It is ordered by Trinity vestry "that the present fence [in front of Trinity churchyard] be repaired, and a similar one made along Rector Street."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

15 The common council resolves "that the Governor be requested to cause the public powder in the powder House near the 3-Mile Stone, Manhattan Avenue, to be removed," and that the mayor confer with him "respecting a proper place or places to which the same may be removed."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 467. See Je 29, and N 16, 1807.

C. C.* (1784–1831), IV: 471.

The board also provides for piers at Burling Slip, Beekman Slip, and Flymarket Slip.—Ibid., IV: 471–72.

" The common council grants a petition of Thomas Dunning, butcher, to build a market at Harlem.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 461, 477.

27 The following facetious account of "A Tour in Broadway," is issued by Washington Irving, William Irving, and James K. Paulding: "Battery—flag-staff kept by Louis Keaffee—Keaffee maintains two spy-glasses by subscriptions—merchants pay two shillings a year to look through them at the signal poles on Staten-Island, . . . Young seniors go down to the flag-staff to buy peanuts, and beer after the fatigue of their morning studies, and sometimes to play at ball, or some other innocent amusement . . . battery a very pleasant place to walk on a sunday evening—not quite genteel though—every body walks there, and a pleasure, however genuine, is spoiled by general participation—the fashionable ladies of New York, turn up their noses if you ask them to walk on the battery on sunday. . . .

"Custom-house—origin of duties on merchandize this place much frequented by merchants. . . . Custom house partly used as a lodging house for the pictures belonging to the academy of arts—couldn't afford the statues house room, most of them in the cellar of the City hall. . . .

"Bowling green—fine place for pasturing cows—a perquisite of the late corporation—formerly ornamented with a statue of George the 3d—people pulled it down in the war to make bullets—great pity, as it might have been given to the academy—it would have become a cellar as well as any other.—The pedestal still 1807 June 27 remains, because, there was no use in pulling that down, as it would cost the corporation money, and not sell for any thing—If the pedestal must remain, I would recommend that a statue of somebody, or something be placed on it, for truly it looks quite melancholy and forlorn. . . . Broadway—great difference in the gentility of streets—a man who resides in Pearl street, or Chatham-row, derives no kind of dignity from his domicil, but place him in a certain part of Broadway—any where between the battery and Wall-street, and he straightway becomes entitled to figure in the beau-monde, and strut as a person of prodigious consequence!—New brick church.—what a pity it is the corporation of Trinity church are so poor!—if they could not afford to build a better place of worship, why did they not go about with a subscription?—even I would have given them a few shillings rather than our city should have been disgraced by such a pitiful specimen of economy—Wall-street.—City-hall, famous place for catch-poles, deputy sheriffs, and young lawyers, which last attend the courts, not because they have business there, but because they have no business any where else. . . .

". . . Oswego-Market—looks very much like a triumphal arch . . . Hogg's porter house . . . Hogg's a capital place for hearing the same stories, the same jokes and the same songs every night in the year . . . some of the longest and thickest heads in the city come there to settle the nation."—Salmagundi; or the Whim-Whams and Opinions of Launcelot Langstaff, Esq. and others (1807), II: 239–48.

29 On being applied to by the commissioners for laying out streets and roads on this island (see Ap 3), the common council orders that such documents and maps as are in the several city departments, relating to the duties of the commissioners, may be placed at their disposal, and that such copies as are required may be furnished. A warrant for $500 is issued in favour of the commissioners, their expenditures to be reported to the comptroller.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 480. See O 19.

" By order of the common council, the conditions of sale of the "Dove lots" (see Mr 30) are entered in full in the minutes.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 483–84.

" The common council authorises the comptroller to employ four watchmen for the protection of the magazine (powder-house), near the three-mile stone, and to cause the lightning-rods there to be repaired.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 479.

" The city pays $25 yearly subscription to the N. Y. dispensary.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 478.

July 2 A general meeting is held in the Park at which De Witt Clinton is chosen chairman and Gen. Jacob Morton secretary, and the following resolutions are adopted:

"Having received with the most lively indignation, authentic information, that on the 22d ultimo an attack, unwarranted by the known usages of nations, and in violation of our national rights, was made, off the Capes of Virginia, on the United States Frigate Chesapeake, Commodore Barron, by his Britannic Majesty's armed ship the Leopard, Captain Humphries, the Citizens of New-York, assembled in general meeting, deem it to be their duty to express their opinions on this fresh outrage offered to our national sovereignty by the Navy of Great Britain—Therefore,

"Resolved, That it is and has been the policy of our government, and the wish, because it is the interest of our citizens, to be at peace with all the world.

"Resolved, That although we cherish peace with the greatest sincerity, yet that we hold ourselves ready, at the call of our government, to resist all infringements on our national rights, and violations of our national honor.

"Resolved, that we consider the dastardly and unprovoked attack made on the U. States armed ship the Chesapeake, by his Britannic Majesty's ship Leopard, to be a violation of our national rights as atrocious as it is unprecedented.

"Resolved, That we are determined to maintain the rights and dignity of our country with our lives and fortunes, and that we will support our government in whatever measures it may deem necessary to adopt in the present crisis of affairs.

"Resolved, That whatever differences of opinion may exist among us on our merely local concerns, yet that we love our country and will cordially unite in resisting the attempts of any nation to invade our rights or tarnish our national honour.

"Resolved, That the offending ships at Hampton Roads have wantonly violated the laws of and forfeited their title to national hospitality.

July 2 "Resolved, That we highly approve of the spirited and patriotic conduct of our fellow-citizens at Norfolk, Portsmouth and Hampton.

"Resolved, That we deeply lament the death of those of our fellow-citizens who fell, and sincerely sympathize with those who were wounded on board the Chesapeake."—Am. Cit., Jl 3, 1807.

" Because of the "Chesapeake Affair" (see Je 22) Pres. Jefferson issues a proclamation ordering all British ships-of-war to leave American waters and forbidding all intercourse with them.—State Papers, 1806–8 (Boston, 1815), 249–52. See S 1.

3 Robt. Dyde changes the name of his "London Hotel" (see Ja 29, 1806) to "Washington Hotel." It is situated next to the theatre on "Park Street" (Park Row).—Am. Cit., Jl 3, 1807. The Philharmonic Soc. made this their meeting-place in December of this year. In Feb., 1808, a court martial was to meet there for the trial of Brig.-Gen. Morton (N. Y. Com. Adv., F 26, 1808), and in the same month a public ball was given there. See, further, Ap 11, 1808. In 1809, it was called the Mercantile Coffee House, and also the Commercial Coffee House, but these names did not cling to it long.—Bayles, Old Taverns of N. Y., 397.

4 The expenses paid by the city in celebrating the day indicate its character: $8.79 for "flannel for Cartridges;" $36.87 for "Transporting Brass Ordnance to & from Arsenal;" $7 for "attending dº on battery;" $24 for "ringing bells;" and $573.84 for a "public entertainment."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 499.

" The Society of Cincinnati holds its annual dinner at the house of Joseph Baker, No. 4 Wall St., corner of New St.—Bayles, Old Taverns of N. Y., 414. This tavern was the meeting-place, also, of the "Ugly Club," a group of talented young men of the city, including Fitz-Greene Halleck.—Ibid. It was called "Baker's Porter House" in 1815, when the Federal Republican electors of the First Ward met there.—Com. Adv., My 11, 1815.

" Another "splendid and allegorical fete" (cf. Jl 4, 1806) is held at Vauxhall Garden, consisting of fireworks, illuminations, music, and a painting, on a stage of 60 ft. front, representing a view of New York and the bay during the British evacuation of the city on Nov. 25, 1783 (q. v.).—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 2, 1807. See, further, Jl 15.

Columbia Garden is "handsomely illuminated, and decorated with a variety of Transparent Paintings, representing Washington, Jefferson, Adams, Green, Montgomery, Warren and Putnam, with the admired Hydraulic Works, with improvements, to be accompanied with illustrations of Fire Works."—Ibid., Jl 3, 1807. See also An Essay on Transparent Prints and on Transparencies in General, by Edw. Orme (London, 1807), in N. Y. Pub. Library.

6 The common council refers to a committee a communication of the comptroller regarding "objections raised by some of the purchasers of Inclenberg lots against paying for the same until certain streets were opened."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 489.

" The common council requests the mayor to ask Gov. Dan'l D. Tompkins to permit Col. Trumbull "to take his portrait for the use of this Corporation."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 490. The governor consented.—Ibid., IV: 491–92.

" The common council orders "that the Comptroller and Clerk provide a copy of a Chart of the Port and Harbour of New York, made by Captain Isaac Chauncey and Charles Loss in the year 1798."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 490.

" The common council orders that the assessment for opening Broadway to the Bowery be confirmed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 490.

7 The Peace of Tilsit is signed by France and Russia. Prussia agreed to it on July 9. France thus broke up the fourth coalition, leaving herself at peace save with England.—Anderson, Constitutions and Documents, France, 1789–1907, 404–16.

11 The corner-stone of an orphan asylum is laid in Bank St., between the United States and Merchants' Banks.—N. Y. Spectator, Jl 11, 1807. The Orphan Asylum Society had been incorporated on April 7 of this year.—Laws of N. Y. (1807), chap. 179. In the announcement of the opening of St. John's Church (June 7), it was stated that the collection would be for the benefit of this asylum.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 4, 1807. In 1836 (q. v., Je 9), the asylum began to build at Bloomingdale.

13 "In consequence of the recent unpardonable conduct of the British, in attempting to tarnish our national character" (see Je 22), a meeting of the Tammany Society is held, and a committee is appointed "to report a plan to organize the society into a war band." The plan suggested was that the main body should consist 1807 July 13 of 234 warriors and hunters, exclusive of officers, there being 156 warriors and 78 hunters. When this body was divided into 13 war parties, there would be 12 warriors and 6 hunters in each party.—Am. Cit., Jl 22; People's Friend, Jl 23, 1807. See S 18.

" Gov. Tompkins calls on the common council and communicates the wishes of Gen. Dearborn, secretary of war, now in New York, respecting "a cession of ground at the Battery and Duane Street Basin for the purpose of erecting fortifications for the defence of the town and harbour." The board passes the following resolution: "Resolved that this Board will cheerfully cede to the United States such parts of the public grounds at the Battery and at the Basin at Duane Street, or elsewhere, within their jurisdiction, with their right of soil under water, or elsewhere within their jurisdiction, as the Secretary at War may deem necessary for erecting fortifications for the defence of this city." A committee is appointed to carry the resolution into effect.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 497. See Ag 30; and, for change of base, see O 26.

" A volunteer company of young men, called "The Sons of Seventy-six," is formed at the Union Hotel. They were required to meet on July 17 at the New York Hotel, 42 Broad St., "equipped for exercise."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 16, 1807.

" The city pays Hugh Brice & Co. $186.45 "for carting earth to fill the Collect," and $21.75 to Thos. Anderson "for issuing tickets and levelling the same." The common council orders that the city inspector be authorised to contract for the delivery of 3,000 more loads of earth at 5 cents a load.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 494. For the annual expense of filling the Collect, see Chronology near the end of each year, beginning 1803. The "tickets" referred to were those given to cartmen. Packages of these are preserved with the filed papers in the comptroller's office, Hall of Records.

" The common council agrees to make an advance to the contractor "for digging out Broadway from Great Jones Street 350 feet towards Art Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 494.

" The city inspector represents to the common council "that the Watch boxes in the Streets were obnoxious, during the Summer season, to the inhabitants of their vicinity." The board orders that the supt. of repairs "cause them to be removed to the Bridewell yard."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 494.

14 Col. W. S. Smith, aide-de-camp to the commander-in-chief, criticises the proposals of the common council for the city's defence by batteries on the wharves and islands of the harbour. He argues in favour of preventing the enemy's entering the harbour.—People's Friend, Jl 20, 1807. Col. Smith wrote a second letter on the subject, on July 22, from which it appears that his opinion met with "no respect from the Secretary of War;" but an editorial view was that "it is high time the people of New York were roused to a sense of their situation."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 25, 1807.

15 Robert Fulton writes to Maturin Livingston that he has arranged with the secretary of war to commence experiments with his "submarine" on July 18th. He will then exhibit his "dumb Torpedoes," and show the various ways in which vessels may be assailed and destroyed while at anchor or under sail. A 200-ton brig, anchored between Governor's and Ellis Islands, will be attacked and blown up on July 20th, to show how an enemy's vessel may be annihilated on entering port. Fulton extends an invitation, through Livingston, to the governor, mayor, members of corporation, and such other persons as he may think proper, to meet at Governor's Island at 10 a. m., that he may "exhibit to them the machinery before the engines are put on the water."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Jl 16, 1807. The exhibition took place, as planned, on July 18.—Am. Cit., Jl 20, 1807. See, however, Jl 20.

" The summer theatre at Vauxhall, "fitted up as originally intended, with Elevated Seats, etc.," is opened for the season with a comedy and a musical play.—People's Friend, Jl 13, 1807. See Ag 17.

17 Preparations for building fortifications and redoubts around New York are now under way.—Com. Adv., Jl 17, 24, 1807. Vide infra throughout 1807 and 1808, notably Dr. Mitchill's letter of Oct. 9, 1808.

20 Fulton makes two unsuccessful attempts to sink the 200-ton brig (see Jl 15) with his torpoedoes; but he succeeds on the third attempt, when, however, not 500 persons, out of the 15,000 or 20,000 persons who had first assembled, remain to see the explosion. As to the utility of the invention, it is stated editorially that "No machinery like this which requires the manager to proceed in full view, within 30 or 50 yards of the vessel to be destroyed, can ever in any degree succeed. A thousand of them, with the managers and their boats, could be blown from the surface of the water, before they could approach so near as to do the least injury to a hostile fleet."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Jl 21, 1807. Fulton explained his first failure in Am. Cit., Jl 22; and People's Friend, Jl 22, 1807. His engines were described in ibid., Jl 27, 1807. July 20

Morgan Lewis, writing from Staatsburg, coincides in the opinion of Col. Smith (see Jl 14) "that an attempt to protect the city by Batteries on the wharves will be an useless expenditure of public money." He explains this view at length and in detail. He prefers "moveable Batteries of cotton to fixed ones of earth and such timber as our country affords." The way in which he would use the cotton is "to have it well pressed into cases of raw-hide of the size of an ordinary gabion, well painted or tarred, and sanded to secure the contents against fire." With these, he explains, and with heavy artillery on field-carriages, "a Battery might always be opposed to a ship in the course of a few minutes after she should be moored." In the efficacy of "Booms and submarine explosions" as a principal means of defence, he has no confidence, because of the "feebleness" of the former and the "difficulty of applying" the latter; but as auxiliaries he has no objection to them.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 1, 1807. The editor of another paper calls Lewis's theories "frippery," saying that "The Drum is all important in the day of battle."—Am. Cit., Ag 3, 1807. 22

Another writer commenting on Lewis's letter states that "the Cheveaux de frize which he proposes are the least expensive & most efficient obstructions, that booms are of little utility and that his observations on the necessity of a long line of fire . . . are just to the utmost extent." The writer declares, however, that "the modern and most approved Engineers" are not in agreement with Lewis's recommendation of "Stone Parapets and embrasures in preference to those of earth and en barbette."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 15, 1807.

Albert Gallatin, secretary of the United States treasury, submits to Pres. Jefferson a general view of measures for defence and attack that he thinks should be considered at this time with a war with Great Britain impending. He gives a list of the seaports that in his opinion should be specially fortified. Concerning New York he writes: "The plan of defending the approaches of New York by narrowing the channel at the most convenient place may require the immediate attention and countenance of the Executive, as under their auspices, it might be at once commenced by the city. I think it the only plan which will give real security. Its practicability and expense must be examined."—Adams, Writings of Albert Gallatin (1879), I: 343. See Ag 26. In the same letter he also outlines in detail plans for offensive operations to be directed against Canada and other British provinces to the north and the islands of Bermuda and New Providence to the south.—Ibid., I: 345–53. 25

Lord Holland asks in the House of Lords whether it is "the intention of his majesty's ministers to make any communication to parliament on a circumstance which was at present the subject of much conversation, he meant the report of hostilities having actually commenced between this country and the United States of America? He would rejoice to hear that the report was untrue; . . but if so great a calamity had really taken place, he trusted that his majesty's ministers would lose no time in laying before parliament the grounds of the dispute between the two countries." Lord Hawkesbury answered that he had no authority to make any communication on the subject at present, but he assured the lords that "every thing had been done on the part of his majesty's ministers to avoid so unfortunate a result as hostilities between this country and the United States of America."—Parl. Debates, IX: 926–27. 27

" The common council resolves that Col. Jonathan Williams be requested "to furnish with all possible despatch, a plan for fortifying the Narrows, with an estimate of the probable expence."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 504. Col. Williams complied on July 29 (q. v.).

" A visitor to the city thus describes and comments upon a bull-baiting he attended on this day, possibly at the Corlear's Hook circus (see Jl 4, 1808): ". . . at the entrance of the circus stood a female who received our money and dealt out admittances; within, the constant and discordant howlings, which issued from every side, by Dogs, chained and impatient for action, recalled to the imagination the fabled regions of Pluto.

"In the inner inclosure stood the harmless animal . . . two 1807 July 27 or three Bull dogs were brought in, impatient from the restraint of chains, and their vengeance directed by their mercenary masters to be sport upon the Bull.

"The poor animal defended himself to the utmost, and made great exertions of those noble faculties of courage and power with which he is so eminently endowed:—after beating one set of dogs, others more ferocious were let loose upon him in succession, until he appeared almost exhausted by heat, fatigue & pain; at this time a fresh set of dogs were about to be let loose, when it appeared to me the feelings of humanity were no longer to be disregarded, and I presumed to observe to the keeper that the bull was sufficiently beaten, and the spectators I believed satisfied. In this however I was deceived, for as the wounded beast was driven to his stall some old sportsman cried out that he had not been pinned. The Bear and Wolf next fought with the dogs in succession, but as these combats were not so destructive to the animals on either side, they appeared not to excite so much interest with the spectators, and in a little time I was astonished to see the poor bull again introduced.—The wretched brute with his head lacerated & bloody, and a horn broken off exposing the delicate and susceptible interior to the air, and external objects, was doomed to have another engagement with a new set of dogs.—A severe conflict again ensued, untill the powerful animal was so worn down by fatigue and torture that he seemed no longer capable of defence, but patiently to submit to his torture.

"After considering life no longer worth defending he was taken away, with his head covered in blood—his ears torn—and his tongue bitten in pieces—probably to be preserved & recruited for future amusement.

"Some of the most valuable dogs whose courage and constancy excited admiration, and whose fidelity should have enhanced them to their masters, were tossed in the air and bruised by falling; or, their bones broken by being trodden under foot.

"It excites surprise Sir, that an amusement so absurd, and tending to such debasement of taste and manners should prevail or even be tolerated among a civilised people and particularly in a respectable City. . . .

"It is singular too that this institution is permitted to remain in the vicinity of a very respectable House of public worship, and as one might suppose from its situation on the very grounds of the Church. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 30, 1807.

" The common council directs the watch committee "to station a Watchman at the door of His Excellency Governor Tompkins, during his stay in this city."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 503.

" The common council orders the completion of carting fresh earth "to cover Flymarket Slip lately filled in."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 503. See Ag 11, 1806.

29 In compliance with the request of the common council of July 27 (q. v.), Col. Jonathan Williams sends the corporation, through Selah Strong, chairman of the committee of defence, a plan "for fortifying the Narrows between Long Island and Staten Island." The following extracts give its principal features, and are quoted thus at length because of their topographical character on the important subject of New York City's coast defences:

"The propriety of a defence at the Narrows in conjunction with an interior force, is in a striking manner indicated, by the introductory words of my orders. 'It being the intention of the general government so to fortify the harbour of New York, as will, with the aid of gunboats, afford a reasonable defence to the citizens and their property against Ships of War, unaccompanied with any formidable armament, such as can only be opposed by a superior army; the following system has been deemed most expedient at present, with such additions hereafter, as may be thought adviseable, farther in advance.'

"The Narrows offer a passage of more than twelve hundred yards in width for any ship that could come over the bar at Sandy Hook; now, every Sailor knows that a dozen ships of the line could, upon an emergency, sail abreast through that passage, . . .

". . . let us secure our house first, and then according to our ability, defend our courtyards.

"In looking around, it was perceived that the prominent rocks on Governor's island, the point of the Bastion of the old City Battery, and Ellis's island, forming nearly an equilateral triangle; and that the centre of this, offering an intersecting point, which, at the greatest distance from each, would only be about one thousand yards, while it would be difficult to go into either the North or East river, without passing within point blank shot, or between four or five hundred yards, of some one of them. It was also seen that former administrations before, and since the revolution, so highly valued these points, that fortifications have been erected upon or near every one, although time, . . . has obliterated some of them. It was further considered that the modern improvements of marine batteries, which give double the number of guns on the same horizontal base, and by multiplying the tiers may give six times the number of the heaviest metal with a bomb-proof security above, rendered the question of combat, a question of floating wooden walls, against impregnable stone walls on shore, with equal power as to celerity of action, number of guns within the same space, and weight of metal. July 29

"It is not a very bold assertion to say that no ship that sails on the Ocean would engage on such terms.

". . . Fifty gun boats scattered along the flats on each side of the channel, would all of them attack an advancing ship forward the fore chains, . . . [Details of the method of attack are given.]

"But the certainty of passage is the great objection, for it seems to be in the opinion of the world almost a settled axiom, that ships will pass batteries in spite of all their force. Why would they pass them? There must surely be a strong motive to encounter such danger? Doubtless to attack more vulnerable points. And this is precisely the reason they would pass the Narrows to attack the defenceless city of New York; as Admiral Duckworth passed the Dardanelles to attack Constantinople, and certainly if there had been no interior defence, the capital of the Sublime Port would have been reduced.

"But merely passing the city cannot be an important object, for to put it under contribution, ships must lie there, . . .; now that, when the proposed batteries shall be completed, cannot be done, and we do not find that it is generally thought advantageous to run the gauntlet for the purpose of running it back again."

"I now come to the question implied in the resolution of your Board; 'Are the Narrows defensible? If so, what are the means, and what the probable expense?' To this I answer, they are in my opinion defensible, but the means are extensive, and should unite submarine obstructions, forts on each side, and gun boats on the flats in advance.

"With respect to the sinking an island in the centre, which has been much spoken of, it does not appear to me that local circumstances have been fully considered. [These he describes.]

"The best plan for permanent obstructions, in my estimation, is that which in the course of a conversation at the Mayor's was intimated by yourself, and . . . I may be allowed to state it in detail.

"Suppose numerous blocks were to be sunk in the Narrows at certain distances from each other, which though sufficient for a ship to pass between them, yet should she go but a little on either side of the middle, would insure her destruction; as the depth of water varies in the space before mentioned from ten to sixteen fathoms. . . . If these blocks were placed at sixty feet distance from each other, and were armed with cheveaux de frize, as they might be, so as to reduce the spaces to the width of a ship, it is self evident that no ship could pass, for if she were but one foot on either side of the middle, one of the projecting points would check her progress, when she would immediately round to, and lay her broadside against all the others. . . .

"This calculation goes to filling up of the whole space, but it is evident that a channel should be left for our own vessels; this at the worst would oblige an enemy to advance singly, and directly under the guns of the batteries to be erected on either side, while every block so sunk would completely cover a gun boat that might be anchored upon, or behind it, without danger, owing to their small draft of water. Besides these considerations, it is evident that the blocks must aid every other mode of obstruction, and, after the experiment we have witnessed, there can be no doubt, but Mr Fulton's Torpedoes could be applied here with almost certain effect. If a pair of these destructive machines were placed in each space between the blocks, should all other means fail, their action would be, as far as human foresight can presume to be accurate, infallible. . . .

"The most essential as well as the most costly battery should be erected at the edge of Hendrick's reef. Until I can have time to cause the plan and elevation of such a battery to be made, I sub-

1807 July 29 mit to your consideration the plan and elevation of one designed for a point, not dissimilar as to position in the harbour of Charleston, which I must request you to return . . .

"On the Staten Island side, only the lower battery need be casemated, as those ascending the hill in the rear, would be above the reach of either small arms or swivels from the tops of the enemies ships. These batteries could be so constructed as to be impregnable to the fire of shipping, and could form an interesting fire of from fifty to eighty shot on each side.

". . . I have often heard it said that, could the defence at the Narrows, like the one described be procured, the inhabitants of New York would not think a million of dollars too great an expence. . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 511–18 (where the date is given erroneously as July 20); Am. Cit., Ag 4, 1807. Col. Williams's original report (MS.), bearing date of July 29, is preserved in metal file No. 34, city clerk's record-room. It was printed on July 31 in pamphlet form. One of these printed copies is in the N. Y. Hist. Soc., with various papers and plans relating to the defence of the city, presented by Dr. Sam'l Mitchill (U. S. senator) to the society in 1810. The report came before the common council on Aug. 4 (q. v.).

30 The Kip's Bay Farm, or "Quarry Lot," is to be sold on this day at public vendue, at the Tontine Coffee House. "A road by the name of Susan street, 60 feet in width, leading along the southerly side of the lot from the highway to the river, forms one of the several avenues from the premises to the public road."—Am. Cit., Je 29, 1807. See also descrip. of Pl. 107, III: 610.

Aug. 4 Col. Williams's plan for the defence of the Narrows (see Jl 29) is read in common council and the committee is directed "to request his opinion, whether the Narrows, under all circumstances, be the most eligible place for obstruction and the erection of batteries, in addition to those already determined on by the United States for the protection of the City and harbour of New York, and if in his judgment other positions are preferable." The board also orders that the committee "be authorized to devise a plan for raising money to defray the expences, that may be incurred, for erecting fortifications and making such obstructions as may be judged necessary for the protection of this city and harbour."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 511–18. See Ag 17.

" The committee appointed to call on the governor "for information respecting the State of the Ordinance and Military Stores in this City and to offer him the aid of the Corporation in putting such in compleat repair," reports to the common council. The report is entered in full in the minutes.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 510–11.

" "A Petition of Abraham Childs and others, praying that certain monies paid by them on account of the Assessment for opening Canal Street which has been set aside [see My 18], may be refunded," is referred to the street commissioner.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 506. On Aug. 17, the report of the street commissioner on this petition, "recommending that the Collector for Canal Street be directed to render an Account of the monies collected by him, in order to enable the Board to refund the same to the petitioners" was confirmed.—Ibid., IV: 527. On Dec. 14, it was ordered "that a warrant be issued in favour of the Street Commissioner for $586.50 to refund the monies collected on said assessment to the several persons who have paid the same."—Ibid., IV: 669.

" The common council provides for the accommodation of the revenue barges of the custom-house on the east side, at the head of the southerly pier at the Battery.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 480, 507.

" Payment of $250 is made to Stagg & Anson "on account of their engagement to dig out 350 feet of Broadway above Jones Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 509, 519. See, further, Ag 17.

" Payment of $50 is made to Henry White for "making Index to Com. Coun. minutes."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 505. See N 2.

" James A. and Samuel Bayard establish The Daily Advertiser as a successor to The People's Friend & Daily Advertiser (see S 1, 1806). The semi-weekly edition of the paper retains the title of The People's Friend.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 402, 479. Both papers were discontinued on Dec. 31 (q. v.).

5 The editor of the American Citizen criticizes Col. Williams's plan for the defence of the Narrows (see Jl 29) on the grounds that it would be very expensive, that it would take too long to complete, and "that there is no safety in the defence proposed." He suggests that the water between Robin's Reef and Mud Flat be shallowed to 20 feet "by throwing in loose stone, or by sinking them in the way of docking." This would not cost more than $75,000, might be completed in a few weeks, and would shut out all armed ships carrying more than 30 guns. The smaller ships that could pass could be taken care of by the batteries and gunboats in the inner harbour. A diagram of the harbour "from the chart of Capt. Chauncy and Mr. Loss, City Surveyor, drawn from actual survey and soundings," is included to illustrate the plan. Aug. 5

6 Commenting on the plan of defence published in the Am. Citizen of Aug. 5 (q. v.), "A. B" says that it differs "in nothing from a part of Mr Lewis's [see Jl 22], except as to the extent of the obstruction, and its position— . . . The Editor ought to have given his reasons for removing the obstruction from the place Mr Lewis had assigned it to Robin's Reef. I can see but one, and that is that Robin's Reef is beyond Bomb range from the City. This certainly is an object of magnitude, and could the same protection be given to the obstruction there, as at the Reef, I should prefer it. But this cannot be done. Gun-boats cannot give an equal protection with Batteries, nor are they alone a sufficient protection. All the gun-boats in our service would not prevent the removal of the obstruction under the cover of two line of battleships. . . .

"The objection to its being within Bomb-range of the city, though a strong one, will be more than counterbalanced by the superior protection it will receive. Nor will this objection be found on due consideration to be as formidable as would at first sight appear. Hostile ships would be obliged to take positions where they would be annoyed by our batteries, and those batteries would be honored with their first attentions—nor until these were silenced, would they think of paying their respects to the city. Another advantage of Mr Lewis's position would be, the facility of giving assistance to your flotilla, in case of disaster, when in the neighbourhood of the city—with respect to width of passage, and depth of water, there is no essential difference between the two places, . . .

"Understanding the government intends a strong bomb battery on Ellis's Island, I should prefer removing the obstruction to a position still nearer that Island. If a total obstruction of the harbour should at any time be deemed necessary, it certainly may be effected by frizes in the Butter-Milk Channel, with much more facility than at Robin's reef.

"The plan which I understand to be adopted by the government of fortifying strongly, Ellis's Island, the south-west point of the battery, extended into the north river, and the rocks on the west end of Governor's Island, will certainly go far towards a defence, but will not be sufficient alone. . . . An obstruction, therefore, in aid of these batteries becomes necessary, and may be effected, of sixteen feet base, ten capital and forty perpendicular for $109,000—a work I hope the corporation will undertake. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 6, 1807.

7 "The American Citizen of the day before yesterday [see Ag 5] suggested a plan for securing the city and harbour of New-York by obstruction, and gave it as an original idea. The plan which is republished this evening, appeared in the Evening Post more than a year ago, and was handed me by an eminent merchant; an examination of it will shew at once to whom credit is due." The republished plan is the one which appeared on April 1, 1806 (q. v.).—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 7, 1807.

8 A scheme for the defence of the city, proposed by John Stevens, of "Hobuck," is published. The editor comments upon it as "delusive," believing it would "lead to the destruction of this city."—Am. Cit., Ag 8, 1807. Stevens modified his plan by partially embracing the plan to place obstructions at the Narrows, as proposed by this editor on Aug. 5.—Ibid., Ag 15, 1807. Explaining his plan on Aug. 20, Mr. Stevens said it was "simply to moor a compact line of floating batteries across the channel, from Staten Island to Hendrick's Reef;" that this line "be formed of fourteen distinct batteries, of about 100 yds. long and 60 or 70 feet wide, moored in such a manner, with anchors and cables, as that by means of capstans, they may be placed at any angle." The plan for interior and exterior defence is to be exhibited on the 22nd at the Tontine Coffee House.—Ibid., Ag 21, 1807. See Ag 15.

9 The preliminary trial of Robert Fulton's steamboat takes place. Fulton thus describes the occasion in a letter written to Chancellor Livingston on Aug. 10:

"Yesterday about 12 o'clock I put the steamboat in motion first with a paddle 8 inches broad 3 feet long, with which I ran about one mile up the East River against a tide of about one mile an hour, it 1807 Aug. 9 being nearly high water. I then anchored and put on another paddle 8 inches wide 3 feet long, started again and then, according to my best observations, I went 3 miles an hour, that is two against a tide of one: another board of 8 inches was wanting, which had not been prepared, I therefore turned the boat and ran down with the tide—and turned her around neatly into the berth from which I parted. She answers the helm equal to any thing that ever was built, and I turned her twice in three times her own length. Much has been proved by this experiment. First that she will, when in complete order, run up to my full calculations. Second, that my axles, I believe, will be sufficiently strong to run the engine to her full power. Third, that she steers well, and can be turned with ease. . . . I beat all the sloops that were endeavoring to stem tide with the light breeze which they had; had I hoisted my sails I consequently should have had all their means added to my own. Whatever may be the fate of steamboats for the Hudson, everything is completely proved for the Mississippi, and the object is immense. . . ."—Sutcliffe, Robert Fulton and the 'Clermont,' 199–201.

Rembrandt Peale, writing on Jan. 13, 1848, to a member of the Penn. Hist. Soc., said that in 1807 he visited Fulton in New York and found him much disturbed because many people "almost made him crazy" in their efforts to persuade him to abandon his projects of steam navigation. Fulton invited Peale "to a ship-yard on the East River to witness the first experimental demonstration in America" (probably this preliminary trial on Aug. 9), and Peale thus described his experience: "When I was admitted to the yard, to which only his intimate friends were invited, I perceived, some distance up the river, a common flat-bottomed scow, with a number of persons on board, in the act of being turned round to return. When it began to move, and advanced on the calm water, against the tide, at the rate of four miles an hour, it seemed like a huge tortoise paddling onwards with its fore feet, and produced in me the most lively sensations. As the scow touched the wharf, I jumped on a broad plank which crossed it midway, where Fulton stood alone, and, seizing his hand, congratulated him on his success." The letter goes on to state that Fulton, glancing across the small, half-submerged wheels of his boat, suddenly exclaimed: "Yes, now I have it! They [meaning the wheels] must be of large diameter and but little sunk in the water." Mr. Peale quotes this as showing that, while small water-wheels, instead of paddles, had been considered by Fulton, Fitch, and other experimenters, "this was the moment when the conviction flashed on his mind that all that was necessary for the application of steam power to navigation, was to employ wheels of large diameter and but little submerged."—Penn. Hist. Soc. Collections, I: 35.

Fulton's boat was built at the ship-yards of Charles Browne at Corlear's Hook.—Hist. Mag., 1st ser., III: 21; Dickinson, Robert Fulton, Engineer and Artist, 215–16. Dickinson says that she was not christened when launched, but was known merely as the "Steam Boat." When she was registered in 1808 after being greatly altered, she went under the name of the "North River Steamboat of Clermont" and was called the "North River" for short. It was not until 1810 that she was designated as the "Clermont."—Ibid., 216, 228–30.

The boat was thus described by Fulton: "My first steamboat on the Hudson's River was 150 feet long 13 feet wide, drawing 2 ft. of water, bow and stern 60 degrees: she displaced 36.40 cubic feet, equal 100 tons of water; her bow presented 26 ft. to the water, plus and minus the resistance of 1 ft. running 4 miles an hour."—Sutcliffe, op. cit., 192. Another authority adds: "The bottom of the boat was formed of yellow pine plank 1.5 in. thick, tongued and grooved, and set together with white lead. This bottom or platform was laid in a transverse platform and molded out with batten and nails. The shape of the bottom being thus formed, the floors of oak and spruce were placed across the bottom; the spruce floors being 4 x 8 inches and 2 feet apart. The oak floors were reserved for the ends, and were both sided and molded 8 inches. Her top timbers (which were of spruce and extended from a log that formed the bridge to the deck) were sided 6 inches and 4 inches at the head. She had no guards when first built and was steered by a tiller. Her draft of water was 28 inches."—Ibid., 192–93 (footnote), citing Nautical Gazette. See also Ag 17 and S 2.

The boat was virtually rebuilt in the winter of 1807–8 (see N 20, 1807, and Ap 25, 1808) and was used on the Hudson for several years. Her final whereabouts remains a mystery. Mrs. Sutcliffe says: "It has been asserted that she was finally transported as The Henrietta to the Cape Fear River, North Carolina, where Fulton himself as early as 1813 had suggested the formation of a steam-navigation company. Another authority, Mr. J. Seymour Bullock, states that the boat was broken up, when further important improvements rendered her antiquated shape and construction unequal to the increased traffic upon the river, and that the 'ribs' of the hull were used under the wharf in Jersey City where the Secor Foundry built monitors during the Civil War. Aug. 9

"A third statement that the boat was sunk off Poughkeepsie is of doubtful authenticity. Fulton with his usual thrift, probably incorporated the useful parts of the Clermont in a boat of later construction."—Sutcliffe, op. cit., 285–86. The boat is shown on Pl. 78, Vol. I. Her first public trial took place on Aug. 17 (q. v.).

10 The common council receives a report of James Hardie to the city inspector on the offensive condition of the burial vault of the African Zion Methodist Episcopal Church. "This Society has no burying ground, but inter all their dead in a vault under the church." In the last five years, 750 bodies have been interred there. The board passes an ordinance to stop the practice.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 522. On Aug. 17, the society asked the common council to grant them a piece of ground for a cemetery, and the board ordered that the supt. of the almshouse "set apart a portion of Potters field, about Fifty feet square, for the use of said society."—Ibid., IV: 525.

12 On the night of Aug. 11 or early morning of the 12th, the first attempted bank burglary in the city's annals occurred. On Aug. 17, the cashier of the U. S. Branch Bank, Mr. Burral, informed the common council by letter "that an attempt had been made to break into said Bank on the night of the 11th and 12th inst., and charging the Watchman on duty with neglect." The board referred the communication to Aldermen Leroy and Strong, and Mr. Bogardus "to examine into the facts relating to said attempt and to enquire into the conduct of the Watchman on duty."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 525.

15 Strong objection is made to "obstructing the Narrows by sinking immense masses of stone," because it would make "a permanent bar of rocks."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 15, 1807.

" "Union Garden" is the name now given to Delacroix's former "Vauxhall," at 112 Broadway (see Jl 24, 1805), which has been reopened by a "Madame Mill." Her ad. states there is an "avenue" to the garden "at No. 27 Cedar-street."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 19, 1807. Cf. O 24, 1806.

17 In accordance with the common council's request of Aug. 4 (q. v.), Col. Jonathan Williams writes from Fort Columbus (see 1806) to Selah Strong, chairman of the fortifications committee, his opinion "whether the Narrows, under all circumstances, be the most eligible place for the obstruction and erection of batteries, in addition to those determined on by the United States, for the protection of the city and harbour of New York." Because of its topographical information, and its value as a public document on the subject of New York's early coast defence, Col. Williams's report is given here practically in full:

"There are people now living who remember when the channel between Governor's island and Long island was fordable, and I have the best authority for saying that about fifty years ago, the gardener of the then Governor used to pass and repass in a canoe, without a paddle, by merely a push with his foot at setting out. By an English chart published in 1776, it appeared that the shoalest water in this passage was at that time three fathoms; by a Chart made by Captain Chauncey and Mr Loss, the depth in the same place was in 1798, increased to five fathoms, and there are now seven fathoms of water at low tide.

"The cause of this is universally, and I believe truly, ascribed to the cast given to the East river ebb tide, by the docking out on that side of the city.

"If this be the effect of a partial obstruction occasioned by the new docks, it may be asked what would be the effect of our general obstruction across the channel between flats of deep and soft mud? . . ., it is not unreasonable to suppose that a new channel would in such a case, be soon opened on either side. . . . [He describes soundings near Red Hook and Yellow Hook at the Narrows.]

1807 Aug. 17 "Buttermilk channel may doubtless be rendered impassible by chains well protected from the shores of Red Hook and Governor's island; and the South side of the latter would be a very commanding point for a battery, which would rake the channel just described, to the whole length of cannon shot. The southern point of Gwoan's Cove, called Yellow Hook, lies about due east from Robins reef, and nearly at right angles with the channel, it was therefore essential to find the true distance and depth of water in this direction, since this appears to be the place most spoken of for obstructing an enemy's passage. [He gives the measurements.]

"That the Corporation may have at one view, this distance and the several depths in an east and west direction, I have subjoined a section of the passage quite across from Robins' reef to the point above mentioned. After this representation, the Corporation will not think it necessary for me to give any opinion as to the practicability, expediency, cost or effect of obstructions in this place: their own judgments will decide these questions. It must be remembered, however, that in obstructing the channel in this place, there is nothing to prevent the enemy from possessing the Kil's channel, and totally blockading Newark Bay and the sound, thus cutting off all communication with Jersey below Paules Hook, while the whole anchorage at the quarantine ground is left open, where a fleet of any number or size may ride unmolested and obtain coercively every supply it might want. It will also be matter worthy of consideration, how far this fine harbour may or may not be injured by obstructing the present and opening other channels.

"While upon this business, I thought it best to ascertain the width of Henrick's reef at the Narrows, with more accuracy than could be done by trigonometrical observations, owing to the unsteady position of the buoy or boat, which I was obliged to make the apex of the triangle; . . . [He gives measurements and soundings.]

He discusses the strength of the current, and concludes "that if blocks were to be sunk in the Narrows two sides might be vertical, and if the ends were to be made like the sterlings of a bridge, with a batter or talus of three inches in one foot, their strength would resist the currents and every sort of agitation of the sea from any ordinary cause whatever." Discussing the size and construction of the blocks, he says that the cubical contents of each block will be 234,000 ft., "and by extending the chevaux de frize fifteen feet each way, obstructions of one hundred and ten feet wide might be made to extend from side to side at such distances as to leave ample passage for the water between them.

"Twenty eight of these obstructions, with intervals of eighty feet, would, at the ends of the cheveaux de frize, leave intervals of but fifty feet, and form a line quite across the channel . . . altho' each line of blocks might be half the width of the Narrows, the extremities might be an hundred yards distant from each other in the line of the current, this would be always a safe uninterrupted passage for our shipping, when not closed by a chain, and when closed would float along the current at both flood and ebb, and thereby meet with no resistence laterally, and as the floats would ride, each in the rear of the other, the longitudinal resistance would be small. An enemy might attempt to force the chain, would be obliged to check his way, and consequently his propelling force, by turning at right angles with the wind and tide, and should the tide resist one effort, he would be immediately thrown, by both wind and tide, with its broad side to the line of blocks, and remain at the mercy of the batteries. Now the whole of this defence, even at five cents the cubic foot, would be but three hundred and twenty seven thousand six hundred dollars, and the chain, which would answer for this purpose, is now lying in good order, at West point. . . . The channel near Robins' reef has on each side an immense expanse of water, and below it a body of soft mud. The channel in the Narrows, has on each side, hard rocks and high grounds, with a bottom that is worn down to its utmost depth, and there is probably nothing but rock remaining. [He develops further the plan, measurements, etc.]

"I do not mean in this new statement, to abandon the position I took in my former communication, relative to Mr Fulton's torpedoes [see Jl 29]. This gentleman, in the several communications I have had with him, appears to be fully possessed of the subject of his invention, upon principles which are all of them reducible to mathematical and experimental demonstration; and seeing, as I have seen, the effect of his Torpedoes, I cannot hesitate in recommending these engines as a very powerful auxiliary. A question of humanity has been raised relative to the use of these machines, which in its effect has rather an inhumane tendency. Let us, if we can, blow up a few marauding invaders, and the immorality and inhumanity of attacking defenceless towns, for the sake of plunder, would be checked, while human miseries would be lessened by rendering such attacks less frequent. Wars have in effect been less sanguinary since the invention of gunpowder; yet when it was first used, it must have had a treacherous appearance." Aug. 17

He explains the meaning of his first communication (see Jl 29 and Ag 4) in which he said that ships would always pass batteries, adding: "If we were to have batteries without gunboats and obstructions an enemy might pass. If we were to have obstructions without force to protect them, the enemy would leisurely remove the dangerous parts and go between the others. . . . although a reliance upon any one mode might be illusory, the whole combined would certainly protect the Narrows, and insure security and tranquillity to this opulent city.

". . . there must be a sufficiency of time, money, with a very good stock of patience, or their works will never do any good to the public, nor credit to themselves. If this harbour and bay were in possession of any of the belligerent powers of Europe, their Engineers would pronounce it to be perfectly defensible, but they would require a good fund of the three requisites before mentioned, money, time and patience.

"What then are we to do in case of a sudden unexpected attack? I answer that we must make use of the means we can, on short notice, command, send our gunboats in front with an ample collection of torpedoes to be placed in proper positions, put a gun or two on board each one of the North river Sloops, and go down upon the enemy like a swarm of bees. I would recommend however, that these auxiliary sloops should keep so far in the rear of the advanced guard, as not to impede their operations. Desperate cases must have desperate remedies; and this bold advance, with our wharves lined with cannon, might save the city. But this kind of defence should never be relied on, as a sure protection. By frequent repetition, it would be in effect more expensive than permanent batteries; and at every requisition the money so suddenly expended would be all lost; to say nothing of the loss occasioned by diverting our citizens from the daily pursuit of their business, and employment of their vessels. The enemy too, might perpetually harrass us by false alarms till tired of preparations, without using them, we should be caught, when we thought ourselves the most secure.

"As the Corporation have not directed my attention to any particular point, I was desirous of extending my examination down to Sandy Hook, but a violent storm drove me back, under the shelter of Coney island. I had here an opportunity of observing a fine land locked bay, called Gravesend bay, where the water was smooth, although there was a high sea without, and where the largest fleet that ever crossed the ocean could ride with perfect safety in four or five fathoms of water, while only a superior naval force could annoy it.

"Between the Narrows and the Hook there does not appear one single point above water except Coney island, from which a ship could be touched, and this is so much exposed to be attacked with success, or to be starved out that it cannot be thought a proper place for a garrison. It is merely a sand bank without vegetation and without fresh water, and even if it were formidable, ships could keep at too great a distance to suffer from its shot, whatever might be their number or power. Although I could not visit Sandy Hook, I have a tolerable knowledge of that point, having passed it, and examined very accurate charts. From my experience in the rivers, inlets, &c: on the coast of North and South Carolina, I am confident that no obstructions could be permanently placed on these moving sandbars at the margin of the ocean. Such ideas should in my opinion be abandoned as soon as conceived, and although I have seen a very elegant plan for fortifying this Hook at the expence of four millions of dollars, and a perpetual garrison of eight thousand men, I cannot hesitate to say, that if the plan were executed it would not in my opinion prevent an enemy's fleet from passing by, and occupying Gravesend Bay with very little injury."

The common council, to whom the letter is presented on this day, orders "that the Report of Col. Williams be printed for the use of the Board."—M. C. C, (1784–1831), IV: 531–39. The original (MS.) report is preserved in metal file No. 34, city clerk's record-room. See Ag 18.

1807 Aug. 17 The first public trial of Robert Fulton's steamboat is made; it sails from New York to Albany with about forty guests. Only one newspaper gives notice of this important happening. It says:

"Mr Fulton's ingenious Steam Boat, invented with a view to the navigation of the Mississippi from New Orleans upwards, sails to-day from the North River, near the State Prison to Albany. The velosity of the Steam Boat is calculated at four miles an hour; it is said that it will make a progress of two against the current of the Mississippi; and if so it will certainly be a very valuable acquisition to the commerce of the Western States."—Am. Cit., Ag 17, 1807.

Fulton thus described his departure in a letter to an unidentified friend: "The moment arrived in which the word was to be given for the boat to move. My friends were in groups on the deck. There was anxiety mixed with fear among them. They were silent, sad and weary. I read in their looks nothing but disaster, and almost repented of my efforts. The signal was given and the boat moved on a short distance and then stopped and became immovable. To the silence of the preceding moment, now succeeded murmurs of discontent, and agitations, and whispers and shrugs. I could hear distinctly repeated—'I told you it was so; it is a foolish scheme; I wish we were well out of it.'

"I elevated myself upon a platform and addressed the assembly. I stated that I knew not what was the matter, but if they would be quiet and indulge me for half an hour, I would either go on or abandon the voyage for that time. This short respite was conceded without objection. I went below and examined the machinery, and discovered that the cause was a slight maladjustment of some of the work. In a short time it was obviated. The boat was again put in motion. She continued to move on. All were still incredulous. None seemed willing to trust the evidence of their own senses. We left the fair city of New York; we passed through the romantic and ever-varying scenery of the Highlands; we descried the clustering houses of Albany; we reached its shores,—and then, even then, when all seemed achieved, I was the victim of disappointment.

"Imagination superseded the influence of fact. It was then doubted if it could be done again, or, if done, it was doubted if it could be made of any great value."—Sutcliffe, Robert Fulton and the 'Clermont,' 202–4. Fulton gave additional information in his letter to Joel Barlow on Aug. 22 (q. v.).

H. Freeland, who viewed the boat from the shore, wrote in 1856: "It was in the early autumn of the year 1807, that a knot of villagers was gathered on a high bluff just opposite Poughkeepsie, on the west bank of the Hudson, attracted by the appearance of a strange dark-looking craft, which was slowly making its way up the river. . . .

"The strange-looking craft was the 'Clermont,' on her trial trip to Albany. . . . I well remember the scene, one so well fitted to impress a lasting picture upon the mind of a child accustomed to watch the vessels that passed up and down the river. . . .

"On her return trip, the curiosity she excited was scarcely less intense—the whole country talked of nothing but the sea-monster, belching forth fire and smoke. The fishermen became terrified, and rowed homewards, and they saw nothing but destruction devastating their fishing-grounds; whilst the wreaths of black vapour, and rushing noise of paddle-wheels, foaming with the stirred-up waters, produced great excitement amongst the boatmen. . . ."—Reigart, Life of Robert Fulton, 175–77.

M. Michaux, a distinguished French botanist who accompanied Livingston and Fulton on the return trip from Albany, wrote of it: "We had been three days at Albany when the arrival from New York of a vessel propelled by steam was announced. This boat, which was decked, was about 25 metres (82 feet) [evidently an error; the length was 150 feet] long and was commanded by the inventor, Mr. Robert Fulton. Many of the inhabitants of the city and strangers who were there at the time went to visit it. Every one made his remarks upon the advantages consequent upon the new means of navigation, but also upon the serious accidents which might result from the explosion of the boiler. The vessel was lying alongside the wharf; a placade announced its return to New York for the next day but one, the 20th of August, and that it would take passengers at the same price as the sailing vessels—three dollars.

"So great was the fear of the explosion of the boiler that no one, except my companion and myself, dared to take passage in it for New York. We quitted Albany on the 20th of August in the presence of a great number of spectators. Chancellor Livingston, whom we supposed to be one of the promoters of this way of navigating rivers, was the only stranger with us; he quitted the boat in the afternoon to go to his country residence which was upon the left bank of the river. From every point on the river whence the boat announced by the smoke of its chimney, could be seen, we saw the inhabitants collect; they waved their handkerchiefs and hurrahed for Fulton, whose passage they had probably noticed as he ascended the river. Aug. 17

"We arrived the next day between one and two o'clock at New York. We separated from Mr. Fulton after paying him the price of our passage. The day after our departure from Albany, and a few minutes after Chancellor Livingston had quitted us, Mr. Fulton expressed his surprise that notwithstanding the number of persons who were going to New York, only two Frenchmen had the courage to embark with him. . . ."—Sutcliffe, op. cit., 228–32.

Fulton sent the "log" of his trip to the one paper which had announced his departure, and the editor, after printing it, remarked: "We congratulate Mr. Fulton and the country on his success in the Steam Boat, which cannot fail of being very advantageous. We understand that not the smallest inconvenience is felt in the boat either from heat or smoke."—Am. Cit., Ag 22, 1807.

The boat had to be repaired and refitted before it was started as a packet (see Ag 29 and S 2).

Broadway, "the principal avenue of our City," is complained of, as being in "such a state of neglect and ruin" that no one can "drive through it after dark, but at the hazard of limbs and life," and "after a heavy rain the water is up to the horse's girth which renders it impossible to see where to guide," etc.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 17, 1807. "

Stagg & Anson having completed their contract "for regulating part of Broadway above Jones Street," the common council orders payment of the balance due them, $250.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 528, 539. See Ag 4. "

On this evening will be presented at the Vauxhall Theatre "a new grand allegorical pantomimic spectacle, interspersed with song, recitative and dancing, called Cinderella; Or, The Little Glass Slipper. Invented by Mr. Byrne, and performed at the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, upwards of one hundred nights the two last seasons, to overflowing houses, and at the Theatres of Philadelphia and Charleston, with unbounded applause. . . ."—Daily Adv., Ag 17, 1807. See, further, Jl 11, 1808. "

"A Friend of Commerce" writes a letter of protest against Col. Williams's plan of obstructing the Narrows. He fears the proposed permanent obstructions will increase the bar already existing between the point of Sandy Hook and Long Island. This would ruin the harbour of New York. When worms destroy the blocks and Chevaux de frize in a few years, the stones would remain "an everlasting monument of the folly of the projector."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 19, 1807. See also Ag 24. 18

Col. Jonathan Williams writes to Selah Strong an account of soundings he has made of the Channel from the southern point of Red Hook west and south.—From the original letter filed with the papers and plans presented by Dr. Mitchill in 1810 to the N. Y. H. S. The letter is printed in M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 544–45. 21

In republishing an essay from Salmagundi entitled "Plans for Defending our Harbour, By William Wizard, Esq.," the editor of the Evening Post says: "The following hits off admirably some of the late philosophical, economical plans which our philosophical and economical administration seem to be so intent on our adopting for the defence of our harbour," and adds that the author is "one who is a legitimate descendant from Rabelais, and a true member of the Butler, Swift, and Sterne family." "

"William Wizard" begins: "Surely never was a town more subject to mid-summer fancies and dog-day whim-whams than this most excellent of cities. . . . This summer every body has had full employment in planning fortifications for our harbour. Not a cobler or tailor in the city but has left his awl and his thimble, become an engineer outright, and aspired most magnanimously to the building of forts and destruction of navies!" He gives a humorous description of the torpedo experiments (see Jl 20), remarking that all that is needed for their success is "that the ships must come to anchor in a convenient place—watch must be asleep, or so complacent as not to disturb any boats paddling about them 1807 Aug. 21 —fair wind and tide—no moon-light—machines well-directed," and suggesting that the effect would be even more certain if the enemy would enter into the project "so that if the machine did not come to the ship, the ship would go to the machine." After detailing a discussion on this subject at Hoggs Tavern, he adds:

"By this time all the quid nuncs of the room had gathered around us, each pregnant with some mighty scheme for the salvation of his country. One pathetically lamented that we had no such men among us as the famous Tonjoursdort and Grossitout, who, when the celebrated Captain Tranchemont made war against the city of Kalacahabalaba, utterly discomfited the great Bigstaff, and blew up his whole army by sneezing. Another imparted a sage idea which seems to have occupied more heads than one—that is, that the best way of fortifying the harbour was to ruin it at once; choak the channel with rocks and blocks; strew it with chevaux-de-frises and torpedoes; and make it like a nursery-garden, full of men-traps and spring-guns. No vessel would then have the temerity to enter our harbour—we should not even dare to navigate it ourselves. Or if no cheaper way could be devised, Governor's-Island might be raised by levers and pulleys—floated with empty casks, &c. towed down to the Narrows, and dropped plump in the very mouth of the harbour! . . .

"A shrewd old gentleman who stood listening by with a mischievously equivocal look observed that the most effectual mode of repulsing a fleet from our ports would be to administer them a proclamation from time to time, till it operated.

"Unwilling to leave the company without demonstrating my patriotism and ingenuity I communicated a plan of defence, which in truth was suggested long since by that infallible oracle Mustapha. . . . He thought the most effectual mode would be to assemble all the slang-whangers, great and small, from all parts of the state, and marshal them at the battery, where they should be exposed, point blank, to the enemy, and form a tremendous body of scolding infantry. . . . They should be exhorted to fire away without pity or remorse, in sheets, half-sheets, columns, handbills or squibbs—great canon, little canon, pica, german text, stereotype—and to run their enemies through and through with sharp pointed italics. . . . If, continued Mustapha, you wish men to fight well and valiantly, they must be allowed those weapons that they have been used to handle. Your countrymen are notoriously adroit in the management of the tongue and pen, and conduct their battles by speeches or newspapers. . . .

"The sly old gentleman, I have before mentioned, was highly delighted with this plan, and proposed, as an improvement, that morters should be placed on the battery, which instead of throwing shells and such trifles, might be charged with newspapers, Tammany addresses, &c. by way of red-hot shot, which would undoubtedly be very potent in blowing up any powder magazine they might chance to come in contact with. . . .

"These are but two or three specimens of the nature and efficacy of the innumerable plans with which this city abounds. Every body seems charged to the muzzle with gun-powder; every eye flashes fire-works and torpedoes, and every corner is occupied by knots of inflammatory projectors, not one of whom but has some preposterous mode of destruction which he has proved to be infallible by a previous experiment in a tub of water. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 21, 1807. "Will Wizard" was the nom de plume of Washington Irving.—Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., IV: 55 (footnote).

22 Robert Fulton writes from New York to Joel Barlow of Philadelphia: "My Steam Boat voyage to Albany and back has turned out rather more favourable than I had calculated. The distance from New-York to Albany is 150 miles; I ran it up in 32 hours and down in 30 hours. The latter is just five miles an hour. I had a light breeze against me the whole way going and coming, so that no use was made of my sails; and the voyage has been performed wholly by the power of the steam engine. . . . The power of propelling boats by steam is now fully proved. The morning I left New-York [see Ag 17] there was not perhaps thirty persons in the city who believed that the boat would ever move one mile an hour or be of the least utility. And while we were putting off from the wharf, which was crowded with specators, I heard a number of sarcastic remarks; . . . Having employed much time and money and zeal in accomplishing this work, it gives me, as it will you, great pleasure to see it so fully answer my expectations. . . . And although the prospect of personal emolument has been some inducement to me, yet I feel infinitely more pleasure in reflecting with you on the immense advantage that my country will derive from the invention. However, I will not admit that it is half so important as the Torpedo system of defence and attack; for out of this will grow the liberty of the seas. . . . But thousands of witnesses have now seen the steam boat in rapid movement, and they believe—but they have not seen a ship of war destroyed by a torpedo, and they do not believe— . . . But in case we have war, and the enemy's ships come into our waters, if the government will give me reasonable means of action, I will soon convince the world that we have surer and cheaper modes of defence than they are aware of."—Republican Watch Tower, S 4, 1807. 24 The common council hears the following report of the committee on the subject of fortifying the harbour of New York and orders that it be printed for the use of the board: "The Committee that was appointed to carry into effect the resolutions of the Corporation dated the 13th of July last, offering to cede to the United States such part of the public ground as the Secretary at War may require for the purpose of erecting fortifications for the defense of this city—and also the resolution, dated the 4th of August, offering the aid of this Board, to the Executive of this state, to enable him more effectually to put in proper condition, for immediate service, the arms and ordinance belonging to the State, and to procure such military stores as the present exigencies may require—also to devise such other means of defence as may be in the power of this Board to execute: Report

"That the Secretary at War, with the other Commissioners of the United States, have determined, not only to enlarge and make durable, the works on Governor's island but are now about erecting a very strong and powerful marine battery, on the North-west point of that island, to extend on the reef, beyond low water mark, into the river. The works on Ellis island are to be extended, and the number of guns and weight of metal greatly increased. It is also determined by the general government to erect a strong fort, with two or three tiers of guns, to extend beyond the present battery, in front of the Flag staff; also to build a block in the North river, at the foot of Duane Street, of 100. feet square, and to erect a battery thereon. When these works are completed, it is understood they will be able to bring 120 guns to bear upon any point in the bay, between Bedlow's island and the city. The Commissioners have also fixed upon the old Potter's field, as a proper place to erect laboratories and arsenals for depositing and repairing arms and military stores. . . ."

The details of the system of blocks and chevaux de frise, as proposed by Col. Williams (see Jl 29 and Ag 17), are given and explained. The use of a chain or boom as part of this system of obstructions is one of its principal features. The objections to this plan of defending New York by submarine obstructions (see, e. g. Ag 18 and 24) are severally answered.

A calculation of the expense of making the obstructions and near-by forts is given, and suggestions are offered for raising the funds.

The closing paragraph of the report is significant of existing conditions of unpreparedness: "This is a work of great magnitude, and will take more than one year to complete it. The materials are not to be had in sufficient quantities at present, but we ought to make a beginning this year with what materials can be procured, and the works may probably be finished in the course of the next summer. If we should unfortunately be involved in a war, in consequence of the present dispute with England, it will most probably take place before any effectual system of defence can be completed, and we must submit to our unhappy situation. But if the storm should blow over, we ought not to desist from our determinations, to put the city in a state of defence; we cannot always promise ourselves an exemption from the calamities of war: on the 20th of June last, the country felt as secure and as confident of the continuation of peace, as it has felt for many years past; but from the events that have recently taken place, it is seen upon what an uncertain tenure the peace of nations depends. The advice of our immortal Washington ought therefore to be confided in 'that to preserve peace we ought always to be prepared for war.'" (Signed) "Selah Strong Jacob Mott John D. Miller."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 545–51. On Aug. 27, the report was again read, debated and adopted.—Ibid., IV: 552. The original report (MS.)

1807 Ag 24 „ is preserved in metal file No. 34, city clerk's record-room. See, further, O 15.

Thomas Paine is another objector to Col. Williams's plan of obstructing the Narrows (see Ag 17 and 18). He says in a published letter: ". . . The plan of obstruction now proposed for New-York is by blocks, that is, solid bodies of stone or earth in the manner of wharves. This was first suggested by Selah Strong, chairman of the committee of the corporation, and in a publication by Mr Stevens of Hobuck, which contains many just observations on ships and batteries, he adopts the same unfortunate idea of obstructing by blocks. . . . And the editor of the New-York American Citizen, in introducing Mr Smith's piece in his paper of Saturday last, says, why not 'to make assurance doubly sure, to give us in fact protection, carry the obstruction of blocks or otherwise entirely across from Robin's Reef to Mud Flat.' This, most certainly, would prevent hostile ships coming to the city, and it is equally as certain it would prevent the tide coming up and lay the wharves at New York dry, and be the ruin of all the towns of the North River that depend for commerce on tide water. . . . If Selah Strong's project is adopted, New York is ruined, for the obstruction by blocks cannot afterwards be removed. . . . In projecting obstructions two things are absolutely necessary to be taken into view.—The one is, the least possible obstruction to the water up or down; the other is, that the obstruction be such as can be moved afterwards. Neither of these entered the mind of the projector of blocks. . . . If the channel between Robin's Reef and Mud Flat is not more than about 36 feet, it can be obstructed as the Delaware was, and the obstructions can be defended by gun boats and batteries, and the militia can defend the shore as the people of Norfolk have done; but for men to be always employing themselves on imaginary fortifications or sculking behind, or within obstructions like a turtle within his shell, lest the crowds should pick him, has a very cowardly appearance. It is not the spirit of 'the times that tried men's souls.'"—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 24, 1807, citing the Public Adv.

„ A report of the committee of repairs "on the dilapidated state of Oswego Market . . ., recommending that the eastern end of said Market be taken down," is read in common council and approved.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 541.

26 The subject of further fortifying the harbour of New York is still under consideration, and Albert Gallatin, secretary of the treasury, who is in the city, writes under this date to Pres. Jefferson: "There is such variety of opinions here on the subject of fortifications and those so much influenced by Federalism and local politics that it is difficult to unite even our friends in favor of one rational plan. I think, however, that I have succeeded in defeating the extravagant and inefficient plan of defending the Narrows which the corporation (this year Federal) intended to promote, either on their own bottom or probably in order to raise a clamor against government. Colonel Williams was unfortunately drawn in to favor the plan for which engineers, fond of displaying their talents have some predilections."—Adams, Writings of Albert Gallatin, I: 354. See Jl 25. (Marinus Willett was mayor at this time.)

28 The interior of the Park Theatre having been completely taken to pieces except the walls and the stage, and rebuilt under the direction of the architect, John Joseph Holland, the building is now called the "New Theatre." One newspaper thus described it:

"New-York may now boast of a Theatre which unites more of taste, grandeur, room, convenience and elegance than any one in the United States; several foreigners who have examined it have pronounced it superior to any one in Europe. We speak of the interior only, for its outside remains just as it was, a standing libel on the taste of the town.—The whole audience part of the house from the pit to the dome, has been pulled down; a new pit has been erected both wide & deep, and so well constructed, as to afford every person an uninterrupted view of the whole stage. The avenues to it are commodious, and it has a bar room and supper room annexed. Four new tiers of boxes take place of the former three tier, and the gallery, before too large, is lessened and improved. The boxes highly finished, painted, papered, and ornamented in the most costly style, are supported by eight airy pillars of about five inches diameter, reeded and silver lackered, with gilt capitals and base. From the top of every other pillar a branch projects from which is suspended a brilliant glass chandelier to light the lower tier, & in like manner patent lamps are provided for the upper tiers. The seats are covered with crimson, and between each box is to hang a festoon drapery of the same colour. Each of the dress boxes near the stage is to have a large oval mirror, disposed in such a manner as to reflect a view of the audience. There are four private boxes next the stage communicating with small private rooms, handsomely furnished. The boxes are supposed to contain 1292 seats; the lower tier 392, the second and third 360 each and the slip tier 160. The pit is supposed to contain about 500 and the gallery 600; total 2372. The massy columns which stood, on each side, between the audience and the stage have been removed and their place is now occupied by two fluted pilastres of complete Corinthian order with an inscription of Gnothi Seauton on the architrave. The architecture it is said, has been modelled after the celebrated front of the temple of Jupiter at Athens. The entrance to the boxes is through spacious lobbies, very well lighted; at the back of which, and in the front of the house, are two large, finished rooms, one over the other; the lower of which is to be handsomely furnished and is intended as a tea, coffee, confectionary and fruit room for ladies and the upper as a sort of bar room for gentlemen. . . . It is a structure that cannot fail to reflect immense credit on its architect, the celebrated Mr. Holland, from London."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 28, 1807. Aug. 28

Dunlap says: "As the Park theatre was originally constructed, and as it remained until the proscenium was remodelled by Mr. Holland, there were no pillars as props to the upper boxes: they were supported by timbers projecting from the walls, and appeared, with their tendons, self-balanced. Of course, there were no obstructions in front of the boxes, as is commonly the case; and however ornamental pillars so placed may be, that they impede the view of the spectator, and prevent his seeing more or less of the stage, is undeniable.

"Another peculiarity belonged to the boxes of this theatre, as first erected. There was a large box occupying the front of the second tier, and directly placed in front of the stage, capable of containing between two and three hundred persons, which was called 'The Shakespeare,' and was the resort of the critics, as the pit of the English theatres has been in former times.

"The remodelled building had none of the above peculiarities. It was a more splendid and more commodious theatre than that which it superseded."—Dunlap, Hist. of the Am. Theatre (1832), 343–44. The alterations were completed "in the short space of three months."—Ibid., 342. See also N. Y. Com. Adv., S 1, 1807. See S 9.

29 Robert Fulton writes to Chancellor Livingston: "On Saturday I wrote you that I arrived here on Friday at four o'clock, which made my voyage from Albany exactly thirty hours. We had a little wind on Friday morning, but no waves which produced any effect. I have been making every exertion to get off on Monday morning, but there has been much work to do—boarding all the sides, decking over the boiler and works, finishing each cabin with twelve berths to make them comfortable, and strengthening many parts of the iron work. So much to do, and the rain, which delays the caulkers will, I fear, not let me off till Wednesday morning. Then, however, the boat will be as complete as she can be made—all strong and in good order and the men well organized, and I hope, nothing to do but to run her for six weeks or two months. The first week, that is if she starts on Wednesday, she will make one trip to Albany and back. Every succeeding week she will run three trips—that is, two to Albany and one to New York, or two to New York and one to Albany, always having Sunday and four nights rest to the crew. By carrying for the usual price there can be no doubt but the steamboat will have the preference because of the certainty and agreeable movements. I have seen the captain of the fine sloop from Hudson. He says the average of his passages have been forty-eight hours. For the steamboat it would have been thirty certain. The persons who came down with me were so much pleased that they said were she established to run periodically they would never go in any thing else. I will have her registered and everything done which I can recollect. Every thing looks well and I have no doubt will be very productive."—Sutcliffe, Robert Fulton and the 'Clermont,' 236–38. See S 2.

30 On or about this day in August, Col. Williams wrote from Fort Columbus to Selah Strong, chairman of the committee on fortifying New York, saying that "the difficulty of fixing determinate lines on a watery surface" had delayed his application to Alderman Strong "for certain cessions of submarine and other territory to

BROADSIDE ADVERTISEMENT OF "HAERLEM BLOOMINGDALE & NEW-YORK STAGE;" DATED APRIL 5, 1806. SEE P. 1445.

1807 Aug. 30 the United States in conformity to the resolution of the Corporation of the 13th of July" (q. v.). He stated his proposals by measurements of the cession of water lots desired at the Battery, "with a right of egress and regress to and across the Battery to the main street." He also defined the grant desired near Rhinelander's wharf (on the North River). Here, "The Corporation may further restrict, if they please, that the Bridge to be made to connect the Fort with the shore shall have a draw in it sufficient for vessels to pass and repass."

He enclosed an extract of a letter from Gov. Tompkins, "by which it appears that the grant of Pottersfield must be made by this Corporation and I would propose to have the place designated by the existing fences in the open square behind the house and garden of that place at the angle of the intersecting roads now occupied. The Magazine, Arsenal, Laboratory, Workshops &c: &c: proposed to be built should not be exposed to any buildings near them on either side on account of the danger of Fire. I should therefore think it proper for the line to extend to the road on each side and so wide as to admit a large yard to be inclosed which may also serve for a deposit for various purposes. The metes and bounds of this may be ascertained by the City surveyor; and I will attend him. . . ."

The extracts from the letter from Gov. Tompkins, referred to, which is dated "New York. 25th July. 1807," are (1): "The land around the Bastion of the old Battery belongs to the Corporation of New York, together with the land on the Battery which will be necessary to answer the purposes of fortification."

(2) "The land at Pottersfield originally belonged to the Corporation. They granted it to the State for the use of an Arsenal, but as it has not been applied to that use by the State, and as by an act of the Legislature a lease which the Surveyor General had given of it was directed to be assigned to the Corporation and the rent which had been received in the mean time was ordered to be refunded to them, it is presumed the right of the State was relinquished and that the property revested in the Corporation. At any rate I think their title will be deemed adequate, and that you will have nothing to apprehend from any interference with you by the Agents of the State."

(3) "The resolution of the Corporation of the 13th inst. [q. v.] embraces the whole property belonging to them. It will therefore be necessary for you only to furnish them with the precise limits and boundaries of the land required to answer your objects and a conveyance will be forthwith executed therefor."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 567–68. See, further, S 14.

31 Roger Strong, alderman of the Fifth Ward, produces a commission, approved by the governor, as deputy-mayor, and takes the oath of office.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 553.

" The common council passes the following resolutions: "Resolved that eight Piers be sunk in the Channel opposite Oyster reef without delay. The First pier to be sunk Six hundred feet from said Reef and the other piers alternately three hundred feet distant from each other. That immediate notice be given in the public papers, that contracts will be received at the Comptroller's office until the 3d of September, the contracts to specify the number of Piers each contractor will engage to sink and the price per cubic foot. . . ." (The proposed dimensions of the piers are given.)

The resolution also provides for the city's borrowing $100,000 "of the Banks," but only $25,000 at one time; that it be deposited in the city treasury, and the treasurer be directed "to open an account under the head of Fortifications, and that the money so loaned be used solely for the purpose of fortifying this city."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 557–58. See, however, S 7 and 28. In its issue of Sept. 1, the editor of the Eve. Post commented unfavourably on the resolution.

" The common council resolves "that the Freedom of this City and the thanks of this Board be presented to Colonel Jonathan Williams for his prompt and judicious services rendered on the subject of protecting and fortifying the Port and Harbour of New York." The clerk of the board is directed to furnish him with a copy of the resolution.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 557, 559.

" The common council refers to the committee on fortifications a letter from John Stevens of Hoboken, "respecting the protection of the Harbour of New York by means of Chevaux de frize."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 554.

About this time, there was made a pen-and-ink drawing of a "Plan and Sections of a Chevaux de Frise for protecting a navigable channel against the entrance of ships of war." It is in three parts, a "Transverse section," "Plan," and "Section in the direction of the current." It is preserved with "Filed Papers, 1804–1808," in city clerk's record-room. Aug. 31

" The common council receives, and orders to be filed, a letter, dated Aug. 8, from Edward Telfair, chairman of the citizens of Savannah, Ga., to Mayor Willett, enclosing a copy of their resolutions and proceedings "relative to the late insult and daring outrage on the United States Frigate the Chesapeake by a British Ship of war in sight of our coast."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 554. The original letter with its enclosure (a printed broadside) is preserved in metal file No. 34, city clerk's record-room.

" The common council receives a letter from the supt. of the almshouse to the mayor, "stating the services and merits of Thomas Williams driver of the public Hearse, who formerly received a compensation for his services." The board orders "that he be allowed at the rate of Fifty Dollars a year, commencing from the 1st of January last."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 554.

" The common concil suspends the operation of the section of the public health law which prohibits the introduction of oysters into the city from June 1 to Sept. 30.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 557.

Sept. 1 The British frigate "Jason," having anchored inside Sandy Hook, sends a boat ashore there to ask for a pilot to take the frigate to New York. The published details of what followed show that all pilots avoided the frigate. One pilot-boat, the "Thorn," was followed by the frigate's small-boat. The lieutenant in charge of the latter on coming up to the former demanded an explanation, and said the captain had dispatches to deliver. The pilot replied that the dispatches might be taken to Governor's Island, or an officer might be sent down from New York to get them. The lieutenant then ordered his men to take possession of the "Thorn," and "one of his men actually took hold of the helm, but Mr. Mitchell [the pilot] knocked the man away from the helm, and declared his determination to oppose what force he had to any outrageous attempt to take possession of his vessel." After some abusive language from the British officer, he left the "Thorn" and proceeded to another pilot-boat, the "Ranger," at anchor near the frigate.—Am. Cit., S 2; Aurora, S 8, citing N. Y Pub. Adv., S 5, 1807.

Some correspondence having taken place between the commander of the frigate and the surveyor of the port, the frigate dropped down to Sandy Hook from the quarantine ground on Sept. 2, with a pilot on board.—Am. Citizen, S 4; Aurora, S 9, 1807. This was after the collector had published at the custom-house the following notice, dated Sept. 5:

"The President's Proclamation [of July 2, q. v.] having interdicted all communication and intercourse between the citizens of the United States and the ships of war of his Britannic majesty, all persons are hereby notified that the penalties incurred by a breach of the said proclamation will be rigidly enforced. David Gelston, Collector."—Aurora, S 9, 1807.

2 The first advertisement of Fulton's steamboat as a packet appears. It reads: "The North River Steam Boat Will leave Pauler's Hook Ferry on Friday the 4th of September, at 6 in the morning, and arrive at Albany, on Saturday, at 6 in the afternoon.

"Provisions, good berths and accommodations are provided.

"The charge to each passenger is as follows:

"To Newburgh	$3	time 14 hours
"To Poughkeepsie	4	17
"To Esopus	4½	20
"To Hudson	5	30
"To Albany	7	36

"For places, apply to Wm. Vandervoort, N° 48 Courtlandt-street on the corner of Greenwich-street. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post., S 2, 1807.

Judge John Q. Wilson, one of the passengers on the first packet trip, wrote the following account in 1856: "The writer of this article resided in New York, and was often in the shipyard when Mr. Fulton was building his first boat. She was a queer looking craft; and like every thing new, excited much attention, and not a little ridicule. When she was launched, and the steam engine placed in her that also was looked upon as a piece with the boat to float it. In those days the operations of the steam engine were but little known. A few had seen the one for raising the Manhattan water, but to the people at large the thing was a hidden mystery. Curiosity was now greatly excited. When it was announced in New York that the boat would start from the foot of Courtlandt street at 6½

1807 Sept. 2 o'clock on Friday morning, the 4th of September, and take passengers to Albany, there was a broad smile on every face as the inquiry was made if anybody would be foolhardy enough to go. A friend of the writer of this article, hearing he intended to venture, accosted him in the street: 'John, will thee risk thy life in such a concern? I tell thee she is the most fearful wild fowl living, and thy father ought to restrain thee.'

"When Friday morning came the wharves, piers, housetops, and every spot from which a sight could be obtained, were filled with spectators. There were twelve berths, and every one was taken. The fare was $7. All the machinery of the boat was fully exposed to view; the water and balance wheels were entirely uncovered. The peripheries were of cast-iron, some four inches or more square, and ran just clear of the water. The weight of both the water and balance-wheels was sustained by the shafts, which projected over the sides of the vessel. There were no outside guards. The forward part of the boat was covered by a deck, which afforded shelter for the men employed in navigating the boat. The after part was fitted up in a rough manner for passengers; the entrance into the cabin was from the stern, in front of the steersman, who worked a tiller, the same as in an ordinary sloop. Thick, black smoke issued from the chimney—steam hissed from every ill-fated valve and crevice of the engine. Fulton himself was there, his remarkably clear and sharp voice was heard above the hum of the multitude and noise of the engine. All his actions were confident and decided, unheeding the fearfulness of some and the doubts and sarcasms of others. . . . The time for the departure of the boat arrived; some of the machinery still required to be adjusted; there was a delay. Some of the passengers said, in Fulton's hearing, they feared the voyage would prove a failure. He replied:

"'Gentlemen, you need not be uneasy; you shall be in Albany before twelve o'clock to-morrow.'

"When everything was ready, the engine was started, and the boat moved steadily but slowly from the wharf. As she turned up the river and was fairly under way there arose such a huzza as ten thousand throats never gave before. The passengers returned the cheer, but Fulton stood erect upon the deck, his eye flashing with an unearthly brilliancy as he surveyed the crowd. . . . It was agreed that a kind of log-book should be kept. Gerrit H. Van Wagenen was designated to give the time, and the writer of this article to set it down. . . . As we passed West Point the whole garrison was out and cheered us. At Newburgh it seemed as if all Orange County had collected there; the whole side-hill city seemed animated with life. Every sail-boat and water craft was out; the ferry-boat from Fishkill was filled with ladies. Fulton was engaged in seeing a passenger landed, and did not observe the boat until she bore up alongside. The flapping of the sail arrested his attention, and as he turned, the waving of so many handkerchiefs and the smiles of bright and happy faces, struck him with surprise. He raised his hat and exclaimed, 'That is the finest sight we have seen yet.'"—Sutcliffe, Robert Fulton and the 'Clermont,' 246–52. The "log-book," signed by the passengers, was printed in the Am. Cit., S 11, 1807. See S 23.

" "Mercator" contributes to one of the newspapers a plan for the defence of New York harbour. This is accompanied by diagrams and includes suggestions for blocks, batteries, chevaux-de-frize, etc. The expense is estimated at $1,000,000.—Spectator, S 2, 1807. "Mercator" was G. W. Chapman, as appears from a copy of the paper sent with letters to Dr. Mitchill by Chapman, and presented by Dr. Mitchill in 1810 to the N. Y. H. S.

3 One of our gunboats, coming into port, is fired upon within Sandy Hook by the British armed brig "Columbine," now within our waters in violation of the president's proclamation of July 2 (q. v.).—Am. Cit., S 7, 1807.

4 The custom-house barge and a pilot-boat in the service of the custom-house go down to Sandy Hook "to watch the motions of the interdicted ships" (see S 1).—Am. Cit., S 5, 1807.

5 A boat with a lieutenant and six men is sent from the British frigate "Jason," with dispatches for Col. Barclay, the British Consul at New York. "As soon as the boat had touched the shore, the six men ran away, and were pursued by the Lieutenant, who took out his pistols and threatened to fire on them if they did not stop and return to their duty. A mob immediately assembled, protected the men, abused the Lieutenant, and handled him very roughly; and something serious would have happened, if Captain Chauncy, of the U. S. Navy, had not been present, who by very great exertions protected him from their fury. The Lieutenant made a formal demand of the men." Whether they were given up or not does not appear.—Columbian Centinel, S 12, 1807. Sept. 5

The common council discharges the committee, appointed on July 13 (q. v.), "on the subject of protecting and fortifying the harbour of New York," and appoints Aldermen Mott, Ritter, and Miller, and Messrs. Bogardus and Depeyster "a committee to devise ways and means, by way of a loan from individuals or the Banks for the purpose of carrying into effect the Resolution of this Board adopted the 27th Ult° [see Ag 24] to protect and fortify the harbour of New York, and to report thereon."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 560. See, however, S 28. 7

The common council authorises the street commissioner to " accept proposals to deliver earth to the Collect Pond at 5 cents per load.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 560.

"The New Theatre [see Ag 28] will be opened this Evening for the first time, with a prelude written for the occasion, in which an appropriate address will be delivered by Mr Cooper; the pleasing comedy of the Country Girl, with the popular and splendid after-piece of Paul and Virginia. . . . The new house is commodious beyond the wish of accommodation, and is reconstructed and fitted up within, in a style . . . honourable to the intelligence of the manager, the acquirements of Mr Holland, the architect, and the task of Mr Crygier, the upholsterer. . . ."—Republican Watch Tower, S 11, 1807. 9

The common council hears read a communication from John S. Hunn, the street com'r, who reports "that he has this morning attended with Colonel Williams at Duane Street Basin to ascertain the quantity and position of the water right he wishes the Corporation to convey to the United States for fortifications at that place." He presents to the board Col. Williams's letter of "August" (see Ag 30), defining the grant desired. He continues: 14

"In order to preserve the wharves and basin as much as practicable the subscriber has pointed out the grounds to be occupied by the United States as portrayed on the sketch herewith presented [reproduced in the minutes with the report] . . . To this area Colonel Williams has given his consent giving him free egress and regress over the pier to a draw bridge leading to the works." He then describes the grounds with reference to the sketch or map, and asks whether he shall "direct the survey and maps for the cession to the United States to be made in conformity therewith." The board orders "that the Comptroller prepare a deed in conformity, on condition that the premises be applied by the United States for the sole purpose of erecting a Fortification for the defence of this city to be commenced forthwith."

The board also resolves "that the Street Commissioner cause the survey of the shores of this city, lately ordered to be made, to be completed and a plan thereof presented to this Board at its next meeting."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 564–568. The original report (MS.) is preserved in metal file No. 34, city clerk's record-room. See N 23. On Oct. 26 (q. v.), the proposed site at Duane St. was changed to the foot of Hubert St.

Jonas Humbert issues the following notice: "The Volunteers of the Tammanial War Band [see Jl 13] No I, who are already enrolled, and all others (members of Tam[m]any Society) who intend and have not yet signed the roll, are requested to attend at Head Quarters, Martlings, This Evening at 7 o'clock, on business relative to the band."—Am. Cit., S 18, 1807. 18

In a communication to the common council, John S. Hunn, the street com'r, says "that he has been at the Old Potter's field with Colonel Williams to point out, more particularly, the ground intended to be ceded to the United States, and mentioned to him that a Street lying at right angles from Bloomingdale road to Albany Avenue cutting off an angle from the rear of the public grounds, was long since intended to be opened by conversations with General Bailey upon that subject, who owns the grounds adjoining thereto. Colonel Williams approved of the arrangement as the public ground would then be surrounded by spacious streets and the property in the vicinity be more protected from the explosion of a magazine in case such an accident should happen. And he requested the Street Commissioner to obtain from General Bailey his determination, and if possible to settle the streets previous to the cession." 21

He says further that Gen. Bailey is willing "to make a fair exchange of ground which will be cut by the aforesaid street," the choice of ground and valuation to be determined by referees. The 1807 Sept. 21 position of the proposed street is shown on a map or sketch which is reproduced in the minutes. This later became the site of Madison Square.

"The Street Commissioner also submits to the Board whether it would not be better to straighten, or make straighter, the north side of the old post road along the public grounds by bringing out the line as marked on said map . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 571–73. See O 5, and N 16.

22 Isaac Riley publishes "a correct and elegantly engraved plan of the City of New York, with the recent and intended improvements—Drawn from official survey, by William Bridges, City Surveyor." It is for sale by Brisban & Brannon, "in sheets, mounted on rollers, or in cases for the packet."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 22, 1807. This must not be confounded with the well-known Bridges Map of 1811. See descrip. of Pl. 80-b, III: 543.

23 "The steam-boat being thoroughly repaired and precaution taken that injury shall not be done to her wheels in future, it is intended to run her as a packet for the remainder of the season. She will take her departure from New-York and Albany at 9 o'clock in the morning, and always perform said voyage in from 30 to 36 hours. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 23, 1807. See O 2.

28 The common council rescinds the resolution of Aug. 31, "providing for the sinking of eight piers in the channel opposite Oyster reef," and that of Sept. 7, "appointing a Committee of Ways and means for protecting and fortifying the harbour of New York."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 577.

" The city pays "John Pintard, to defray expences attending surveying the harbour," $254.67.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 578.

" Dennis Fulkerson starts running a "two-horse carriage" or "coachee" between Philadelphia and Paulus-Hook.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., O 2, 1807.

Oct. 2 "Mr Fultons new invented Steam Boat which is fitted up in a neat stile for passengers, and is intended to run from New-York to Albany as a Packet [see S 2 and 23], left here this morning with ninety passengers, against a strong head wind. Notwithstanding which it was judged she moved through the water at the rate of six miles an hour. Yesterday she came in from Albany in 28 hours with 60 passengers. Quere would it not be well if she could contract with the Post-Master General to carry the mail from this [city] to Albany?"—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 2, 1807. See also ibid., O 10 and N 19, 1807.

5 The common council adopts a plan and ordinance for regulating Art St., and appoints assessors.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 582, 588.

" A so-called "Fireproof warehouse" is the subject of an application of Robert Kinder & Co. to the common council, seeking permission to deposit hemp there.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 579.

12 "The commissioners appointed by the respective states of New-York [see Ap 3] and New Jersey [see N 2, 1806], to ascertain the boundary line between the two states, after being in session at Newark about nine days, have separated without coming to any determination but to disagree.—The commissioners of New Jersey presented a formal written claim to Staten-Island—to one half of the river at the Narrows—to Ellis's and Bedlow's Island, and to one half of the river as far as New-Jersey extends along its shores: This is quite as much of modesty as we could well expect from New-Jersey. It is hardly necessary to observe that our commissioners decided upon an adjournment when this trifling claim was offered."—People's Friend & Daily Adv., O 12, 1807.

" Alderman Roger Strong offers the following resolution in the common council: "Whereas the important discovery of applying the powers of Steam Engines to the purposes of navigation, has, through the ingenuity of Messrs Robert R. Livingston and Robert Fulton been brought to a degree of perfection that perfectly demonstrates its practicability, which discovery is regarded by the Corporation of this city as likely to be productive of very great utility, therefore

"Resolved that the Freedom of this city be presented to Mr Fulton, the said Robert R. Livingston, being already a Freeman, thereof, as a mark of the high esteem and consideration this Board entertain for the invention." It is referred to a committee "to investigate the subject."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 593. Fulton did not receive the freedom of the city until Aug. 10, 1812 (q. v.).

15 The common council appoints Aldermen Selah Strong, Nicholas Fish, Jacob Mott, John D. Miller, and Roger Strong as a standing committee to be known as "The Committee of Defence." They shall "devise, take and pursue such measures as shall appear to the said Committee most fit and best calculated to carry the said report [of Aug. 24, q. v.] . . . into effect: always submitting, however, the acts, propositions and doings of the said Committee to this Board, for its approbation or rejection." Oct. 15

The board further resolves that this committee "do forthwith procure or cause to be copied or made a correct and ample Map or Chart of the harbour and part of New York and its adjacent waters, islands and headlands, and delineate and lay down thereon a representation of the plan of defence contemplated by the said report; to the end that the same, together with a statement and calculation of the expences necessary to make and complete the works or system of defence, proposed by the said Report, to be also made by the said Committee, may be, under the direction of this Board laid before His Excellency the President for the use of Congress."

The board orders that the committee prepare "a respectful Memorial to Congress on the subject of protecting this city and harbour."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 595. See O 16 and 26.

16 The new committee of defence (see O 15) holds its first meeting and appoints John Pintard clerk. It resolves "that the Chairman [Selah Strong] cause a copy of a Chart of the Harbour of New York as surveyed by Capt Isaac Chauncey and Mr Charles S. Loss, City Surveyor, in 1798, to be made forthwith, together with the plan of defence contemplated in the Report of the Committee of the Corporation of the 24th of August last [q. v.], together with an estimate of the expences necessary to make and complete the works or system of Defence proposed in said Report." Alderman Roger Strong is requested "to draft a memorial to Congress in compliance with said Resolution."—From the manuscript "Minutes of the Committee of Defence," in the archives of the N. Y. H. S. See O 22.

19 The common council refers to the building committee a communication from Gouverneur Morris (see Ap 3) "on the subject of providing monumental Stones to designate the Streets to be laid out by the Commissioners."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 596. See D 14; also O 19, 1809.

" Charles Whitlaw offers to the common council various ornamental trees, at stated prices, to line the streets. The original memorial or letter is now preserved in metal file No. 35, city clerk's record-room; M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 596.

" The street com'r reports to the common council that William Ray, the contractor, has completed "the road at Manhattan Ville, from Bloomingdale to Hudson river."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 597. The board pays $150 balance due on this contract (see Ag 4).—Ibid., IV: 602.

" Expenses for 1807 for filling up the Collect Pond amount to $3,095.92.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 334, 351, 376, 442, 448, 499, 519, 552, 569, 574, 594, 601.

26 The committee of defence (see O 15) reports to the common council: "That Colonel Williams has met said Committee on the subject of changing the position for a Battery from Duane to Hubert Street, at the North river. That Col. Williams proposes that a cession be made of land under water, between the South line of Hubert Street and the North line of Laight Street, west of a line to be extended parallel to the permanent line as established by the Corporation, two hundred feet west of said permanent line, and from thence to extend into the North river so far as the lands under water of the Corporation extend: and that such cession be accepted in lieu and stead of the position contemplated at the foot of Duane Street: . . ." The report is approved.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 605–6. The original (MS.) report is preserved in metal file No. 34, city clerk's record-room. See S 14 for the Duane St. site. For map or sketch of the two sites, at Duane St. and at Hubert St., see ibid., IV: 566.

" The committee of defence also reports: "That the Committee have procured a Copy of the Map or Chart of the Harbour of New York made by Capt Chauncey and Mr Loss and have caused to be delineated thereon the system of defence contemplated in the Report of the Committee of this Board of the 24th of August last [q. v.]: and have also drafted a memorial to Congress, and a letter to the Secretary at War to accompany said Map or Chart, in pursuance of the Resolution of the 15th instant." The original minutes (MS.) of the committee of defence, in the archives of the N. Y. H. S. cover these transactions under date of Oct. 22. The original (MS.) report of Oct. 26 is preserved in metal file No. 34, city clerk's record-room.

The draft of the memorial to congress is entered in full in the 1807 Oct. 26 minutes. It asks that "ample appropriations" may be made, and "efficacious measures" taken for the protection and defence of the city and harbour.

The draft of a letter to Henry Dearborn, secretary of war, to be sent by the mayor, is also entered in full. It is to be accompanied by certain maps, reports, and other papers of the common council on the subject of fortifications and defence (see Jl 29, Ag 17 and 24), including "An Estimate of the expences necessary to complete the system of Defence contemplated in said Report" (of Aug. 24, q. v.); and "A Map or Chart of the harbour of New York together with a profile or section of said plan." The secretary of war is requested in the letter to present the documents to the president, "to be disposed of by him as he may judge proper."

The board orders that the memorial be engrossed and the city seal affixed, and that the mayor be requested to forward it to congress. The draft of the letter to the secretary of war is confirmed, after a "division."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 606–8, 615. The petition was read in the house of representatives on Nov. 9 (q. v.), and referred.—Annals of Cong., 10th cong., 1st sess., 817. For Dearborn's reply to the common council, see N 16.

" The common council passes a resolution that the street commissioner ascertain and report "the expediency of continuing the square called 'Hamilton Square' to the middle road, to be laid out when the lease of the ground expires."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 608. For later references to the subject, see ibid., IV: 621, 647, 658; V: 45, 110, which show that the plan was approved on certain conditions of exchange of property held by private owners. See also L. M. R. K., III: 970; and Mr 29, 1867.

" On application of Leonard Bleecker, treasurer of the Free School Society, the common council pays him $4,000, "the amount of the Excise money appropriated by the Legislature for the benefit of that Corporation."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 603.

30 Another article appears on "Defence by Obstruction," closing with the statement that "It should not at this moment be forgotten that England has a large naval force on our coast."—Am. Cit., O 30, 1807.

Nov. 2 The street commissioner informs the board "that during last Summer he attended several surveys with Mr Bridges and Mr A. Loss to ascertain the line of Broadway from the North of Leonard Street to the houses built by Mr Hattrick and Mr Thompson and after having consulted Mr Stillwell & Mr Charles Loss on the subject, it was agreed that the line on the West side of Broadway should be straight from the two points above mentioned and an accurate survey, under his inspection, was made accordingly, particularly designated [sic] the position of Buildings on that side of the Street." The regulation is ordered accordingly. It fixes "the true corner of Spring street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 610–11.

" Fire hydrants are successfully tried. "The Committee of the Fire Department to whom was referred a Communication from the Engineers [see My 18] Report That having examined and seen the operations of the Hydrant at the corner of William and Liberty Street, They are of opinion that very great benefit and use may be derived from such in the speedy extinguishment of Fires, far more than by any other source yet made use of. And therefore would recommend that a Committee be appointed to confer with the Manhattan Company on this subject, and whether the privilege can be obtained for the water on reasonable terms. Then Your Committee further recommend that at least three of those Hydrants be ordered by this Board to such parts of this city as are most destitute of a supply of water; and that the Chief Engineer have the management of procuring, placing and superintending the said Hydrants under the direction of the Committee of the Fire department." The report is confirmed and the same committee appointed to confer with the Manhattan Co.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 614–15.

" The city clerk, John Pintard, reports to the common council that, since the board's resolution of May 18, he has indexed the minutes from Aug. 4, 1800, the point where Mr. White left off, to this date.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 615. He is allowed the same pay as Mr. White (see Ag 4), $200.—Ibid., IV: 622.

5 Samuel Stillwell, on behalf of the Methodists of New York City, petitions Mayor Willett in regard to violences and insults committed by rowdies and crowds on Sunday against the Methodist churches, and especially the one in Second St.; a full description of such actions is given.—Original MS. in N. Y. H. S. (among Misc. MSS.).

9 Gurdon S. Mumford writes from the "House Representatives U. S.": "I received the Letter you did my Colleague & myself the honor of addressing us on the 29 ulti° covering a Memorial from the Corporation of the City of New York to the Senate & House Representatives of the United States, on the subject of providing a more effectual Defence for that Port and Harbor [see O 26]; I have availed myself of the first opportunity . . . to present this Day that memorial to this House, & have caused it to be referred to the Select Committee appointed on that part of the President's Message as relates to the Fortifying the Ports & Harbours of the United States, which Committee I am informed are progressing in their Report on the necessary appropriations for that purpose. . . ."—From the original letter, in metal file No. 34, city clerk's record-room. Nov. 9

Great Britain issues further orders in council extending her paper blockade to ports of France and her allies in all parts of the world.—Anderson, Const. & Docs., 389–92. See D 17. 11

The steamboat leaves Cortland Street dock with 40 or 50 passengers. "She had not proceeded further than opposite the State Prison, before one of the axeltrees broke off short, and she was obliged to return."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 14, 1807. The boat was virtually rebuilt during the winter of 1807–8 (see N 20, 1807, and Ap 25, 1808). 13

The mayor presents to the common council a letter, dated Nov. 12, from Henry Dearborn, secretary of war, in response to his of Nov. 3 (see O 26). Dearborn says that the mayor's letter and its enclosures have been considered by the president, who requests the secretary to say "that there will be no indisposition on his part to the extension of the means of defence for the harbor and City of New York, as contemplated by the Corporation whenever a suitable cession of the bed of the harbor shall be made by the Legislature of the State, and the necessary funds are provided by Congress." Dearborn has written to Gov. Tompkins on the subject, indicating the expediency of such act of the legislature as the case requires.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 634–35. 16

The heirs of Anthony Lispenard having petitioned the common council for water lots opposite their property at the foot of Canal St. on the Hudson River, the board establishes a policy for making such grants in this locality.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 627–28. "

The common council appoints Aldermen Fish, Miller, and Van Zandt a committee to confer with Gov. Tompkins on the selection of "a site for erecting a Powder Magazine."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 635. See Je 15. "

The city cedes to the United States "Part of Old Potter's field as a site for a public Arsenal, and on that condition, otherwise to revert to the Corporation." The triangular piece of ground, in front of this, at the junction of the Post and Bloomingdale Roads, "is conditioned to be left open as a public Square, forever."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 580, 641. See Ag 30. See also Map of the Farms (1819–20), Pl. 86, Vol. III, showing ground plan of the arsenal or magazine afterwards constructed here. It later was developed into Madison Square.—L. M. R. K., III: 970. 17

The city also cedes to the United States the "Soil under Water at the Battery, for the purpose of Fortifications."—Ibid., IV: 641. It was here that the south-west battery (the present Aquarium) was afterwards erected.—See Ja 5, S 30, 1807; O 9, 1808; D 17, 1811. See also L. M. R. K., III: 983; and 13th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1908), 86–90.

The city further cedes to the United States the "Soil under water in Hudson river between Hubert and Laight Streets, for the same purpose."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 641. See O 26. On this site, the "North Battery" or "Red Fort" was afterwards erected. See O 9, 1808; D 17, 1811; L. M. R. K., III: 945.

All of these grants were in accordance with the resolutions of the common council of Jan. 5, 1807 (q. v.); Sept. 14, 1807 (q. v.); and Oct. 26, 1807 (q. v.).

On this and the following day, the annual election for charter officers was held, and 13 Republicans and 5 Federalists were elected to the common council.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 641–43; Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 456. The Republicans having gained a majority, dismissals of Federalists from office were the "order of the day." See, e.g., Ja 18, 1808. "

Robert Fulton in a letter to Chancellor Livingston gives his plans for enlarging the steamboat. He says: "It is now necessary to consider how to put our first boat in a complete state for 8 or 10 years—and when I reflect that the present one is so weak that she must have additional knees and timbers, new side timbers, deck 20

1807 Nov. 20 beams and deck, new windows and cabins altered, that she perhaps must be sheathed, her boiler taken out and a new one put in, her axels forged and Iron work strengthened with all this work the saving of the present hull is little consequence particularly as many of her Knees Bolts timbers and planks could enter into the construction of a new boat, my present opinion therefore is that we should build a new hull her knees and floor timbers to be of oak her bottom planks of 2 Inch oak her side planks two Inch oak for 3 feet high She to be 16 feet wide 150 feet long this will make her near twice as Stiff as at present and enable us to carry a much greater quantity of sail. . . ."—Sutcliffe, Robert Fulton and the 'Clermont,' 259–64, citing original letter in N. Y. H. S. It was finally determined to lengthen and alter the original hull, and the work was completed by April 25, 1808 (q. v.).

24 John Lambert, an English visitor, arrives in New York. He gives the following interesting description of the city: "About ten o'clock at night we arrived at New York; it was very dark, and as we sailed by the town, lighted lamps and windows sparkled everywhere, amidst the houses, in the streets, and along the water-side. The wharfs were crowded with shipping, whose tall masts mingled with the buildings, and together with the spires and cupolas of the churches, gave the city an appearance of magnificence, which the gloomy obscurity of the night served to increase. . . .

"The next morning we left the sloop, and took up our abode with a Quaker lady in Maiden-lane, to whom we were introduced by Mr. Lyman. Her boarders consisted mostly of young merchants of her own family, which was very respectable, and nearly related to some of the principal people in New York. . . .

"The day after our arrival, being the 25th of November, was the anniversary of the evacuation of New York by the British troops at the peace of 1783. The militia, or rather the volunteer corps, assembled from different parts of the city on the grand battery by the water-side, so called from a fort having been formerly built on the spot, though at present it is nothing more than a lawn for the recreation of the inhabitants, and for the purpose of military parade. The troops did not amount to 600, and were gaudily dressed in a variety of uniforms, every ward in the city having a different one: some of them with helmets appeared better suited to the theatre than the field. The general of the militia and his staff were dressed in the national uniform of blue, with buff facings. They also wore large gold epaulets and feathers, which altogether had a very showy appearance. Some gunboats were stationed off the battery, and fired several salutes in honour of the day, and the troops paraded through the streets leading to the water-side; but the crowd being very great, I did not think the ceremony worth the trouble of following them, and therefore returned home. I was afterwards told that they went through the forms practised on taking possession of the city, manœuvring and firing feux de joie, &c. as occurred on the evacuation of New York. One of the corps consisted wholly of Irishmen, dressed in light green jackets, white pantaloons, and helmets.

"New York is the first city of the United States for wealth, commerce, and population; as it also is the finest and most agreeable for its situation and buildings. It has neither the narrow and confined irregularity of Boston, nor the monotonous regularity of Philadelphia, but a happy medium between both. When the intended improvements are completed, it will be a very elegant and commodious town, and worthy of becoming the capital of the United States, for it seems that Washington is by no means calculated for a metropolitan city. New York has rapidly improved within the last twenty years; and land which then sold in that city for fifty dollars is now worth 1,500.

"The Broadway and Bowery Road are the two finest avenues in the city, and nearly of the same width as Oxford street in London. . . . It [Broadway] is upwards of two miles in length, though the pavement does not extend above a mile and a quarter: the remainder of the road consists of straggling houses, which are the commencement of new streets already planned out. The Bowery Road commences from Chatham-street, which branches off from the Broadway to the right, by the side of the Park. After proceeding about a mile and a half it joins the Broadway, and terminates the plan which is intended to be carried into effect for the enlargement of the city. Much of the intermediate spaces between these large streets, and from thence to the Hudson and East rivers, is yet unbuilt upon, or consists only of unfinished streets and detached buildings. [See Ap 3, 1807; 1808; Ap 1, 1811.]

"The houses in the Broadway are lofty and well built. They are constructed in the English style, and differ but little from those of London at the west end of the town; except that they are universally built of red brick. In the vicinity of the Battery, and for some distance up the Broadway, they are nearly all private houses, and occupied by the principal merchants and gentry of New York; after which the Broadway is lined with large commodious shops of every description, well stocked with European and India goods, and exhibiting as splendid and varied a show in their windows as can be met with in London. There are several extensive book stores, print-shops, music shops, jewellers, and silversmiths; hatters, linen-drapers, milliners, pastry-cooks, coach-makers, hotels, and coffee-houses. The street is well paved, and the foot-paths are chiefly bricked. In Robinson-street the pavement before one of the houses, and the steps of the door, are composed entirely of marble. Nov. 24

"The City Hotel is the most extensive building of that description in New York; and nearly resembles, in size and style of architecture, the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street. The ground-floor of the hotel at New-York is, however, converted into shops, which have a very handsome appearance in the Broadway. Mechanic Hall is another large hotel at the corner of Robinson-street, in the Broadway. It was erected by the society of mechanics and tradesmen, who associated themselves for charitable purposes, under an act of the legislature in 1792. There are three churches in the Broadway: one of them called Grace Church, is a plain brick building, recently erected; the other two are St. Paul's and Trinity; both handsome structures, built with an intermixture of white and brown stone. The adjoining churchyards, which occupy a large space of ground, railed in from the street, and crowded with tombstones, are far from being agreeable spectacles in such a populous city. At the commencement of the Broadway, near the battery, stands the old Government-house, now converted into offices for the customs. Before it is a small lawn railed in, and in the centre is a stone pedestal, upon which formerly stood a leaden statue of George the Third. In the revolutionary war it was pulled down by the populace, and made into bullets.

"The City Hall, where the courts of justice are held, is situated in Wall-street, leading from the coffee-house slip by the water side into the Broadway. It is an old heavy building, and very inadequate to the present population and wealth of New York. A Court-house on a larger scale, and more worthy of the improved state of the city, is now building at the end of the Park, between the Broadway and Chatham-street, in a style of magnificence unequalled in many of the larger cities of Europe. The exterior consists wholly of fine marble, ornamented in a very neat and elegant style of architecture; and the whole is to be surmounted by a beautiful dome, which, when finished, will form a noble ornament to that part of the town, in which are also situated the Theatre, Mechanic Hall, and some of the best private houses in New York. The Park, though not remarkable for its size, is, however, of service, by displaying the surrounding buildings to greater advantage; and is also a relief to the confined appearance of the streets in general. It consists of about four acres planted with elms, planes, willows, and catalpas; and the surrounding foot-walk is encompassed by rows of poplars: the whole is inclosed by a wooden paling. Neither the Park nor the Battery is very much resorted to by the fashionable citizens of New York, as they have become too common. The genteel lounge is in the Broadway, from eleven to three o'clock, during which time it is as much crowded as the Bond-street of London: and the carriages, though not so numerous, are driven to and fro with as much velocity. The foot paths are planted with poplars, and afford an agreeable shade from the sun in summer. . . .

"The Theatre is on the south-east side of the Park, and is a large commodious building. The outside is in an unfinished state; but the interior is handsomely decorated, and fitted up in as good style as the London theatres, upon a scale suitable to the population of the city. It contains a large coffee-room, and good sized lobbies, and is reckoned to hold about 1,200 persons. The scenes are well painted and numerous; and the machinery, dresses, and decorations, are elegant, and appropriate to the performances, which consist of all the new pieces that come out on the London boards, and several of Shakspeare's best plays. The only fault is, that they are too much curtailed, by which they often lose their effect; and the performances are sometimes over by half past ten, though they do not begin at an earlier hour than in London. . . . The 1807 Nov. 24 Theatre has been built about ten years, and of course embraces every modern improvement. . . .

"New York has its Vauxhall and Ranelagh; but they are poor imitations of those near London. They are, however, pleasant places of recreation for the inhabitants. The Vauxhall garden is situated in the Bowery Road about two miles from the City Hall. It is a neat plantation, with gravel walks adorned with shrubs, trees, busts, and statues. In the centre is a large equestrian statue of General Washington. Light musical pieces, interludes, &c. are performed in a small theatre situate in one corner of the gardens: the audience sit in what are called the pit and boxes, in the open air. The orchestra is built among the trees, and a large apparatus is constructed for the display of fireworks. The theatrical corps of New York is chiefly engaged at Vauxhall during summer. The Ranelagh is a large hotel and garden, generally known by the name of Mount Pitt, situated by the water side, and commanding some extensive and beautiful views of the city and its environs.

"A great portion of the city, between the Broadway and the East river is very irregularly built; being the oldest part of the town, and of course less capable of those improvements which distinguish the more recent buildings. Nevertheless, it is the chief seat of business, and contains several spacious streets crowded with shops, stores, and warehouses of every description. The water side is lined with shipping which lie along the wharfs or in the small docks called slips, of which there are upwards of twelve towards the East river, besides numerous piers. The wharfs are large and commodious, and the warehouses, which are nearly all new buildings, are lofty and substantial. The merchants, ship-brokers, &c. have their offices in front on the ground floor of these warehouses. These ranges of buildings and wharfs extend from the Grand Battery, on both sides the town, up the Hudson and East rivers, and encompass the houses with shipping, whose forest of masts gives a stranger a lively idea of the immense trade which this city carries on with every part of the globe. New York appears to him the Tyre of the New World."

"When I arrived at New York in November, the port was filled with shipping and the wharfs were crowded with commodities of every description. Bales of cotton, wool, and merchandize; barrels of pot-ash, rice, flour, and salt provisions; hogsheads of sugar, chests of tea, puncheons of rum, and pipes of wine; boxes, cases, packs and packages of all sizes and denominations, were strewed upon the wharfs and landing-places, or upon the decks of the shipping. All was noise and bustle. The carters were driving in every direction; and the sailors and labourers upon the wharfs, and on board the vessels, were moving their ponderous burthens from place to place. The merchants and their clerks were busily engaged in their counting-houses, or upon the piers. The Tontine coffee-house was filled with underwriters, brokers, merchants, traders, and politicians; selling, purchasing, trafficking, or insuring; some reading, others eagerly inquiring the news. The steps and balcony of the coffee-house were crowded with people bidding, or listening to the several auctioneers, who had elevated themselves upon a hogshead of sugar, a puncheon of rum, or a bale of cotton. . . . The coffee-house slip, and the corners of Wall and Pearl-streets, were jammed up with carts, drays, and wheel-barrows; horses and men were huddled promiscuously together, leaving little or no room for passengers to pass. Such was the appearance of this part of the town when I arrived. Every thing was in motion; all was life, bustle and activity. The people were scampering in all directions to trade with each other, and to ship off their purchases for the European, Asian, African, and West Indian markets. Every thought, word, look, and action of the multitude seemed to be absorbed by commerce; the welkin rang with its busy hum, and all were eager in the pursuit of its riches.

"But on my return to New York the following April [1808], what a contrast was presented to my view! and how shall I describe the melancholy dejection that was painted upon the countenances of the people, who seemed to have taken leave of all their former gaiety and cheerfulness? The coffee-house slip, the wharfs and quays along South-street, presented no longer the bustle and activity that had prevailed there five months before. The port, indeed, was full of shipping; but they were dismantled and laid up. Their decks were cleared, their hatches fastened down, and scarcely a sailor was to be found on board. Not a box, bale, cask, barrel, or package, was to be seen upon the wharfs. Many of the counting houses were shut up, or advertised to be let; and the few solitary merchants, clerks, porters, and labourers, that were to be seen, were walking about with their hands in their pockets. Instead of sixty or a hundred carts that used to stand in the street for hire, scarcely a dozen appeared, and they were unemployed; a few coasting sloops, and schooners, which were clearing out for some of the ports in the United States, were all that remained of that immense business which was carried on a few months before. The coffee-house was almost empty . . . In fact, every thing presented a melancholy appearance. The streets near the water-side were almost deserted, the grass had begun to grow upon the wharfs, and the minds of the people were tortured by the vague and idle rumors that were set afloat upon the arrival of every letter from England or from the seat of government. . . . Nov. 24

"New York contains thirty-three places of worship, viz. nine episcopal churches, three Dutch churches, one French church, one Calvinist, one German Lutheran, one English Lutheran, three Baptist meetings, three Methodist meetings, one Moravian, six Presbyterian, one Independent, two Quakers', and one Jews' synagogue.

"Besides the public buildings which I have mentioned, there are numerous banks, insurance companies, commercial and charitable institutions, and literary establishments, &c. The new State prison is an establishment worthy of imitation in England. . . . This building is situated at Greenwich, about two miles from the City Hall, on the shore of the Hudson river. The space inclosed by the wall is about four acres, and the prison is governed by seven inspectors appointed by the State Council. . . .

"Of late years a board of health has been established at New York, under an act of the legislature, and a variety of regulations are enjoined, for the purpose of preventing the introduction of malignant fevers. A station is also assigned on Staten Island, where vessels perform quarantine. . . .

"There are five banks, and nine insurance companies: one of the latter is a branch of the Phœnix company of London. There is a chamber of commerce in New York, which has for its object the promotion and regulation of mercantile concerns; and is also a charitable institution for the support of the widows and children of its members. . . .

"The commerce of New York, before the embargo, was in a high state of prosperity and progressive improvement. The merchants traded with almost every part of the world. . . .The amount of tonnage belonging to the port of New York in 1806 was 183,671 tons. And the number of vessels in the harbour on the 25th of December 1807, when the embargo took place, was 537. The moneys collected in New York for the national treasury, on the imports and tonnage, have for several years amounted to one-fourth of the public revenue. In 1806 the sum collected was 6,500,-000 dollars, which after deducting the draw-backs left a nett revenue of 4,500,000 dollars; which was paid into the treasury of the United States as the proceeds of one year. In the year 1808, the whole of this immense sum had vanished! . . .

"Every day, except Sunday, is a market-day in New York. Meat is cut up and sold by the joint or in pieces, by the licensed butchers only, their agents, or servants. Each of these must sell at his own stall, and conclude his sales by one o'clock in the afternoon, between the 1st of May and the 1st of November, and two between the 1st of November and the 1st of May. . . . The manufactures of America are yet in an infant state; but in New York there are several excellent cabinet-makers, coach-makers, &c. who not only supply the country with household furniture and carriages, but also export very largely to the West Indies, and to foreign possessions on the continent of America. Their workmanship would be considered elegant and modern in London; and they have the advantage of procuring mahogany and other wood much cheaper than we. . . .

"There are thirty-one benevolent institutions in New York. The names of them are as follow: Tammany Society, Free School, Provident Society, Mutual Benefit Society, Benevolent Society, Albion Benevolent Society, Ladies' Society for the relief of poor widows with small children, Fire Department, New York Manufacturing Society, Society of Merchants and Tradesmen, the Dispensary, Lying-in Hospital, Sailor's Snug Harbour, Marine Society, Manumission Society, Kine-pock Institution, City Hospital, Alms House, House Carpenter's Society, Bellvue Hospital, Marine Hospital at Staten Island, Humane Society, Masonic Society containing thirteen lodges, German Society, Society of 1807 Nov. 24 Unitas Fratrum, First Protestant Episcopal Charity School, St. George's Society, St. Patrick's Society, St. Andrew's Society, the New England Society, the Cincinnati. Most of these institutions are mere benefit societies, resembling those which are so numerous in England . . .

"There are upwards of twenty news-papers published in New York, nearly half of which are daily papers; besides several weekly and monthly magazines or essays. . . . The booksellers and printers of New York are numerous, and in general men of property. Some of them have published very splendid editions of the Bible; and it was not a little gratifying to the American patriot to be told, that the paper, printing, engraving, and binding, were all of American manufacture. For several years past a literary fair has been held alternately at New York and Philadelphia. This annual meeting of booksellers has tended greatly to facilitate intercourse with each other, to circulate books throughout the United States, and to encourage and support the arts of printing and paper-making.

"A public library is established at New York, which consists of about ten thousand volumes, many of them rare and valuable books. The building which contains them is situated in Nassau-street, and the trustees are incorporated by an act of the legislature. There are also three or four public reading-rooms, and circulating libraries, which are supported by some of the principal booksellers, from the annual subscriptions of the inhabitants. There is a museum of natural curiosities in New York, but it contains nothing worthy of particular notice.

"It does not appear that the malignant or yellow fever made very great ravages among the inhabitants in 1805, the last time of its appearance in New York; for the deaths very little exceeded the preceding and subsequent years.

"In 1804 the deaths were 2,064

"Of the above number fifty-one were suicides; and according to the statement of Dr. Mitchill upwards of one-third of the deaths are occasioned by consumption and debility. . . .

"The malignant or yellow fever generally commences in the confined parts of the town, near the water-side, in the month of August or September. . . . As soon as this dreadful scourge makes its appearance in New York, the inhabitants shut up their shops, and fly from their houses into the country. Those who cannot go far, on account of business, remove to Greenwich, a small village situate on the border of the Hudson river, about two or three miles from town. Here the merchants and others have their offices, and carry on their concerns with little danger from the fever, which does not seem to be contagious beyond a certain distance. The banks and other public offices also remove their business to this place; and markets are regularly established for the supply of the inhabitants. Very few are left in the confined parts of the town except the poorer classes, and the negroes. The latter not being affected by the fever, are of great service at that dreadful crisis . . . Upwards of 26,000 people removed from the interior parts of the city, and from the streets near the water side, in 1805. . . .

". . . it appears that the population of New York has, in a period of twenty years from 1786 to 1805, more than tripled itself. . . . At this day it is equal to the whole number of inhabitants in the State of New York fifty years ago.

"If an estimate can be formed of the salubrity of the climate, and the healthiness of the inhabitants of a town, by the number of deaths, London must be reckoned to have the advantage of New York in these respects. The amount of deaths in the former city is about a fiftieth part of its population, while in New York it is at least one thirtieth; the number of deaths ranging between 2,500 and 3,000 per annum. I am, however, more inclined to attribute this great mortality to improper diet and mode of living than the insalubrity of the climate. The church-yards and vaults are also situate in the heart of the town, and crowded with the dead. If they are not prejudicial to the health of the people, they are at least very unsightly exhibitions. One would think there was a scarcity of land in America, by seeing such large pieces of ground in one of the finest streets of New York occupied by the dead. But even if no noxious effluvia were to arise . . . still the continual view of such a crowd of white and brown tomb-stones and monuments which is exhibited in the Broadway, must at the sickly season of the year tend very much to depress the spirits, when they should rather be cheered and enlivened. . . . There is a large burying-ground a short distance out of town; but the cemeteries in the city are still used at certain periods of the year. Nov. 24

"They bury their dead within twenty-four hours; a custom probably induced by the heat of the climate during the summer months. . . .

"Funerals at New York . . . are attended by a numerous assemblage of the friends and acquaintances of the deceased, who are invited by advertisements in the newspapers to attend their departed friend to the grave. On such occasions I have seen upwards of five hundred people, and the larger the number the more the deceased is supposed to be respected and valued. . . . The people attend for the most part in their ordinary dress. . . . The clergyman, physician, and chief mourners, wear white scarfs, which it is also the custom to wear on the following Sunday. . . .

"The Society of New York consists of three distinct classes. The first is composed of the constituted authorities and government officers; divines, lawyers, and physicians of eminence; the principal merchants and people of independent property. The second comprises the small merchants, retail dealers, clerks, subordinate officers of the government, and members of the three professions. The third consists of the inferior orders of the people. The first of these associate together in a style of elegance and splendour little inferior to Europeans. Their houses are furnished with every thing that is useful, agreeable, or ornamental; and many of them are fitted up in the tasteful magnificence of modern style. The dress of the gentlemen is plain, elegant, and fashionable, and corresponds in every respect with the English costume. The ladies in general seem more partial to the light, various, and dashing drapery of the Parisian belles, than to the elegant and becoming attire of our London beauties, who improve upon the French fashions. . . .

"The young ladies of New York are in general handsome, and almost universally fine genteel figures. . . . Fair complexions, regular features, and fine forms, seem to be the prevailing characteristics of the American fair sex. . . .

"Much has . . . been said of the deficiency of the polite and liberal accomplishments among both sexes in the United States. Whatever truth there may have formerly been in this statement, I do not think there is any foundation for it at present, at least in New York, where there appears to be a great thirst after knowledge. The riches that have flowed into that city, for the last twenty years, have brought with them a taste for the refinements of polished society, and though the inhabitants cannot yet boast of having reached the standard of European perfection, they are not wanting in the solid and rational parts of education; nor in many of those accomplishments which ornament and embellish private life. It has become the fashion in New York to attend lectures on moral philosophy, chemistry, mineralogy, botany, mechanics, &c.; and the ladies in particular have made considerable progress in those studies. . . . The majority of the merchants, however, still continue more partial to the rule of three, than a dissertation upon oxygen or metaphysics. . . . A grammar-school has recently been instituted at New York, for the instruction of youth, upon a similar plan to the great public schools in England. . . .

"Many of the young men . . . whose minds have not been wholly absorbed by pounds, shillings, and pence, have shown that they possess literary qualifications and talents, that would, if their time and fortune permitted, rank them among some of the distinguished authors of Europe. The most prominent of their late productions is the Salmagundi, published in monthly essays at New York. This little work has been deservedly a great favourite with the public, and bids fair to be handed down with honour to posterity. . . .

"Dancing is an amusement that the New York ladies are passionately fond of, and they are said to excel those of every other city in the Union. I visited the City Assembly, which is held at the City Hotel in the Broadway, and considered as the best in New York. It was the first night of the season, and there were not more than one hundred and fifty persons present. . . . The subscription is two dollars and a half for each night, and includes tea, coffee, and a cold collation. None but the first class of society can become subscribers to this assembly. Another has, however, been recently established, in which the genteel part of the second class are admitted, who were shut out from the City Assembly. . . .

1807 Nov. 24 "The style of living in New York is fashionable and splendid; many of the principal merchants and people of property have elegant equipages, and those who have none of their own may be accommodated with handsome carriages and horses at the livery stables; for there are no coach stands. The winter is passed in a round of entertainments and amusements; at the theatre, public assemblies, philosophical and experimental lectures, concerts, balls, tea- and card-parties, cariole excursions out of town, &c. . . . Parties to dinner and dances are frequently made in the winter season when the snow is on the ground. They proceed in carioles a few miles out of town to some hotel or tavern, where the entertainment is kept up to a late hour, and the parties return home by torch-light.

"Marriages are conducted in the most splendid style, and form an important part of the winter's entertainments. . . .

"The inhabitants of New York are not remarkable for early rising, and little business seems to be done before nine or ten o'clock. Most of the merchants and people in business dine about two o'clock; others who are less engaged, about three: but four o'clock is usually the fashionable hour for dining. The gentlemen are partial to the bottle, but not to excess. . . . The servants are mostly negroes or mulattoes, some free, and others slaves: but there are many white servants of both sexes; and they who expect to see a pure republican equality existing in America will find themselves greatly deceived.

"The embargo had a considerable effect upon the amusements of the people, and rendered the town gloomy and melancholy.

"New York abounds with religious sects of various denominations; but the episcopalians and presbyterians seem to be the most numerous, at least they have more places of worship than any of the others. The quakers form but a small community in this city, and even that is decreasing; for the young people do not appear much inclined to follow up the strict ceremonials of their parents in point of dress and manners. . . .

"There are several rich and respectable families of Jews in New York; and as they have equal rights with every other citizen in the United States, they suffer under no invidious distinctions. . . .

"There are about 4,000 negroes and people of colour in New York, 1,700 of whom are slaves. These people are mostly of the Methodist persuasion, and have a chapel or two of their own with preachers of their colour. . . .

"Christmas-day and other festivals are observed much in the same manner as in England; but in consequence of there being no established form of worship, as with us, the religious observance of those days is only recommended to the people, by a number of the clergy of different denominations, who assemble together and communicate their wishes to the common council, who make them known to the public. . . .

"New Year's Day is the most important of the whole year. . . . Many of the shops are shut up; and the presbyterians, and a few other religious dissenters, attend public worship. The mayor of the city, and others of the constituted authorities, advertise, two or three days before, that they will reciprocate the compliments of the season with the inhabitants at their house on New Year's Day. In consequence of this invitation, I accompanied a gentleman to the mayor's house in Water-street. . . . The room was crowded, and the gentlemen were coming in, going out, and taking refreshments at a large table spread out with cakes, wine, and punch. Having paid our respects to his worship, wished him the compliments of the season, a happy new year, and drank a glass of excellent punch, we took our leave. . . . New York, like the other large cities of the union, is a prey to the violent spirit of the two parties, who are known under the titles of federalists and democrats. . . . It was the violent spirit of party that occasioned the duel between General Hamilton and Colonel Burr. Hamilton fell regretted by all parties, and was particularly deplored by the citizens of New York, among whom he resided. Burr escaped, only to become odious in the sight of the whole nation. . . ."—Lambert, Travels through Canada and the United States of North America, in the years 1806, 1807, & 1808, II: 49–113; see also Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 847 et seq.

Dec. — Col. Jonathan Williams writes from Fort Columbus to Gov. Tompkins: "Sir, Previously to my quitting the works at this post for the Winter season, I conceived it to be my duty to lay before Your Excellency the necessary information relative to my operations in this harbour generally, in order that the requested legislative cessions may be fully commensurate with the objects proposed. Dec. —

"By the enclosed copy of my instructions, No. 1, you will perceive that my duties have been directed to the following points: 1st. Governor's Island, 2nd Bedlow's Island, 3rd, Ellis's Island, 4th, A place of deposit for military stores, near the battery of N. York, 5th Positions on the north river at the battery, & near Rhinelanders, 6th A Magazine, laboratory, &c. at Potter's field. The jurisdiction of the three first named points have been already ceded to the United States by the State of New York, under an act of the legislature passed 15th Feby. 1800 [q.v.], . . . it is not necessary therefore to trouble you with any observations relative to them as far as relates to jurisdiction.

"Ellis's island is private property, in part possessed by the United States, and in part by the heirs of the late Mr. Ellis; but even the site of the old battery has not been regularly ceded by the proprietor, although fully agreed to by him: the deed was prepared by consent of parties, but Mr. Ellis died before it was executed; the possession therefore is not legally confirmed. It seems that Mr. Ellis's property in this Island did not extend below high water mark, since I find by the minutes of the corporation that the land between low and high water mark has been ceded by that body to the state.

"The island above high water mark is doubtless the private property of the heirs of Mr. Ellis's estate; and I should, according to my instructions, have purchased it at any reasonable rate, if it had been possible to obtain a legal title. . . .

"I have purchased of Mr James W. Lent, (the lessee of the lot in the rear of the mansion, now used as a Custom House) the buildings which have been erected by him, and a transfer of his lease has been made with your approbation. . . .

"It being the intention of the government to build a case-mated tower battery, with several tiers of heavy metal at the point of the old battery, beyond the present flag staff, and the construction of this battery leaving only space for the military stores in actual service, it became necessary to have a deposit as near to it as possible, for this reason the purchase of Mr Lent's building was made. . . .

"The positions on the North river near the battery and near Laight Street (the latter being taken in lieu of the one proposed at Rheinlanders [wharf]) have been granted by the corporation to the extent of their rights [see N 17]: . . .

"The grant of Potter's-field has also been made by the corporation, and nothing remains for the State to do, except the cession of jurisdiction, which will doubtless be so formed as to place all the points in question, in one and the same predicament with these already ceded to the United States. . . .

"Hitherto I have confined myself to the plan of interior defence; but as my orders imply an intention to make additions 'farther in advance,' I have thought it might be agreeable to you, to have copies of my original report to the Secretary at War, when I surveyed part of this harbor in 1805. . . .

". . . I hope it will not be thought improper in me, to remark, that, as a defence, farther in advance, is evidently contemplated, it might much accelerate such objects, if the commissioners, to be appointed, were empowered to make other cessions on Staten and Long Island, and in the bed of the harbour between them, as the nature of the case may require."—Hastings, Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, II: 29–30; N. Y. Com. Adv., F 13, 1808.

John Pintard, city inspector, reports, in a tabulated statement, a census of the electors of the city and county of New York, and of the total number of inhabitants, which is 83,530, both free and slave, male and female. The Seventh Ward has the largest population, 19,487. The report includes the following table of population at different periods: 1

Periods	Inhabitants
1756	15,000
1771	21,863
1786	23,614
1791	33,131
1801	60,489
1805	75,770
1807	83,530

The following comments are added: "By which it appears,

1807 Dec. 1 that our population has more than tripled from 1786 to 1805, a period of twenty years.

"Should the progress of increase continue at the rate of five per cent. per annum, the population of this city in 1855 will amount to 705,650, a rate exceeding the doubling of our number every twenty years, during the period of a century."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 649–52. Cf. 24, 1806.

5 In accordance with the senate resolution of March 6 (q. v.), John Stevens begins to publish in the newspapers a copy of the senate proceedings and the petition he intends to present to the next legislature (see F 2, 1808). The petition declares that Stevens "hath for some years past bestowed much attention on the subject of constructing bridges across the North and East rivers, that the plan of erecting floating bridges laid before the committee of the senate during the last sitting of the legislature, was predicated upon a presumption that permanent bridges across these rivers would require an expenditure of money far beyond any prospect of gain, at least for some years to come. . . . That your petitioner is now well satisfied that permanent bridges across said rivers may be so constructed as to admit of free passages for vessels of any burthen under the arches of the same. And that the capital necessary for erecting them will be so moderate as that the tolls to be collected thereon will probably neat to the stockholders seven or eight per cent. per annum at this present time. Your petitioner therefore respectfully prays that the legislature of this state will be pleased to grant him leave to present a bill for incorporating a company for the purpose of carrying into effect the objects above stated."—Am. Cit., D 5, 1807; Pub. Adv., D 7, 1807. Stevens's project met with much adverse criticism (see Ja 16, 27, 28, and F 6).

" Marble has been discovered at Sing Sing.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., D 5, 1807. Stone from Sing Sing, cut by the convicts, was afterwards used in building construction in New York.

14 The common council appoints a new committee of defence for the ensuing year, with Alderman Nicholas Fish, chairman.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 662.

" The mayor presents to the common council a letter of Dec. 7 received from U. S. Senator Samuel L. Mitchill, enclosing "a further Report [dated D 3, and printed] of the Committee of the Senate relating to the Defence of the Sea ports and harbours of the United States." It is referred to committee of defence, and the report directed to be published.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 666. The original letter and printed report are in metal file No. 34, city clerk's record-room.

There is referred to the same committee a letter, addressed to the mayor, "dated Philad[a] the 7th inst. signed a Pilgrim, and inclosing a Pamphlet under the same signature on 'an improved mode of Defence against the Bucaneers of the Ocean.'"—Ibid., IV: 666.

" The common council resolves "that the Road Committee be instructed to wait on the Commissioners appointed to lay out the city (see Ap 3), and represent the great necessity of opening a Street on the East river leading to Bellevue."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 671. Gouverneur Morris, one of the commissioners, informed the committee on Dec. 28 that, when the surveys were completed, by May or June next, one of the first objects of the commissioners would be "to open a more direct communication from the East part of the town to Bellevue."—Ibid., IV: 683. See S 19, 1808.

" In a petition to the common council, Peter Williams, chairman of a committee of arrangements, "in behalf of the Africans and descendants of Africans," says: "With pleasure we learn, that by an act of the congress of the United States [see Mr 2], on the first day of January Next, the Importation of slaves, within the jurisdiction of the same, will be Totally suspended. It has been the impetuous and remorseless monster, By the gratification of whose insatiate appetite incalculable numbers Of our fellow men have been the unhappy victims. We therefore, The people of colour, conceive it an indespensible duty, compatible too With the distaste of humiliation and gratitude to return to the Almighty Dispenser of all things, & to our worthy benefactors our sincere acknowledgement, and consider it the most expressive method of commemorating the Day with general thanksgiving. Purposing to preserve in all our conduct The strictest decorum and veneration for the laws of the land, we Humbly solicit your protection from the probable anoyances of a tumultuous multitude, by granting us the privilege of employing a sufficient Number of officers for the preservation of peace."—From the original petition (MS.), in metal file No. 34, city clerk's record-room. Granted.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 663. See D 28. Dec. 14

" The common council refers to a committee a memorial of Stephen Stillwell, "respecting the discovery of a Coal mine, a Specimen of which was exhibited on the Fire in the Common Council Chamber, on his land situate in the town of Woodstock, County of Ulster in this State; requesting the patronage of the Corporation to enable him to explore the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 663–64. The committee report, on Dec. 21, contemplated the practicability of the city's taking shares in the enterprise of developing the mine. The report closes thus:

". . . it is certainly an object of the highest consequence and a duty imposed on this Board to encourage every plausible plan that may tend to produce a supply of an Article so essentially necessary for the comfort and existence of the citizens of this rapidly encreasing metropolis, as mineral Coal; especially when the resource can be found within the bosom of our own State, whereby our citizens will be relieved from the uncertain dependence on foreign supplies.

"The Augmentation of our population exceeds, annually, the growth of Forests for Fuel, and unless additional resources be explored, this essential article of existence must bear extremely oppressive, as indeed it does at present, on the poorer classes of Society." The board ordered that the report lie over for future consideration.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 675–76.

" Assessors for regulating Art St. report, among other things, that they are informed that "Bleecker Street was dug out at the expence of the public for the same purpose as Art Street to give vent to the water from Broadway." In the matter of cession of land for streets, and assessment for opening, the two streets differ. This the street commissioner explains.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 666–68. Regarding assessments for digging out Art St., see, further, ibid., IV: 684, 707–8.

" A memorial of the Tammany Society "proposing to lease in perpetuity or on such other terms as may appear suitable, the angle of ground adjoining the Arsenal, and lying between Chatham Street and the Street proposed to be laid out thro' the ground as a continuation of Cross street" is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 664.

" The common council receives and refers to the "Committee on Applications for Offices" numerous applications and petitions for offices in the city government.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 665–66, 675. For the creation of this standing committee, see ibid., IV: 662; cf. D 24, 1804.

21 Gurdon S. Mumford wrote from the house of representatives to Alderman Van Zandt on Dec. 23, that, on "Monday night [Dec. 21] about half past 11 o'clock After we had the most animated Debate I ever experienced, the Question for a general Embargo was taken 82 for, 44 against it, in my opinion we had no other alternative left, the Hostility of the Land & Sea Leviathan are much alike, let us see what effect this measure will have upon them, if they are determined we shall not remain in Peace, the American People will see we have done every thing in our power with honor to preserve it, and being thus convinced, they no doubt will display their wonted Patriotism in Defence of their Country's violated rights in case it should become necessary."—Wynant Van Zandt Papers (MS.). The Embargo Act was passed on Dec. 22 (q. v.).

" The common council resolves "that the Street now called Brannon Street, beginning at Thompson Street be known and be hereafter called Spring Street, and the Market now standing in said Street be known and be hereafter called Spring Street Market."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 677.

22 Congress passes the "Embargo Act" forbidding clearances to foreign ports and limiting the coasting-trade in the United States.—Laws of U. S., 10th cong., chap. 5. This was supplemented by other acts on Jan. 8 and March 12, 1808.—Ibid., 10th cong., chaps. 8 and 33. See also Winsor, VII: 340.

" One of the newspapers publishes a plan for the defence of New York which was drawn up by the late Baron Steuben. In this, Steuben states that any attempt to defend the city by batteries on Governor's Island, Powles Hook, and Manhattan Island, is fruit-

1807 Dec. 22 less, and only serves "to expose the city, in case of attack to inevitable ruin." Fortifications should be erected so as to prevent an enemy from entering and getting possession of the harbour. To this end he suggests that the bay from Sandy Hook to the Narrows be defended by floating batteries, frigates, and gun-boats, and that batteries and redoubts be concentrated on both sides of the Narrows, garrisoned with 1,200 men and supported by a camp on each side of 3,000 militia. Also, a cone surmounted by a battery and connected to the other fortifications by chains might be sunk in the middle of the channel for additional safety.—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 22, 1807.

25 The common council unites with the clergy of the city in setting apart this day as one for "public and special thanksgiving and prayer to Almighty God for his benevolent dispensations of Mercy to this city."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 673–74.

28 The common council refers to the committee of defence a communication from Maj.-Gen. Stevens "on the subject of the Artillery and Military Stores in this city, together with an Estimate by Brigadier General Morton of the expence of Camp equipage for the equipment of 1000. Men."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 681. The original letter (MS.) is preserved in metal file No. 34, city clerk's record-room.

" The common council receives a communication from a committee "appointed by the Africans and descendants of Africans in this city, 'to make arrangements for celebrating the period which puts a stop to the commerce of the Human Species,' returning their acknowledgments to the Corporation for the grant of Officers to preserve good order on the occasion [whom they asked for on Dec. 14, q.v.], and Soliciting the members to accept tickets of admission to the Oration which is to be delivered by an African descendant at the African Church in Church Street, corner of Leonard Street on Friday the 1st day of Jany next 10 o'clock. " Abner Curtis, the mayor's first marshal, having informed the common council that the 50 constables and marshals of the city are "unfurnished with Staves of Office," the board orders that the superintendent of repairs "provide Staves to be painted and numbered; and to be delivered to the several Constables and Marshals correspondent with their respective numbers, who shall [be] responsible for the same and be individually subject to a penalty of One Dollar, if they appear with or use any other Staff than such as corresponds with their number."—*M. " The street commissioner presents to the common council "a profile of Broadway from Art Street to the Bowery road for their inspection and consideration;" also the draft of an ordinance "to regulate the Street in a temporary manner." These are referred to the road committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 685–86. On Jan. 4, 1808, the board decided to begin at once on opening this part of Broadway, in accordance with the profile, in order to give employment to workmen at this "inclement season" and "to alleviate the evils which must result from a suspension of the ordinary avocations of the laborious part of the Community."—Ibid., IV: 693–94.

" In a memorial to the common council, De Witt Clinton, president of the board of trustees of the N. Y. Public Free School, says that "they have in contemplation the erection of a building which may be adequate to the accommodation of 500 Scholars." 1808

— In this year, diplomatic relations between Spain and the U. S. were suspended because of internal troubles in Spain and disputes over the crown. They were resumed in 1815 (q.v.).—McMaster, Hist. of People of U. S., IV: 373. 1808 —

John Randel, Jr., author of the well-known Randel Survey (Pl. 79, Vol. I), in 1864 wrote the following description of Manhattan Island, north of Canal St., as he remembered it during the period from 1808 to 1821: —

"In the years 1808, 1809, and 1810, whilst acting as Secretary and Surveyor to the 'Commissioners of Streets and Roads in the City of New York,' and also as their Chief Engineer, superintending and aiding in the surveys and maps of the assistants employed by them, I went almost daily from the city to our office, then in the country, at the northeast corner of Christopher and Herring streets, previous to performing field work with them in the suburbs of the city, and on distant parts of the Island; at which times, and subsequently, I obtained the following information.

"In going from the city to our office in 1808 and 1809, I generally crossed a ditch cut through Lispenard's salt meadow (now a culvert under Canal street) on a plank laid across it for a crossing-place, about midway between a stone bridge on Broadway, with a narrow embankment at each end, connecting it with the upland, and an excavation then being made at, and said to be for, the foundation of the present St. John's Church, on Varick Street.

"From this crossing-place I followed a well-beaten path, leading from the city to the then village of Greenwich, passing over open and partly fenced lots and fields, not at that time under cultivation, and remote from any dwelling-house, now remembered by me, except Col. Aaron Burr's former country seat, on elevated ground, called 'Richmond Hill,' which was then from about 100 to 150 yards west of this path, and was then occupied as a place of refreshment for gentlemen taking a drive from the city. Its site is now in Charlton street, between Varick and Macdougal streets. I continued along this main path to a branch path diverging from it to the east, south of Manetta water, (now Minetta street), which branch path I followed to Herring street, passing on my way there, from about 200 to 250 yards west, the country residence of Col. Richard Varick, on elevated ground east of Manetta water, called 'Tusculum,' the site of which is now 'Varick Place' on Sullivan street, between Bleecker and Houston streets. I entered the south end of Herring street, a short distance beyond Manetta water, and continued along the easterly side of that street to our office, at the northeast corner of it and Christopher street. I passed only three dwelling-houses on the easterly side of this street, and they were two story frame buildings, connected by fences, extending northerly to Christopher street, and southerly to about Jones street. There was no street opened eastward out of this part of Herring street, nor did I observe any opening in that fence for any such street. The middle building of those three on Herring street, all of which are yet standing, is the one hereinbefore described by me as the house occupied by a Mr. Ryder, with whom Thomas Paine and Madame Bonneville and her two sons resided to within a few weeks of his death, and now No. 293 Bleecker street. . . .

"The ditch over which I passed at the 'crossing-place' in going from the city to our office near Greenwich village, was cut through Lispenard's salt meadow, from Hudson's River, northeastward to and under the Stone Bridge on Broadway, and continued to the 'Collect' or 'Fresh Water Pond' East of Broadway; from which water, for the use of the city was taken to 'the Tea Water pump,' on Duane street, near the present missionary church at the 'Five Points.'

"This pump furnished water to the city, in addition to a scanty supply of tea and drinking water obtained from 'Knapp's Spring,' near the west end of Greenwich lane, and from other springs, from which it was brought to the city by carts, in hogsheads, and sold by the pailful.

"The Collect was at that time filled up by a collection of spare earth and rubbish &c, carted from the city, which being of greater specific gravity than the debris, or mud at the bottom of 'the Pond' or 'Collect' caused it to rise, and mix with the rubbish and stand out; forming a very offensive and irregular mound of several acres; which appeared to me, as seen from Broadway, between which and it there were no buildings, to be from 12 to 15 feet in height above the level of the tide, and of the water remaining in the Pond. It is now occupied by Centre street, southerly to near 'The Tombs' or 'Halls of Justice.'

1808 — "On Broadway, north of Lispenard's salt meadow (now Canal street) to 'Sailors' Snug Harbor,' a handsome brick building, called by that name, erected on elevated ground near the bend in Broadway at the present 10th street, and formerly the residence of Captain Randall, who bequeathed it to the Trustees of 'Sailors' Snug Harbor' together with his adjoining grounds, opposite to and also south of Grace Church to Art street and Greenwich lane; and from the Bowery road, westward, to Manetta water, there were only a few scattered buildings, except country residences which were built back from Broadway, with court yards and lawns of trees and shrubs in front of them. [The location of the Randell residence is shown on the Poppleton map of 1817, reproduced as a folded map in Haswell's Reminiscences.]

"Between Sailors' Snug Harbor (now 10th street) and Love lane (now 21st street) were a narrow causeway and perhaps from 6 to 8 frame dwelling-houses. This part of the present Broadway was at that time the 'Bloomingdale Road.' . . .

"The Bowery was at that time (1809) the principal road leading out of the city to Harlem and Manhattanville, and thence to Boston and Albany, and was settled, in part, to near North (now Houston) street. At this street the Commissioners' Plan for the streets and avenues commenced; north of it we encountered in our surveys extensive ancient and neglected hawthorn hedge-fences, then grown to saplings, extending along the east side of the Bowery, in front of the Stuyvesant estate, that were impassible without the aid of an axe; a short distance beyond which the Bowery road and the (then) Bloomingdale road formed a junction at the Commissioners' 16th street (now a point in Union Square, about 110 yards southwest of The Everett House), and formed an acute angle at that place, which, when further intersected by the streets crossing it, left so small an amount of ground for building purposes, that the Commissioners instructed me to lay out the ground, at the union of those streets and roads, for a public square, which, from that circumstance, they named Union Place.

"From this angle at 16th street, the Bloomingdale Road (more recently called Broadway) continued northward, through Manhattanville, to near the gate of the country residence of Dr. Samuel Bradhurst (now near 147th street at 9th avenue), where it formed a junction with the Kingsbridge Road, passing in its route from 16th street along the westerly side of the United States Magazine, opposite 25th street and 5th avenue, across 'The Parade' which the Commissioners set apart 'for military exercise, and also to assemble, in case of need, the force destined to defend the city.'

"This road thence crossed 57th street, 120 yards east of Bloomingdale Square, which extended from 53d to 57th street, and from 8th to 9th avenue . . .; it thence passed through Harsenville, from 68th to 72nd street, at 10th avenue, and crossed 79th street 167 yards west of 10th avenue, and 500 yards west of Manhattan Square, which extended from 77th to 81st street, and from 8th to 9th avenue . . .; thence crossed 96th street; west of 10th avenue and east of Striker's Bay, on Hudson River; thence crossed 117th street, 113 yards west of 11th avenue, and 200 yards west of the New York Hospital and Bloomingdale Asylum for the Insane, and thence passed through the Barrier Gate, built across this road at the Manhattanville Pass during the war of 1812, at 123d street, 33 yards west of 11th avenue; the road then passed through Manhattanville, from 126th street at 11th avenue to 132d street, 100 yards east of 11th avenue . . .; thence passed 100 yards north of the country residence of the widow of Col. Alexander Hamilton, at 143d street, 80 yards east of 10th avenue; and thence to the junction of this road with the Kingsbridge Road, 10 yards east of 9th avenue, between 146th and 147th streets.

"'The Eastern Post Road' diverged northeasterly from the Bloomingdale Road, at 23d street and 5th avenue, and run by a circuitous route through the village of Harlem, from 118th to 125th street, west of 3d avenue to 'the Harlem Bridge' built over Harlem River, near 130th street and 3d avenue.

"This road, in its route from the Bloomingdale road at 23d street and 5th avenue, passed south of 'the United States Magazine' at 25th street, and 'The Old Pottersfield' at 26th street (both of which were included in 'The Parade,' and their sites are now covered by Madison square). It crossed the 4th avenue at the Middle road, near 29th street, and passed through the village of Kip's Bay, from 32d to 38th street, west of 3d avenue; it thence passed the 'Cross Road' to 'Burr's Corner' (on the Middle road, opposite the present Croton Reservoir) at 41st street, and the road to Turtle Bay on the East River, between 47th and 48th streets; thence crossed the 2d avenue at 52d street, and recrossing it between 62d and 63d streets, entered the present 3d avenue at the southeast corner of Hamilton Square, which . . . extended from 66th to 68th street, and from 3d to 5th avenue. . . . This road continued thence along the present 3d avenue, passing Harsen's Cross-road at 71st street, and east of Smith's Tavern, opposite 'Kissing Bridge' at 77th street, where the Commissioners held their office in 1809 and 1810. It crossed the division line between New York and Harlem Commons between 81st and 82nd streets, and continued along 3d avenue to near 83d street. At this place several branch roads diverged from it eastwardly to the following places on the East River near Hell Gate, to wit: Commodore Chauncey's, on the south side of 85th street; Hell Gate Ferry, at the foot of 86th street, opposite the north end of Blackwell's island; John Jacob Astor's, on the south side of 88th street; Oliver Gracie's, on the north side of 88th street;—Prime, on the north side of 89th street, and William Rhinelander, on the north side of 91st street. The three last named country seats were nearly opposite the following rocks at the entrance of Hell Gate, to wit: Hancock's Rock, 3 Gridiron Rocks, 4 Middle Reef Rocks, 2 Flood Rocks, and Mill Rock. The Pot Rock, in the middle of Hell Gate, was about 700 yards east of Mill Rock, and south of The Pot was Way's Reef Rock, and north of it was The Frying Pan, and Holmes' Rocks, and 3 Hogsback Rocks. During the war of 1812, a block house was built on Mill Rock, and opposite to it, at Hallet's Point, on Long Island shore, Fort Stevens was built; and on the high ground southeast of it a tower was erected, called Castle Bogardus. These fortifications were built to command Hell Gate Pass. 1808 —

"From the 3d avenue, near 83d street, this Eastern Post road diverged westerly, and crossed and recrossed the division line between New York and Harlem commons, and crossed 4th avenue near 85th street; thence passed over the southwestern corner of Observatory Place, and intersected the Middle Road at 90th street. This Observatory Place, or square for Reservoir, was laid out . . . from 89th to 94th street, and from 5th to 6th avenue. . . . From 90th street, this Eastern Post road continued along the Middle road to 92d street, and there diverged westerly, and passed between 5th and 6th avenues (where it was also called the 'Kingsbridge road'), through the Barrier gate, built across it during the war of 1812, at McGowan's Pass, at 107th street, about 116 yards east of 6th avenue; thence crossing a small bridge over the head of Benson's tide mill pond, near 109th street and 5th avenue, passed through the village of Harlem, at 116th to 125th street, near and west of Third avenue, to Harlem Bridge.

"During the war of 1812, the Barrier gate at McGowan's pass was connected with the Barrier gate at Manhattanville pass by the following military defences, which were extended across the Island, from Harlem River to Hudson River, to wit:

"Fortifications on Benson's point, near 3d avenue and 106th street; Fort Clinton, between 106th and 107th streets, and about 170 yards east of 6th avenue; Fort Fish, between 105th and 106th streets, and about 10 yards east of 6th avenue; a stone tower, about 14 yards south of 109th street and 7 yards west of 7th avenue; a stone tower, between 113th and 114th streets, and between 9th and 10th avenues; a stone tower, on the south side of 121st street, and about 110 yards east of 10th avenue; a stone tower, on the south side of 123d street, and about 54 yards east of 10th avenue; Fort Haight, at Manhattanville pass, about 20 yards north of 124th street, and 120 yards east of 11th avenue.

"'The Middle Road' diverged northward from 'the Eastern Post Road,' near 29th street and 4th avenue, and thence ascended 'Inklangbergh Hill' (now Murray's Hill), and connected with Manhattan (now 5th) avenue, at the present Croton Reservoir on 42d street, and continued along that avenue to its intersection with 'the Eastern Post Road' at 90th street; and thence continued on a straight line, along a (then) new road, called the 'The Middle' or 'Harlem Bridge Road,' to Harlem Bridge, at 130th street and 3d avenue.

"This road passed in its route from the Croton Reservoir at 42d street the following places, viz: along the east side of Dr. Hosack's 'Elgin (Botanic) Garden,' from 47th to 51st street; about 210 yards east of the Powder House, between 64th and 65th streets; along the west end of Hamilton Square, from 5th to 3d avenue and from 66th to 68th street; crossed 'the Harsen Cross Road' at 71st street; crossed the division line between New York and Harlem 1808 — commons at 87th street; reached the southwest corner of Observatory place at 89th street, and crossed that square to 94th street; thence crossed 'Harlem Marsh' square, which was laid out . . . from 106th to 109th street, and from 5th avenue eastward to Harlem River at 'Benson's Point.' . . . and thence passed through Harlem village from 116th to 125th street.

"'The Kingsbridge Road' commenced at the crossing of the Middle road by the Eastern Post road, at 90th to 92d street; and continued along the Eastern Post road through the Barrier gate, at McGowan's pass, to 'Harlem lane,' near 108th street, where it diverged eastwardly to Harlem; it thence continued along that lane over Harlem flat to Myer's corner, about 67 yards west of 8th avenue at 131st street—passing in its route along 'Harlem lane,' the residence of Valantine Nutter, in 6th avenue, between 109th and 110th streets; and thence passed 73 yards west of the southwest corner of 'Harlem square,' which was laid out . . . from 117th to 121st street, and from 6th to 7th avenue . . .; crossed the road leading from Manhattanville to Harlem at 125th street, between 8th and 9th avenues, and east of the Manhattanville Academy at 126th street and 10th avenue. From Myer's corner the Kingsbridge road continued northward, between 8th and 9th avenues, to its intersection with the Bloomingdale road at 9th avenue, between 146th and 147th streets; passing in its route from Myer's corner west of the country residence of Cadwallader D. Colden—who was Mayor of the city in the years 1818, 1819, and 1820—standing in 7th avenue, between 139th and 140th streets; passing Bussing's Point road 133 yards west of 8th avenue, between 132d and 144th streets; thence ascended Bradhurst hill west of a Revolutionary redoubt at 145th street, and connected with the Bloomingdale road 10 yards east of 9th avenue, between 146th and 147th streets; this Kingsbridge road thence passed the 10-mile stone . . .; thence passed 120 yards west of the residence of Madame Jumel, the widow of Stephen Jumel, and afterwards the widow of Col. Aaron Burr, standing 150 yards east of 10th avenue, between 160th and 161st streets. At 161st street the road passed east of and opposite to Mount Washington spring, at 11th avenue, and redoubts, &c., from 11th to 12th avenue; at 175th to 176th street the road passed 67 yards east of 12th avenue, and 900 yards east of a fort and redoubts on a point of rocks on Hudson's River, about 30 yards south of 176th street, and 200 yards west of 14th avenue. . . . At 183d street the road was 43 yards east of 12th avenue, and 343 yards east of Fort Washington, on 13th avenue. At 192d street the road was 33 yards west of 12th avenue, and 533 yards west of Fort George. At 196th street the road was 133 yards east of 13th avenue, and 233 yards east of Fort Tryon. At 206th street the road crossed the west side of 12th avenue, and was 730 yards east of Tubby Hook Point, on Hudson's River. . . . Between 208th and 209th streets this road was opposite the residence of Jacobus Dyckman, and 150 yards west of 11th avenue. From 213th to 217th street the road passed along the foot of the eastern slope of marble quarries. At 216th street the road was 33 yards west of 10th avenue, and 1,070 yards east of Cock Hill Fort, on high ground, between Spuyten Duyvel (Spiteing Devil) creek and Hudson's River. At 222d street the road crossed the Canal cut across New York Island from Harlem River to Spuyten Duyvel creek. At 226th street the road was 150 yards east of Fort Prince Charles, on 10th avenue, at the southerly side of that street. At 228th street and 10th avenue, where the most northerly monument on New York Island was placed by me, Kingsbridge road was about 34 yards east of that avenue; and McComb's mill, built over Harlem River, along the west side of Kingsbridge, was about 17 yards north of that most northerly monument.

"'The Harlem Road' passed from the village of Harlem over the Harlem Flat, north of 'Snake Hill,' on 5th avenue, from 121st to 123d street (now Mount Morris Square), and formed a junction with the Kingsbridge road at Myer's corner.

"The Bussing's Point road diverged eastwardly from the Kingsbridge road, between 143d and 144th streets, and intersected the 8th avenue at 145th street, and continued along it to near 149th street, and thence diverged northeastward, on a straight line, to McComb's Bridge and Dam across Harlem River, at 155th street, 20 yards west of 7th avenue.

"All the redoubts and forts from Bussing's Point road to Kingsbridge were built during the Revolutionary War, and consisted of embankments of earth, some of which remained standing, from 6 to 8 feet in height, and the outlines of the ruins of others remained pretty well defined upon the ground, when I surveyed them in the years 1819, 1820. 1808 —

"I obtained the names of those fortifications from Jacobus Dyckman, on the Kingsbridge road, and other old gentlemen in that neighborhood—some of whom informed me that they lived there when those fortifications were being built, during the Revolutionary war.

"The streets and avenues herein mentioned, although reported on the Plan filed by the Commissioners in 1811, for streets as far north as 155th street, and for 10th avenue thence to Harlem River near Kingsbridge, and all the streets and avenues north of 155th street were extended across the Island, and northward to Harlem River, on maps subsequently made by me and filed in the Street Commissioner's office. Yet many of the streets and avenues on New York Island were not defined upon the ground by monumental stones and iron bolts till as late as about the year 1818, and none of them were placed by me north of 155th street, except on 10th avenue to 228th street, near Kingsbridge; and the distances herein stated in yards were obtained from measurements made on those maps."—Man. Com. Coun. (1864), 847–56. See also Hist. Mag., 2nd ser., II: 27.

In this year, William Cullen Bryant, when only 13 years of age, published at Boston his first book entitled The Embargo, or Sketches of the Times; A Satire, one of the first books by an American writer to achieve more than local fame. —

In this year, John Trumbull (see 1804) left New York for Europe, but returned in 1816 (q. v.). —

In about this year, Father Anthony Kohlmann, S. J., organized a Catholic college in a rented house in Mulberry St., opposite the site of St. Patrick's Cathedral. The school was known as "The New York Literary Institution."—U. S. Cath. Hist. Soc., Hist. Records and Studies, II: 432–33; The College of St. Francis Xavier, 3. The college later moved to Broadway, and finally was established opposite the Elgin Botanical Garden on Fifth Ave. (see Mr, 1810). On part of this property the present St. Patrick's Cathedral was built.—See Ag 15, 1858. —

Some time between this year and 1817, William Bridges made a survey of the Somerindyck farm. The original survey is preserved in tube No. 166 in the real estate bureau of the comptroller's office, Municipal Bldg. —

Continuing the record of official transactions and building operations in connection with the construction of the new city hall, the following events transpired in 1808; they have been summarized and, for convenient reference, placed in the Chronology at the beginning of the year, as was done under 1804 et seq. —

On April 11, 1808, McComb wrote to Alderman Mott, chairman of the build. com., an estimate of expense on a reduced scale, $23,300, which would enable them to raise the walls above the heads of the second storey windows, so that the building might be roofed the following season.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 8. On April 11, also, the build. com. was directed by the common council to confer with "the Masters and Mechanics" regarding reducing wages for "the ensuing season."—Ibid., V: 94. On May 23, the stone-cutters asked an increase, and were allowed $1.25 a day.—Ibid., V: 136. Johnson & Stevens having informed the common council on May 16 that they were bankrupt, the build. com. reported on June 27 that they found these contractors had had "no previous experience in estimating the expense of the work," and they recommended further purchases of marble at $3 per cubic foot to enable them to continue, with an advance payment of $1,000 on such security as was satisfactory to McComb.—Ibid., V: 121, 182. On Dec. 5, the building committee reported that the hall had cost to date $247,163.38. "About two thirds of the walls have been carried up to the underside of the entablature, or within 3 feet 6 inches of the height to receive the roof on the wings."—Ibid., V: 358–60.

As in previous years (vide supra), a list of warrants can be made, showing the several advances made by the common council for the use of the building committee. Valentine has made a summary of the building costs in Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 470.

On this day there were lying in the harbour 135 ships, 94 brigs, 92 schooners, 284 sloops, and 61 pettiaugers; total 666.—L'Oracle, Ja 5, 1808. Jan. 1

1808 Ja 1 Under the act of congress of March 2, 1807 (q.v.), the slave trade was to cease after this date. See D 14 and 28, 1807.

8 Congress makes a further appropriation of $1,000,000 for building and repairing harbour fortifications.—Laws of U. S., 10th cong., chap. 6. For description of the fortifications, later in the year, see Man. Com. Coun. (1868), 879.

" A special meeting of the common council is called by Mayor Willett, who informs the members that he has done so "in consequence of a Notice published in the Daily Advertiser of this morning 'inviting the Seamen in the vicinity of this city to assemble in the Park tomorrow at 11 o'clock, for the purpose of enquiring of him what they are to do for their subsistence during the Winter.'" He desires to consult with the board "on the measures that might be proper to be adopted to prevent any unpleasant consequences." The board thereupon requests the mayor "to publish the following Notice in all the Daily papers and to circulate the same in Hand Bills:"

"The Mayor decidedly disapproves the mode of application recommended in a Morning paper, to be pursued by the Sailors of this port for relief.

"He informs the public that the Corporation will, on the present emergency, as they have done on former occasions, provide for the wants of every person, without distinction, who may be considered proper objects of relief.

"The Mayor cannot conclude this Notice, without exhorting all classes of Citizens to refrain from assembling in the mode as proposed, and especially dissuades the Sailors from meeting in the Park."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 699–700. The meeting was held, nevertheless. For the resolutions drawn up, see Ja 9, and for the board's further action, see Ja 11.

9 The following memorial is presented to Mayor Willett by seamen who assembled in the Park on this Saturday morning:

"Our situation is not only distressing, but truly alarming. The Embargo lately levied upon our shipping [see D 22, 1807] has not only destroyed all employment by Sea, but rendered it impossible to gain a subsistence by our labor on shore. Our humble petition, to you Sir, is to know how we are to act in this case, and to beg of you to provide some means for our subsistence during the winter, should not the embargo be immediately taken off. What has America to boast of but her Agriculture and Commerce? The destruction of one, will be the ruin of the other.

"The greatest part of the wages due us from our last voyages is already expended, and more, we are already indebted for our boarding. By what means shall we discharge these debts? Should we plunder, thieve or rob, the State prison will be our certain doom.

"In a handbill, this morning, You tried to dissuade us from our purpose, mentioning that provision was made for objects of pity. We are not objects of pity yet, but shall soon be, if there is not some method taken for our support. We are the most part hale, robust, hearty men, and would choose some kind of employment rather than the poor house for a livelyhood. We humbly beg therefore, you will provide some means for our subsistence, or the consequences may not only prove fatal to ourselves, but ruinous to the flourishing Commerce of America, as we shall be necessitated to go on board foreign vessels.

"Saturday Jan^{y} 9th 1808."

The sailors "quietly dispersed on being assured by his Honour that the Corporation would take their case into consideration." On Jan. 11, the mayor presented the memorial, as a report of his proceeding, to the common council.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 700–1.

11 Alderman John Bingham, chairman of the ways and means committee, reports to the common council: "That in order to provide for the Subsistence of the Seamen of this port, thrown out of employment in consequence of the existing embargo [see Ja 9], they have conferred with Captain Chauncey of the U^{d} States Navy who has consented to receive the Sailors in the Navy Yard, on condition of signing the Articles of the U^{d} States Navy, to continue in service, during their own pleasure, and perform duty agreeably to his orders, the Corporation agreeing to pay the amount of their maintenance, at the rate of twenty cents per ration for twenty four hours, which includes victuals, drink, fuel, candles and accommodation for lodging. Soap for washing to be an extra charge.

"The Committee recommend this arrangement to the Common Council, as thereby every Sailor in distress will be comfortably supported, and being removed from town, and subject to the orders and discipline of the Navy, no ill consequences can result to the peace of the city, from their tumultuous associations. This meritorious class of citizens, it is confidently presumed, will be perfectly satisfied with this plan for their immediate support. Whenever they can do better they will be at perfect liberty to leave the navy yard and work for themselves. Jan. 11

"Should the Common Council approve the measure, the Committee will arrange the details with Capt. Chauncey for the admission of the Seamen and charge of the rations.

"To provide for that class of citizens, who are capable of labouring and who are destitute of occupation, the Committee have directed the Street Commissioner to examine how many Carmen and hands to load carts can be advantageously employed to fill the collect, and the means of providing earth for the purpose: and to report Ordinances to compel proprietors of low grounds in the vicinity to co-operate with the Corporation.

"The Committee likewise contemplate the expediency of reducing Inclenberg hill on the Boston road, provided the frost shall not oppose insuperable obstacles.

"They will likewise direct the Street Commissioner to examine the situation of Streets and lots that may require to be regulated and raised in the vicinity of Corlaers Hook, and, if practicable and not too oppressive to the proprietors, to report ordinances for regulating and filling the same.

"These various objects may employ a considerable number of industrious persons at moderate wages, which may enable them to support their families without becoming a public burden.

"For the maintenance of that class of citizens for whom labour cannot be provided and who are incapable of labouring, the Committee propose to issue rations of Soup and meat, four times a week, in proportion to the number of their respective families, agreeably to the accompanying plan.

"To conduct this measure, with the greatest possible economy, the Committee are providing a Soup House in the Alms House, which will be compleated by Thursday next; in the mean time partial supplies are provided, adequate, it is presumed, to the present demand."

On the committee's recommendation, the board passes a resolution empowering the committee of ways and means "to adopt such measures for the support of the Seamen and labouring class of the community, thrown out of employment in consequence of the existing embargo, and of the indigent poor, by furnishing labour or means of subsistence, as in their judgment may appear most expedient; And that the said Committee keep a regular account of all expences incurred by them, in fulfilling their engagements, and report, weekly, progress of their proceedings to this Board."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 702–4, 713–15, 728, 737, 751.

" The common council refers to the committee of defence "A Letter from General Stevens to the Mayor, inclosing a plan of a Radeau or Floating battery, calculated for the defence of this harbour."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 702. The original letter is preserved in metal file No. 34, city clerk's record-room. The original drawing, in ink, dated Jan. 1, 1808, and endorsed "Plan of a Radeau by General Stevens, Refd to Comm. of Defence," is preserved in metal file lettered "Filed Papers, 1804–1808," city clerk's record-room. Without credit to Gen. Stevens, this drawing is reproduced in Man. Com. Coun. (1860), 590, appended to an account of Monsieur Du Buc's plan of defence (see Ap 25, My 16, 1808).

" The street commissioner presents to the common council "a deed from the Corporation of Trinity Church to this Corporation for sundry Streets through their grounds between North Moore and Christopher Streets, comprising

"1st Washington Street from Christopher Street Southerly to Hudson river.

2^{d} Greenwich Street, from Brannon Street northerly to the extent of their lands.

"Two Alleys each 25 feet in breadth, the one in the rear of St Johns Church yard, the other running from Beach to Laight Streets between Hudson and Greenwich Streets and reserving to themselves, during the several leases now in existence, the rents therefrom and the premises so leased and warranting only against themselves and such persons as may derive title under them, subsequent to the date of their said deed."

The street commissioner recommends that this deed of cession "be referred to the Committee appointed for the revision of Laws for their opinion of its legal construction." The board refers it to "the Attorney of the Board."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 709–10, 533–34.

" The common council orders "that Mr Lemaire prepare Frames for the portraits of Governors Lewis and Tompkins and of the present Mayor."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 711. On June 6, 1808, Lemaire was paid $225 "for frames for public pictures."—Ibid., V: 163.

16 "Citizen" writes to one of the newspapers: "Among the number of plans proposed to obstruct the navigation, and ruin the harbour of New-York, I have seen none that appears to me likely to be more ruinous in its consequences to this city than that of erecting bridges across the North and East rivers [see D 5, 1807]. This has been the topic for some time past, and many exertions have been made to gain it popularity I hope, however, that a plan of such moment to the public, will be studiously considered by the citizens at large, before they tender their support to a proposal which threatens such serious damage to this city."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ja 16, 1808. See F 2.

18 The building committee (see My 26, 1803) makes the following report to the common council: "That they have reduced the daily pay of the Journeymen Stone cutters at work at the New City Hall, from 125 cents to One Dollar, and have now Twenty-five Journeymen employed in that business for the same sum, that they before paid Twenty.

"During the present exigency [see Ja 9 and 11], the Committee are of opinion, that the interests of the City would be promoted by employing an additional number of Journeymen Stone cutters at this reduced price. The workshops where they are employed can conveniently accommodate a larger number, and are made very comfortable by the means of stoves, and the Superintendants of the Building assure us, that they can do as great a days work as in the summer season. Should the Board sanction this measure, the Committee will only employ such additional Journeymen who have families, and from the present scarcity of employment, would become pensioners on the bounty of the Corporation. Thus a two-fold good would result, the employment of our citizens who are in distress, and their labour obtained at a reduction of 20 per cent from the usual rate of wages." The report is confirmed by the board.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 719.

" The committee, appointed to confer with a committee of the Free School (see D 28, 1807), reports "That the present buildings occupied by the State as an Arsenal is illy adapted for that purpose, not being sufficiently extensive to accommodate the Artillery and military implements belonging to the State. Jan. 18

"That it is therefore expedient to assign to the State other lands for that purpose either in or as the State shall elect: and that in such case the present building shall revert to the Corporation.

"That if the state shall assent to this arrangement, it will be expedient to grant the new building and suitable adjacent ground to the Trustees of the Free School, to be occupied as long as they use the same for the purposes of their Institution; and on the express condition that the said Trustees shall educate the children of the Alms House gratuitously.

"The Committee can confidently recommend this plan. It will accommodate the State in a more public and spacious Arsenal. It will accommodate the Corporation in the education of their poor children. It will accommodate the Trustees of the Free School with a convenient place for education; and it will redound to the honour of the Corporation and the general good of the Community, in the means it will afford for the diffusion of the blessings of knowledge among the necessitous: an object of the first importance, and which has hitherto been neglected in this city, particularly as it respects the poor children under the care of the Corporation." The board confirms the report, and orders that the same committee "report a proper site for an Arsenal, together with a map of the premises."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 717. See F 8.

The committee on the subject of purchasing the Manhattan water works (see D 28, 1807) makes a report to the common council in which they state "that in pursuance of their appointment they have conferred with a Committee of the Company, and find a proper disposition on their part to promote the views of the Corporation, but that no alienation of the said water works can take place without the sanction of the Legislature. "

"It has been generally understood and believed, that the right of supplying this city with pure and wholesome water, ought to be vested in the Corporation, as the constituted guardians of its prosperity. Previous to the institution of the Manhattan Company, this measure was recommended to the Corporation by a respectable and enlightened Committee, and although it unfortunately failed, yet it has commanded the attention of subsequent Boards, and there has been no diversity of opinion on the general expediency of being invested with the exclusive power; altho' there may have been at different periods variances in sentiment with regard to the mode and extent of executing it, and altho' obstacles from various sources have hitherto interfered to prevent the accomplishment of this desireable object, when your Committee consider the importance of this power, in supplying the citizens with good water for domestic purposes, in guarding against the ravages of fire and disease, in purifying the Streets, and in accommodating the public buildings, they can not but earnestly recommend to the Corporation, the most prompt and efficient measures for obtaining it.

"In 1804 [q. v., Ag 6, 27, and O 29], the year after the prevalence of Yellow fever, the attention of the Corporation was pointedly drawn to this subject, with a view of preserving the public health, and it was at that period generally conceded that the Island of New York did not yield a supply sufficiently commensurate with the public exigencies, but that recourse must be had to the river Bronx or the Sawmill river in the county of Westchester, and that the water works of the Manhattan Company, and their right of supplying the city with water, ought to be procured in order to aid and promote this great object. The best mode of proceeding at present in the opinion of your Committee is, by an application to the Legislature for permission to purchase all the rights of the Manhattan Company in this respect and for power to pass all necessary Ordinances to protect and guard the rights vested in the Corporation in consequence of such purpose.

"The question, as to a suitable compensation to the Company will be open for future treaty and adjustment, and if they are unreasonable in their demands, the Corporation will not be bound to accede to them." Consideration of this report is postponed until the next meeting (see Ja 25), and it is resolved that the committee "examine and report to this Board at their next meeting, whether the said water works produce any and what annual revenue or any and what annual loss."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 715–16. For report on the Company's revenues, see Ja 25.

1808 Jan. 18 The common council resolves "that John Pintard, now City Inspector and Clerk to the Common Council, be dismissed from the several Offices holden by him, and he is hereby dismissed;" also that "Jacob Morton, now Comptroller," and "Richard Furman, now Superintendant of the Alms House," be dismissed from their respective offices, and that they are "hereby dismissed." The resolution is to lie over for consideration at the next meeting.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 725. On Feb. 15, the board voted to dismiss Morton and Furman.—Ibid., V: 10, 11. On Feb. 22, the board voted to dismiss Pintard.—Ibid., V: 10, 21. Garrit N. Bleecker and William Mooney were chosen in the places of Morton and Furman, and Pintard was requested to retain his position until his successor was appointed.—Ibid., V: 10–11, 22, 24. The dismissals were the result of the Republicans gaining a majority in the common council (see N 17, 1807).

" The common council ordains "that it shall not be lawful for any person to plant any tree in any Street of this City, which is less than forty feet wide, to the southward and westward of Catharine Street and Fresh Water Pond. . . ."—Laws of City of N. Y. (1808), 27.

" By order of the common council, a warrant for $600 is issued in favour of Col. John Trumbull, on account, "for the portraits executing by him, for the Corporation."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 712. Trumbull's original petition (MS.), for an advance of $500 or $600, is preserved in metal file No. 33, city clerk's record-room. The portraits were delivered on or about April 25 (q. v.).

20 Secretary of War Dearborn sends to Vice-Pres. Clinton "a sketch of part of the harbor, and of the blocks, chains and chevaux-de-frize, proposed as an additional defence against the approach of hostile ships to the city of New York." He adds: "By this mode of defence the objection to the contemplated line of blocks is obviated, viz—such an obstruction to the course of the tide as might effect the navigation of the river. This system will not occupy more than from one fifth to one fourth of the bed of the harbour between Bedlow's Island and Long Island, and consequently cannot have any sensible effect on the course of the tide." Measurements and locations of the blocks and a description of the chevaux de frize are included. On Jan. 21, Clinton sent the sketch and description to Gov. Tompkins, saying: "There is nothing new in the project of chains. They have been long in use, and have been considered one of the best obstructions against the passage of ships, when protected by efficient batteries. The proposed chevaux-de-frize, is, as far as I know, on a new construction. . . ."—Hastings, Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, II: 28–29.

25 The committee appointed to investigate the revenue from the Manhattan water works (see Ja 18) reports to the common council that "the Capital Stock expended, including real estate, (first Cost,)" is $23,466.47, the expense for "Reservoir, laying pipes &c^{a} &c^{a}" is $148,794.72; and the net revenue from May 1, 1807 to May 1, 1808 will be $10,061, "equal to 6¾ per cent on the Capital expended." The committee also reports "that the real estate belonging to the Waterworks have, in the opinion of the Committee, increased in value, since the term of purchase nearly 100. ℔ c^{t} and that the revenue has on an average for the last three years increased 10 ℔ c^{t} per annum." A motion, thereupon, to apply to the legislature for permission to purchase the water works is negatived by the casting vote of Mayor Willett.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 732–33. See, however, F 22. Commenting on this action, one of the newspapers says: "This proceeding has been represented in the Evening Post as originating from the Manhattan Company, for the advantage of its stockholders, and to the detriment of the city. It is to free the Bank as well as the Common Council from motives and conduct so unworthy, that this paper is written. Two years ago, the Common Council, unsolicited and of its own sheer motion, appointed a committee to apply to the Manhattan Company, to ascertain whether they would dispose of the water works, and if so upon what terms. The Bank appointed a committee to confer with that of the Corporation. The two committees conferred together, but without coming to any decision. Since that time till recently the business has slept. The committee of the Corporation, again unsolicited by and unknown to the Bank, as I am well informed and believe was lately renewed—applied to the Bank, for a statement of the income of the water works, with which they were furnished; and upon this statement the motion was made in the Common Council on Monday last. There has been no solicitude on the part of the Bank to transfer their right. The Manhattan Company has discovered nothing like avarice in their dealings with the Corporation. At all large fires, the city has had the benefit of the plugs without making the least compensation. The Bank has permitted the Corporation to erect three hydrants gratis. Instead of demanding of the Common Council 5000 dollars per ann. for the use of the water, which a respectable member of a late board declared they deserved, the Bank has neither claimed nor been paid a cent. And it has loaned to the Corporation one hundred thousand dollars at six per cent. while it has been paying to the board a dividend of nine upon that amount of stock. So that the Bank in fact gratuitously bestows on the board an annuity of $3000, besides extending to the city all the advantages of their expensive water works.—Surely for so many benefits the Manhattan Company deserves something better than misrepresentations of their motives and conduct. . . ."—Am. Cit., F 1, 1808.

26 In an address to the legislature Gov. Tompkins says in part: ". . . the late unprovoked and unprecedented attack upon the frigate Chespeake by a British vessel [see Je 22, 1807], the unwarrantable pretensions of Great Britain to arrest and bear away seamen from our ships upon the ocean, to intercept and destroy our lawful commerce with nations with whom she is at war, and the glaring infringements of the established principles of the law of nations, avowed and practised both by France and Great Britain, have seriously impaired the rights, wounded the honour and assailed the independence of our country.

"The events have diminished the hope of maintaining peace . . . and have produced the necessity of resorting to energetic measures. . . .

"Being thus circumstanced, it becomes our duty to be assiduous in providing for the welfare and security of the persons and property of the Citizens of this state. The appeal to the general government for an efficient and permanent fortification of the city of New York, has not failed to excite their serious attention to that subject. The plan which has been undertaken, the degree to which it has progressed, the operations contemplated to be pursued, and the measures to which your sanction is desired, will be communicated to you without delay.

"Although our anxiety is alive to the protection and safety of the city of N. York, and although our exertions to obtain complete security for that important capital should continue ardent and unceasing, we ought not, at the same time, to be unmindful of the exposed situation of our brethren upon the northern and western frontiers of our state. . . .

"The sum of three thousand dollars, granted for the purpose of erecting a powder magazine near the city of New-York [see Ap 3, 1807], has not been expended. The act contemplated a different scite from that on which the old magazine is situated, and the sum appropriated proved inadequate to the purchase of another eligible tract and the erection of a building. . . ."—Assemb. Jour., 31st sess., 6–9.

" The legislature authorises the common council of New York City "to reserve all that part of the water adjacent to the wharves of said city, from the east side of Coenties' slip to the west side of Whitehall slip, for the sole accommodation of sloops and other market vessels using the trade of the said city from the 20th of March until the 20th of December in each and every year; and that during the time aforesaid, no registered or sea vessel shall be suffered to use the slips or wharves within the above described limits, without special permission."—Laws of N. Y. (1808) chap. 1.

27 "A Merchant" enters the controversy over the advantages and practicability of building bridges over the North and East rivers. He says: "The scheme of building on the North River I conceive to be entirely chimerical, and, if attempted, it would be proper that the constituted authorities should enquire whether it is not a plan of foreign projection, to aid in injuring the welfare of the city, by obstructing the navigation at a certain period. But the East River project being more practicable, and as the passage of vessels of importance will be injured, it demands the most serious investigation. The advantages will be small in comparison with the various disasters which will consequently happen. Two thirds of the provisions, &c. with which New York is supplied, is brought from the Hudson and through the Sound. The supply from Long Island is generally conveyed in boats from the various inlets, and the small proportion which is brought through Brooklyn, is easily transported by means of the ferries. Whence then the necessity of 1808 Jan. 27 a junction between Long Island and New York? . . . Let a candid man observe, the navigation of vessels during a flood and ebb tide, and a wind not entirely favourable, let him remark the various tackings which unavoidably take place, and then determine, whether, within the narrow compass of a bridge those manœuvres could be performed without great hazard of lives and property. To the vessels belonging to public service, the obstruction will be very material. Should our harbour be suddenly assailed, or the flotilla called upon on an emergency, the bridge would be of more injury than some of the enemy's ships. An inimical government could not by any intrigue adopt a more secure plan to interrupt the commercial importance of New York, than by forwarding the plan. . . . Better might chevaux de frises be sunk, than bridges erected, which, in case of accident, could not be so easily raised.

"Further, the general voice of the people of Long Island and New York are opposed to the measure, although it is by some supposed that the weight of personal interest may persuade the Legislature to sanction the plan. The model has been advertised for exhibition, but it is not yet visible. If the ingenious projector would employ his eminent talents in devising plans for the defence and welfare of New York, his abilities would be applied to a more beneficial object."—Am. Cit., Ja 27, 1808. See also remarks of "Citizen" in Pub. Adv., Ja 28, 1808.

" Regular trade routes are in operation for vessels, carrying cargoes and passengers, from New York to Boston, Savannah, Charleston, Richmond, Alexandria, and New Orleans.—L'Oracle, Ja 27, 1808.

Feb. 1 A committee (called the Wallabout committee) having been appointed by the Tammany Society to take measures for carrying into effect the long contemplated design of interring the remains of the Prison Ship martyrs, it makes a report in which the members state: "That the task committed to them is one of a nature the most solemn and impressive. The sufferings of our unfortunate countrymen on board the Jersey and other Prison-ships, is a theme on which the imaginations of the survivors will never cease to dwell and to which the commiserating eye of humanity will never cease to advert. . . .

"Your committee, therefore, feeling anxious that no time should be lost, beg leave to report in part, and respectfully to recommend:

"1st, That the Tammany Society or Columbian Order . . . do immediately proceed to the adoption of a plan for the purpose of interring with suitable rites and ceremonies the bones of our countrymen who perished on board the Jersey Prison-ship, now lying on the shores of the Wallabout.

"2nd, That as a part of this plan, a circular letter be prepared, containing a general invitation, as well to the friends and relations of those unfortunate persons, as to our fellow citizens at large, to forward such information as may be in their possession, or knowledge of the names, places of birth, age, rank and families of those persons. . . . This circular to be published by such of the editors of newspapers in the United States as may think proper to insert it, and to be sent to such persons as may be likely to afford particular information.

"3rd, That the different patriotic Societies and public bodies be invited to join in the arrangements, and to appoint committees to confer with the Committee of Tammany Society. And particularly that the reverend the Clergy, and all the Public Officers, Military and Civil, of the town of Brooklyn, the Corporation of the city of New-York, the different Military Corps, and all Officers of distinction that can conveniently be assembled, together with the citizens at large, be requested to unite on the occasion.

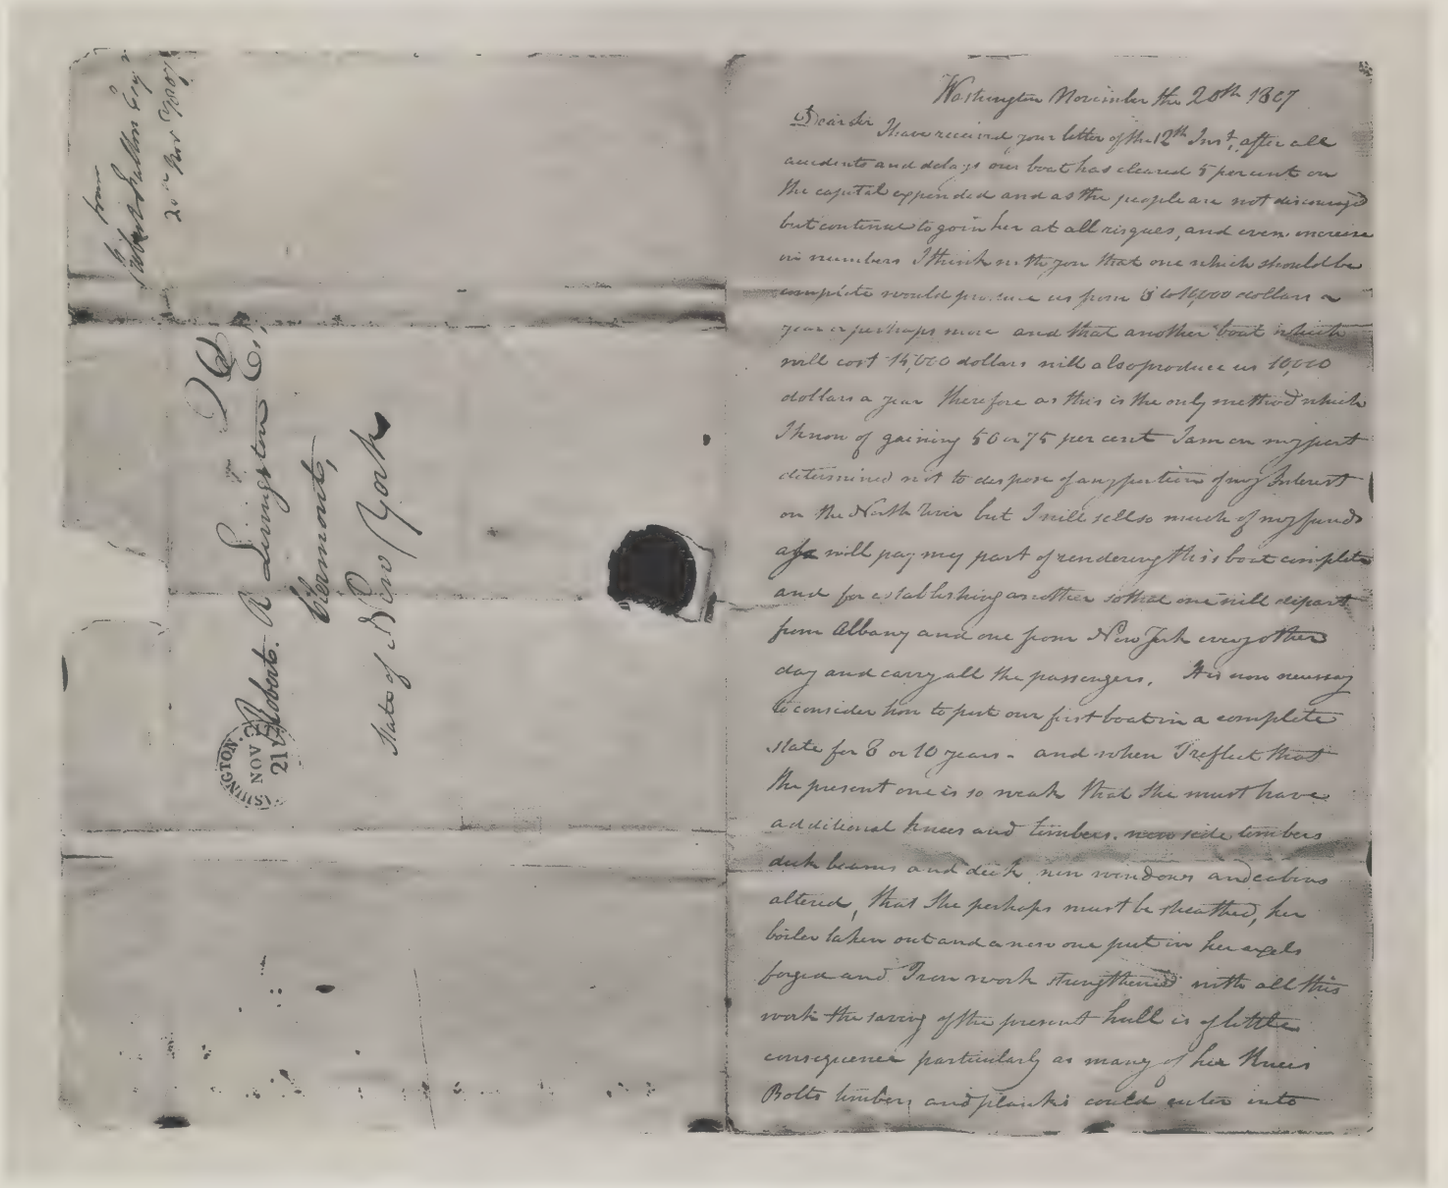
"4th, The Committee do particularly recommend, that an Orator be selected by the Society, for the purpose of addressing the assemblage which will be collected: the Society not to be confined in their choice to a member of their body.

"5th, That a monument, of American materials and workmanship, be erected, with suitable inscriptions, emblematical in its design and execution, and descriptive of the events we are about to commemorate.

"6th, That measures be immediately taken for defraying the expences incident to this serious and important undertaking." The report is confirmed.—Account of the Interment of the remains of 11,500 Am. Seamen, Soldiers and Citizens, who fell Victims to the Cruelties of the British, on board their Prison Ships at the Wallabout during the Am. Rev., etc. (1808), 11–16. See F 11. Feb. 1

" On recommendation of the street commissioner, the common council passes the following resolution: "Resolved that the Street Commissioner take order forthwith, to ascertain by actual survey the heights of the surface of the several Streets between Canal and Art Streets and from Broadway to Varick Streets in order to fix a permanent regulation of the same; and that when the regulated lines are adopted, by the Common Council, at least one substantial markstone or Monument shall be placed at each intersection and at the angular points where he may think necessary, particularly to designate the several heights above high water mark: and that a map and field book of the said survey be made to elucidate the said regulated lines and the position and heights of the said Mark stones or Monuments."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 745–46.

" The canal committee reports to the common council that Thomas Duggan ought to be paid for the part of his land included in Canal St. and also that the grounds of other proprietors will be required for the street. The board thereupon directs the street commissioner to "apply to John Jay, Peter Jay Munro, the Rector and inhabitants of Trinity Church, Thomas Duggan, Walter Bowne, John McCamman, Lewis Lorton, the Heirs of Anthony Lispenard, and all other persons interested in any lands, through which Canal Street, when laid according to the existing resolutions of this Board, will run, and that he have power to treat, on behalf of this Board, with all such proprietors, for so much of their lands respectively, as may be required for the said Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 470, 581–82, 593, 638, 664, 739–40, 760. See also descrip. of Pl. 83-b, III: 559. For the commissioner's report, see F 15.



" The common council allows $2,000 to the ways and means committee (for use in relieving unemployment and consequent distress).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 735. For other allowances, see ibid., IV: 762, etc.

2 A petition of John Stevens (see D 5, 1807) "praying for leave to present a bill for incorporating a company, for the purpose of erecting bridges across the North and East rivers, opposite the city of New-York," is read in the state senate and referred to a committee. —Senate Jour., 31st sess., 26. The report being approved, a bill was introduced "to incorporate the New-York bridge company."—Ibid., 31st sess., 33–34. On Feb. 12, the committee of the whole, to whom the bill had been referred, "reported progress, and asked and obtained leave to sit again."—Ibid., 31st sess., 49. Thereafter, there is apparently no report on the bill. For further criticism of the plan, see F 6.

6 Another citizen writes to the press in opposition to John Stevens's plan for building bridges at New York (see D 5, 1807 and F 2, 1808). He says: "The erection of Bridges across the North and East Rivers having excited considerable interest among almost all classes of citizens, both in town and country, and as the hitherto unrivalled prosperity of New York may, with propriety, be attributed to the unobstructed situation of the harbor a great portion of deep reflection and deliberate enquiry should be exercised prior to commencing an undertaking, which would, in any way, injure the navigation, unless resorted to for the purpose of preventing the approach of an hostile force. . . . The navy-yard is established at the Wallabout. Our navy will be soon increased, both in size and number. Large vessels cannot, without danger, come through the Sound, and the main channel is through the Narrows. According to the intended plan, the bridge over the East river will be built on or near the spot where the last tackings are generally made to gain the navy-yard. . . . In fine, in a political, commercial, and general consideration, the consequences will be serious. Pause! fellow-citizens, and reflect before it is too late. . . ."—Pub. Adv., F 6, 1808.

" "Morgan's Patent Ways" (see Ja 13), a device for "heaving up and repairing vessels of any size under 150 tons," now stationed at Hoboken "opposite the State Prison," are advertised with an engraving of the invention.—Am. Cit., F 6, 1808.

8 The common council approves a memorial to the legislature stating that the arsenal in the city (see Ja 18) is "far from being suitable for the purpose, as it is not sufficiently extensive to contain the military stores and implements which belong to them," and asking permission to grant the building to the "Trustees of the Free School" on condition that they educate the children in the almshouse. The board offers the state a corporation lot 210 ft. square, bounded by White, Elm, Sugar Loaf, and Collect Sts.,

Washington November the 20th 1807

Dear Sir I have received your letter of the 12th Inst. after all accidents and delays our boat has cleared 5 percent on the capital expended and as the people are not discouraged but continue to go in her at all risques, and even increase in numbers I think on the year that one which should be completed would produce us from 8 to 12000 dollars a year or perhaps more and that another boat which will cost 14,000 dollars will also produce us 10,000 dollars a year Therefore as this is the only method which I know of gaining 50 or 75 per cent I am on my part determined not to dispose of any portion of my interest on the North River but I will sell so much of my funds as will pay my part of rendering this boat complete and for establishing another so that one will depart from Albany and one from New York every other day and carry all the passengers. It is now necessary to consider how to put our first boat in a complete state for 8 or 10 years - and when I reflect that the present one is so weak that she must have additional knees and timbers, new side timbers deck beams and deck, new windows and cabins altered, that she perhaps must be sheathed, her boiler taken out and a new one put in her engals forged and her work strengthened with all this work the saving of the present hull is of little consequence particularly as many of her knees Bolts timbers and planks could not be put into

FIRST AND LAST PAGE OF LETTER FROM ROBERT FULTON TO CHANCELLOR LIVINGSTON DESCRIBING PLANS FOR REMODELLING THE "CLERMONT;" DATED NOV. 20, 1807. SEE PP. 1474–75.

The construction of a new boat, my present opinion therefore is that we should build a new hull her knees and floor timbers to be of oak her bottom planks of Live oak her side planks two thick oak for 3 feet high the to be 16 feet wide 110 feet long this will make her near twice as stiff as at present and enable us to carry a much greater quantity of sail, this 4 feet additional width will require 1866 lb additional purchase at the engine moving 2 feet a second or 14 double strokes a minute this will be gained by raising the steam 4 lb the inch as 24 inches the diameter of the cylinder gives 576 round inches at 3 lb to the inch = 1710 lb purchase gained to accomplish this with a good boiler and a commodious boat running our present speed, of a voyage in 30 hours I think better and more productive terms than to gain one mile on the present boat,

The new boat cabins and all complete including our materials will cost perhaps 2000 $
Boiler 800
Iron work in the best manner and men wages during the winter 1200
4,000

To meet this I find that our copper boiler weighs 3930 lb which at 40 cents all the price paid by government will produce — 1570 $
Profits of this year 1100

So that we should have to provide about 1330 $ added to 3000 Bills against us in the Bank — with this arrangement we shall have one Boat in complete play producing about 10,000 dollars a year to enable us to proceed with the second to come out in the spring of 1809. and then our receipts will be about 20,000 dollars a year —

Please to think of this and if you like it by to contract with the carpenter at Hudson for the hull and let him immediately prepare his timbers, knees and planks —
The should be almost wall sided if 16 feet at bottom the need not be more than 8 or deck the wall sides will be strong it fits this mill work and prevents motion in the waves — thus

It is now time to lay her up for the winter nothing should be required from bad weather — the gears will be left for the required —
I cannot be with you before the first week of January
Compliments to all friends write me again
yours truly R Fulton

Do not require the engine in the winds and Waves of this season —

SECOND AND THIRD PAGE OF LETTER SHOWN ON PL. 62.

1808 Feb. 8 for the erection of a new arsenal, or the choice of two other lots between Elm and Collect Sts. The memorial is accompanied by a map (reproduced in the minutes) which shows the three lots. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 752–54; Assemb. Jour., 31st sess., 213–14. See Mr 19 and My 7.

" The common council refers to the committee of defence "A Plan for fortifying the Narrows," by William Bridges, city surveyor, which has been laid before the board.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 749.

11 In accordance with its report of Feb. 1 (q. v.), the Wallabout committee of the Tammany Society issues a circular relative to the projected interment of the remains of the Jersey Prison Ship victims. It says in part: "Various attempts have been made to accomplish this important and interesting object [see, e. g., Ja 31, 1803, and D 10, 1804]. But individual exertions have hitherto proved incompetent; and the public sensibility, too much occupied by other considerations, has not as yet been sufficiently excited by the appeals that have been made to it. . . .

"The Society by which this Committee is appointed are encouraged to think . . . that their exertions to rescue from oblivion, and place on an imperishable basis, the memory of a large portion [Footnote says: "The number of American Prisoners who perished on board the Jersey Prison Ship is supposed to be about 11,500."] of those who perished in the revolutionary contest will meet with suitable countenance and support. . . .

"They have accordingly appointed this Committee, and invested them with powers to form a plan for the Interment of that portion of the Remains of our Countrymen now lying on the shores of Long Island. The Committee have procured from John Jackson, Esq. on whose farm they were deposited, and where they now lie, a Deed of a piece of ground, conspicuously and advantageously situated, being near the head of the Navy Yard, and which will not be affected by any regulations that may hereafter take place. He has already planted some trees of an appropriate description on the spot selected, and has given to the Society permission to inter the bones in such manner and with such solemnities as they may think proper. . . .

". . . the relatives and friends of those unfortunate persons, and also our fellow-citizens at large, are requested to forward immediately, either to Benjamin Romain, Esq. Grand Sachem of Tammany Society, John Jackson, Esq. or the Chairman of the Committee [Jacob Van Devoort], by mail, or other safe conveyance, such information as may be in their possession or knowledge of the Names, Places of Birth, Age, Rank and Families of those persons; together with such circumstances respecting each as may be interesting, and particularly such as relate to their situation and suffering on board the said ship. . . .

"A procession will take place composed of different Societies, Public Bodies, and the Citizens at large, and Military Honors will be paid on the occasion.—An Eulogium will be delivered to the assemblage by a suitable character, due notice of which will be given to the public." As "it is desirable that the monument contemplated to be erected, should exhibit a finished specimen of American taste and patriotism, and will consequently be expensive in its materials and workmanship," contributions are solicited to defray the cost which is estimated at about $10,000.—From original (which was enclosed in a letter to Pres. Jefferson) in Bixby Jefferson Collection. A printed copy of the letter was sent to the recorder on Feb. 24, and is now preserved in metal file No. 33, city clerk's record-room. It came before the common council on March 7 (q.v.).

12 "The American Academy of the Arts" is incorporated by act of the legislature.—Laws of N. Y. (1808), chap. 6. The society had been organized in 1802 (q. v, Je 30, O 27, and D 3) as the N. Y. Academy of Fine Arts.

15 A report is submitted by the street commissioner concerning "the Proprietors of ground required for Canal Street" (see F 1).

John Jay, Peter Jay Munro, and Dominick Lynch, who own all the ground "through which Canal Street will run on the East side of Broadway," offer to cede as much of their property as is needed for Canal St., as well as for Elm and Crosby Sts., on condition that they are released from all charge for opening Canal St. west of Broadway.

John Cameron owns a "two Story frame house and one lot of ground in Broadway at the corner of and upon the grounds required for Canal Street," the lot being 25 ft. on Broadway and 100 ft. along Canal St. For these premises he asks £8,500.

Thomas Duggan, for his plot bounded upon Broadway and running 100 ft. west, containing about 5,000 sq. ft., asks $2,000, and for two plots west, containing about 17,000 sq. ft., he asks $12,200 additional. Other owners of property west of Broadway were Walter Bowne, Trinity Church, heirs of Anthony Lispenard, etc. The report is ordered to lie for consideration.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 5–8. See also descrip. of Pl. 83-b, III: 561. See, further, Mr 7. Feb. 15

" The common council is informed that the "Labourers employed in taking Mud out of the Collect have, in the course of the last week, been totally discharged." The expenses for three weeks' work amounted to $576.55 besides the daily rations issued at the almshouse. On the same day, John Meghan is paid $54.24 for "carting earth to Collect St," and John Bingham is given $500 "to pay Carmen employed at the Collect."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 2, 11. See also ibid., V: 40, 57.

19 "The First Troop of Flying Artillery, will meet To-morrow Evening, the 20th inst. at the Riding House in Magazine-street, at half past 3 o'clock P. M., mounted in Undress Uniform, with Caps and Sabres. Members, whose horses are not in Town, and cannot procure such, will attend on Foot."—N. Y. Com. Adv., F 19, 1808.

22 De Witt Clinton is sworn in as mayor. He replaces Marinus Willett (see Mr 16, 1807).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 12. Clinton had been mayor from 1803 to 1807 (see O 29, 1803). He was succeeded by Jacob Radcliff in 1810 (q. v., Mr 5).

" The common council approves a report of Street Commissioner Hunn which recommends that, before the grounds north of Canal St. between Broadway and Varick St. are regulated, profiles be made of the streets lately ceded by Trinity corporation north of Spring St., "otherwise errors may occur in fixing the lines for the course of the water, which it may be difficult afterwards to correct." Hunn adds that the "great extent of the low grounds, northwesterly of the dwelling late of Col. Burr [Richmond Hill], and which is intersected by Varick St., will make it necessary to be very particular with respect to the surveys in that vicinity, especially as it will be impracticable to convey the water the whole distance from the Bridge in Art Street, without the aid of a Subterraneous passage, or Canal," and advises that stones be placed, "designating the present as well as the intended heights." He also recommends that Clarkson St. be opened, as it will facilitate "the communication to the south side of Greenwich."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 18–20.

" By a vote of 11 to 5, the common council adopts a petition to the legislature stating that "various plans have been suggested at different times to furnish the said City with an abundant supply of water for the preservation of the public health and the prevention of fires. That in the adoption of proper measures to obtain this important object, it may be adviseable to obtain a transfer of the rights of the Manhattan Company in that respect.

"Your Memorialists therefore without considering themselves in the least compromitted [sic] to make the said purchase, and without intending to do so, unless the most favourable terms can be obtained, and unless the interests of the city shall require it, do hereby represent to the Legislature their desire that a Law, authorizing such transfer, may pass."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 22–24. The law was passed on March 25 (q. v.).

25 There is laid before the common council a report of "the implements, Small arms and Amunition for the defence of the State of New York." This includes warlike stores in hand and those required. It is referred to the committee of defence.—From the original list (MS.) in metal file No. 34, city clerk's record-room. See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 25.

" The common council resolves "that this Board, confiding in the solicitude of the Honourable the Legislature of this State to obtain sufficient protection for the port and city of New York, submit to their wisdom and discretion the propriety of making such cessions to the United States both of Soil and Jurisdiction as may be necessary to carry into effect this important object."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 25.

29 The road committee is authorised to cause as much earth to be removed from Art St. "between Broadway and the Bridge" (the bridge in Art St.—see F 22) as may be necessary to open the road to a width sufficient to allow two carriages to pass in safety.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 35.

" The street commissioner reports to the common council that 1808 Feb. 29 Trinity corporation is willing "to cede all the remainder of the ground required of them for Canal Street to the Corporation of New York upon the same conditions as has been proposed by Mr Jay and Mr Lynch: viz^t that they are not to be assessed for any ground further required for Canal Street, or for the removal of any buildings or obstruction therein."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 32. This was accepted on March 21.—Ibid., V: 62. See D 14, 1809.

Mar. 3 The committee on the Collect Pond is authorised to adopt measures for the removal of mud from it.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 40. A week later, the attention of the "Dirt Committee" was called to the offensive black mud, "raised from the bottom of the Collect, by the pressure of the incumbent earth thrown into it to fill it up."—Merc. Adv., Mr 10, 1808.

4 The Regents report to the legislature that the College of Physicians and Surgeons (see Mr 12, 1807) "has been duly organized, and professors and lecturers appointed, for teaching the various branches of medical education. . . .

"The Regents of the University being satisfied this institution is important to the welfare of the people of this state, respectfully recommend it to the patronage of the legislature."—Assemb. Jour., 31st. sess., 186.

7 A "concourse of Labourers out of employment" assembles in the lobby of the city hall, and a committee from the body represents to the common council their distress and inability to support their families. The labourers are directed to meet the committee of ways and means (of the common council) at the almshouse on March 8. The board also appoints a committee "to confer with Captain Whyl-ley, Commandant at Fort Columbus, on the subject of employing as many labourers as possible on the public works at Governor's island."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 46. See Mr 14.

" The common council receives an application "from a Committee of Tammany Society, respecting the interment of the relics of American Seamen, who perished on board the Jersey Prison Ship, at the Wallabout during the revolutionary War, requesting the concurrence and co-operation of the Corporation." This is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 42. The application was a copy of the circular letter of Feb. 11 (q. v.). For the committee's report, see Mr 28.

" The wooden drain on the west side of Broad St., which "has lain since the year 1790 when the pavement was taken up and altered from the old method of conveying the water through the centre of the Streets," is obstructed. The common council orders that it "be opened and repaired as far as it may be deemed, upon examination to require it; and if so rotten as to be irreparable, that a new drain be constructed of wood: but that if a majority of the proprietors, immediately interested, shall, in two weeks, signify their assent, that then, and in that case, the same shall be constructed and laid with brick."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 44–45. See also ibid., V: 92–93.

" The collectors of the Second, Third, Fifth, Sixth, and Seventh Wards complain to the common council that it is very difficult to collect taxes in those wards, "owing to the entire stagnation of business, in consequence of the present situation of public affairs."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 42, 52–53.

" "A Memorial of Thomas Duggan and others, requesting that legal measures may be taken to remove the House of John McCammon, which encumbers Canal Street," is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 42.

" William Bridges is removed from the office of city surveyor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 46. For his reappointment, see April 10, 1809.

11 The state authorises the commissary of military stores to purchase one half acre of ground in New York City for the erection of the new powder magazine (see Ap 3, 1807, and Ja 26, 1808), and appropriates a further sum of $1,000 for the building.—Laws of N. Y. (1808), chap. 48.

14 Col. Hatch, of Boston, exhibits to the common council "a Model of a Floating Battery;" and it is referred to the committee of defence.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 58.

" Secretary of War Dearborn writes to Recorder Van Wyck that in accordance with Van Wyck's request he has given orders "to employ as great a number of labourers as can be conveniently employed to advantage at the different works in and about your city and harbor."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 58–59.

" A memorial of Archibald Gracie and others "praying the interposition of this Corporation to obtain from the Legislature a grant of part of the public ground attached to the government House for the purpose of extending Bridge Street from Whitehall Street to the Battery" is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 50. See Mr. 21. Mar. 14

By act of the legislature, the Seventh Ward is divided into two parts, one of the parts to be hereafter designated as the Tenth Ward. The preamble states that the voting population of the Seventh Ward "greatly exceeds the number of electors of any of the other wards," and it has been "found impracticable to collect the votes . . . for representatives in the legislature of this state, or for members of the common council . . . within the periods for such purposes allowed by the law." The act further provides that in future elections the polls shall remain open "for the period of three days."—Laws of N. Y. (1808), chap. 49. See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 33, 35, 76. 18

The state having already been authorised by the legislature to deed to the United States certain parcels of land on Staten Island and Long Island for fortifications (Laws of N. Y., 1807, chap. 51), the act is now extended to the lands covered by water, between Long and Staten Islands and below the south bounds of the city and county of New York; also to certain lands in the city and county of New York, and to lands covered by water therein; and the law authorises that Ellis or Oyster Island may be purchased or taken by law.—Ibid. (1808), chap. 51. "

On April 27, the sheriff of New York County published a notice that he was commanded by the court of chancery to inquire what loss would be sustained by the owners and tenants of Ellis or Oyster Island by taking this island for fortifications, and that he would execute the writ on May 14 next by taking possession.—Public Adv., Ap 28, 1808. See also Gerard, City Water Rights, Streets, and Real Estate, 45. See My 16 and N 4.

The legislature passes an act empowering the governor to choose one of the three lots offered by the city for a new arsenal (see F 8), and appropriating $13,000 for the erection and equipment of the building.—Laws of N. Y. (1808), chap. 61. See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 76. 19

The common council adopts a memorial to the legislature asking that "no bill may be passed by which the insurance of Lottery Tickets shall receive the sanction of law."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 64. See also Mr 4, 1807. 21

The road committee gives orders for finishing the ends of the bridges on Manhattan Ave., near the powder house, and for reducing Inclenberg Hill on Boston Road.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 61. See also ibid., V: 96. "

The committee on the petition for the extension of Bridge St. (see Mr 14) reports to the common council that "this arrangement will considerably improve the southern district of the city by adding to its beauty, convenience and health, and that as the Legislature are now about making a cession to the United States of the ground through which this Street must pass, a proper season presents to make the application." The committee urges, however, "that no considerations ought to interfere with the views or plans of the United States, and that the application for a reservation sufficient for this object should be made on condition only that a Sufficiency of ground will still remain for the United States, and that it will not interfere with the design or plan of the Chief Engineer." The report is referred to the counsel and attorney of the board with directions to prepare a draft of a memorial to the legislature.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 60–61. See Mr 28. "

The legislature authorises the president and directors of the Manhattan Co. to lease or sell their water-works to the city, and to retain their other rights and privileges for 30 years.—Laws of N. Y. (1808), chap. 88. See also Com. Adv., Mr 22, 1808, and L'Oracle, Mr 30, 1808. The water-works, however, were not purchased by the city.—See Mr 28. 25

As Henry Remsen, Samuel M. Thomson, and others have represented that they and their associates "have become proprietors of the bridge built across Harlem river from Harlem to Morrissania, and of the lot of ground and dwelling-house adjoining thereto," the legislature incorporates them as "the Harlem bridge company."—Laws of N. Y. (1808), chap. 71. The bridge referred to was the Coles Bridge erected in 1796 (see Mr 24 and N 24, 1795). It was the first bridge built across the Harlem River at Third Ave. —L. M. R. K., III: 926. "

The senate and assembly pass the following joint resolution: "That the senators and representatives of this state, in the con- 26

1808 Mar. 26 gress of the United States, be requested to represent in the most earnest manner to the national government, the exposed situation of the port of New-York, and the urgent necessity, in the present menacing state of our exterior relations, of making and applying such appropriations of money as may be fully adequate to the protection of that important part of the state; and that they be further requested to represent the destitute condition of our seamen, the danger of their migrating to foreign countries for employment, and the imperious considerations of justice, humanity and policy which combine in favor of ameliorating the situation of that meritorious description of citizens, and of securing their services in defence of their country."—Senate Jour., 31st sess., 207; Assemb. Jour., 31st sess., 331.

28 The committee to which was referred the communication regarding the burial of the relics of the Jersey Prison Ship martyrs (see Mr 7) reports to the common council "That they have taken the subject of that communication into consideration and while it brings to their recollection an event which must awaken the sensibility of every American citizen, still it seems to have been reserved for the Tammany Society alone to have rescued from oblivion and place on an imperishable basis the memory of a large portion of our unfortunate but much lamented fellow citizens who perished defending the precious rights of our liberty and independence.

"Your Committee are therefore of an opinion that the interment of the bones of our unfortunate countrymen in the manner as proposed will be the means of transmitting to posterity an event which will be deeply engraved on the hearts of every American.

"Feeling on an occasion of this nature the importance of the communication [we] do highly approve of the laudable and patriotic measures adopted by Tammany Society, and do recommend that we give to an undertaking of this nature every encouragement that may be consistent with the duties of the Common Council." The board thereupon resolves that it does "highly approve of the patriotic measures taken by the Tammany Society or Columbian Order for interring the remains of the American Seamen, soldiers and Citizens who perished on board the Jersey Prison Ship during the revolutionary war with Great Britain, and that we will cheerfully cooperate with the said Society by all proper means in carrying the same into effect." A committee is appointed "for the purpose of conferring with the Tammany Society and forming general arrangements."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 70–71. See My 16.

" In accordance with the report of March 21 (q. v.), the common council adopts a petition to the legislature asking for a grant of land to enable it to continue Bridge St. "through the ground adjacent to the . . . Government House to the Battery." A draft of a bill for this purpose is also approved.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 71–72. The desired law was passed on April 8 (q. v.).

" De Witt Clinton writes to Henry Remsen, president of the Manhattan Co.: "I do not think it would be prudent to purchase real property in N York at present. I am inclined to believe that our foreign relations will render all property in that place insecure."—From original in N. Y. P. L.

" The street commissioner reports to the common council "that the walks in every part of the city have become so much broken, and in many places so dangerous to passengers, that very repeated applications are made to him to cause them to be repaired which he is unable to do, but in a very limited manner, as he has no person under him at present to perform that duty." Two men are transferred from the city inspector's to the street commissioner's department to perform the duties mentioned.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 73-74.

Apr. — For an account of conditions in New York at this time, due to the embargo, see Lambert's description under Nov. 24, 1807.

1 An act is passed by the legislature changing the name of "The Society for establishing a Free School in the City of New York" (see F 19, 1805) to the "Free School Society of New York."—Laws of N. Y. (1808), chap. 99.

4 Street Commissioner Hunn reports to the common council "that a very good Well has lately been discovered in Barley Street near Broadway in a dangerous situation which has been covered up some time in consequence of its being on the line of the Street and that an old building covers the north side of the wall of the Well, to which it answers as part of the foundation.

"That There are no Wells within a reasonable distance of this place, and it would be much to the convenience of the neighbourhood if it was made useful: in order to do which it will be only necessary for the Superintendant of repairs to lead it to the Curb in the usual way." The board thereupon directs the superintendent to "open said Well and fix a Pump."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 83–84. Apr. 4

Dr. Hosack presents a memorial to the legislature asking it to purchase his botanic garden and to give him in payment some of the public lands. This is referred to a committee.—Assemb. Jour., 31st sess., 393. On April 7, the committee reported that it was too late in the session to give the matter "that deliberate attention which its importance justly merits," and recommended that Dr. Hosack resubmit his petition next session.—Ibid., 31st sess., 414. See Mr 1, 1809. 5

The state appropriates $100,000 "to aid and expedite the defence of the city and port of New-York."—Laws of N. Y. (1808), chap. 131. 6

The corner-stone of the vault which is to contain the relics of the American prisoners who perished on board the Jersey prison-ship (see F 11) is laid on this day. A procession, consisting of U. S. marines, private citizens, committees of different societies, the Tammany Grand Sachem, "the Father of the Council," the orator of the day, the Wallabout committee, and a detachment of artillery, march from the old ferry at Brooklyn to the ground chosen. The stone bears the following inscription: "In the name of the spirits of the departed free—Sacred to the memory of that portion of American Seamen, Soldiers, and Citizens who perished on board the Prison Ships of the British at the Wallabout during the revolution. "

"This is the corner stone of the vault erected by the Tammany Society or Columbian Order, which is to contain their remains. The ground for which was bestowed by John Jackson—Nassau Island, Season of blossoms. Year of the discovery the 316th of the institution the 19th, and of American Independence the 32d." An oration is delivered by Joseph D. Fay.—Am. Cit., Ap 5 and 12, 1808. See also Account of the Interment of 11,500 Am. Seamen, Soldiers and Citizens, who fell victims of the cruelties of the British, on board their Prison Ships at the Wallabout during the Am. Rev., etc. (1808), 49–60, where the date is erroneously given as April 13. "

Pope Pius VII creates a Suffragan See at New York. This new diocese comprised the state of New York and the eastern part of New Jersey.—Farley, Hist. of St. Patrick's Cathedral, 49. See also Catholic Encycl., XI: 21 et seq. 8

The legislature grants to the common council "so much of the public ground adjacent to the government house in the city of New-York, as shall be necessary to open and extend Bridge-street in continuation from its present limits to the battery," provided the extension of the street does not interfere with the plans of the federal government for defensive preparations.—Laws of N. Y. (1808), chap. 168. See Mr 14, 21 and 28, and My 2. "

"This afternoon at 4 o'clock will be launched from the Ship Yards at Hoboken, a beautiful Steam Boat, built by Mr John Floyd for Col. John Stevens. . . . Boats will be in readiness to convey passengers across from the Hoboken Ferry-House, No. 76 Vesey street. . . ."—Am. Cit., Ap 9, 1808. 9

The legislature passes "An Act for the further Encouragement of Steam-Boats, on the Waters of this State," which extends the Fulton & Livingston monopoly of steam navigation on the Hudson five years for every additional boat they shall establish, provided the whole term of their privileges shall not exceed 30 years.—Laws of N. Y., 1808, chap. 225. 11

The legislature authorises the comptroller to reserve the upper room of the government house for the use of the American Academy of Arts (see F 12).—Laws of N. Y. (1808), chap. 240 (§ 44). The apartments of the Academy in the government house were opened to visitors on Jan. 10, 1810 (q. v.) "

The legislature authorises the surveyor-general to sell $1,000 worth of state lands two years after the passage of this act, and to appropriate the money "towards the interment at the Wallabout on Long Island, of the relics of those American citizens, who perished in the Jersey prison ship during the revolutionary war, and towards the erection of a suitable monument, commemorating their merits and sufferings in the cause of their country."—Laws of N. Y. (1808), chap. 223. "

The common council orders a public stocks put up in the bridewell yard.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 94. "

A petition of Lois Keefe, "present keeper of the Flagstaff at "

1808 Apr. 11 the Battery," is presented to the common council, asking that she be "continued in her station, and offering, if required, an annual rent of $200 for the privilege." The petition is referred to the finance committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 87. See also ibid., IV: 675; V: 77. On May 16, the common council granted the request, on condition that she pay $225 per annum, quarterly, for one year from May 1.—Ibid., V: 127. See Ag 8.

" Under the heading "Removal" (meaning his removal from his "London Hotel," which, in 1807, he renamed the "Washington Hotel"—see Ja 29, 1806; Jl 3, 1807), Robt. Dyde announces "that he will in a short time open for Public entertainment," under the name of "Mount Vernon Hotel," the "noble, spacious elegant and healthy situated House on the Banks of the East River, near the 5 mile stone, on the Harlem Road, built by Col. Smith, and now the residence of Mr. Robertson."—Am. Cit., Ap 11, 1808.

On June 27, Dyde advertised that the house was opened for guests. He made a feature of dinner parties. "Not exceeding three hundred, can be accommodated." "Gentlemen who wish to Board out of the city during the summer will find this a most delightful situation; there is fine fishing, shooting, salt water bathing, excellent stabling, and grass for their horses.

"The distance by water is not more than four miles. The docks are opposite the centre of Blackwell's island; boats can be easily procured at Fly-market, or New Ferry stairs. . . . Mr. Dyde is determined . . . to make use of no extortion, he earnestly entreats the public to give him encouragement . . .

"A quantity of fine Green Turtle of all sizes constantly on hand, fatting in a Crawl made for that purpose in the East River . . . Turtle Soup, every day during the season.

"Gentlemen arriving at this port for the benefit of their health are invited to a view of this beautiful situation."—Pub. Adv., Je 27; Am. Cit., Je 28, 1808. See, further, S 13.

14 Trinity vestry orders "that a proper Deed be executed, ceding the Portion of Canal Street" belonging to Trinity to the city, on condition that the church will not be assessed for any further ground needed for the street, or for the removal of any buildings or obstructions therein.—Trin. Min. (MS.).

17 The Northwest Reformed Dutch Church on Sugar Loaf (Franklin) St. near West Broadway is dedicated.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ap 13, 1808. It remained there until 1854, when the congregation removed to 23d St. between 6th and 7th Aves.—Corwin's Manual, 1004. On May 23, 1870, the corner-stone of a new church was laid at the north-east corner of Madison Ave. and 57th St. This church was dedicated on Oct. 22, 1871.—Exercises at Laying of Corner-Stone, 1870; Program of Dedication, 1871. See also L. M. R. K., III: 936.

18 The common council orders a schoolmaster appointed for the almshouse.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 99. No record of such appointment has been found, and no payments to an almshouse schoolmaster appear in the minutes. The arrangements made by the city with the Free School Society (see Ja 18, F 8, Ag 8, 1808, and D 11, 1809) probably obviated the necessity of the appointment. Interest in the spiritual needs of the inmates of the almshouse is manifest at this same time. Rev. John Stanford, a clergyman of the Baptist persuasion who never presided over a parish in the city, preaches for the first time at the almshouse by invitation.—Sommers, Memoir of John Stanford (1835), 111. In June, 1813 (q.v.), he became chaplain of the city's humane and charitable institutions, and for nearly two decades thereafter served those institutions most advantageously.

" The common council orders the comptroller to "prepare a grant to the State of New York of the soil under water in front of the ground belonging to the State Prison."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 99.

20 "Mr. [Edward] Savage, proprietor of the Museum, we understand, is fitting up at a considerable expence the large building at the corner of Warren-street and Broadway, originally built for a Military Academy; where he intends to exhibit Philosophical, Astronomical, and Optical Experiments. It is probable he will remove the Museum to the same building. . . ."—Merc. Adv., Ap 20, 1808. The building was named the "Lyceum."—Ibid., My 14 and 19, 1808. See also My 26.

25 Fulton's steamboat (see N 20, 1807) leaves New York for Albany. "Since the last season, this boat has been lengthened 20 feet, her machinery renewed, and strengthened and her accommodations made not only elegant, but extremely comfortable. . . . this boat as she now stands, has cost the proprietors 80,000 dollars."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ap 26, 1808. (Society Lib.) Richard Varick De Witt, in 1858, thus described the altered vessel: Apr. 25

"The old North River, as it was familiarly called, was an enlargement and reconstruction of the Clermont, the experimental vessel first built by Mr. Fulton.

"The hull must have been about 150 feet long and 18 wide and about 8 feet deep from the bow for 126 feet. Thence for 24 feet the stern was elevated above the main deck about three feet forming a quarter deck which covered the Ladies Cabin and the lobby between that cabin and the main or dining cabin. The descent into this lobby was by 3 or 4 steps in the centre of the vessel. The starboard corner of the lobby formed the captain's office, the larboard corner the passage into the dining cabin. In front of the Engine Room which occupied the waist of the Vessel, was a small front cabin, and between that and the bow a forecastle for the crew. The engine occupied the centre of the room leaving space on one side for a kitchen and on the other for a pantry and bar.

"The boat was rigged with a small mast passing up through the quarter deck carrying a boom and gaff main sail and a larger mast and top mast forward of the engine, carrying a fore-guard and square sail, over which was set a flying top sail. On a fire stay extending to a short bow-sprit, was a jib, and studding sails were at times carried from the yard, having booms projecting from the gunwale of the boat. The foremast was fitted between upright standards which rose from the keel to 6 feet above the deck, and the mast was pivoted between them so as to be lowered down upon the bowsprit during head winds.

"A pair of yawls, for the landing of passengers were hung on iron cranes on each side of the main deck aft, and the space where the wheel guards finish aft into the hull were shaped into steps, to facilitate the passage into and from the boats when in the water.

"The boiler was between the engine and main cabin, its top being covered with a slightly elevated deck. [Machinery described.]

"The steering was done by a wheel placed between the gallows frame and the smoke pipe . . .

"In the Clermont the fly wheels were hung outside of the hull and just in front of the water wheels . . ."—Sutcliffe, Robert Fulton and the 'Clermont,' 342–45, citing original in N. Y. H. S. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 2, 1808.

" The mayor lays before the common council a communication from a M. Du Buc de Marentille "on the subject of protecting this harbour on principles entirely new, and which are applicable to the defence of any other port or harbour, for the disclosure of which he demands a compensation of $60,000 in case his plan should be adopted, otherwise no consideration to be paid." This is referred to the committee of defence.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 102. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1860), 589. For the committee's report, see My 16.

" A committee of the common council reports that, from Jan. 15 to April 16, the sum of $5,701 has been expended for improvements at the Collect.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 94, 103. See Je 6.

" Because of the "want of a sufficient Basin at the Corporation Dock, on the Hudson river," the common council orders that a pier be sunk from Richard Varick's wharf opposite Partition St., 236 feet into the river, "which, with an L. running northerly, as portrayed on the Map herewith presented, will make a spacious and desireable accommodation for Vessels using the trade of the Hudson."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 104–5.

" John Trumbull writes to Mayor Clinton that he "has finished and placed in the room formerly the Library in the [old] City hall, the pictures which He was directed to paint, of Governor Lewis, & Governor Tomkins [sic], (whole lengths at $500 each), & Gov. Stuyvesant and the late Mayor, (heads at $100 each) amounting to $1200.—of which Sum He rec^{d} on account in January last [see Ja 18] $600." He asks that the balance of $600 "be paid to him at this time."—From the original letter in metal file No. 33, city clerk's record-room. A warrant for $600 is accordingly issued.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 102. The portraits are now in the present city hall.—Cat. of Works of Art Belonging to the City, 6–8.

" The city establishes a public pound adjoining the corner of the Bowery and Gerard St., near the two-mile stone, which is enclosed by a fence.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 102–3.

1808 Apr. 27 A "Map Of the Ground and Improvements belonging to the State of New York on the South of the Government House Between Whitehall and State Streets" is made by John S. Hunn, street commissioner, and Amos Corning, city surveyor. It is reproduced as A. Pl. 3-a, Vol. III.

May 1 According to a published notice of April 26, Jas. Bryden takes possession of the Tontine Coffee House, which, his notice says, "shall be conducted on the European plan. . . . As soon as the House is put in complete repair for the reception of travellers, due notice will be given." His notice further states: "A regular daily list of all vessels, Entrances and Clearances: and a book will be kept for marine intelligence—boxes will be erected for the reception of letters, and due notice given eight or ten days, of all vessels sailing from the port, by whom owned, where bound, and what captain. Also, all the Commercial Papers in the Union will be taken and regularly filed; Lloyd's List, Bell's Weekly Messenger, Cobbett's Monthly Register is wrote for, exclusive of all the London papers, which he expects by the different packets for this port. In a short time he expects to form a correspondence with the different sea ports for marine intelligence—that neither pains nor expence shall be spared to make it one of the first Houses, for intelligence in the Union, by the Public's most obedient humble servant, James Bryden."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ap 26, 1808; Aurora (Phila.), Ag 12, 1808. For his correspondence, preceding his occupancy, with the chairman of the committee managing the affairs of the Coffee House, see the volume (MS.) lettered N. Y. Tontine Coffee House (1789–1823), in the N. Y. H. S. On May 21, he announced his intention of opening the Coffee Room on May 23.—N. Y. Com. Adv., My 21, 1808 (see ibid., Ap 28, 1809; Ap 30, 1810); L'Oracle, My 23, 1808. Regarding the renewals of his lease, see the manuscript volume above cited. From the lease of Jan. 31, 1809, it appears that his rental was $2,800 a year; that "the large Room commonly called the Coffee Room" should be kept "for the use of the merchants and others;" that two certain rooms on the same floor should be used as insurance offices; that "the Long Room above stairs shall not be used for the purposes of Concerts or Balls." An "Observatory erected by Mr Bryden on the top of the House" shall be considered the property of the proprietors.—Depeyster Papers (MS.), I: 47, in N. Y. H. S. See further, Ap 2, 1811.

2 Commissioners, appointed by the legislature to cede ground to the U. S. for fortifications, consent to convey to the common council a plot of ground in the rear of the government house, 48 ft. 8 in. broad, and running from Whitehall to State St., for the purpose of continuing Bridge St. to the Battery, and the board resolves that the street be so extended.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 111, 115. See Je 26, 1809.

" In order to extend Hamilton Square to Albany Ave. the common council agrees to purchase for $2,000 the lot owned by Philip Brasher and James Fairlie at the west end of Hamilton Square between Manhattan and Albany Aves.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 110.

" The street commissioner is directed to open Greenwich St. "as lately ceded by the Corporation of Trinity Church to this Board."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 113. See N 7.

6 The common council conveys to the U. S. the North Battery at the foot of Hubert St., "so long as the same should be used and applied to the defence and safety of the port of New York, and no longer."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 661–62. For the conveyance back to the city, see Mr 28 and Ap 23, 1831.

7 Gov. Tompkins writes to Mayor Clinton that, having inspected the lots offered by the city for an arsenal (see F 8 and Mr 19), he is "fearful that they will not be convenient for the purpose . . . unless the part now covered with water be filled up according to the regulation of Collect Street." He adds: "If to the lot bounded by Elm Street, Sugar Loaf Street and White Street, could be added the strip or piece of ground belonging to the Corporation in the block on the North easterly side of White Street, so that upon the Westerly part of the one the Arsenal might be erected, and the Westerly part of the other might be appropriated for an Arsenal Yard, and if both could be filled up to the permanent regulation of Collect Street, I presume the object of the Legislature may be accomplished." The common council, on May 9, decided to cede all the land requested.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 114–15. The modern boundaries of the block are Centre, Lafayette, Franklin, and White Sts.—L. M. R. K., III: 923. The corner-stone of the arsenal was laid on June 16 (q.v.).

May 9 In a petition to the common council, several inhabitants of Harlem state that the board "agreed and laid out a Road in the year 1806 from Hearlem Cove on the Hudson river, now Called Manhattenville to the Boston Post Road through Hearlem," and that, "in Consequence of the New Bridge now building from Hearlem to Millers or Great Barn Island in the East river," the petitioners cannot be supplied with fuel, etc. without great expense. As "the Proprietors of the ground through which this road is to run are willing to have it opened and cede the ground to the Corporation," they ask that the road be opened "from Kingsbridge road to Hearlem" and be made "passable."—From original petition (MS.) in metal file No. 33, city clerk's record-room. It is referred to the road committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 116. On May 16, the petitioners were given leave to withdraw the petition, because the common council cannot interfere with arrangements now under the authority of the commissioners for laying out roads beyond North St. (see Ap 3, 1807).—Ibid., V: 127.

12 Gov. Tompkins, in a letter to Secretary of War Dearborn, says: "The fund appropriated for aiding in defence of the City and port of New York [see Ap 6] will be cheerfully expended in measures supplementary to those already commenced by the United States. . . .

"Supposing that the next position to which General Government will proceed after the works already commenced are completed, will be the narrows at and between Signal Hill and Hendrick's reef, I have addressed to Colonel Williams a letter on that subject which he will probably communicate to you. Should the commencement of any particular plan of operations at that place be contemplated by the General Government, or should a plan now be proposed which it would be acceptable to them to carry on after the State appropriation is exhausted thereon, I feel confident that in addition to the One hundred Thousand Dollars the citizens in the vicinity will render voluntary services of considerable value."—Hastings, Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, II: 77–78.

13 "The fortifications at Governor's Island progress very rapidly. Between 4 and 500 men are kept constantly employed on the works. The genius of Col. Williams, united with the superior mechanical abilities of Messrs Hillard and Soyder, has rendered this fortification, in point of strength and elegance, equal to any perhaps in the world. They are at present employed in the erection of a circular tower, which, from its situation, will be of great advantage, in case of attack, being placed on a point of the Island, from whence it can command the Narrows, and in fact, the whole of the Channel. It will be completed in about three months. At Bedlow's Island, also, they have commenced the erection of a Star, which will be of great service, and the chains are forgeing, which is to be affixed to the blocks to be sunk in the Channel. When the works are all completed, the general complaint that our harbour is defenceless, will, we hope, cease, as whatever nature and art can furnish will be applied; it will be placed in a posture of defence superior to any in the United States."—Columbian Centinel, My 18, 1808.

16 Gov. Tompkins informs Secretary of War Dearborn that a sheriff and jury have fixed the value of Ellis Island (see Mr 18) at $10,000.—Hastings, Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, II: 85–86.

" The committee on the communication of M. Du Buc de Marentille (see Ap 25) makes the following report: "That they have had an interview with Monsr Du Buc, and from a long conference with him are of opinion, that he is a man of education, talents and military experience: That he professes to have discovered means of defence which are not in use, and are at present unknown to any person but himself and one confidential friend, to whom he has imparted his discovery, and which, if adopted, would render this harbour completely secure against naval attack. That in addition to the advantage of affording complete security to the city, which his plan possesses over all other plans of defence which have been proposed, there would be an immense saving both of time and money; insomuch that the defence and security of the city may be rendered complete and effectual by the 1st day of November next: and the expense attending the same would not amount to one fourth part of the sum which would be required to complete either of the systems contemplated by the Corporation.

"He further proposes to make a full disclosure of his plan and means of defence to the Corporation allowing them fourteen days 1808 May 16 for considering and examining the same, and then to decide, whether they approve of any of the said means and determine to make use of it, or them, in any form or modification whatever, in which case he is to receive the sum of Sixty Thousand Dollars.

"Although the Committee are unable to form any precise opinion on the merits of a plan, the particulars of which have not been made known to them, yet they are impressed with a belief that the disclosure of the means contemplated by Mr Du Buc for the defence of this and other harbours of the United States, might be a public benefit, and perhaps of essential importance to the defence and security of this City, in case of War with any maritime nation. They do not however feel themselves authorized to advise the assumption by this Board, of so high responsibility as the payment of the sum in question, without indemnification from the Government of the United States, to whom it of right belongs, to direct and manage all measures relative to the public defence." The committee recommends and the common council adopts a resolution requesting Mayor Clinton to inform the federal government of the proposals and to express the city's willingness to enter into arrangements with Du Buc providing the United States will defray any expenses which may occur.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 125–26.

" The committee appointed on March 28 (q.v.) reports "That Wednesday the 25th inst [q.v.] have been selected for the purpose of depositing the remains of our unfortunate Countrymen, who perished on board the Jersey prison ship during the revolutionary war with Great Britain, in the Vault lately built for that purpose near the Wallabout, by that Society [Tammany]." Upon the recommendation of the committee it is resolved that "the Bells in this City be tolled on Wednesday the 25th inst. from 12 till two o'clock P. M.," and that "the Comptroller furnish as much powder as will be necessary for the military on that day."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 129–30. See My 23.

" An ordinance passes to pave Robinson St. between Church St. and the college yard, which has never been paved or properly dug out, and which has been built upon throughout, fenced in, and occupied for a cow yard and hog sty. On June 27, John Delamater and others remonstrated against the improvement, stating that the piece of ground situate in Chapel St. between Barclay and Murray Sts. was not a part of Robinson St., but was the property of the corporation of Columbia College.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 131, 180.

" The committee of ways and means reports that it expended $14,228.83½ "for relieving the wants of indigent and necessitous citizens in the course of the last winter."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 123, 124.

17 One "Mrs. Carney" opens a "Punch & Tea House," having the sign of the "Free Mason's Arms." It is "adjoining the premises of Peter Stuyvesant, Esq."—N. Y. Com. Adv., My 17, 1808.

19 In a petition to the building committee for an increase in wages, the stone-cutters at work on the city hall say "that their wages have been formerly 10s. per day during the winter, and 12s. per day during the summer; but that during the last winter, their wages were reduced to 8s. per day." Owing to "the pressure and difficulty of the times," they "cheerfully submitted to this reduction of their wages; but as they do not apprehend that the same causes now exist, they are of opinion that they ought to be raised to their former standard." They now receive 9s. per day, "though the price of provisions is now fully as high as they were, about this time, last year." They plead the insufficiency of this sum to support their families. Masons employed by the committee "have now 10s. per day," although "the wages of Stone Cutters were formerly higher than the wages of the Masons." The wages "allowed to Stone cutters in the different shops in this city are now 12s. per day."—From the original petition (MS.), in metal file No. 27, city clerk's record-room.

20 Secretary of War Dearborn writes to De Witt Clinton: "Mr Du Buc [see Ap 25 and My 16] has made communication to the President of the United States and to this department relative to a system of defence: &c[a] The conditions on which Mr Du Buc proposed divulging his secret system of defense which were as well as I am able to recollect that he was to receive $50,000. with such additional sum as Congress might afterwards be pleased to grant; being of so unusual and extraordinary a nature, as to bar any further correspondence with him on the subject.

"If Mr Du Buc will state explicitly what his system of defence is, it can then be judged of, and if not approved, or if not considered of so much importance as to entitle him to such a sum as he may ultimately demand, I will agree on the part of the goverment of the United States, that no use shall be made of his proposed system or any communication relative thereto made public without his consent. The president of the United States could not consider himself authorized to enter into any agreement that would or might involve a payment of fifty or sixty thousand dollars, without being specially authorized by Congress." When this was read in common council on May 23, it was referred to the committee of defence.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 133–34. May 20

Upon the recommendation of the committee appointed to confer with the Tammany Society (see Mr 28 and My 16), the common council passes the following resolutions: "Resolved that this Board do recommend that the citizens do observe the same day [May 25, q.v.] in as respectful a manner as may be, consistent with their avocations, and that as far as may be convenient, they do unite in setting the same apart, to the commemoration of our brave but unfortunate countrymen, who perished on board of the British prison ships during the revolutionary war, and the interment of their remains. 23

"Resolved that it be recommended that the different Church bells and the bells on board the Ships in the harbour, be tolled seventeen minutes to commence at Sunrise on said day and also during the procession.

"Resolved that it be recommended that the colors of the different vessels in the port be hoisted, halfmast, during the said day.

"Resolved that this Board will attend the procession which is to take place on the said day.

"Resolved that the lessee of the public wharves and Slips and the Ferry Masters be and are hereby requested to cause all boats and vessels of every description, except ferry boats, to be removed from the Slips at the end of the Flymarket and Catherine Market." The committee is directed to "provide suitable accommodations for the passage of the Members of this Board to Brooklyne, on the day of the procession."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 137.

" Eight revolutionary soldiers arrive in New York from Connecticut "for the purpose of attending the interment of the remains of the martyrs at the Wallabout. They had themselves suffered the loathsome imprisonment and are among the surviving few who escaped the horrors of the British hulks."—Pub. Adv., My 24, 1808. See My 24.

" David Joslin, "acting as Marshal for the preservation of the public peace on the Battery," addresses a memorial to the common council, "setting forth that many persons were in the practice of turning Cows upon the Battery, and dusting Carpets and drying clothes thereon, to the great annoyance of the public convenience;" whereupon it is resolved "that the persons entrusted with the care and keeping of the Park and Battery take proper measures to prevent Cows and other Animals from being in the same: and also that they prevent the spreading of clothes and dusting of Carpets therein, and that they immediately remove from those grounds any persons or Animals, intruding contrary thereto; and generally that they immediately remove any objects or persons which injure said grounds or are offensive to public order and decency therein."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 135. Joslin's original memorial is in metal file No. 17, city clerk's record-room.

" The common council directs the street commissioner to open "a Street Sixty feet in width parallel to and one hundred and seventy feet south of Spring Street, from Varick Street to Sullivan Street, through the grounds belonging to the Corporation of Trinity Church and the grounds belonging to Anthony Bowrowson."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 139–40. See D 19.

" The common council allows John J. Schuyler "to establish a Butchers stand at Greenwich in the vicinity of the State Prison."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 136.

24 Arrangements for the "Grand and Solemn Funeral Procession, which is to take place on Wednesday the 25th instant, at the interment of the remains of Eleven Thousand Five Hundred American Seamen, Soldiers and Citizens, who suffered martyrdom on board the Jersey and other British Prison-Ships, in the harbour of New-York, during the American Revolution," are published. The programme includes the following:

"1st. At break of day, a morning gun to be fired from the Battery—the Park—Fort Columbus—the flotilla—and at the 1808 May 24 Wallabout. The Revellie will be beat at all the military posts, and every preparation necessary to carry the grand design into complete effect, will commence, under the direction and superintendence of proper officers previously appointed.

"2d. At sunrise, the flags of all nations to be hoisted half mast, (except the British) on all public places, all military posts, all ships and other vessels, public and private, and wherever they can be displayed. Thirteen minute guns will be fired from each of the posts, &c. &c. during which time all the bells in the city and on board the ships, will join in solemn toll for seventeen minutes.

"At eight o'clock, the citizens, the military and public bodies of all descriptions and orders, will assemble in the Park and its vicinity, in the following order, (the military under the sole direction of Gens. Morton and Steddiford) the citizens and societies, under the controul and direction of Garret Sickles, the Grand Marshal of the day, and 12 sub. do. all distinguished by blue sashes and feathers, except the Grand Marshal, whose sash will be blue relieved with crimson and black." In the procession are to march a trumpeter, heralds, cavalry, artillery, bands of music, Cincinnati, clergy, Wallabout committee, Tammany Society with 13 coffins containing the bones, sailors, civil officers of Brooklyn, Kings County, and New York City, the governor, lieutenant-governor, members of congress and of the state legislature, diplomatic representatives, the Mechanic Society, "Ship-writes," the Hibernian Provident Society, coopers, masons, tailors, hatters, Supreme Concord Society, Freemasons, and the Grand Lodge of the state. These are to be accompanied by banners and floats. The line of march, it is said, will be "From the Park down Broadway to Beaver-street—down Beaver-street to Broad-street—up Broad-street to Wall-street—down Wall-street to Pearl-street—and up Pearl-street to the place of embarkation."—Am. Cit., My 24, 1808. See My 25.

Regarding the probable origin of the exaggerated report that 11,500 men perished on the "Jersey," see Ap 25, 1783. See also Dandridge, *Am. 25 Because of unfavourable weather the burial of the prison ship martyrs is postponed until May 26 (q. v.)—Pub. Adv., My 25, 1808; L'Oracle, My 26, 1808.

26 The remains of the prison ship martyrs are interred at the Wallabout "with a grandeur superior to any thing witnessed in this city since the national rejoicings on the adoption of the federal constitution." One of the newspapers says: "The day was one of devotion. Business was suspended.—The Procession, formed at the Park, agreeably to arrangements previously published [see My 24], moved through the streets to the places of embarkation. The concourse of spectators in the streets, the houses and upon the house tops, was immense. It seemed as if every man, woman and child in the city, was anxious to view this scene of national piety. The wharves and places of embarkation were so thronged as seemingly to menace personal safety, and yet in the passage to and from Brooklyn of many thousand persons, no accident happened—so admirably were the arrangements made and executed. At Brooklyn, twenty Ladies dressed in white with black crape vails joined the procession and added interest to the scene. Arrived at the tomb, the Rev. Mr. Williston delivered an appropriate Prayer in a strain of unusual eloquence. He was followed by Dr. De Witt, the Orator of the day, in an address finely composed and delivered amid the enthusiastic plaudits of the surrounding spectators. When the sepulchral rites were performed, the procession returned to the Park in this city, where it was dismissed."—Am. Cit., My 28, 1808. See also Pub. Adv., My 27 and 28, 1808; An Account of the Interment of the Remains of 11,500 American Seamen, Soldiers and Citizens, who fell victims to the cruelties of the British on board their prison ships at the Wallabout, during the Am. Rev. (1808). About 20 hogsheads of bones had been collected to be interred in the vault.—Ibid. See Ja 9, 1823.

" A "curious exhibition of natural and pleasing Philosophy, Deception and Moralities" is to be held this evening at the "Lyceum, Corner of Broadway and Warren-street" (see Ap 20). The performance will conclude with "the celebrated Spectreology," and the Jersey Prison Ship, the martyrs' monument, and the British evacuation of New York will be shown.—Am. Cit., My 26, 1808. The building on Broadway and Warren St. was at this period also called the "Warren street Theatre" and the "Lyceum Theatre."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Jl 19, 1808; L'Oracle, Jl 30, 1808. As the "dispersed situation of the property belonging to the Corporation, and the very imperfect information . . . of the sites and boundaries thereof, have caused frequent inconveniences," the common council authorises the street commissioner and the comptroller "to procure suitable registers or Field books wherein to insert Maps and descriptions of all the lands, plots of ground Wharves, Docks and Slips and Ferries belonging to the Corporation, whether under lease or otherwise, designating their boundaries and such other circumstances attending them, as may give a full view of all the Corporate estate." The street commissioner is empowered also "to procure a Map and description of all the property bounded by water within the jurisdiction of this Board, South of the line of the Commissioners designating such parts as are now occupied by docks or wharves, and for which no grant has been obtained."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 149–50. 30

A committee of the common council sells to the governor lots 102 and 103, of the Common Lands, bounded on Manhattan Ave., to be used by the state for a powder-magazine.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 144; see also Goerck's Map of the Common Lands, 1796, in real estate bureau of the comptroller's office, and another in the bureau of topography, borough president's office. See Jl 25. "

"An application of Joseph Mangin, late City Surveyor, to be appointed one of the Surveyors for the island," is referred to the committee on applications for office.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 143. There is no report by this committee recorded; Mangin's name does not appear in the City Directory as a city surveyor from 1805 to 1809, inclusive, but from 1810 to 1818 it again appears so designated. "

The street commissioner is directed to open Hudson St. from Charlton (formerly Hetty) St. to Christopher St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 147, 233. "

Pepin & Breschard open a circus, for the display of horsemanship and other performances, at the corner of Broadway and Magazine (now Pearl) St.—L'Oracle, My 28, 30, 31, and Je 2, 1808. For full account of the performers and their enterprise, see Greenwood, The Circus (1909), 104–6. 31

The location was immediately changed to the corner of Broadway and Anthony (now Worth) St., one block above, where the first performance was advertised to take place on June 2.—Com. Adv., Je 1, 1808. These first performances were held in the open air, but, on July 1, the proprietors advertised that they had "erected a covering for the Circus, and that the performances will in future take place in the evenings by illumination."—L'Oracle, Jl 1, 1808. Greenwood describes this circus as "a new wooden octagonal building," occupying five lots, "on the northerly side of Catharine, or Anthony, street, just west of Broadway."—The Circus (1909), 105. It was previously on the east side of Broadway.—Ibid. See also L'Oracle, Jl 4; Daily Adv., O 11, 1808; and see, further, Ag 11, 1809.

The committee on the filling of the Collect is directed "to discontinue, until the further direction of this Board, the filling of the same from and after the 11th instant."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 162. See also ibid., V: 179. See, further, Je 27. June 6

Robert Fulton writes to Charles Wilson Peale: "My steam boat is now in complete operation [see Ap 25], and works much to my satisfaction, making the voyages from or to New York or Albany, 160 miles, on an average in 35 hours. She has three excellent Cabins, or rather rooms, containing 54 births, with kitchen, larder, pantry, Bar, and steward's room. Passengers have been encouraging . . ."—Sutcliffe, Robert Fulton and the 'Clermont,' 268–69. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 2, 1808. 11

A model of Wadsworth's steamboat, a new invention, is on exhibition at the Phoenix Coffee House. The engine is 4 horse-power, weighs 3 tons, and cost $2,500. The boat will go six miles an hour against the wind and the ordinary current of the North River. It is stated that Fulton's boat, with a 21-horse-power engine, of 15 to 20 tons, and costing $15,000, will only go two miles an hour.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Je 11, 1808. "

The common council passes a resolution directing the street commissioner to cause a "foot way to be laid across that part of Marketfield Street which leads from the intersection of Broadway to the Gate of the Battery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 172. 13

1808 June 16 The corner-stone of the state arsenal (see My 7) is laid.—Diary of De Witt Clinton (MS.), in N. Y. H. S.; M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 165. The building, when erected, occupied the block bounded by Centre, Lafayette, Franklin, and White Sts.—L. M. R. K., III: 923.

17 An organ of "domestick manufacture," made by John Geib & Son, organ-builders, of New York, and costing $5,000, is in St. George's Chapel. It has three "sets of Keys." A writer explains the superiority of this firm's products over organs from London.—Repertory, Je 17, 1808.

20 Upon a report of the committee of defence, the common council requests Mayor Clinton to inform the secretary of war that the board, "anxious to obtain security and protection for the City against the hostile attacks of any maritime power, are disposed to avail themselves of such discoveries and improvements in the art or science of fortifications as may tend to ensure that object." The corporation also resolves to guarantee to M. Du Buc de Marentille "the sum demanded by him, viz. $60,000. on condition that he make known to them or such agent or Committee as shall be appointed for that purpose, the particulars of his proposed plan of defence for the harbour of New York, consisting of means of defence not in use, with liberty to publish the same; and on condition that the same be adopted and put in force by the Government of the United States for this city and harbour, with the assent of the Common Council, within the term of Five Years."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 167–69, 174. Secretary Dearborn answered the mayor's letter on June 29.—Ibid., V: 193–94. Regarding De Marentille's plan, see further N 7.

23 An act of parliament permits the importation into Great Britain of merchandise of American growth and manufacture.—Annals of N. Am., 505.

27 Abraham Alstin informs the common council "that the soil taken out of the Collect is a species of Turf or peat and capable of being converted into fuel."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 180. On July 18, the board ordered its committee to prepare the soil for this use.—Ibid., V: 211. See N 14.

" "A Memorial of Garrit H. Van Wagenen and others setting forth that the proprietors of the Lutheran burial ground were about enclosing the same whereby the communication from Carmine Street, through Clarkson Street to Greenwich Street would be interrupted" is referred by the common council to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 181.

" The common council orders that "the diameter of all wells hereafter to be made, be not less than six feet; and that said wells shall contain not less than three feet depth of water."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 185.

July 4 A new form of pictorial and hydraulic exhibition is introduced at "Columbia Garden, opposite the Battery," representing various scenes. Transparent painting, a peculiar art of the period (see 1807), is another special feature.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv. (in Society Lib.), Jl 1, 1808.

" The "Royal Tiger Nero," at the "Corlear's Hook Circus," is to be let loose "to a large Wild Bull, and immediately after a large Wild Bear."—Am. Cit., Jl 1, 1808. See also L'Oracle, Jl 2, 1808.

8 The scarcity of water in the Manhattan Company's pipes is the subject of a complaint in one of the newspapers.—Com. Adv., Jl 8, 1808. See also Ag 25, 1808; and My 9, 1809.

11 The "Summer Theatre, at Vauxhall" is advertised to open on this day with a comedy and a farce. "The Boxes being now under tight covering, and the Pit partly enclosed with canvass, the performances will not be put off on any account whatever."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Jl 11, 1808; and see the Pub. Adv., Ag 17, 1808. See, further, Ag 30.

18 Street Commissioner Hunn brings to the attention of the common council "several growing evils now in full practice in the city, in opposition to the direct orders of the Corporation." These include the obstruction of the streets by the erection of posts for awnings, the uneven raising of gutters and the consequent interruption to the flow of water, and the extension of steps farther into the streets than the law allows.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 208–10.

25 "The Corporation are respectfully informed that the persons employed in digging the foundation of the Magazine in the Old Potter's Field, daily dig up coffins and dead bodies which are disposed of in the most indecent and disrespectful manner. Those who have friends interred there sensibly feel the indignity and request that they may be buried in a more suitable way."—L'Oracle, Jl 25, 1808.

July 25 The common council makes arrangements with the N. Y. Hospital for the reception into that institution of the maniacs and lunatics now in the almshouse.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 211, 216.

" 26 The trustees of the First Presbyterian Church appoint a committee to prepare and present to the common council a memorial stating that the church possesses "Deeds which convey to them a lot of ground bounded in Wall Street & running from King's Hotel to the Federal Hall," 24 ft. and 2 in., front and rear, and 100 ft. deep.—Proceedings of the Trustees (MS.), Vol. II. The memorial was presented to the common council on Aug. 8.—See N 14.

Aug. 8 The arsenal at the corner of Chatham St. and Tryon Row, erected in 1798, is conveyed by the city to the Free School Society.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 106, 111, 200–2, 227–28; City Grants, Liber E: 498. The arsenal was demolished, and the first school building erected by the Free School Society was built on its foundation (see Ag 28 and D 11, 1809). The Man. Com. Coun. (1866), 604, is in error in referring to this as Free School No. 2.

" The common council receives a petition from Lois Keefe (see Ap 11), "lessee of the Flagstaff at the Battery, setting forth her distressed situation and praying an abatement or modification of the terms." The petition is referred to the finance committee which reported on Aug. 29 that, when they recommended renting the Flagstaff to Mrs. Keefe for $225, they had done so because she was a widow, although they had received offers of $250 a year and upwards; that, as they were informed at the time that with attention $800 or $1,000 yearly could be made, they therefore recommended that her petition be refused.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 225, 242. See also descrip. of Pl. 59, I: 435.

" There are 238 wells and pumps in the city exclusive of the cistern pumps in the almshouse, jail, and city hall.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 232–33. On Feb. 13, 1809, the number of pumps had increased to 249.—Ibid., V: 433.

23 A "most superb Poll, ornamented with a very elegant cap, dedicated to American Liberty," is to be erected by the Republicans on this day "near the upper end of Crosby street, in the Eighth Ward of this city."—Pub. Adv., Ag 20, 1808.

25 The soap and candle factory and the dwelling of Edward Watkeys in Nassau St. are destroyed by fire, his wife, daughter, and three black children being burned to death. The fire also consumes "Thorburn's Seed and Plant House; Mr. Brook's large Paint Shop, the second floor occupied as a School Room by the Rev. Mr. Barry; the Brick School House, belonging to the Presbyterian Church; a School House lately occupied by G. Baron," and several other buildings. "The roof of the City [Society] Library was several times on fire."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ag 26, 1808; Am. Citizen, Ag 26, 1808; Proc. of Trustees of First Presby. Ch. (MS.), Vol. II. Another paper commenting on the fire said: "Every exertion was used by the firemen and citizens to check the fury of the flames, but their efforts were for a considerable time of no avail, owing to the scarcity of water. In fact, until a supply was procured from the floating engine at the Fly Market slip, there could not be said to be any thing done. The pitiful nature of the Manhattan [Company's] regulations has been lately glaringly displayed. It is a public abuse which calls loudly for redress, and we hope, the late alarming circumstances and the injustice sustained by our fellow citizens on such occasions will induce the Corporation of the City to adopt measures to remedy the evil."—L'Oracle, Ag 26, 1808. Donations were later solicited throughout the wards of the city, and more than $4,500 was raised for Edward Watkeys and the other sufferers by the fire.—Ibid., Ag 27, 29, S 2, 3, 17, and O 15, 1808.

30 Fire destroys the distillery and other buildings at Delacroix's Vauxhall Garden in the Bowery.—L'Oracle, Ag 31, 1808; Pub. Adv., S 1, 1808. A notice was published on Sept. 3 that this fire, having deprived the Messrs Delacroix "of almost every article necessary to a continuance of their business," the garden would "be reopened one night only for the benefit of the proprietors," on Sept. 5.—Pub. Adv., S 3 and 5, 1808. Delacroix' spectacular exhibitions were revived here on July 4, 1809 (Am. Cit., Jl 3, 1809), 1808 and again a year later. A more extensive fire destroyed the entire Ag 30 premises on Dec. 27, 1833 (q. v.).

31 The "Republican Greens" are to parade at Bunker Hill (the Bayard place).—Pub. Adv., Ag 31, 1808.

Sept. The common council directs the superintendent of repairs to 5 "cause the high ground in Pottersfield to be drawn into the valley and levelled in such manner as to render the same more suitable for the purposes of a Cemetery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 255.

" The common council agrees that a ferry be established between Manhattanville and New Jersey, and that it be leased to Thomas Magrath for 10 years, the rent to be $10 per annum for the first half of the term and $20 per annum for the residue.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 134, 251.

8 "The Street Commissioners deem it expedient to inform the public that the following persons are the only regular surveyors of this city, and that no other person or persons are authorized to give the lines of streets for the purposes of building; or to take any other surveys whatever. Samuel Stilwell, Bowery, near the Bull's Head. Charles Loss, Hudson street, near the corner of Charlton street. Amos Farning, Greenwich street, near Hubert street. Benjamin Taylor, New Bath, near Battery. Evrit Bancher, Hudson street, facing Duane street park. The street commissioner's ex-officio, at his office City Hall. The public are further informed that no building can be erected, fronting on any street of this city, unless the lot shall have been first surveyed, by one of the persons above mentioned under the penalty of fifty dollars for each offence—That no lot will be considered as surveyed agreeably to the law, until a certificate thereof, from one of the said surveyors, is deposited in this office, as evidence of such survey."—Pub. Adv., S 8, 1808.

10 "The Managers anxious to merit a continuance of the extraordinary patronage with which the Theatre was honored during the last season, have spared no pains and expence to re-embellish the internal part of the Theatre. . . . The whole has been repainted. . . . The custom of standing on the seats in the Pit is highly indecorous, and the managers earnestly request that it may not be renewed. . . ."—N. Y. Com. Adv., S 10, 1808. This was the Park Theatre. The "Audience part of the Theatre" was also "entirely newly painted and decorated" in 1809.—Ibid., Ag 15, 1809.

12 "The Street Commissioner being directed by the Board to enquire of the proprietors of ground required for opening Canal Street, whether they would wait five years for such sum as might be awarded to them by a Jury to be impanneled for that purpose," reports what various owners reply. John Jay, Peter Jay Munro, Dominick Lynch, and Trinity Church have already consented to cede the street on condition that they will not be taxed for opening any part of it, and the board has agreed to this. "Walter Bowne, Thomas Duggan, John McCamman, James Neilson and the Heirs of Anthony Lispenard are the only persons having claims against said Street which remain to be adjusted; the former awards taking in all the other proprietors." The commissioner reports the reply of each of these.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 212, 263, 273. See D 12.

13 Under the heading "Mount Vernon Races," Robt. Dyde, proprietor of the Mount Vernon Hotel (see Ap 11), says, in a published announcement, that "having made round his Hotel a race course of an exact mile, which is allowed by judges to be excellent, respectfully acquaints his friends and the public that the races will commence on Wednesday the 21st of the present month, and the two following days—the winning horse on each day to be entitled to a handsome purse." A list of the races and rules follows.—Pub. Adv., S 13, 1808. Races were again held in October. —Am. Cit., O 17, 21, 1808.

Dyde also announces "that Major Warner's squadron of Cavalry, attended by the Flying Artillery, will be reviewed in his spacious meadow, in front of the Hotel, on Monday next, 19th instant, when refreshments of every kind can be furnished, and parties can be accommodated with dinners, &c."—Pub. Adv., S 13, 1808. Some time prior to Nov. 29, a review was held there by Gen. Morton. On this occasion, Dyde was subject to severe criticism for serving poor food.—Am. Cit., D 1 and 2, 1808; Boston Gaz., D 10, 1808.

De Voe's newspaper index (at N. Y. H. S.) makes no reference to Dyde or the hotel in 1809 or 1810. In 1811, a notice of a fox hunt refers to (what is probably the same place) "Bellevue, late Dyde's Hotel."—Columbian, F 5, 1811. Cf. Jl 18, 1811. For a much later reference, see Mr, 1821. The Republicans of New York City hold a meeting at Martling's 15 tavern and adopt the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That this meeting continues to repose full confidence in the patriotism and wisdom of the President and of the Republican Majority in both houses of the Congress of the United States.

"Resolved, That in our opinion the Embargo is a prudent, just, and politic measure . . . —that a repeal of the same, under existing circumstances, would probably involve us in the calamities of War; and, that it is therefore the duty of every faithful citizen to afford the Administration his firm and decided support.

"Resolved, That the present opposition to the Measures of the Administration, merits the severest reprehension of every true friend to the National Independence and Commercial Rights of the United States; particularly as such opposition may encourage foreigners to persist in withholding from us our just rights, and stimulate them to acts of future hostility and aggression.

"Resolved, That a committee be appointed to prepare and report a respectful Address to our Republican fellow-citizens of the United States. . . .

"Resolved, That this meeting do approve of the Nomination made by a majority of our Republican Representatives in Congress, of James Madison as a candidate for the office of President, and Geo. Clinton for the office of Vice President of the United States.

"Resolved, That a general meeting of our republican fellow citizens, be convened at this place on Tuesday evening next, the 20th inst. [q. v.]."—Address of the Republicans of N. Y. to their Republican Fellow-citizens of the U. S. (N. Y., 1808), 3–4.

Joseph Woodworth publishes a notice that he now occupies " "That well known Tavern formerly kept by William Marriner, situate in Hearlem." He calls it the "Sign of the Golden Ball."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., S 15, 1808; and see Pub. Adv., Je 3, 1809. Marriner's Tavern, built by Capt. Benson, stood on the west side of the Kingsbridge Road, opposite the Church Farm.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 613; L. M. R. K., III: 979.

The common council passes the following resolutions: "Re- 19 solved that whenever the Commissioners for laying out Streets &c. [see Ap 3, 1807] find that in making any survey they shall be obliged to cut trees or to do any other damage more than which is the mere necessary consequence of entering and surveying on the lands, they be requested to confer with the owners of such lands and to have the lines run by amicable arrangements in the presence of such owner or of some persons appointed to assess the damage if any, or otherwise to have such damages amicably assessed the said Commissioners, in their discretion, first reporting the case to this Board where they shall apprehend the damages will be considerable, and in all cases reporting the assessments of damages as soon as made

"Resolved that in all such cases of damages amicably assessed this Board will provide for the payment thereof till further order be taken thereon.

"Resolved that in all cases where the owners shall refuse at all to suffer the necessary obstructions to be cleared away the Commissioners be requested to report the nature and circumstances of the case with the probable amount of the damage to this Board." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 270. See O 10.

The common council authorises the payment of $80 to James " Hardie "for his services in transcribing the Manuscript laws of the Corporation, reading the proof sheets and making an Index to the last edition of the laws."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 270.

In accordance with the resolution of Sept. 15 (q. v.), a meeting 20 of Republicans is held at Martling's and an address to the Republicans of the United States is adopted. This reviews the history of the war in Europe, the various decrees interfering with American commerce, and the attacks upon American ships, including the "Chesapeake Affair." It urges support of the administration, stating that "upon the preservation of the general republican party, under Providence, the liberties and happiness of these United States depend."—Address of Republicans of N. Y. to their Republican Fellow-Citizens of the U. S. (N. Y., 1808).

26 Turtle soup was one of the famous viands of the time in New York. It was advertised on this day by Edw. Bardin, for example, to "be cooked to-morrow at the Phoenix Coffee House."—Pub. Adv., S 26, 1808.

Various published notices of meetings, business transactions, etc., which occurred at this tavern, and at the Merchants' Coffee House which preceded it on the same site, were copied from contemporary newspapers by John Austin Stevens in two octavo handbooks (MS.), now preserved in the N. Y. H. S.

Oct. 9 U. S. Senator Sam'l L. Mitchill writes to Judge Ambrose Spencer a description of the fortifications undertaken by the war department for the defence of New York. "In the beginning of April last a sentiment was expressed in an answer to the concurrent resolutions of our state legislature, by myself and my colleague, Gen. Smith, that out of the money appropriated by congress for the general defence, New York should largely participate . . . Gen. Dearborn has directed a great deal of work to be done. A foundation is laid for much more. . . . The chief engineer, who planned these fortifications, and who actually superintends their construction, is Col. J[onathan] Williams, . . . director of the military academy at West Point, and president of the American Military Philosophical Society." His talents "in projecting the works, have been very ably seconded by capt. Whiley in carrying them into operation. . . ." John McComb was said to be one of the architects of Castle Garden.—See My 25, 1853. The plan of this battery has also been attributed to Lieut. Jos. G. Totten.—Guernsey, N. Y. City & Vicinity during the War of 1812–15, I: 68–69. Dr. Mitchill continues: "I shall describe them as they appeared on my last visit to them a few days ago . . .

"I. Governor's Island.

"1. Fort Columbus is now finished excepting one barrack just ready to be covered, and the opening in the covert way opposite the gate, purposely left for the conveyance of materials. It consists of four bastions, three curtains and an attached casemated ravelin with two retired flanks, the whole capable of mounting 97 guns, and might without inconvenience bring half its force at one instant against any passing ship, while it completely commands the East river . . .

"2. At a point of the island extending westward to the very edge of the channel a permanent foundation of solid masonry has been placed on a bed of rocks, which till now much endangered the navigation at the entrance of the East river as this point was totally submerged except at very low water; on this foundation is erecting a castle, being 3-6 of a circle of 400 feet in diameter, which is designed to be casemated with bomb proof arches, and to cover two tier of heavy metal . . ." This account of "the Castle" closes with the statement that "within its walls is an inexhaustible well of the finest water, from which all the shipping of New York might be watered with ease."

"II. Bedlow's Island.

"The front wall of the mortar battery which commands all the channel and anchoring ground to the full distance that a shell can be sent, is nearly up to the intended height; the form given to this front is irregular, on account of the position of the island, and the irregular shape of its bank. . . . This battery will be on the level of the ditch of a star front in its rear, which not only will command it, but will command and protect Ellis's island. The excavations for this work are made, and the mason work will be carried on at the opening of the spring, in the mean time the work will go on until the severity of the winter puts a stop to it.

"III. Ellis's or Oyster Island.

"The old wooden parapet is taken down at Ellis's island, and the platform for a gun battery is completed, there only remains to wall up the parapet, when it will be ready to receive its cannon.

"IV. City of New York.

"1. A foundation is preparing by encompassing with a polygon of blocks a space of two hundred feet diameter in a S. W. direction off the flag staff of the old battery, the blocks will form seven sides of an octagon, two sides on the town side being made into one, the blocks are nearly all sunk, and they will be worked up above high water mark before winter, so as to be perfectly safe from the ice; within the space that will be enclosed, a foundation will be laid, and castle erected similar to that of Governor's island already described." (This is the present Castle Garden. For the beginning of this defensive work, see Je 5, 1807.) "2. Off Hubert Street a foundation is already laid for a circular battery of about twenty guns in one tier . . . [See also Ja 6, 1809.] Oct. 9

"V. The height of Red Hook and the Narrows may be contemplated as scites for fortifications, to be erected as soon as arrangements can be made. I might easily prolong my communication, by informing you of the laboratory magazine and arsenal, now building under the direction of col. Williams, at the place where the Kingsbridge and Bloomingdale roads separate, about two miles and a half from the city hall. . . ."—Aurora (Phila.), O 21, 1808, citing the *N. Y. Merc. As the names of the members of the several fire engine companies are by law to be reported to the common council in November, City Inspector Pintard suggests that certain blanks be printed and furnished to the companies so that the returns may be uniform. He has made "a rough Register of the whole Fire department," and proposes "that a Book be provided to record the same, whereby ready access can at all times be had as well to ascertain the members of the respective Companies, as to furnish certificates in evidence that such persons are exempted, agreeably to Law from serving in the Militia or on Juries." The report is confirmed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 284–85. "

The trustees of Columbia College direct their clerk "to insert in one or more of the daily Papers printed in this City the following Advertisement: The Board of Trustees of Columbia College finding it to be commonly reported and believed that Students may be admitted into the College with less qualifications than are prescribed by the Statutes; and wishing to arrest the progress of an opinion injurious to the Reputation of the Seminary, and of which the effects may be fatal to the solid education of many Youth; do hereby inform the Public that no part of the said Qualifications can be dispensed with, and that no Student will hereafter be admitted who shall not be well prepared in all the parts thereof."—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1754–1904, 87. 15

1808 Oct. 17 By a vote of 8 to 7, the common council resolves that a committee be appointed "with power to settle . . . by compromise or reference all demands made in consequence of damage, not wantonly or unnecessarily committed by the Surveyors or others employed under the Commissioners now surveying this island: and that the same Committee be instructed to report amendments to be proposed to the Honorable Legislature of this State to the Law under which the said Commissioners act."—*M. " The common council receives an invitation from Capt. John Mc Lean, commissary of military stores, "to attend the ceremonial of depositing the State Artillery and Military Stores in the New Arsenal tomorrow at 11 o'clock A.M."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 288.

19 John Stevens issues proposals for commencing a line of steamboats from New York to New Brunswick, and from Trenton to Philadelphia. He says: "The application of steam to propelling vessels has been the favourite object of the subscriber for upwards of twenty years past. . . . That the public may feel proper confidence in the competency of the subscriber to carry into effect the objects embraced in these proposals, he begs leave to state the performance of a Steam Boat he has built with a view to the navigation of the North River, in a voyage he made to Perth Amboy. . . . Were his individual funds adequate to the completion of the object of the proposals, it would . . . be his interest to retain the whole in his hands. But he is induced by another consideration to make the following proposals. He wishes to engage as many of his fellow citizens as possible to embark in the undertaking, in order that they may feel a warm interest in the promotion of an object of so great public utility." Stevens engages to build, before May 1, 1809, "a vessel of 100 feet keel, and 15 feet beam, of the best materials, which shall possess every convenience and accommodation requisite for a passage boat between New-York and New Brunswick, on board of which he will place a steam engine, which shall give her a velocity of at least five miles an hour, but probably much more." There are to be 1,000 shares in the enterprise at $75 each and Stevens "will warrant the payment of 8 per cent per annum in half yearly payments to any and every subscriber who will release to him one half of the neat revenue on each share exceeding 8 per cent per annum."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 20, 1808. See O 27.

21 Col. Jonathan Williams sends to Gov. Tompkins a comprehensive plan for defences at the Narrows.—Hastings, Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, II: 138–45.

24 Simeon De Witt reports to the common council that the commissioners for laying out streets, etc. (see Ap 3, 1807) have finished their work for this season, and requests a warrant for $191.27 to discharge the accounts of persons employed by them and for incidental expenses. The warrant is immediately issued.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 292. See O 19, 1809.

" The common council assents to Gov. Tompkins' petition for selling a gore of land at the Battery, bounded by Pearl, Bridge, and State Sts. and by Mr. Gracie's land on the south; and of another gore of land fronting on Whitehall St. and running to a point on the south side of Bridge St. By the cession of ground near the Battery to the United States for an arsenal, and to the city for the extension of Bridge St., these gores had been isolated from the rest of the public land. The proceeds from the sale are to help pay for the arsenal.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 292–93.

" The street commissioner presents to the common council a deed of cession from Anthony L. Bleecker and Mary, his wife, for all the streets running through their property on the west side of Broadway, namely, Bleecker, Houston, Mercer, Wooster, Green, Lawrence, Thompson, and Sullivan Sts. The only condition of the grant is the regulating of part of Bleecker St., which is already accomplished and paid for by the city. The deed is referred to the counsel for his approbation.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 298. It was accepted on Oct. 31, and ordered to be filed in the comptroller's office.—Ibid., V: 300.

" Assessments for filling Varick St. from Provost to North Moore St. and for paving Provost St. from Hudson to Chapel are confirmed by the common council and a collector appointed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 298.

27 "We understand that the Subscription for one hundred shares in Mr Steven's 'New-York and New Brunswick Steam Boat,' [see O 19] was opened at New-Brunswick on Tuesday last [Oct. 25], and that upwards of fifty shares were subscribed for during the course of the day. The remaining shares, it is expected, have, before this time, been subscribed for. The Subscription for one hundred and fifty shares will, agreeably to proposals, open at 12 o'clock tomorrow, at the Tontine Coffee House. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 27, 1808. See N 1. Oct. 27

" "A Friend to useful Institutions and Justice" addresses to John Stevens through the press a series of questions regarding his proposal to establish steamboats to New Brunswick and Philadelphia (see O 19). These include queries regarding his patents, the probable conflict with the privileges granted to Livingston and Fulton, the possibility of navigation by night, etc.—Am. Cit., O 27, 1808. Stevens answered on Oct. 28, that he had obtained a patent for the boiler he intended to use, that his boat would "in no wise interfere with Mr Fulton's or Livingston's inventions," that "Gentlemen of the highest respectability at New Brunswick give it as their opinion, that the boat may be run at any time backward and forward that necessity may require," etc.—Ibid., O 28, 1808. See N 1.

31 An assessment for filling sunken lots in Broadway between Broome and Spring Sts. is approved by the common council and a collector appointed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 304.

Nov. 1 "Mr Fulton has commenced a second Boat for passengers to and from New York and Albany; she is on a larger scale than the one in operation, and is to start in May next, so that one will leave New-York and one Albany every third day. Under Mr Fulton's patent Mr John R. Livingston is building a Steam Boat to run between New York and New brunswick, to start in April. Two are in contemplation under Mr Fulton's patent, to act as ferry boats between N. York and Paulas Hook. They are to be constructed so that carriages, horses, etc. etc. can drive in at one end and out at the other with the facility they enter on a bridge. . . . By Mr Steven's proposals [see O 19] he has in contemplation a line of Steam Boats from New-York to New-Brunswick, and from Trenton to Philadelphia, in which he calculates profit of 33 1-3 per cent, and offers in warrant 8 per cent—but how can he do this with Mr John R. Livingston's boat for a rival, which will carry at least half the passengers? There is also a rumor about town that Mr Steven's boat is so near an imitation of Mr Fulton's leading principles as to encroach materially on his patent; and he will contest Mr Steven's right to use such principles. Indeed it is somewhat curious that Mr Stevens should give his attention to Steam-Boats for 20 years and never produce anything which could give a clear view of success, until near two years after Mr Fulton's boat had been running as a public packet, and her mechanism had been exposed to every artist who chose to examine it. We sincerely wish an honest success to every useful enterprise; but there is no property more sacred than that produced by the mind; and none which our laws should guard with greater care."—Am. Cit., N 1, 1808. See D 2.

4 In a message to the senate Gov. Tompkins says: "The title of Ellis's or Oyster Island, in the Bay of New-York, has been obtained by a course of proceedings in the Court of Chancery [see Mr 18 and My 16] . . . and a conveyance of the title of the people of this State to the United States, was thereupon executed. . . .

"The accounts of disbursements under the act for the defence of the Northern and Western frontiers, and also under the act for erecting a State Arsenal in the city of New York [see Mr 19], are also hereunto annexed. Two of the blocks or lots of ground offered by the Corporation in exchange for the old Arsenal [see F 9] have been obtained; the building erected is calculated to accommodate all the ordnance arms and Military stores in the city of New York . . . to erect the workshops and gun houses, &c., I beg leave to recommend the sale of two small gores of land belonging to the state, in the vicinity of the government house, in the city of New York. In consequence of a cession . . . of a part of the public ground to the United States, for an Arsenal, and of another part to the Corporation of New-York, for the extension of Bridge Street [see Ap 8], those two gores have been separated from the land of the State, connected with the government house, and are almost useless for public purposes.

"The quantity of ground to be procured for a powder magazine, was limited to an half acre [see Mr 11]. Upon enquiry, and after earnest endeavors to accomplish the requisite purchase, it was ascertained that individuals to whom the purpose to which 1808 Nov. 4 the ground was intended to be applied, was disclosed, would not dispose of that quantity without an extravagant consideration. An application was therefore made to the Corporation of New-York, who were so liberal as to enable me to purchase the leasehold estate, and their reversionary interest in a lot of land, containing, by estimation, ten acres, inclusive of streets, for two thousand five hundred dollars. The lot is nearly square, and is bounded on the sides by streets opened, and to be opened."—Senate Jour., 32nd sess., 14.

6 The Cedar St. Presbyterian Church is opened for worship.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., N 7, 1808. The cost of the ground and the edifice was between $40,000 and $50,000. By the sale of pews, this amount was raised in a few hours, completely relieving the church of debt—the first instance of the kind in New York.—Ibid.; Miller, Memoir of Rev. John Rodgers, 271, 419; Goodrich, Picture of N. Y., 220. The building was demolished in 1834 (q. v., Ja 8). See also L. M. R. K., III: 930.

7 The committee of defence reports that M. Du Buc de Marentille (see My 20) has offered to allow the city one year within which to ascertain the efficacy of his plan for securing New York from naval attack, on condition that if the plan is adopted for the city he is to receive $120,000, and if it is adopted for any port other than New York, he shall have $60,000. The common council orders that the report "lie for consideration."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 309–10. See My 8, 1809.

" The common council directs the street commissioner to open Greenwich St. from Charlton to Christopher St., agreeable to the cession made by Trinity Church.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 304–5, 310. See Je 19, 1809.

" Jacob Wilkins is granted permission to build a pier in the centre of his property on the Hudson River at Cortlandt St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 308. See also ibid., V: 332–33, 342. See Mr 27, 1809.

" An L has been made at the end of the Jay St. pier.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 313.

10 Upon reading a petition from Ezra Weeks and others, desirous to establish a fire company in the vicinity of St. John's Church, Trinity vestry orders "that a Corner of the Cemetry [sic] of that Church be appropriated for an Engine House."—Trin. Min.

12 There is a circus at Corlear's Hook; here "the wonderful exploits of The Learned Bear" are shown.—Pub. Adv., N 12, 1808.

14 The corporation of the First Presbyterian Church, on Aug. 8 (see Jl 26), presented a memorial to the common council setting forth a claim to the whole of Nassau St. between the old city hall and the property of Charles Gardner in Wall St., occupied by David King, and to part of the ground on which the west end of the city hall stands. The corporation counsel and street commissioner to whom the memorial was referred now submit a report, containing descriptive passages from deeds, on which the memorialists found their claim. The counsel and street commissioner indicate an error in a map by Adolphus Loss, one of the present city surveyors, which the memorialists exhibit; and they present a plan of the ground which they believe correct, as it is drawn from the Lyne Survey of "about 1730," and from the Marschalck Survey of 1755. They also state "that in a map of the City made by Bernard Ratzen in 1767, and dedicated by him to Sir Henry Moore, then Governor of the Colony of New York (and supposed to be the most correct plan ever published), Nassau Street and the City Hall are laid down agreeably to Marschalck's Plan, and the ground claimed by the memorialists clearly marked out and distinguished from the existing streets." They also show, by a deed conveying one of these lots in 1746, that Nassau St., under the name of Kip St., existed through to Wall St. "at least as far back as the year 1718, when the division of those lots took place" (between Abraham Depeyster and Samuel Bayard).

In this report, the counsel and street commissioner also review the history of both the city hall on Wall St., and that at Coenties Slip, to ascertain the time when each was founded (for which, see Chronology); and they add: "The site of the Hall [on Wall St.] as originally built evidently comprehended the extent of its present Front in Wall Street, and the addition for the accommodation of Congress in 1789, was made in the rear, as is plainly visible and easily distinguished from the east and west walls of the old work." The report is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 224, 321–31; see, further, ibid., V: 569–70. The original report (MS.), with ground-plan attached, showing city hall site and surrounding ground to the north and west, is preserved in metal file No. 38, city clerk's record-room (wrapped with the committee's report of Je 5, 1809, at which time the subject came before the common council and was laid over). Nov. 14

" The business of "making turf at the Collect" (for fuel), by order of the common council, is completed. Payments on this account amount to $331.97.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 238, 242, 247, 275, 316, 334. It was begun in July.—See Je 27.

" The street commissioner reports that "the Contractors for sinking the Block and Bridge at the foot of Vesey Street [see O 10], have sunk the Blocks and are entitled to the payment of their first installment, amounting to $740." A warrant for the amount is issued.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 331. The second instalment was paid on Dec. 12.—Ibid., V: 366. The third was paid on Jan. 16, 1809.—Ibid., V: 399. On March 13, when all the work was "nearly completed," they received $500 more.—Ibid., V: 475.

" The common council directs the street commissioner to see that the contractors complete without delay the digging out and opening of Mulberry St. from Broome to Grand St. and from Hester to Grand.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 308, 318–19.

" The paupers in the almshouse number 841.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 316. Cf. Ja 16, 1809.

21 The common council appoints a committee "to enquire and report whether it would not be more conducive to the public interest to farm out the Streets and Manure in this city than to continue the present system under a Superintendant."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 338. On Nov. 28, the committee reported that a greater revenue would be obtained by farming out.—Ibid., V: 342–43. See also ibid., V: 428.

28 Mayor Clinton presents to the common council a letter from Archibald McIntyre, state comptroller, enclosing the following statement of quit rents due from the city:

"12 Years on Charter granted to the City of N York 27. April 1686. at One Beaver Skin (16/)P an . .	$24.00
"12 Years 6. Months on royal Charter granted 15th Janʸ 1730. @ 30/. pʳ an	46.87
"12 Years 9. Months on Patent granted to the City of N York for land on Nassau Island 19th April 1708. @ 5/ pʳ An	7.98
	78.85
"Commutation, First mentioned grant	$24.
Second	45.
Third	7.50
	$155.35"

The statement is referred to the city comptroller.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 339–40. As the commutation proposed "will (if paid) be a discharge from future demands," Comptroller Bleecker recommended, on Dec. 12, that a warrant be issued for the full amount, which was approved.—Ibid., V: 367. See also ibid., V: 425–27. The original report of the comptroller is in metal file No. 27, city clerk's record-room.

" The street commissioner is directed to take immediate measures for opening Collect St. from Magazine to Anthony St., for conveying the water of Magazine St. through Collect St. to the Collect, and for opening a ditch from Little Water St. "so as to prevent any stagnant water lying in the vicinity."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 342. On Feb. 20, 1809, he reported that he had obtained a deed of session for Brooks St. which thus became a part of Collect St.—Ibid., V: 439. See also ibid., V: 554.

Dec. 2 John Stevens, in a letter addressed "To the Public," criticizes the attempt being made by Livingston and Fulton to secure a monopoly of the navigation by steam of the Delaware (see N 1) in addition to their monopoly of the Hudson. He declares that last winter they told him his plans for steam navigation would interfere with their "claim under a patent from the United States," but that the superintendent of the patent office has informed him that Fulton has no patent. Stevens then continues: "I purpose employing my present boat as early in the spring as the season will admit (probably by the middle of February) as a passage boat between New York and Brunswick, and, if she performs well (of which 1808 Dec. 2 there cannot be a doubt) I shall immediately begin a boat to ply between Trenton and Philadelphia, and also one to ply between Philadelphia and Newcastle. . . . The public will certainly acquit me of the charge of being an interloper, when it can be proved incontestibly that I have been 20 years engaged in this pursuit—that 17 years ago I obtained a patent for a steam-boat—that my time and attention has been ever since almost exclusively occupied by this subject—that my present patent for a boiler was obtained four years previous to the state law granting to R. R. L. and R. F. an exclusive right of navigating its waters by Steam Boats—that for five or six years past I have every season had one or more steam-boats moving on the Hudson river, whereas these gentlemen commenced their operation only last year. All I can say, at present, against the heavy charge of plagerism is, that the whole of the machinery of my steam engine is totally different from theirs, and is manifestly a great improvement, being much more simple; comprized in much less than half the space, and not more than half the weight, although its power will probably be more than double that of their engine. . . ."—Am. Cit., D 3, 1808. For other remarks on the controversy between Stevens and Fulton & Livingston, see ibid., D 7, 13, and 15, 1808.

5 Having met on Dec. 2 and 3 to consider a contested election in the Sixth Ward, the common council, by a vote of 11 to 6, decides that the canvass of the votes is illegal and void, because the inspectors canvassed the greater part of them separately "and not jointly as by law required," they permitted the interference of persons not inspectors, and "the Estimate of Votes was, in point of fact, incorrect." A new election is ordered. Thos. Addis Emmet was counsel for the plaintiffs and Tunis Wortman for the defendants. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 342, 345–57, 361.

12 As "the pressure of the times, added to the approaching inclemency of the season, occasions such numerous applications for relief as to put it out of the power of the [almshouse] Commissioners to afford it without aid," the commissioners suggest to the common council "the propriety of opening a house to issue donations." The matter is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 364.

" A memorial from E. Ny de Neville "on the subject of a contemplated establishment as an Assylum for aged and infirm French Emigrants in this city" is referred to the commissioners of the almshouse.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 364.

" John Jay and "numerous other proprietors of lots fronting upon Canal Street and in the vicinity thereof," present a memorial to the common council "setting forth that there are upwards of three thousand lots fronting upon said Street and in the vicinity thereof which cannot now be improved or used owing to the present State of said Street. That the cellars round the Collect have water in them, some of which have been filled with earth, And that some of the cellars of houses in Chapel Street are also rendered useless in consequence of being overflown with water. That the various plans for regulating Canal Street have proved very prejudicial to the petitioners: and that any one plan however imperfect would prove less prejudicial than the frequent fluctuations that have hitherto taken place in relation to this and the adjacent Streets." The petitioners ask that the common council apply to the legislature "to appoint Commissioners to lay out, regulate and open Canal Street and that the plan and regulation of such Commissioners may be declared conclusive and permanent." The memorial, "together with an application of Thomas Duggan that the remainder of Canal Street may be opened," is referred to the canal committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 365. See Ja 18, 1809.

" The expenses in 1808 for filling up the Collect Pond amounted to $6,814.04.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 24, 48, 58, 66, 75, 86, 94, 114, 120, 141, 155, 163, 186, 371.

19 Trinity Church having offered to cede to the city a street 50 feet in width called Clark St., in preference to a continuation of Dominick St. through the land of Anthony Bowrowson, the common council agrees to accept the cession and orders that the resolution of May 23 (q.v.) for the opening of the other street be rescinded.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 336–37, 376.

" The common council directs the street commissioner to "take immediate steps to obtain a cession of all the Streets in the Village of Greenwich of the persons whose right it is to grant the same, Provided such cession can be obtained without expense to this board."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 380.

28 The commissioners of fortifications, Col. Williams, and other officials lay the foundation-stone of "a formidable work on the Beach near Signal Hill, at Staten Island, which will mount about thirty heavy cannon." A salute of 17 guns is fired, and the work is named Fort Richmond "in compliment to the county in which it is situated."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., D 31, 1808; Pub. Adv., D 31, 1808.

31 There were 2,014 deaths in New York in this year.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 498–502.

" The annual revenue of the city in 1808 amounted to $57,830.65½. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 405–7.

— During 1809–1812, while there was great dissatisfaction in the north because of the embargo and non-intercourse acts, the British government, acting through Lord Liverpool and Sir James H. Craig, attempted to lure New England from its fealty to the Union. A New England combination was first suggested by Harrison Gray Otis in 1808.—Winsor, VII: 320–21, and authorities there cited.

— St. Paul's Chapel as it appeared at about this time, with its immediate surroundings, is shown in Vol. III, A. Pl. 12-a.

— For view of buildings in the Park in 1809, showing the city hall, bridewell, engine-house, and school, see Man. Com. Coun. (1860), 480.

— In this year, a public house stood on the corner of Broadway and Grand St., conducted by Abraham Davis. It was afterwards called the Broadway House; and, in 1844, was the headquarters of the Whigs.—See descrip. of Pl. 140, III: 708; also 1830; and Cat., Soc. of Iconophiles (1908), 62, 65.

— In this year, Charles Loss surveyed the corporation lots in the vicinity of East Broadway. The original is filed in real estate bureau, comptroller's office, as Map No. 155.

— In this year, assessments were made for opening Walker St. from Broadway to Beach St., and filling in lots on Spring St., between Broadway and Greenwich St.—Index. to Assess. Rolls, Vol. I.

— In this year, the first volume of the Collections of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. was published.

— The original reports of the board of health for 1809 are now preserved in metal file 29, city clerk's record-room.

— Early in this year, the "chain bridge" over the Schuylkill was finished.—Scharf & Westcott, Hist. of Phila., I: 541–42.

— On Feb. 6, 1809, McComb estimated that $68,065 would be needed to carry on the work to Dec. 1 (M. C. C., 1784–1831, V: 414); and on Feb. 20, a committee of the common council was appointed to consider the propriety of applying to the legislature to grant a lottery for the purpose of raising money towards completing the building, and to report the draft of a memorial and bill on the subject.—Ibid., V: 440. On Feb. 27, this memorial was recorded in the minutes, stating the desire to cover and enclose the city hall during the ensuing season, "but owing to the pressure of the times and the embarrassed state of their finances, as well as from the great expense of the said building and other causes, they are seriously apprehensive that they will find themselves under the necessity of stopping the progress of the said Building," etc.; they therefore asked authority to raise $100,000 by lotteries.—Ibid., V: 445–46. The memorial was read in the assembly on March 10 and referred to a committee. On March 20, the committee reported favourably and a bill for the purpose was introduced. This was committed to the whole house on March 21, after which there is no further reference to it in the minutes of the session.—Assemb. Jour., 32d sess., 283, 350, 355–432. See also De Witt Clinton's letter reproduced in M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: opp. p. 444.

On Aug. 28, John H. Sickles, treas. of the com., reported that the contract of Johnson & Stevens for the delivery of marble was fulfilled.—Ibid., V: 649. On Dec. 4, McComb reported: "The walls of the wings have been ready these three months to receive the Roof, nearly all the Steps of the principal stairs are laid and the remainder complete to lay—the Stone Cutters will be able to finish the cornice and to prepare part of the stone for 1809 — the Attic Story this winter, the Stone for the inside over the grand Stairs and for the Balustrade may be got ready in the course of the Season and laid so that we may indulge the pleasing idea of seeing nearly the whole of the outside work Completed the next season."—Ibid., V: 767–69. By Dec. 9, the cost of the hall was $273,916.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., D 9, 1809. On Dec. 26, the committee reported that $50,000 would be required to complete the roof and cover it with copper.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 792.

4 A new line of daily stages, on the east side of the Hudson, is to be started on this day between New York and Albany. They will leave the former place at 6 o'clock and the latter at 4 o'clock every morning and "run through in three days." The fare is $10.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ja 3, 1809.

5 The election inspectors having petitioned for compensation, the common council resolves that "the honour of the appointment was a full equivalent for the time occupied, and that every good citizen ought, when required, to execute so important and respectable a trust, cheerfully and gratuitously."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 336, 365, 390.

" The common council resolves that the footwalks in Greenwich St. south of Beaver Lane be paved.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 382, 391.

6 Pres. Jefferson, in a message to the house of representatives, says: "Fort-Jay, on Governor's Island, with the whole of its buildings, was demolished in 1806, except the walled counters-carp, the gate, tallie-porte, magazine and two barracks; all the rest was removed as rubbish, to give place for a work composed of durable materials. On the site of the old fort; a new one, (Fort Columbus) has been erected, of the same shape on three of its sides as the former, with the addition of fourteen feet on each side; on the north side a ravelin has been added, with two retired casemated flanks; the new fort, with two new brick barracks, is now nearly Completed, and has fifty cannon mounted.

"On a point of rocks, at the western extremity of Governor's Island, a circular Castle, of durable mason work, to be connected with Fort Columbus, by a zig zag covered defile, has been commenced and completed to the second floor, and is now ready to receive its first tier of guns, which are mounted and ready to be placed. . . .

"On Bedlow's Island, a mortar battery, commanding all the anchoring ground between Red hook and the quarantine, and affording a protection to Ellis's Island, has been commenced, and the front wall carried up to the intended height. . . .

"On Ellis, or Oyster Island, advantageously situated for defending the entrance of the North River, an open barbette battery for heavy ordnance, on one platform, had been ordered to be erected, and is now nearly completed. The platform is ready for guns, and the carriages mostly finished: the barracks within the old fort on this island, have, by some alterations, been made habitable. In addition to the works already described, a battery in North River, two hundred feet without the permanent line of the city, off Hubert-street, has been commenced. The foundation is of stone, and has been carried up to high water mark, in which situation it will remain till spring—this battery is connected with Hubert-street, by a bridge 200 feet long and 30 wide.

"Preparations have also been made for erecting a heavy battery, on a stone foundation, with a superstructure of solid mason work, at the south west point of the city. The point selected has a complete command, from the whole range of North River on one side, to the complete width of East River on the other. . . . [See also O 9, 1808.]

"Connected with the plan of defence for the harbor and city of New York, the United States have purchased a house and yard in the rear of the Custom House for the deposit and safe keeping of heavy artillery, on travelling carriages, and all kinds of military stores, except powder. Since the purchase a brick wall of nine feet in height has been erected round the yard.

"The United States have also obtained, at about two miles distance from the city, a site, containing nearly two acres, which has been enclosed with a wall nine feet high, and on which have been erected an arsenal, laboratory and large powder magazine, from which the smaller deposits in the batteries can be supplied with amunition. Jan. 6

"At Sag Harbour, on Long Island, a small battery with a magazine and barrack, has been ordered to be erected . . . but from the want of a sufficient number of engineers to superintend the numerous works contemplated for the defence of our ports and harbours, nothing more has been done than to survey this harbor, and select a proper site for the battery."—N. Y. Assemb. Jour., 32nd sess., 44–45.

Congress passes an act "to enforce and make more effectual" the embargo act (see D 22, 1807). This is called "the Enforcing Act."—Laws of U. S., 10th cong., chap. 72; Annals of N. Am., 506. See Ja 11. 9

A news item reads: "The New Embargo [see Ja 9]—although this oppressive and odious law has not yet reached us, yet it is understood that Orders grounded upon it have been received at the Custom house, and that measures pursuant to those orders have this morning commenced their operation. Several seizures of boats with produce which were crossing the North River, have been made. The Ferry Boats have been prohibited from taking sailors, or any kind of provisions, even a piece of beef, over to the City of Jersey—and several boats with armed men are stationed in the North River to intercept the communication between the two shores.—Nor is this all. It is also stated that the keys of a suspected store, the property of ———, one of the first Merchants of our city, have already been demanded. Such, we are informed, are the iron-handed measures already pursued under the 'new order of things.'"—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ja 11, 1809. 11

The common council adopts a memorial to the legislature asking permission to raise $130,000 by tax to defray the expenses of the city and county for the ensuing year.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 399–400. "

The committee of defence is directed to prepare memorials to congress and the state legislature "representing the insufficient State of the Defence of this City and harbour, and requesting further appropriations towards this object."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 400–1. "

The common council adopts a memorial to the legislature asking that commissioners be appointed for laying out and regulating Canal St. (see D 12, 1808), and that the act of April 3, 1807 (q. v.) regarding streets and roads, and the act of April 3, 1801 (q. v.) regarding buildings, wharves, and slips be amended. Drafts of the desired laws are also approved and ordered to be forwarded to Mayor Clinton, now at Albany.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 402–3. The law relating to Canal St. was passed on March 24 (q. v.). 18

The street commissioner is ordered to present to the board a map of all the corporation grounds at the Collect.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 411. On Aug. 14, the finance committee was directed by the board to report a plan to sell the corporation's lots adjacent to the Collect.—Ibid., V: 631. 23

The common council approves the draft of a bill to be presented to the legislature "authorising the employment of certain convicts in this city and county."—M. C. C. (1784–1831); V: 404. The law was passed by the state on Feb. 10.—Ibid., V: 455. "

"Remote as we are from the seat of the General Government, we well know that Congress and the Executive have been assailed and deceived by interested individuals and intriguers for office. Such persons are seeking a momentary profit in measures which may ruin their country. . . . It cannot long be concealed, that, in this and the neighboring States, the act has excited a spirit which is rapidly uniting all real friends of the country in a common sentiment of disapprobation. . . . We solemnly forwarn our Government of the dangers which may ensue from an attempt to array its powers against the rights of the citizens or to enforce an act which can never be executed against the will of a free people." An immediate repeal is requested.—Ibid., 10th cong., 2nd sess., 1777–80.

" Capt. Whiley, commandant at Fort Columbus, having reported to the common council "that the convicts sentenced to hard labour on the Fortifications were destitute of shoes and pantaloons and consequently incapable, at this inclement season, of performing any service on the public works, and requesting that said Articles may be immediately supplied," the board directs the almshouse commissioners to comply with the requisition.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 412.

" There are in the city 35 fire-engine companies, one floating-engine company, and two hook-and-ladder companies. The men in the fire department, including engineers, fire wardens, fire-engine men, and hook-and-ladder men, number 927, an increase of 58 during the year.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 421–22.

10 The New York Historical Society is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1809), chap. 26. The act of incorporation was renewed on Feb. 10, 1826.—Ibid. (1826), chap. 41. The society had been organized in 1804 (q. v., N 20).

11 Robert Fulton receives a patent from the U. S. government for his discoveries and inventions in connection with steamboats. Fulton's specification and drawings of various parts of the machinery are published in Dickinson, Robert Fulton, Engineer and Artist, 289–312.

13 The proprietors of Hamilton Square petition the common council "that the ground reserved at that place, may be appropriated for the purpose of erecting an Episcopal Church." This is referred to the comptroller and the street commissioner.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 425. See Mr 6.

" A large number of citizens having petitioned the common council to raise a special tax for the purpose of relieving "the poor and labouring classes of the community," and to appoint a number of citizens to distribute the money, the board resolves that it is inexpedient to take such measures, as "the public distress at the present moment is greatly mitigated by the formation of a number of Associations for benevolent purposes," and the appointment of impartial citizens "is superseded by the praiseworthy attention of the Commissioners of the Alms House, whose exertions at this period merit the highest thanks of this Board, and of the Citizens at large."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 413–14, 429–30.

" The common council receives a presentment from "the grand inquest of the city and county" complaining that "the great number of Pawnbrokers and the unrestrained manner in which they conduct themselves, have become a source of serious and alarming mischief." The insurance of lottery tickets is also considered "a source of great and incalculable depravity . . . inasmuch as it introduces a system of the most pernicious and extensive gambling." The presentment is ordered to be published.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 427.

Feb. 17 The annual report of the governors of the New York Hospital estimates the cost of the asylum for lunatics (see F 3, 1807) at $56,300. The building is thus described: "It is ninety feet long, sixty-five feet wide at the wings, and forty feet wide in the centre; there are four stories, including the basement and sub-basement . . . There are sixty-one cells and apartments, of different dimensions, in which about seventy patients may be accomodated according to their various conditions and circumstances in life. The asylum was opened for the reception of patients on the fifteenth of July last."—Senate Jour. (1809), 112; descrip. of Pl. 88, III: 571. The appropriation made in the act of March 23, 1810 (q. v.), was probably intended to help defray the expense of this building. Another addition to the hospital was made much later (see F 2, 1841).

" A weekly paper of octavo size, printed on Sunday and called The Observer, is begun. The first few issues were without imprint, but with the issue of March 19, 1809, the name of William Elliot appeared as publisher. The paper was suspended with the issue of Aug. 6, 1809 (q. v.).—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 472. Cf. Early Newspapers, II: 426.

20 The governor, with the advice of the council, having reappointed De Witt Clinton as mayor, his commission is read and published with the usual formalities.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 435.

" In a report of munitions kept in different parts of the state, John McLean, commissary of military stores says in part: "The magazine [see N 4, 1808] is completed, with the exception of copper locks and hinges for the inner doors, and the same is inclosed in a wall of masonry ten feet in height. A dwelling house for the keeper, a well of excellent water, and a convenient stone and gravel road from the public street to the magazine, are also finished."—Assemb. Jour., 32d sess., 222; L. M. C.* (1784–1831), V: 435–36. The measure, together with a complete set of weights, was imported from England in 1803.—Ibid., V: 449–51.

24 John Howard Payne (later the author of "Home Sweet Home"—see My 8, 1823), at the age of 16, makes his first appearance as an actor in New York, at the Park Theatre. He plays Young Norval in Douglas.—Kobbé, Famous Am. Songs, 11–12; Hanson, Early Life of John Howard Payne, 121.

27 Ald. Mesier presents to the common council a letter from Robert Fulton to John R. Livingston "proposing as a means of defence for this harbour, that this Corporation should provide 20 Torpedoes, for the purpose of blowing up Ships of War, together with 2 Boats and crews for exercising them." The expense is estimated at $2,800. Each boat is to have "6 oars, 1 Harpoonman, 1 Coxswain, 8 men to each Boat, total 16 men, who sh[d] be active intelligent young men, all of whom would be taught the harpoon and use of the torpedos, and in case of service, could command a boat and direct her attack." The communication is referred to the committee of defence.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 443–44. The original Fulton letter is preserved in metal file No. 38, city clerk's record-room.

" The common council resolves "that the Superintendant of repairs under the direction of the Committee of repairs, cause the several Houses in this City to be accurately numbered, and that he be authorized, by and with the consent of said Committee, to employ such Assistance, at the expense of this Board, as may be requisite to discharge said duty."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 452.

" The street commissioner is directed to prepare "A Map of all the vacant ground belonging to the Corporation, on Broadway, Elm Street, and the Streets adjacent to the Collect, and on Chatham Street adjoining the Arsenal."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 452.

Mar. 1 A memorial of David Hosack "praying the legislature to purchase his botanic garden, near the said city, on the terms therein mentioned," is read in the assembly and referred to a committee.—Assemb. Jour., 32d sess., 236. On March 2, the committee reported "That the memorialist about eight years ago being professor of botany in Columbia college, purchased twenty acres of land, and established a botanical garden, in the vicinity of New-York at his own expense; and with a laudable view of afford-1809 Mar. 1 ing to the students under his charge an ample opportunity of improvement by the inspection of various medicinal and other plants, a knowledge of which is intimately connected with the science of medicine; he has, at great expense imported from different parts of the world, a great variety of plants; for the preservation of those coming from a milder climate, he has been under the necessity of erecting, on a large and extensive scale, both green and hot houses, and to employ several persons of skill in attending to their cultivation; he has likewise collected a variety of plants from different parts of the United States, useful in agriculture, as well as medicine, so arranged as to afford an opportunity of making many useful experiments; the whole is in good order; the ground well selected and valuable. The Medical Society of the city and county of New York, the College of Physicians and Surgeons, the Faculty of Physic in Columbia college, and the Governors of the New-York Hospital all approve of the establishment, express their opinion of its importance and public utility, and recommend its purchase by the state, as the only means of protecting and supporting it, as it is too extensive and expensive to be supported from the funds of any individual. . . .

"The legislature of this state, with a spirit and zeal worthy an enlightened and patriotic people, have on many occasions fostered, encouraged and protected the education of our youth; and certainly no branch of learning is more important, and more peculiarly entitled to national patronage, than the science of preserving life and health. Your committee state, with pleasure, that this is the first establishment of the kind ever attempted in the United States, but that unless patronized by the government, its utility to the state will be entirely lost. . . .

"Your committee conceive that the terms of sale are liberal, and that no material loss can be sustained, but that the land will probably increase in value equal to the interest of the purchase money: and your committee are therefore of opinion that the prayer of the memorialist ought to be granted. . . ." The report being approved, a bill was introduced "for promoting medical science in the state of New-York."—Ibid., 32nd sess., 244–45. After much discussion the bill was finally rejected by the house on March 14.—Ibid., 32nd sess., 246, 252–53, 254, 283, 292–96, 309, 310–11. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 24 and 25, 1809. See O 2, and N 6.

" The common council issues a remonstrance to the legislature declaring that a bill entitled "An Act granting relief in certain cases to the inhabitants of New York, and to the inhabitants of the town of Brooklyn and Bushwick in Kings County," now before the legislature, contravenes the charter of the city, particularly those sections which "grant and appoint the compass [,] precincts, circuits, bounds, liberties and jurisdictions of the said city," and which give the common council control of the docks and ferries and the revenue arising therefrom. The board also suggests "that it would be impolitic and inexpedient to pass such an Act, while the Controversy between this State and the State of New Jersey respecting the Charter rights of this city remains unsettled," and asks "whether it is not novel and unprecedented for them [the legislature] to interfere with the rights of a Corporate body in any point touching their pecuniary emoluments, unless upon petition or with the assent of the Corporation."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 453–55.

" Congress passes a law debarring French and British ships from American ports and forbidding all commercial intercourse with them, until the decrees affecting U. S. commerce are repealed.—Laws of U. S., 10th cong., chap. 91. See, however, Ap 19.

4 James Madison and George Clinton are inaugurated as president and vice-president respectively. At the inauguration ball in the evening, Madison wore a suit of American-made woolen, from the wool of Merino sheep.—McMaster, Hist. of People of U. S., III: 336–37; Columbian Cent. (Boston), Mr 18, 1809.

6 The comptroller and the street commissioner having reported favourably upon the petition of the proprietors of Hamilton Square (see F 13), the common council appoints three of the aldermen "to associate with three persons to be appointed by the proprietors of Hamilton Square to confer and agree with the inhabitants in that vicinity disposed to build an Episcopal Church upon the Ground there reserved for a Church and Academy, or with a Committee of them touching the Area necessary for said Church; having due respect to the quantity of ground necessary to be reserved for an Academy." The board consents to convey the ground agreed upon on condition that the church be completed within two years from May 1, 1809.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 464–65. See Ap 13, My 11, and Je 5. Mar. 6

" As "the Ringing the Bells in this city, as soon after the breaking out of any Fire, is of the utmost importance to the safety and interests of the inhabitants," the common council directs the committee on the fire department to "use all diligence in making the necessary enquiries and report whether some means cannot be devised to have the Bells of this city rung, in cases of Fire, in a more systematic manner."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 465.

" News is published here of Henry Clay being wounded by Humphrey Marshall in a duel.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Mr 6, 1809.

13 The whole number of lamps in the city, public and private, is reported as follows:

9th	2	2
10th	173	2
	1,556	97
		Total 1,653

—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 476. On March 20, the total number was given as 1,670.—Ibid., V: 483. On March 13, also, a committee reported to the common council that the poor light given by the public lamps "is owing to the Oil being mixed, half summer and half winter, and the coldness of the nights." Jacob Cholwell, who had charge of the lamps, acknowledged that this was the case because, "if he did not use half Winter and half Summer Oil, he must be ruined, as he cannot light the Lamps at the contract price without sustaining a great loss."—Ibid., V: 471–72.

" The common council orders "that the Stage and post for whipping Criminals be removed from the Front of the Bridewell to the Yard thereof remote from Broadway, and that on the days, and between the hours appointed for whipping, the Yard gate of the Bridewell be opened for the admission of persons willing to be presented."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 476–77.

20 The common council orders the streets known as Duane, Barley, and Colden Sts. to be called Duane St. from Rose St. to Hudson River, and that the streets distinguished as Bayard and Fisher Sts. be called Bayard from Division St. westward. The superintendent of repairs is directed to number the houses in these streets.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 479.

" It is recommended by the street commissioner, in the common council, that the bridge over Bestaver's Killetje at Greenwich St. being a nuisance should be removed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 483, 490. The original MS. is in metal file No. 36, city clerk's record-room. No immediate action was taken but this small stone arch seems to have been removed soon afterward. The stream which the bridge crossed was a branch of the Minetta Water. The bridge was built sometime early in the nineteenth century and is shown on one of Bancker's surveys, entitled "New Course of Greenwich Road," filed in box G-H, folder G, in MSS. Div., N. Y. P. L. On this map appears the "continuation of Greenwich Street," and "Skinner Road" (the later Christopher St.). It was "Surveyed & Del. March 24 & 25 [probably 1809]. B. Taylor." Taylor also made, in 1795, a map of Sir Peter Warren's land. See also L. M. R. K., III: 925, and Pl. 175, Vol. III (block 598, landmark No. 1).

" The common council passes "An Ordinance to provide for the Sweeping and cleaning of the Streets in the City of New York."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 483–84.

24 By a vote of 26 to one, the state senate adopts a complimentary address to ex-Pres. Jefferson upon his "voluntary retirement to the shades of private life," expressing its respect for his "exalted character," its gratitude for his public services, and its best wishes for his personal happiness. "Like your great predecessor, the immortal Washington," the address continues, "you have evinced to the world, by the whole tenor of your political life, and more especially 1809 Mar. 24 by your magnanimous determination to retire from office, after having faithfully served the republic, that your only ambition was to promote the principles of our republican institutions. Examples of such disinterested and distinguished patriotism are rarely found in the history of nations. They add a lustre to the American name and character."—Senate Jour., 32d sess., 186–87. The assembly agreed to the address on the same day by a vote of 53 to 40.—Assemb. Jour., 32d sess., 386–89.

" Simeon De Witt, Gouverneur Morris, and John Rutherford are appointed commissioners for laying out Canal St., "which shall run from the place commonly called the Collect to Hudson's river, and shall be of such width and so laid out as that the same may contain a canal for the reception and discharge of the waste water of the adjacent parts of said city." The powers and duties given to the commissioners are to be discharged within two years.—Laws of N. Y. (1809), chap. 103. All three commissioners resigned, and others had to be appointed (see Je 26, Jl 24, and Ag 14). The work was completed in 1810 (q. v., Jl 2). See also descrip. of Pl. 83-b, III: 560–62.

" The legislature passes a law authorising the Cedar Street Presbyterian Church and Grace Church respectively to hold real and personal estate of an annual value or income not exceeding $5,000.—Laws of N. Y. (1809), chap. 97.

27 An act of the legislature authorises the governor to procure a new seal, to be denominated "the great seal of the state of New York," the description of which, in writing, shall be deposited and recorded in the office of the secretary of state.—Laws of N. Y. (1809), chap. 141. It is reproduced and described by Wilde in The Civic Ancestry of N. Y. City and State, Pl. 24, and p. 62.

" Jacob Wilkins petitions the common council "for permission to build a Pier in Hudson river, in front of his property on West Street, South of Cortland Slip, for the accommodation of Mess^rs^ Livingston & Fulton's North river Steam Boat." The subject is referred to the comptroller and the street commissioner.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 485. On April 3, they made the following report:

"That the principal inducement for M^r^ Wilkins to make this application at this time arises from the solicitation of Mess^rs^ Livingston & Fulton who are desirous of obtaining an insulated situation for their Steam boat which is to ply from this City to Albany.

"That from the construction of the Steam Boat the undersigned are persuaded she would suffer considerable injury and frequently be rendered unfit for service if she was obliged in common with other Vessels, to be interfered with in coming in or going out: and that therefore it is of the utmost importance to the Success of the proprietors of that invention, to prepare a special place for her moorings.

"The undersigned are informed that M^r^ Edward Bardin who owns the water right adjoining M^r^ Wilkins on the South, has consented that the pier petitioned for by M^r^ Wilkins shall be erected in such manner, as that the centre line of the pier shall be along their division line and consequently that the Basin to be formed by these two Piers, will be of sufficient extent, being about 80 feet, to accommodate other vessels in case the Steam Boat should cease to use it.

"The undersigned further report that they are informed, that by the present practice of the Harbour Master, any Wharf or pier being unoccupied, is liable to be filled by vessels desirous of mooring thereto: in which case it would be defeating the object of the proprietors of the Steam boat, who wish an exclusive right to use the waters between the two aforesaid piers. How far the Board are authorized to grant such priviledge, is for themselves to judge; But the undersigned are of opinion that if any arrangement can be made with the Harbour Master to prevent an incroachment of the priviledge in this particular case, and the Board should permit M^r^ Wilkins and M^r^ Bardin to carry out the pier, that it will tend much to the advantage of the Corporation, inasmuch as it will increase the trade near their ferry at Cortland Street, and render a facility of communication from thence to the seat of the government of this State, never before equalled, and thereby also perform a real service to the community.

"The Comptroller and Street Commissioner are therefore of opinion that the board ought to grant the petition of M^r^ Wilkins, upon the condition however that the said pier be carried out 30 feet wide and upon the line as aforesaid, and upon the further condition that M^r^ Wilkins forthwith enter into a written agreement with the Street Commissioners and Comptroller for the completion of the previous pier within one Year, as heretofore directed by the Board and which he confesses his willingness to do." The report is confirmed.—Ibid., V: 496–98. The original MS. report is in metal-file No. 36, city clerk's record-room. Mar. 27

" It is resolved by the common council to open Hudson St. from the grounds of John Jacob Astor to Christopher St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 489, 490. The resolution was repassed on May 29.—Ibid., V: 564.

29 The legislature passes an act to organize the militia of this state.—Laws of N. Y. (1809), chap. 165.

" The state comptroller is authorised to lease the government house for a term not exceeding five years.—Laws of N. Y. (1809), chap. 164 (§ 43).

Apr. 3 The city is given letters patent, signed by Gov. Tompkins on Dec. 26, 1807, from the commissioners of the land office of the state, conveying to it the lands covered by water along the easterly shore of the Hudson River within the city, from low-water mark and running 400 ft. into the river from Bestavers Killetje or river to the distance of four miles to the north; also the same along the westerly side of East River from the north side of Corlears Hook, to a distance of two miles northward.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 491–92.

" The commissioners of the almshouse and bridewell report to the common council that, between Jan. 6 and March 31, they issued 76,019 rations and 1,799½ loads of wood to "the Out door poor," expending for these, for the relief of the sick, and for assistants, the sum of $12,785.95. They add: "In submitting this Report, the Commissioners cannot omit the opportunity it affords of calling the attention of the Board and their Fellow Citizens to an imposition daily practised and which reflects disgrace on our city: It is Street begging. The numerous benevolent Societies and their exertions for the relief of the poor this winter, are too well known to need recapitulation: Yet it is a lamentable fact that our Streets swarm with beggars, and would lead to the conclusion, especially with Strangers, that the poor are but illy provided for; whereas it is a truth, within our knowledge, that many who have been regularly supplied at the Alms House with Food, Fuel and other necessaries, have applied and obtained supplies from other humane institutions. Not content with practising these impositions they have been found in the act of Street begging; we therefore humbly conceive that for the credit of the city, these paupers should be discountenanced, especially when it is considered, that all the indigent can, by application, be relieved through the public channel." The report is ordered published.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 494–95.

" The common council resolves "that a Public pound be erected in the Town of Harlem," and appoints George C. Duryee as keeper.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 495.

" It is ordered in common council that the street now called Lombard St. be called Lombardy St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 494. This later became Monroe St.—L. M. R. K., III: 1004.

" The common council orders that Little Water St. be named Anthony St., and regarded as a continuation of said Anthony St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 494. Later, its name was restored to it, but it was subsequently called Mission Place. See My 16, 1855; 1867.

" Stephen Ludlam and Caspar Krapff are appointed city surveyors.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 504.

5 Thomas Hodgkinson's patronage outgrows his Shakespeare Tavern, at No. 17 Fair (Fulton) St. (see Ap 5, 1806), and he moves into the larger house at the south-west corner of Fair (Fulton) and Nassau Sts., nearly opposite his old establishment.—Pub. Adv., Ap 6, 1809. Thereafter, the Shakespeare Tavern at this new address was a centre of club and social life for many years, and the scene of many notable events.—See N 24, 1779; L. M. R. K., III: 980; Bayles' Old Taverns of N. Y., 428–31; and see, further, Ag 25, 1824, and 1836.

6 Up to this time, three of the four Presbyterian churches,—the Old First Church on Wall St., the Brick Church on Beekman St., and the Rutgers St. Church, were a collegiate charge, united under one board of trustees and one bench of elders. Each minister was equally connected with all the congregations. The formation of the Cedar St. Church, in 1808 (q. v., N 6), as an independent pastoral charge led to the separation of the three united ones at this time.—Miller, Memoir of Rev. John Rodgers, 272–73. On May 2, the trustees ordered that deeds be made out to the separate

10 The frigate "Constitution" is being prepared for service at New York.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap. 10, 1809.

" The street commissioner reports to the common council "That he has caused the soundings in Hudson river to be taken opposite Marketfield Street, . . . to determine upon the distance the West line of West Street, called the permanent line, ought to be extended into the river." The board passes a resolution providing that it shall run a straight line from a point 70 ft. west of the north-west corner of the brick house of Jacob Wilkins, at the south-west corner of Cortlandt and West Sts., to a point 250 ft. westerly from the south-west corner of the brick store of John Kearney, at the corner of Marketfield and Washington Sts. It is ordered that West St. be surveyed and marked out accordingly; as a greater extension into the river would interfere with the range of the guns of the intended Crown Battery opposite the flagstaff. A map of the shore, prepared by Mr. Mangin, accompanies the street commissioner's report on this subject.—M. C. C. (1784–1831) V: 510–11.

" The street commissioner proposes a plan of regulating the streets around Hudson Square, including Hudson, Laight, Beach, and Varick Sts., and this is approved by the common council.—From the original MS. in metal file No. 36, city clerk's record-room; M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 511–12. See also My 1.

" "A Well Wisher to the Community at large" having written to Mayor Clinton, "representing N° 5 Murray Street, a place of public entertainment, as most infamously conducted and tending, by means of its abandoned allurements, to seduce and ruin the Youth of this city," the common council orders that the communication be referred to the grand jury.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 505–6.

" William Bridges is re-appointed a city surveyor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 506, 513. See Mr 7, 1808.

" The blocks and bridges for the ferry stairs at Vesey St. have been completed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 512.

17 A memorial from sundry inhabitants "stating that a number of Houses are kept for the purpose of receiving Rope Iron & other articles thereby encouraging children, apprentices and others to bring stolen property, highly injurious to the Morals of the community," is presented to the common council and ordered "to lie for further consideration."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 515–16.

" The common council passes an ordinance that Bowery Lane be paved from Grand to North St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 470, 517.

19 As the British minister has signified that the orders in council will be withdrawn as respects the United States on June 10, Pres. Madison by proclamation announces the cessation after that day of the non-intercourse act with Great Britain and her dependencies (see Mr 1).—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ap 22, 1809. See Ap 22 and 24.

22 The "Glorious News" of the renewal of intercourse with Great Britain (see Ap 19) having been received at New York, the general committee of Federal Republicans holds a meeting and recommends "to all Ship owners and masters of vessels to display their colours on Monday next [April 24, q.v.] in honor of the late signal Triumph of Federal Policy. . . .

"All persons having charge of the bells in the different churches, are requested to cause them to be rung from 12 to 1 o'clock in the same day.

"And it is ordered, that a committee wait upon the Commandant of Artillery, and request that he will cause a federal salute to be fired at sun-rise, noon, and sunset, on the same glorious occasion."—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ap 22 and 24, 1809.

24 This is "a day of rejoicing with the friends of peace and free trade with England throughout our city." The colours in the harbour are displayed, bells are rung, and salutes are fired by the forts, the frigate "Constitution," the British packets, etc. "Mutual felicitations were exchanged among our patriotic citizens, and the joys of the heart lighted up a smile on every countenance." At noon the Federal Republicans met at "the Circus, in Anthony Street," and adopted resolutions congratulating their fellow citizens on the defeat of the "ruinous policy of the administration" and ascribing it to the "distinguished exertions of the minority in Congress and to the manly and independent conduct of the people of the Northern and Eastern States." In the evening the city was illuminated.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ap 24, 1809; N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ap 24 and 25, 1809; N. Y. Spectator, Ap 24, 1809; Diary of De Witt Clinton (MS.) in N. Y. H. Apr. 24

May 1 The common council directs the comptroller to advertise for proposals for lighting the public lamps for one year. The contractor is to keep the lamps clean and in good repair and to see that they are "regularly lighted every night at or before sunset & . . . kept clearly burning till sunrise next morning excepting the nights of the full moon, and three night next & immediately preceding from the 1st of November to the 1st April with the addition of one night after the full moon from the first of April to the first of November." The "Signal Lamps," also, are to be lighted "every night from Sunset to daylight," and the contractor is to furnish the lamp oil for the almshouse, bridewell, jail, public watch houses, and the lamps at Brooklyn Ferry. The board also orders that the superintendent of repairs "have without delay all the Public Lamps numbered in progressive order, each ward to be kept distinct," and that the captains of the watch report any which are not kept burning during the night.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 522–25. On May 8, the contract for the lamp lighting was granted to Isaac Auld, who agreed to do it for $9.20 per lamp.—Ibid., V: 540.

" Dr. Nicholas Romaine, president of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, petitions the common council "that Doctor Mitchell the present Lecturer might be permitted to read his Lectures in some room in the City Hall until the House of the said College could be prepared for that purpose," and the request is granted.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 522.

" The common council directs that a road, "sufficient for the passage of carriages of burthen," be opened through the ground between Hamilton Square and Manhattan Ave.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 525–26.

" The open space or gore formed by the intersection of George (Market), Cheapside (Hamilton), and Lombard Sts., is reserved forever as a park for the use of the public.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 526–27. See also ibid., V: 561–62, 592. This became Lombardy or Bedlow Park.—L. M. R. K., III: 970. The board's action was the result of a memorial received from residents in the neighbourhood, "remonstrating against the erection of a Brew House, at the intersection of George & Lombard Streets," and "praying the interrerence of the Board to prevent the evil apprehended, by purchasing the said ground for Public use." Preparations were already under way, by authority of Col. Henry Rutgers, to erect the brewery "in the triangular space formed by the intersection of George, Cheapside, and Lombard Streets."—M. C. C. (supra).

" Following a report of the street commissioner, the common council appoints a committee "to make such regulations as they shall judge proper for the ornament of the [Hudson] square and the convenience of the Public."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 528–29.

" The street commissioner presents to the common council a deed of cession from Abijah Hammond and Catherine, his wife, of all the streets running through their property at Greenwich, and it is ordered to be recorded and filed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 529.

" The common council resolves "that the Square in front of the new Watch House be known & distinguished by the name of Haymarket."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 530.

4 The ship "America" is launched "from Manhattan Island, Corlaer's Hook."—N. Y. Com. Ad., My 3, 1809.

8 The committee of defence, in a statement to the common council, reviews the negotiations with M. Du Buc de Marentille regarding his plan for the defence of New York (see My 16, 20; N 7, 1808), and reports that he now proposes to reveal the plan to the corporation immediately, on condition that if it is accepted by the federal government, the city shall pay him $60,000, and if it is rejected, he shall receive a signed agreement from the secretary of war that none of the means proposed by him "shall be used in case of war." The board thereupon directs the mayor to communicate the new proposal to the president to learn whether the government is willing to make such a declaration and whether it will repay to the city the $60,000 "in case said plan should be adopted for any other port or harbor of the United States than that of New York."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 533–36. A letter on the subject was received from Wm. Eustis, secretary of war, on June 26, and referred to the committee of defence.—Ibid., V: 589.

1809 May 8 The common council agrees that a "Company of Hook & Ladder men," consisting of 10 men, one large and one small ladder, and one large and one small hook, be established in Greenwich Village. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 536. The names of the members of the company were reported on May 15.—Ibid., V: 547.

" The common council directs the street commissioner to have Cross St. opened between Water St. and Magazine St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 540.

9 "A Citizen" writes to one of the papers: "The Manhattan Water Works, which was originally intended as one of the greatest advantages of the city, has now become one of its greatest vexations. It is a general complaint, at the lower part of the town at least, that they can get no water, and indeed not without cause, for, as for myself, I have applied almost daily for four months past, without being rewarded with a single drop. The company's clerk, however, is punctual in calling for their fees, at the moment they are due. . . . but I am not very well satisfied at paying $10 a year for a thing of no value . . . and if a remedy is not soon found, I shall have my pipe cut off . . . and be obliged once more to rely upon our pumps, and I am confident my neighbors will all follow my example." In printing this letter, the editor of the paper says: "We publish the following communication on this subject, and add our own protest against the evil of which the writer here complains.—The complaint is indeed universal.—We know of no family which is regularly supplied with Manhattan water . . . the Manhattan Company are a gross imposition, a flagrant fraud, upon the inhabitants of New York. . . . Were it not for the fraudulent trick of the intriguing Burr, the City would have erected works which would have afforded a constant and sufficient supply of water to the inhabitants. But, by the most dishonorable management, the monopoly of this indispensable article was thrown into the hands of a private company: and our citizens are compelled to pay ex-horbitantly, and are still left to suffer for the want of 'pure and wholesome water.' Let the company fulfil their contract in supplying us with such water, or let them relinquish the Charter of their institution, which, by this neglect, they have long since justly forfeited."—N. Y. Com. Adv., My 9, 1809. See My 22.

" A fire, commencing in a cluster of wooden buildings in Chatham St., between Tryon Row and Duane St., destroys between 20 and 30 wooden buildings,—nearly the entire block.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 9, 1809.

11 Trinity vestry takes "into Consideration the Petition relative to a Church upon Hamilton Square" and resolves "to grant [aid] for that Purpose" (St. James Church).—Trin. Min. (MS.). See Je 5.

15 The common council grants the Brick Church permission to extend vaults under the sidewalks around the church.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 532, 544. See Je 26.

" The superintendent of the almshouse reports that there are 892 paupers in the almshouse, 35 "Lunatics in Maniac Asylum New York Hospital," and 190 "Children at Nurse out of the House," making a total of 1,117.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 548.

" The common council resolves that the street commissioner "procure a survey of that part of the Village of Greenwich which is not already procured and fix on the necessary elevations that the same may be regulated and also that he Report a profile of Hammond Street for the regulation thereof."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 549.

" The common council resolves "that the Basin erected at the end of Coenties Slip be hereafter known and distinguished by the name of the Old Albany Basin."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 549.

" The expenses in 1809 for filling the Collect Pond amounted to $40.90.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 477, 531, 550.

22 The common council orders the "immediate removal of a Watch Box from the Corner of Pearl & Pine Streets as it was much complained of by the neighborhood," and also directs the superintendent of repairs to remove "all the Watch Boxes to their usual place of Deposits for the Summer season as soon as convenient."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 552.

" The common council passes an ordinance for paving Broadway from Marketfield to Beaver St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 553. On June 5, the street commissioner represented that the contemplated improvement in Broadway opposite the government house could not be effected under this ordinance, as one of the assessors was an interested party; he therefore presented a substitute.—Ibid., V: 571. May 22

" The common council agrees to lay the walks in Broadway with flagstones. On June 5, it was ordered that the curbstone of Broadway be laid, and the sidewalk be filled with gravel from the point where the pavement is already laid northward to Art St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 553, 566, 575–76.

" The common council authorises the superintendent of repairs "to purchase a Horse for his use when attending to the duties of his office."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 555.

" John Fellows, superintendent of the Manhattan water works, announces that "A partial temporary embargo having involuntarily been laid upon the Manhattan water, I am happy in stating to the public that the causes are discovered, and partly removed. . . . Many of the lateral pipes leading to the houses, and perhaps some of the main conduits, were closed by the inclemency of last winter; at the return of mild weather it was expected the frequent opening of fire plugs would have removed all obstructions. But it is found expedient to take up some of the conduits which will be done as soon as possible. A considerable stoppage has already been removed. . . . An improvement will also be made which will convey an unusual quantity of water into the south east part of the city, where the complaints chiefly exist. . . . The repairs of lateral pipes has for some time past been intrusted to one person . . .; but sickness and other causes have occasioned neglect in this branch. Four plumbers are now engaged in this business and will in a few days answer all demands already made . . ." —N. Y. Com. Adv., My 22, 1809. See My 31.

29 Sundry debtors "confined on the Limits in this City" petition the common council that said limits may be extended "to include the Bear market, the Brick Presbyterian Church, and the Pier at the bottom of Murray Street." The petition is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 557. It was granted on June 12.—Ibid., V: 576–77.

" The common council orders that a pier be run out on the east side of Old Slip 250 feet into the river, that two piers be sunk at Peck Slip, "one on the South or West side, the other to be constructed with the bulk head on the East side" to extend 250 feet into the river, "and that two piers be also built between Fly Market and Burling Slip."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 557–58. See also ibid., V: 567, 579, 580, 584–85, 618.

" The common council gives to the First Presbyterian Church "the Engine House now standing on their burial gound." The board also permits the church "to extend their line of Vaults under the street in Wall Street from their present Easterly line to the Lot of Charles Gardner."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 558.

" The common council approves an agreement with Jacob Wilkins "for a Pier at Courtlandt Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 560.

" The common council agrees that Sugar Loaf (Franklin) St. be extended to Provost St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 560–61.

31 John Fellows, superintendent of the Manhattan water works announces: "The pump beam of the Water Work, unfortunately broke yesterday. It will be repaired as soon as possible; but several days are unavoidably requisite for that purpose."—N. Y. Com. Adv., My 31, 1809. See Je 16.

June 5 The committee appointed on March 6 (q. v.) to decide upon the ground for an Episcopal church and academy at Hamilton Square reports that all parties concerned have agreed "that a plot of one hundred feet on Hoffman Street by one hundred and twenty five feet along Hamilton avenue should be sett off for the church with the exception of a five foot alley round the intended academy as pourtrayed upon the annexed plan and that the residue of the ground should be used for the said academy." The members of the committee also report that they went with the street commissioner and Charles Loss, city surveyor, and "staked out the ground for the Church at the Corner of Hoffman Street & Hamilton Avenue." The common council approves the report.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 569. The original report, and accompanying map, are preserved in metal file No. 38, city clerk's record-room. St. James's Church was erected on this property, which was on the site of the present s. w. corner of Lexington Ave. and 69th St. —L. M. R. K., III: 933. See 1870.

" The common council passes an ordinance providing for the employment of the convicts of the city prison at work on the public highways and authorising the committee of roads "to

1809 repair the Powder House for the accommodation of the said
Je 5 Convicts."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 565. See Je 12.

" It is resolved that Elizabeth St., Mott St., and Mulberry St. (see My 8) be run agreeably to a map made by Casimir T. Goerck, and designated on a copy of a map made by Charles Loss of the property of Edward Livingston, dated 1805, by red lines and numbers, and that said map be filed and dated this day. It is also resolved that Mulberry St. be opened in the aforesaid direction to Great Jones St. without delay, and that the street commissioner apply to the several proprietors for a deed of cession.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 534, 570.

8 The corner-stone of the first St. Patrick's Cathedral (the first Catholic church in the U. S. dedicated to Ireland's patron saint) is laid on Mott St. between Broadway and the Bowery Rd.—Com. Adv., Je 9, 1809. The building was finished and dedicated May 4, 1815, the architect being Joseph F. Mangin.—Eve. Post, My 8, 1815. Shortly thereafter the original building, 120 ft. long and 80 ft. wide, was extended 36 ft. more in length, so that it reached from Mott to Mulberry St.—Greenleaf, 335–36; Eccles. Records, III: 1452. It burned on Oct. 6, 1866, being at the time the oldest Catholic church in the city. (The parish of St. Peter's was older [1785], but its second St. Peter's church—the present one—was not built until 1836). St. Patrick's was rebuilt and was re-dedicated March 7, 1868.—Farley, Hist. of St. Patrick's Cathedral, 53, 62, 101. See also Shea, Hist. of the Catholic Ch. in U. S. (1886); L. M. R. " The "Phoenix," the first steamboat to ply upon the ocean, left New York on this date, and arrived at Philadelphia on June 17. An oil painting of this steamboat is in "Stevens Castle" at Hoboken, N. J.—Bullock, in Jour. of Amer. Hist. (1907), Vol. I, No. 2, second quarter, 261–83. The "Phœnix" was built by John Cox Stevens of Hoboken in 1806, and was "intended to ply as a passenger boat between New Brunswick and New York. But the monopoly held by Fulton and Livingston prevented the vessel entering the waters subject to the jurisdiction of New York State, and Stevens, sending her by sea to the Delaware, ran her between Philadelphia and Trenton."—McMaster, Hist. of People of U. S., III: 491, citing U. S. Gaz., Jl 6, 1809.

" Thomas Paine dies in New York City.—Pub. Adv., Je 9, 1809. He was buried at New Rochelle on June 9.—Republican Watch-Tower, Je 13, 1809. See also Com. Adv., Je 30, 1809. In 1864, John Randel, Jr., at the request of David T. Valentine, prepared a series of three maps, showing the situation of Paine's residences, —namely, that in which he boarded until May, 1809, on the east side of Herring (later called Bleecker) St., between Burrows (Grove) and Raisin (Barrow) Sts., and that in which he died, on the north side of Burrows (No. 59 Grove) St., mid-way between Herring (Bleecker) and 4th St. The third map shows the alterations in streets which caused the removal of the house in which he died. Accompanying the maps is a letter to Valentine explaining the maps and landmarks. See reproductions of these in Man. Com. Coun. (1864), 841–46.

" "A Friend to order and improvement" addresses an open letter to the city corporation complaining about the "shameful abuses which are committed by throwing dirt, stones and all kinds of rubbish into the streets." He says in part: "Masons and Carpenters act as though they were proprietors of the streets; they are not content to put their lime, mortar, stone, bricks and scantling, in the smallest possible space, but they occupy the whole width of this street [Greenwich] except barely sufficient for one carriage to pass. . . . Livery stable keepers, Coach makers stock, and carmen's carts are so numerous in many streets that it is at times impossible to pass. . . . I have been informed that the dirt of this city is sold for 6000 dollars a year; . . . There is a barbarous argument frequently urged that hogs are good scavengers and should be suffered to range the streets. What would we say of a dirty housekeeper who kept a hog in the kitchen to eat up the filth? . . . The streets are public property; no individual should be permitted to exhibit any of his goods or wares projecting more than one foot from the front of his house. Everyone should keep a dirt box or barrel, to be emptied in the carts at stated hours. . . . No dirt of any kind should be thrown in the streets. . . . All hogs found in the streets should be driven to the poor house. . . ."—Republican Watch-Tower, Je 13, 1809.

10 Jacob Frank and George White begin to publish a semi-weekly edition of the Public Advertiser. The new paper is called The New York Journal.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 452–53. June 10

The old powder house, which is to be appropriated as a dwelling for the convicts sentenced to work on the public works (see Je 5), is partitioned off into nine bed-rooms; and it is recommended to the common council by the road committee that the prisoners be employed to complete the bridge near the powder-house road. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 574–75. On July 24, B. Hoghland was paid $125.54 for "work at P. House Jail."—Ibid., V: 621. On Nov. 6, James Blackledge received $436.47 "for services at Powder House Prison."—Ibid., V: 739. 12

The street commissioner is directed to "procure a Survey and fix the Ascent & descent of all those Streets lying between Broadway & Bowery Road to the north of Prince Street & Southward of Great Jones Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 579. "

John Fellows publishes the following notice: "Those who are supplied with water by the Manhattan Company, are informed that the works are in complete repair, and will be put in operation this day. . . . I am ordered by the Directors to spare no reasonable expence for this purpose. The whole Machine has undergone a complete repair; a new boiler of uncommon magnitude is fitting up, and a new range of pipe laying from the reservoire for the purpose of conveying a greater quantity of water into the city in a given time. There are now no impediments to contend with but the poplar roots, which insinuate themselves into the joints of the logs, and in some instances completely impede the course of the water. This difficulty will receive every possible attention."—Pub. Adv., Je 16, 1809. See Je 30. 16

The common council grants the petition of Isaac Clason and others which asked "that Charlotte Slip might be completed, & for that purpose that a Wharf might be run out on the West side of said Slip from a lot now or late the property of John Grant and extending so far as to form a safe & convenient Basin for the reception of vessels."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 583. 19

The common council agrees that Chambers St. be extended to Chatham St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 584. See, however, O 30. "

The common council directs the street commissioner to "take immediate measures for opening Greenwich Street from the present pavement to Christopher Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 586. See Jl 24. "

The common council resolves "that in future no permission be granted to build any vault for interment of the Dead under any of the Streets of this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 595. Such permission was last given on May 15 (q. v.). 26

The common council agrees that the intersection of Beach, Walker, and Chapel (West Broadway) Sts. be "converted to a Park."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 590. This became Beach Street Park.—L. M. R. K., III: 968, 996. "

A letter from Thos. Pope (see F 13) "requesting the Board to visit a Model of a Bridge which he had constructed consisting of one Arch only & which might be thrown over the widest rivers" is referred to the city inspector.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 589. See also 1811. "

Bridge St. is ordered opened from Whitehall St. to State St.—M. C C. (1784–1831), V: 592–93. See 1658, 1693; F 11, and My 2, 1808. "

John Beete advertises that he "has opened a large and convenient house (situated in Greenwich, between Hammond and Bank streets) as a Tavern and Boarding House," which he calls the "Greenwich Hotel." The Greenwich stage runs from the city hall to this house five times a day.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Je 28, 1809. 28

Independence Day is celebrated by about 2,000 members of the Washington Benevolent Society, who parade from the "College green" to the south-east corner of Reade St. and Broadway, where the president lays the corner-stone of Washington Hall, "under a salute of thirteen guns, and music from the bands." They then proceeded to the "North Church," and listened to the Declaration of Independence and an oration by Mr. Verplanck, after which they marched "to the Rope Walks, beyond Orchard street, where they sat down to a plenteously provided dinner."—Columbian Centinel (Boston), Jl 8, 1809. 10 It is ordered that Varick St. be regulated; that Broome St. be paved; that Walker and Chambers Sts. be opened according to given specifications for the purchase of the land; that lots on Grand St. (where "hills" exist between Elizabeth and Ryder Sts.) be reduced; and that Bancker St. be widened.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 605–10, 614, 624.

" The common council resolves "that all Licenses granted for building Vaults under the Street adjoining any Church, be rescinded, except so far as to completing the same where Contracts have been made, or the ground opened in consequence of such license heretofore granted."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 611–12.

12 "Hamilton Grange" (see Ap 8, 1805) is offered for sale, lease, or exchange.—Am. Cit., Jl 12, 1809.

17 Elisha Boudinot and others present a memorial to the common council stating "that they have agreed to form themselves into a Company for the purpose of establishing Steam-boats as ferry boats across the Hudson river, between the City of New York and the City of Jersey formerly called Paules Hook and for that purpose that it is necessary for them to procure a lease for the right of ferriage and praying a Lease from the Corporation for their right for the term of twenty one years on such conditions as they shall judge just, reasonable and promotive of the Public good." This is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 613. The original petition (MS.)—a long one, giving full particulars—is preserved in metal file No. 38, city clerk's record-room. For the committee's report, see S 22.

" It is resolved by the council that "it be respectfully intimated to Colonel Williams Command of the Corps of Engineers of the U. States that in the opinion of this Board it would greatly contribute to the safety of persons navigating this Harbor if Lamps were placed upon the Castle now erecting on Governors Island, on the Works erecting at the Western side of the Battery and at the end of Hubert Street on the Hudson River."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 617.

" It is ordered that South St. be continued eastward until it intersects Front St. near James Slip; and that Front St., from thence to Corlears Hook, be called South St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 614.

" The common council orders that Duane St. be paved from Washington St. to the Hudson River, and that Greenwich St. be paved to Hammersley St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 603, 604, 615, 619, 620.

" The lamp committee is authorised "to erect one or more Lamps in the Walks on the Battery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 617.

24 The common council directs the superintendent of repairs to "take immediate measures and remove the fences and lay open Greenwich Street to the Southward of Christopher Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 621. See O 30.

" It is ordered by the council that the lamps in the yard of Columbia College be lighted at the public expense.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 621.

" Gouverneur Morris and Simeon De Witt having recently resigned as commissioners for laying out Canal St., the common council appoints James Fairlie and Samuel Russell in their places. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 589, 601, 620. See Ag 14.

28 John Fellows announces: "The real cause which had deprived a portion of the city of its usual supply of water, is now fully ascertained; and the false reports respecting the deficiency in the quantity raised, will no longer gain credit with those who pay the least regard to candor. The pipes in Pine and Wall streets, at their junction to Broadway pipes were completely stopped by Poplar roots. Pipes in Tryon row and South street, were in a similar condition. . . . The water is, however, now conveyed through every street containing conduits. . . . By means of a more capacious boiler and several new conduits, a greater quantity of water than formerly can be thrown into the city in a given time. The fountains in Courtland street and Peck slip, are again opened for the supply of shipping; and also the fountain at the engine for the same purpose, as well as to furnish families not supplied with conduits. . . ."—Pub. Adv., Jl 29, 1809. See also Com. Adv., Je 30, 1809.

29 Thomas Hardcastle begins to print a weekly paper entitled Washington Republican; or, True American. The last issue located is that of Jan. 13, 1810.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 503.

July 31 The common council accepts an invitation from the president and professors of Columbia to "join the procession from the College Green to the North Dutch Church & to attend the Annual Commencement to be held on Wednesday the 2d of August next." It is ordered that a chain be extended across the streets adjacent to the North Church during the commencement exercises to prevent the passage of carts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 625.

" A petition is received "from persons residing on, and near Manhattan Island, stating the unhealthiness of the Marsh, & praying that said Marsh & Lots adjoining North Street might be filled up." It is referred to the alderman and assistant of the Tenth Ward, and the street commissioner.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 622. Regarding the "Manhattan Island" here referred to, see L. M. R. K., III: 966. Thos. F. De Voe, writing as late as 1862, said he remembered this piece of land, or knoll, between Houston and 3d Sts. Lewis St. ran about through the centre of it.—Market Book, 524. " The common council appoints a committee "to devise a mode of impounding Cattle that trespass on the Battery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 625.

Aug. 1 As the board of health has represented that "a pestilential or infectious disease doth prevail in the village of Brooklyn, in the county of Kings," Mayor Clinton by proclamation prohibits all intercourse between New York and Brooklyn, and orders that no one who, within 14 days, has been in the latter place shall enter this city.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ag 4, 1809. A copy of this proclamation was sold with the library of the late Geo. H. Moore, by Bangs & Co., N. Y., May 10, 1893.

6 Publication of The Observer (see F 17) is suspended with the issue of this date. More than a year later the paper was revived with the same title, but of quarto size.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 472; Early Newspapers, II: 426.

7 Thomas Brown, chief engineer, on behalf of the engineers and firemen, publicly thanks John F. Randolph, "proprietor of the old Tea Water pump (revived) for the ready and prompt assistance he has afforded them in the several late fires in Chatham-street." Brown says that "but for the aid furnished from his pump, the progress of the flames must have been more considerable."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 7, 1809.

8 A number of citizens meet at the North Dutch Church and organize the "Anti-Duelling Association of New York." They promise not to vote for anyone who has ever sent, accepted, or carried a challenge to fight a duel, and adopt an address to the "Electors of the State of New York" setting forth the objects of their organization and urging others to join.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ag 15, 1809.

9 Pres. Madison recalls his proclamation of April 19 (q.v.) because Great Britain has refused to ratify the agreement made by the British minister that the orders in council would be withdrawn on June 10.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Ag 12, 1809; Annals of N. Am., 507.

14 The trustees of the Free School Society petition the common council for some assistance "towards completing the School House now erecting." This is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 626. For the committee's report, see Ag 28.

" A law is passed by the common council to erect a pound in the almshouse yard.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 628.

" As the sum of $6,179 has been granted for taking property for opening Collect St., the common council orders that the amount be assessed upon those benefitted.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 639–40.

" The common council designates the almshouse "as an Asylum for lost children, where it is requested they may be immediately sent, that parents & guardians may know where to apply for information."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 641.

" James Fairlie (see Jl 24) and John Rutherford (see My 24) resign as commissioners for laying out Canal St., and William H. Ireland and Daniel J. Ebbets are appointed instead.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 640.

15 A map of part of the Bowery Road, pointing out precisely the places for the true lines of said road according to a former survey made in 1793, bears this date.—See the original (map No. 146), in bureau of topography, borough president's office, Municipal B'ld'g.

21 John Pintard, secretary of the N. Y. Hist. Soc., invites the common council to be present at the "Second Centenary Anniversary of the discovery of this part of America by Henry Hudson,"

1809 Aug. 21 and requests the use of the front court-room for the meeting of the society on this occasion. The invitation is accepted, and the request granted. The date of the event is given as Sept. 4, 1809 [q.v.]. Rev. Samuel Miller is expected to deliver an oration.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 644.

" The common council directs the street commissioner "to have the Street in front of the Albany Basin commonly called Swartwouts Basin immediately paved according to the original design."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 647. The paving was finished by Nov. 27.—Ibid., V: 761.

" The common council resolves "that the Watch Committee be directed to place a Watchman at the door of the House in which the Governor resides when in this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 647.

28 There are 120 children in the African Free School.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 649.

" An ordinance is passed in common council to regulate Fourth St. from Division to Pump (Canal) St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 651. Fourth St. here mentioned is the present Allen St. See 1817; L. M. R. K., III: 1000; Pl. 175, Vol. III.

" The committee on the petition of the Free School Society (see Ag 14) makes the following report: "That a considerable sum of money has been expended by the memorialists in repairing & fitting up the Old Arsenal [see Ag 8, 1808] for the reception & accommodation of the school; that in the appropriation of their funds to this object, every attention appears to have been paid to œconomy & a faithful application of their means, consistent with due regard to beauty of architecture and convenient distribution of apartments: that their resources are now exhausted and the building unfinished; that they are reduced to the necessity of asking assistance from the liberality of this Board, or of seeing the work entirely suspended: that the sum of $1500 would enable them to complete the building and the rent of the lower part of the House added to the annual allowance of the Legislature will defray all future expences of the school.

"Under these circumstances, the Committee impressed with a high sense of the usefulness of the free school institution, & feeling it incumbent on the Common Council as Guardians of the poor and unprotected to extend its patronage so far as to enable the Memorialists to complete their building, recommend that they be authorized to borrow the sum of $1500. for the purpose of completing the School House, & that this Board will guarantee the payment of said sum, within Seven Years, with legal interest annually." The report is confirmed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 649–50. The new school was opened on D 11 (q.v.).

" The common council passes ordinances "for laying Walks & Curb Stone on Water Street on the north side of Cherry Street from Montgomery Street to Corlaers Hook & for laying Walks & Curb on the north side of Cherry street from Rutgers to Gouverneurs Street," also for carrying out a pier on the east side of Beekman Slip.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 652.

" The common council resolves "that no person be allowed to keep a Lime House in any of the Public Streets of this City longer than three months—and that no lime house be permitted to remain in any Street between the first day of November and the first day of April in any year under the penalty of Twenty five Dollars for every twenty four hours it shall so remain."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 654.

Sept. — The first railroad tracks ever laid down in America were placed at this time in a large yard in Philadelphia by Thos. Leiper, the projector, and satisfactory experiments were made.—Scharf & Westcott, Hist. of Phila., I: 544. Cf. an article entitled "Finding our oldest railway," in N. Y. Times, F 22, 1925.

4 The bi-centenary of "the discovery of this part of America by Captain Henry Hudson" is celebrated by the New York Historical Society (see Ag 21). Rev. Dr. Samuel Miller delivers a commemorative address to the society, the governor, mayor, city corporation, etc., at the city hall. At 4 o'clock a dinner is given at the City Hotel.—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 6, 1809; Kelby, Hist. of the N. Y. H. S., 18. Dr. Miller's address is printed in N. Y. H. S. Collections (1809), 17–40.

" The common council orders that the owners of water lots on the East River between Peck Slip and the pier belonging to Peter Schermerhorn and Ebenezer Stevens shall sink a "good & substantial" bulkhead on the south line of South St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 656–57.

Sept. 4 The common council appoints a committee "to procure from Augustus Van Cortlandt Esq[r] a Cession of his right to the ground between Broadway & the Collect where the old water works formerly stood."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 657. See S 11.

" The common council passes the following resolution: "Whereas Andrew I. M[c]Laughlin has been at considerable expence in making [in July] a Pavilion at the Flag Staff on the Battery for the accommodation of the Public Resolved therefore that the said Andrew I. M[c]Laughlin shall be permitted to use & occupy the same for the term of three years free of expence unless the same shall be previously required by the United States for the purposes of Fortifications." On the same day, the superintendent of repairs reports that the flagstaff is "in a decayed state & dangerous to the inhabitants," and the corporation orders him to take measures "for repairing the same, or for erecting a new one as he shall judge most adviseable."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 623, 634, 656; descrip. of Pl. 59, I: 435. See S 11.

6 Lieut. (later Commodore) Thomas Macdonough leaves the frigate "Essex" in New York harbour, detached by the government for other service.—R. Macdonough, Life of Commodore Thomas Macdonough, 91–92.

9 The Academy of Arts invites the Historical Society to occupy a room in the government house. The invitation was promptly accepted, and on Sept. 15 the first meeting there was held. The north-west room in the second storey of the building was appropriated to the use of the society, and the books, which had been previously kept in the city library, were removed to the same place.—Kelby, The N. Y. Hist. Soc., 1804–1904, 22.

11 The superintendent of repairs informs the board that he understands "that the Ground at present occupied by the Flag Staff at the Battery would probably be used by the United States on the completion of the works now erecting near that place." This representation is referred to a committee "with authority for them to select a scite whereon to erect a Flag Staff on the Battery."—M. C. C. (1874–1831), V: 661. The federal government was at this time erecting Castle Clinton, and the "flagstaff" was directly in line with the causeway.—Descrip. of Pl. 59, I: 435. See S 18.

" Deeds from Augustus Van Cortlandt (see S 4) are presented to the common council, releasing to the city the land "situate lying & being in the sixth Ward of the said City of New York being bounded & described as follows viz On the West by Broadway on the North by Ground belonging to John Jay Esq[r] on the East by ground formerly belonging to the Widow Barclay and Southerly by ground formerly belonging to me the said Augustus Van Courtlandt containing one acre and three quarters." The board orders that they be "acknowledged & recorded."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 663–64.

" The common council receives a petition from the trustees of the African Free School, "requesting that as the School House now occupied by the New York Free School will soon be vacant that it may then be applied to their use." The application is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 661. On Oct. 2, the trustees of the "Economical School" also petitioned for the use of the school-house.—Ibid., V: 679. For the board's answer, see ibid., V: 697. See, further, N 27.

" The common council directs the street commissioner to prepare an ordinance for regulating Hudson Square and laying the curb stone "around the fence."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 662.

" The common council passes an ordinance opening Albany Ave. through the Inclenbergh lots.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 662–63. See also ibid., VI: 357–63.

" The common council orders that Washington St. be opened from Provost to North Moore St. and from Provost to Jay St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 664.

15 The N. Y. Hist. Soc. publishes an "Address" to the public in the form of a handbill, soliciting donations of manuscripts, books, pamphlets, and other records to form the basis of the society's collections. A descriptive list of such historical materials is included in the statement. This circular, signed by John Pintard, recording secretary, is reproduced in Jas. Grant Wilson's address on John Pintard, delivered before the society Dec. 3, 1901, and pub'd in 1902. It contains the following inscription: "The cause of truth is interesting to all men, and those who possess the means, however small, of preventing error, or of elucidating obscure facts, will confer a benefit on mankind by communicating them to the world." The society was organised on Nov. 20, 1804 (q. v.).

1809 Sept. 18 John Pintard informs the common council that, agreeably to their order (see O 10, 1808), he has indexed volumes 8, 9, 10, and 11 of the council minutes. A committee is appointed to determine his compensation.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 667. See N 30.

" A committee of the common council reports that the permanent regulation of Cherry St. from Rutgers to Gouverneur St. cannot be made until the board determines "on the line of the River whether South Street shall extend in front of this portion of said Street or not," and in order to do this it is necessary to have soundings taken and a profile made. The "situation of this part of our River" is thus described: "the Burl Rock reef runs out in front of this part of the City from four to five hundred feet and at low tide it is nearly bare, & very dangerous to our Coasting vessels, it is believed that this Reef must be covered by a large Pier or be docked over it to secure a sufficient depth of water in front of the City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 665, 668–69.

" The board agrees upon the permanent lines of Front and South Sts. between Whitehall and Broad Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 669.

" Andrew I. McLaughlin (its keeper—See S4) asks the common council "to be permitted to erect a Booth in the vicinity of the Flag Staff on the Battery during the rebuilding of the same." His petition is referred to a committee. On the same day the committee appointed on Sept. 11 (q.v.) reports that "they have viewed the Battery for the purpose of ascertaining a proper scite for a new Flag Staff & building appurtenant & recommend that the same be erected within the scite of the former Bastion near the South point of the Battery." This report is approved and a committee is appointed "to prepare a Plan for the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 666, 671; descrip. of Pl. 59, I: 435. See O 19.

19 A published notice mentions the "Columbian Theatre," at the corner of Broadway and Warren St. (see Ja 16).—Pub. Adv., S 19, 1809. See N 28.

21 "Justice" addresses the following open letter to the city corporation: "It is said that Broadway is to be dug down, at the juncture of Spring street, four feet: should this be done all the ground between Broadway and the Bowery road, in that vicinity, must be dug down likewise. This part of the city has already been sunk, on an average, about six feet deep, and the proprietors have been assessed several thousand dollars to pay for their property being thus injured. In some instances houses have been undermined and fallen down.—The consequent repair of houses injured and digging out the superfluous earth left upon the lots, will cost, probably, upwards of one hundred thousand dollars. A second digging down will, of course, involve a repetition of injury to the buildings repaired and erected, and leave more earth to be removed from the lots, at the expence of the sufferers, who are, in general, persons that have obtained their lots by hard industry and who are not able to bear such enormous expences, and the ruin of their property."—Am. Cit., S 21, 1809.

22 The committee to which was referred the application of Elias Boudinot and others to run steamboats between New York and Paulus Hook (see Jl 17) makes the following report: "That from the Insular situation of this City they conceive it the duty of the Corporation to patronize every scheme calculated to facilitate the intercourse with the surrounding Country: And as the insecurity & delay of the present ferry establishment has long been a subject of complaint and as the safety & utility of the Steam Boat project has been so satisfactorily proven, they are induced to recommend some arrangement being immediately formed with these Gentlemen.

"As far as the Committee are informed no unwillingness to give a liberal consideration for the Lease exists. The Plan herewith submitted has been scientifically explained & the Committee are satisfied with the demonstrations given of the utility & entire practicability of the design: But as the expense will unquestionably be considerable & as your Committee are not sufficiently informed of the views of the applicants in the detail [,] they would now recommend appointing a Committee to confer, fix and settle the Covenants, conditions and such other agreements as necessarily appertain to this subject, with such correspondent Committee as may be for this purpose appointed by the Company, whose report shall be subject to the Control of this Board." The board approved the report on Oct. 2 and authorised the same committee to carry out the recommendation.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 681–82. Three more aldermen were added to the committee on Oct. 19.—Ibid., V: 702. See N 6.

Sept. 22 A communication from John Pintard recommending "that 25 the Crossing Stones which had been placed lately in several of the Streets should be put under the care of the Superintendant of Repairs & also suggesting the propriety of prohibiting the passing of carriages by churches on the Sabbath during the time of divine service" is referred to a committee. A letter from Robert Fulton "on the subject of supplying the City with a sufficient quantity of pure Water & also on the enforcing of the laws for keeping the Streets clean & free from obstruction" is referred to the same committee—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 673. On Oct. 2, it reported that that part of Pintard's communication respecting the cross-walks deserved the particular attention of the board and that a resolution ought to be passed accordingly, but that "the Corporation have no power to take any measures" regarding the other suggestion. The report was confirmed.—Ibid., V: 680. On Dec. 4, the committee reported that "entertaining the highest respect for the talents & information of Mr Fulton, they consider him entitled to the gratitude of the Public for the offer of his services without compensation in the improvement of our Police," and they suggested "that this Board ought not to neglect the opportunity of availing itself of services which may be so beneficial to the City." The report was ordered to lie for consideration.—Ibid., V: 763.

" The board agrees to lend the Historical Society "such tables as shall not be immediately wanted by the Com: Council." It also directs the superintendent of repairs to make "an Inventory of such furniture as is now in the [City] Hall & not in use & Report the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 674. See O 19.

" A ferry is established from the foot of Walnut St. across the East River to Jackson St. on Long Island.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 675. See also L. M. R. K., III: 943.

Oct. 2 The Medical Society of New York decides to address a circular letter to the county societies throughout the state urging them to unite in a petition to the legislature that Dr. Hosack's "Botanic Garden" be purchased "for the benefit of the Medical Schools of this city."—N. Y. Com. Adv., N 11, 1809. See Ja 15, 1810.

9 The common council adopts regulations for the sale of the Collect lots, the sale to begin on Nov. 1 (q.v.) at the city hall. The committee on the sale is directed to "select such of the Lots as are reserved and which they shall judge suitable for the Economical and the African Schools" (see S 11).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 689–90. On Nov. 20, Mary Jones was paid $13 for "printing 1,000 Handbills & 200 conditions of sale of Collect Lots."—Ibid., V: 753. See N 6.

19 Jacob P. Roome, superintendent of repairs, reports to the common council "That agreably to the order . . . of Sept 25. 1809 [q.v.] he has examined the old furniture which was in the dark room of the City Hall and found eleven old circular mahogany tables—Six of the best are removed to the Government House by John Pintard Esqr for the use of the Historical Society until wanted by the Corporation.

"The following is the furniture now in the Hall & not fit for use.

"Five circular tables broken, twenty eight mahogany chairs broken, five pair of brass andirons broken two old Grates one Compting House Desk & frame three old franklin Stoves, thirty four Stone Cutters hammers, one lot of old iron.

"The Superintendant recommends the above old articles to be disposed of in some way so as to clear the rooms of the incumbrances." The board thereupon orders that the furniture be sold at public auction.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 697. The original report (MS.) is preserved in metal file No. 38, city clerk's record-room.

" The committee on the petition of Andrew I. McLaughlin recommends to the common council "that the new Flag Staff be erected on the scite proposed by the former Committee [see S 18]; that it be constructed in the same . . . manner as the former flagstaff except that the Columns be new & turned & somewhat higher than they were before, and that it be raised in such a manner as to admit of two Steps so that if the Common Council should at a future period think it necessary to have it floored it may be done." The committee also suggests that "so much of the old materials as can be used to advantage be applied to the construction of the new flag staff," and that the superintendent of 1809 repairs be directed "to proceed in this business without delay."

Oct. A plan of the "intended flag staff" accompanies the report. By 19 a vote of 11 to 4 the report is approved.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 698. The new flagstaff was begun on Oct. 23 (q.v.).

" The common council passes an ordinance for regulating the streets around Hudson Square.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 701–2.

" The common council agrees to lend the commissioners of the almshouse "the Sedan Chairs belonging to the Corporation."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 694.

" The common council passes an ordinance to prevent the running at large of hogs, pigs, etc. without rings in their noses.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 692.

23 The building of the "new Flag Staff [see O 19] and its enclosure, on the southerly point of the Battery" is begun. "Its dimensions, in height and circumference, are to be similar to the one lately demolished; but the new one will possess more conveniences for the Subscribers to the Spy-Glasses, as every accommodation that they could wish, will be erected."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., O 25, 1809. The new flagstaff appears on the Commissioners' Map of 1811 (Pl. 79, Vol. I). See also descrip. of Pl. 59, I: 435, and L. M. R. K., III: 962. This was the second flagstaff erected on the Battery; the first had been built about 1790 (q.v.). See also Halsey, Pictures of Early New York on Dark Blue Staffordshire Pottery, 105–6.

26 Contoit's "New York Garden," on Broadway, next to the corner of Robinson Street, and directly opposite the Park, containing in length about 119 feet, and in front and rear 37½ feet, is advertised for sale.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., O 26, 1809; cf. Bayles, Old Taverns, 453. See Ap 18, 1810.

27 John Jay and Peter Jay Munro, on the one part, and the city of New York, on the other part, sign an agreement "that the Alley already laid out through the Ground of Messrs White Morris & others between Sugar Loaf [Franklin] Street and White Street parallel with Broadway and twenty five feet wide shall be continued through the land of the said Corporation and of the said John Jay & Peter Jay Munro to Canal Street, and further that no dwelling Houses shall ever be built fronting upon the said Alley, and that the ground of the said Alley shall be ceded to and accepted by the said Corporation." The agreement was approved by the common council on Oct. 30.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 707. This is Cortlandt Alley.—See Pl. 175, Vol. III.

30 A committee of the common council reports that in investigating the accounts of Wm. Mooney, late superintendent of the almshouse, "an alarming increase has been discovered in the late expences of the Alms House Establishment." The expenses for the year ending July 31, 1809, greatly exceeded those of any other year and were nearly double those of 1804, and the progressive increase in expenditure "in most cases greatly exceeds the ratio of the number of Paupers." Comparing the articles consumed in 1804 and 1809, the committee observes "with regret, that the greatest increase has taken place in the consumption of those articles which are used as the gratifications of luxury or intemperance, while the use of some articles which might contribute to the comfort of the sick or feeble has been diminished or discontinued.

"The quantity of Rum consumed in the latter year is more than double that in the former, that of Gin is six times & of Brandy five times as much as in the former year." . . .

The committee also submits a "Statement of the number of Paupers & the expence of the Alms House from the Year 1803 to July 31st 1809," and a "Comparative Statement of Articles consumed." The common council orders "that the said Report be entered at length on the Minutes and that it lay for further consideration."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 714–27. See also ibid., V: 732, 752.

" A committee reports to the common council "That in opening Greenwich Street thro' the Nursery nothing farther has been done than cutting down the trees, & that unless the numerous small stumps are grubbed or ploughed out, and the rubbish removed it will be impossible for Carriages to pass in safety." The board thereupon orders that this work be done.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 711.

" The street commissioner reports to the common council that A. L. Bleecker has consented to cede Bleecker St. from Broadway to the Bowery Road to the city, gratis, "reserving to himself the right of compensation for any other streets that the Corporation may direct to be run through his gound subject to the usual assessment." The matter is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 708. See N 6. Oct. 30

" Because of the enormous expense involved, the common council resolves "that it is inexpedient to extend Chamber Street in Chatham Street" (see Je 19).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 709–10.

" The common council orders that Lispenard St. be extended to Broadway, agreeably to a map submitted by a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 712.

" The common council passes an ordinance "for regulating that part of Bridge Street lately opened between Whitehall & State streets."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 712.

" The common council directs the street commissioner to take immediate measures for opening Crosby St. to Bleecker St. and "for causing the Waters to be conveyed or drained off from the Bowery road between North St & Romaine Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 727.

Nov. An English merchant visiting New York writes in his diary:
1 "At six we went to the theater, in the boxes, and saw the play of 'The Merchant of Venice' and 'The Children in the Wood.' The house is nearly the size of Haymarket, very neatly fitted up. There are three tiers of boxes, and but one gallery. It is observable that no female is ever seen in the pit here, for what reason I could not learn. The house was tolerable full. There are separate porter, punch, and coffee rooms for the use of visitors. The latter is carpeted and fitted with sofas and every requisite accommodation. The scenery is tolerable good, and pretty well managed; and as far as I can judge the acting is not to be found fault with. A Mr. Twaits and a Mrs. Mason are the leading characters here at present, and we had two or three songs from a Mrs. Poe, which in my mind was middling. The performance was over about eleven o'clock."—"Extracts from the Diary of an English Merchant who visited America in 1809," in Munsey's Mag., XL: 203–4.

" The so-called "Collect lots" are offered for sale. "Conditions of sale of the Lots of Ground belonging to the Corporation of the City of New-York, fronting on Broad-Way, Elm, Collect, White, Sugar loaf, Leonard and Anthony-Streets, in the Sixth ward of the said City; to be sold at public Auction at the City Hall, on Wednesday the First of November 1809, at 12 o'clock," are printed as a circular or broadside, one of which is now preserved in metal file labelled "Filed Papers, 1804–1808," in city clerk's record-room. See also O 9 and N 6.

" Charles Holt begins the daily publication of The Columbian. —Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 387. On Dec. 16, Holt started a semi-weekly edition of his paper "for the Country."—Ibid.

2 "The streets of New York are spacious, tolerably paved and lighted. The footpaths are chiefly paved with brick, though some are flagged. The principal streets—Broadway, Greenwich, etc.—are upward of a mile long. Indeed, the town is planned out near nine miles, and the buildings are increasing very fast. The houses which are chiefly of brick, are lofty and very neatly built. Almost every one is painted on the bricks, which gives them a very lively appearance. There are also some very neat, and indeed handsome, houses belonging to the citizens a short distance out of town. There are very few public buildings that attract the attention of a traveler, with the exception of one now erecting on apparently a large scale, of brick, but faced and with all the ornaments, pillars, etc., to be composed of white Marble. It is, I believe, intended for State offices [the present city hall.]"

The old federal hall "is now appropriated for a court of justice. The Hall of Congress is now the Court of Chancery.

". . . In Beekman Street is a small Episcopalian chapel, at present remarkable for bearing as a vane the crown and scepter, said to be the only remains of royalty in the State. [St. George's Chapel.]

"The custom of planting trees—in general, Lombardy poplars, on each side of the streets adds very much to their appearance, and is universally practised. Some few years since, the magistrates, during the continuance of a pestilential fever, ordered them to be cut down, but were but partially obeyed. It is now considered that they add to the health of the place by the waving of their branches creating an air during the extreme heat of the summer months.

"In the center of a small area [Bowling Green], before the custom-house—formerly the government house . . . —still stands a stone pedestal on which there was once a statue of his

1809 present majesty, cut in lead, which during the Revolutionary War
Nov. was taken down and converted into bullets."—"Extracts from the 2 Diary of an English Merchant who visited America in 1809," in Munsey's Mag., XL: 204–5.

6 Dr. David Hosack presents a petition to the common council "stating that he intended to make an application to the Legislature at the next Session soliciting them to purchase the Botanic Garden in order that the same may be connected with the Medical Schools of this City. That Previous to this application he was desirous of freeing the Ground from the Quit Rent which is now paid to the Corporation. That having been necessarily led to very great and unexpected expences in the improvement of those Grounds and those being for purposes of Public utility he hoped the Board would freely relinquish to him the Quit Rent, but if they supposed a pecuniary compensation from him was proper, he begged they would ascertain what that should be." The petition is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 732–33, 766.

" The common council receives a petition from Daniel French stating that he has made "great improvement in the construction and use of Steam Engines," for which improvement he has obtained a patent, that "the improvement may be applied to Boats for the purposes of ferrying across rivers and upon a Plan infinitely cheaper than any yet in use," that his machinery "is nearly ready for Exhibition and Experiment," and that when it is completed he would like to lease the Paulus Hook Ferry. He therefore asks the board to defer granting a lease for that ferry. At the same meeting a petition is also received from Elisha Morrill and Levi Kendell stating that they have obtained a patent for an invention which they believe "more powerful in its application to the working of any kind of machinery than any hitherto discovered," and that they understand a lease is to be given for the establishment of steamboats on the Paulus Hook Ferry, and believe their invention to be "Superior to all other discoveries." They ask the board to make an investigation. Both petitions are referred to the committee which is considering the application of Elias Boudinot and others on the same subject (see S 22).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 731. See D 11.

" The finance committee reports that, in accordance with resolutions of the board (see O 9 and N 1), 21 lots of ground "on Broad Way, White Street and Elm Street in the vicinity of the Collect" have been sold for $25,520.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 733–34. On Dec. 26, deeds for some of these Collect lots were ordered to be sealed and delivered.—Ibid., V: 795.

" The common council agrees to accept A. L. Bleecker's cession of Bleecker St. (see O 30) and directs the street commissioner to treat with him for the opening of Crosby and Mott Sts. to Bleecker St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 734–35.

" The common council agrees to a report of a committee for establishing a watch in Greenwich Village without additional expense to the city, except for a foreman, a room, and fuel.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 735.

" The common council authorises the watch committee "to purchase the House at the corner of Beach Street & Chapple St lately owned by William J Waldron to be applied to the purpose of a Watch House."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 739.

" The common council accepts the offer of Samuel Burling to furnish as many poplar trees of a suitable size as may be necessary to line Broadway from Leonard to Art St. on both sides, provided the corporation will remove them at their own expense.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 738–39; Man. Com. Coun., (1865), 615.

" The common council receives a conveyance from Peter Goelet "for his Rights on the Easterly side of the Pier on the West side of the Exchange Slip," and orders that it be filed in the comptroller's office.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 737

7 The English merchant who is visiting New York (see N 1 and 2), takes a trip with a friend to the state prison. This is "about two miles out of town . . . at Greenwich." He observes: "The punishment of death in this State, as each State is governed by its own laws, is never inflicted but in case of murder.

"We were very much gratified with this place, as the greatest order, cleanliness, and regularity is observed throughout. Every prisoner, if a mechanic, is obliged to work a daily task allotted him, and whatever he can earn further he is permitted to appropriate to himself. Those who have not been bred to any trade are permitted to make choice of one, or otherwise are set to pick oakum. There is at present a German count employed in this way for forgery. There are separate workshops for each craft, Nov.
among which are blacksmiths and nail-makers, shoemakers, 7 tailors, coopers, weavers, turners, spinning, toy-makers, etc. The building is of brick, and apparently well arranged to promote the health of its inhabitants, of whom there is at present about eight hundred. It is surrounded with a wall, on which, at proper distances, are placed sentinels.

"There are very few females, whose employ is to wash and mend the linen. One of the keepers attends strangers through the different workshops, and is not permitted to take any fee. No one is allowed to converse with a prisoner without having first obtained the consent of the head keeper."—"Extracts from the Diary of an English Merchant who visited America in 1809," in Munsey's Mag., XL: 205.

"A Spectator" writes to one of the papers: "Having lately " heard much conversation . . . about certain bridges which they propose to build over Harlem River . . . it may not be amiss to turn public attention a little that way, so that when the Legislature meet, there be no lack of information. . . . One question, shall not, by me at least, be meddled with; viz. whether the rights of those who own the present bridge, extend by construction up and down the river, beyond the limits specified in the grant under which they hold. . . . If they do it would be a cruel tyranny to deprive them of their property.—By the bye, if they have the privilege of constructing that grant to suit themselves, it is to be wished they would extend their right down to Hell-Gate, and cause a grievous nuisance to be removed, which in the form of a bridge, over which, very few do pass, and under which, scarce any one can pass. . . . Before it was erected large ships of war could come up almost to Haerlem Church, and vessels of twenty feet draught, could come up and lie safely before that village. At present a common river sloop cannot get through the bridge, even if the draw were attended, which it is not. Indeed some say it cannot be raised. . . .

". . . if the proprietors above mentioned, have no reasonable objection, that a bridge should be erected at the expence of this city, at Devoe's Point, the cost will, if properly done, be little. . . .

"The reasons why a bridge at this place would be useful, are these—first, the road to the Albany Turnpike will be shorter and better than the present road by King's Bridge . . . ; secondly, the distance to this bridge not being more than 9 miles and a half, and the distance from thence to Williams's Bridge over the Bronks, not being much more than 4 miles and a half, if a fair allowance be made for some few windings, . . . the distance from this city to the last mentioned bridge, will not exceed . . . 14 miles and a half. Lastly, the people of the town of Westchester would reach Devoe's Point, by a direct road from Lydig's Mills.

". . . a great cry will be raised against the present proposal. . . . , it is directly against the interests of several rich and great men, who live along the sound, and who will see with no small concern, a shorter and better communication opened with the eastern States than at present exists. . . . To go no further, is it not a shame that hay should be selling at from seven to ten shillings per hundred, when by opening a short and easy communication to the heart of West-Chester County it would, be reduced to five or six, thereby alleviating the expence of cartage, stabling, carriage hire, and the like in the city, and putting cash into the pockets of many midling farmers in that County, who might then enter into competition with those, who, under present circumstances, have a kind of monopoly?"—N. Y. Com. Adv., N 7, 1809. See N 30.

"The Grand Panorama, exhibiting a view of the city of New 8 York and the adjacent country is opened every day (Sundays excepted) from 9 o'clock in the morning till 6 in the evening." It is at the corner of Broadway and Leonard St.—N. Y. Com. Adv., N 8, 1809. For detailed description of the panorama, see Ap 21 and My 29, 1810.

A committee reports to the common council that they have 20 examined, "with considerable satisfaction and pleasure," the index made by John Pintard to volumes 8, 9, 10, and 11 of the council minutes (see S 18), and that they "approve of the Style and manner of his performance as admirably calculated to render a reference to the subject, they contain easy and perspicuous." A payment of $228, "being at the moderate rate of 3 Dollars p^{r} day," is recommended. The committee also observes "that from the changeable character of the Board a want of knowledge 1809 Nov. 20 relative to antecedent transactions must frequently occur in New Members; and that consequently a luminous and copious Index to the Minutes from the conclusion of the Revolutionary War up to the present time would be requisite if not indispensably necessary. To acquire without such a guide, the history of subjects on which . . . the Board may be called to Act, will require great Sacrifice of time and Labor. And should the contentions of party (which is not improbable) entirely change the Members, how can business progress, or how can an acquaintance with the circumstances of previous Measures be had, except by a refference to preceding Acts of the Board." To complete the index for the period mentioned, only six volumes have to be done, and the committee recommends that Pintard be engaged to do these and be paid $300 when finished. The report is confirmed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 751–52.

" As the commissioners appointed to lay out Canal St. have "judged it for the Public Interest to alter the direction of said Street, from the one formerly Contemplated, and by so doing there will be left a strip of Ground on the North East side of said Street, formerly purchased by the Corporation and which will not now be required for the use of said Street," the common council authorises them to sell or exchange this strip of land, "provided that it be done on such terms that the Corporation shall receive therefor at least the full amount at which it was valued when taken for Canal Street clear of any abatements or incumbrances whatever."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 750–51.

21 In the city election held on this and the two following days, the Federalists elected 15 of the 20 members of the common council. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 755–56; Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 458–59. The Republicans (or Democrats) were greatly disappointed at the result.—Conn. Courant (Hartford), My 9, 1810.

25 "On Saturday [Nov. 25] last the North River Steam Boat left this city with near 100 pasengers. At Red Hook, the river was covered with ice . . . , through which she broke a passage for 18 miles to Athens opposite Hudson, where the passengers landed. The Boat immediately returned, and on Tuesday [Nov. 28] arrived safe in New-York. As this is the first steam boat that ever navigated with success . . . we should not be surprised if at some future day medalions, urns, and ornaments were carved out of her old timbers; for her worth certainly merits such marks of distinction as much as the famed mulberry tree of Shakespeare. . . . She made her first voyage to Albany

"In July, 1807, and that year run 24 trips
In 1808 55 do

Total 145 Trips of 160 miles

Each equal 23,200 miles by the power of steam. The Car of Neptune commenced her voyages in September, and has run 17 trips equal 2,620 miles, total 25,920 miles. During the winter those boats are to receive an interior and exterior finish which in the spring will render them a more elegant and commodious means of travelling then any other country can boast of."—Pub. Adv., D 1, 1809. Concerning the "Car of Neptune," in 1810, see Fulton's MS. account-book, at N. Y. H. S.

26 A "boat of a singular construction" is employed in carrying passengers between New York and Brooklyn, on the east river. "It is 20 feet in length and is sculled by two vertical wheels of four arms, inserted obliquely, (like the arms of a windmill) into a shaft on each side of the stern of the boat, and moved by wheels turned by cranks with a man to each. The advantages of this invention are, (allowing that no velocity can be added without augmenting force) that the motion of the paddles or sculls is uniform and incessant, and therefore superior to the regular starts of an oar, and all the room occupied by the oars in rowing is saved to the boat. The improvements, it is presumed, is the subject of a patent, and the inventor is Mr A. G. D. Tuttill of this city."—Independent Chron., N 26, 1809.

27 The trustees of the "Economical French and English Schools" present a petition to the common council "stating that as they found that the Corporation could not conveniently grant them a Building for the purposes of their Schools, they requested that they would be pleased to grant them a Lot of Ground on which they might erect a School House." The petition is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 754. See S 11.

Nov. 27 The inhabitants of the "upper end of Broad Way," in a petition to the common council, state that "by the late attempt to regulate that part of the City they were put to extreme inconvenience and peril and praying that they might be permitted to fill up the trenches dug for laying Curb Stone or that the Board would take some measure to relieve them." Measures for relief are ordered. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 755.

" The laying of curb-stones in the Bowery to the two-mile stone is finished. Gosman & McComb are paid $600 for the work.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 759, 762.

" The street commissioner presents to the common council a deed from Richard Amos and wife "for the Streets runing through his property near the State Prison, which is presented gratis but upon the condition that the old building he has now erected the Corner of which will be in greenwich Street shall not be removed by any act of the Corporation for the ensuing five Years." The board agrees to accept the cession and directs the commissioner to survey the streets and place the necessary corner-stones. The road committee is also ordered "to consider of the propriety of opening Hudson Street through the Grounds of Richard Amos."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 760.

28 The Columbian Theatre (see S 19) is now called the Washington Theatre.—Merc. Adv., N 28, 1809.

30 "Another Spectator" replies as follows to the communication of Nov. 7 (q. v.): "The law, under authority of which the Harlem Bridge was built, passed in March 1790 [q. v.]; one clause of which is in the words following, to wit 'that it shall not be lawful for any person or persons whatsoever, to erect or cause to be erected, any other bridge over or across the said Harlem River to Morrissanie.' The North boundary line of the Morrissania patent, runs down to the Harlaem river at Crab island, about three quarters of a mile north of Devoes Point, and thence Southerly to the sound of East River.—Although the law authorising this bridge to be built, passed 1790, the public did not reap any benefit from it, until 1796, when the right was assigned to John B. Coles [see Mr 24 and N 24, 1795], who built it in that year. The same law made it incumbent upon the towns of West Chester and East Chester, to make a road from the bridge when erected, to East Chester, a distance of about eight miles, but this duty those towns totally omitted to perform; thus was the owner of the bridge, betrayed into the awkward situation, of having a toll bridge without a road to come to it . . . 'A Spectator', the writer who has called forth these remarks, seems to think, that it would be of great importance to this city, that a Bridge should be erected by the Corporation at Devoe's Point . . . —all the saving that can possibly arise to both citizen and farmer upon hay, will be 1 cent per hundred weight . . . and finally, that at this time the public convenience does not require any other bridge across Harlem river to the Southward of Crab Island, and that if their convenience should at any time require such, they ought not to be erected, until the right of the Harlem Bridge Company was purchased at a fair price."—N. Y. Com. Adv., N 30, 1809. See F 14, 1810.

Dec. 4 Washington Irving's so-called "Knickerbocker History" appears. It is advertised thus: "This day is published by Inskeep and Bradford, 128 Broadway, A History of New-York, In 2 vols. duodecimo, price 3 dollars; containing an account of its discovery and settlements, with its internal policy, manners, customs, wars, &c. while under the Dutch government, furnishing many curious and interesting particulars never before published, and which are gathered from various manuscripts and other authenticated sources, the whole being interspersed with philosophical speculations and moral precepts.

"This work was found in the Chamber of Mr. Deidrich Knickerbocker, the old gentleman whose sudden and mysterious disappearance has been noticed. It is published in order to discharge certain debts he has left behind."—Com. Adv., D 4, 1809. See also Wilson's Mem. Hist. of N. Y., IV: 56–57. For the origin of the word "Knickerbocker," see 18th Ann. Report, Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1913), 208–10. Irving states in the preface to later editions of the work that Dr. Mitchill's Picture of N. Y. (see My 2, 1807) moved him to write this extravagant burlesque. See also Lamb's Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 529.

In 1848, Irving wrote, from Sunnyside, an "apology" for his history, explaining that he and his brother Peter had commenced it as a parody on Dr. Mitchill's Picture of N. Y., but that after Peter went to Europe, he had altered it to a comic history of the 1809 Dec. 4 Dutch period and had not felt he was committing "any grievous historical sin in helping out the few facts I could collect in this remote and forgotten region with figments of my own brain, or in giving characteristic attributes to the few names connected with it which I might dig up from oblivion." He added: ". . . my presumptuous trespasses into this sacred, though neglected, region of history have met with deserved rebuke from men of soberer minds. It is too late, however, to recall the shaft thus rashly launched. . . .

"I will say this in further apology for my work: that if it has taken an unwarrantable liberty with our early provincial history, it has at least turned attention to that history and provoked research. It is only since this work appeared that the forgotten archives of the province have been rummaged, and the facts and personages of the olden time rescued from the dust of oblivion and elevated into whatever importance they may actually possess. . . ."—Irving's Hist. of N. Y. (1849), xi–xiv. The original MS. of the "Apology" is in the MSS. Div. of the N. Y. Pub. Lib.

" The common council accepts a deed from Wm. W. Gilbert and Betsey, his wife, for Cozine and Gilbert Sts. and orders that it be recorded and filed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 765.

" The common council directs that Peck Slip be filled up to the south line of Front St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 766.

" The common council authorises the mayor to offer a reward of $300 for information concerning the persons who, on Nov. 30, attempted to set fire "to the range of wooden Buildings in front Street between Crane Wharf and Beekman Slip."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 766.

" The common council appoints a committee "to enquire into and make a Statement of all the monies oweing by this Board shewing the present amount thereof and the annual interest payable thereon, the persons respectively to whom the same are owing, and also shewing the amount which will become due in consequence of Contracts already made. Also shewing the times when the several debts due by the Board were contracted and the amount due on the first Mondy of December in each year." The committee is also to "enquire into and State the encrease of the revenue of this Board for each year and the Amount of Public property disposed of and that the enquiry of the Committee relate back seven Years from this day, and that they be authorised to examine the necessary papers and documents belonging to this Board."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 772–73. See also ibid., V: 786.

9 The annual report of the building committee, now published, shows that the new city hall has already cost $273,916. "Perhaps in two years from the present time, this elegant and stupendous Hall will be entirely completed."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., D 9, 1809.

11 Free School No. 1, erected at Chatham St. and Tryon Row on the site of the old arsenal, is opened, and the children are removed to the new building, the first erected by the Free School Society. De Witt Clinton, president of the society, makes a long address, in which he reviews the organization of the society and its incorporation (see F 19 and Ap 9, 1805), the establishment of the common school fund (see Ap 2, 1805), the opening of the first free school (see My 19, 1806), the adoption of the Lancastrian system of education (see My 4, 1807), the grant from the legislature (see F 27, 1807), the opening of the school next to the almshouse (see My 1, 1807), the change in the name of the society (see Ap 1, 1808), and the gift of land by Col. Henry Rutgers (see Ap 12, 1807). Regarding the new building, he says: "The Corporation also presented the ground of this edifice, on which was an arsenal [see Ag 8, 1808], to the Society, on condition of their educating the children of the Alms House gratuitously; and also the sum of fifteen hundred dollars to aid in the completion of this building" (see Ag 28, 1809).—Com. Adv., D 16, 1809; L. M. R. K., III: 940. In their fifth annual report in May, 1810, the trustees of the society described the new school as "a brick edifice, 120 feet in length by 40 in breadth."—Ibid., My 9, 1810.

" John Stevens informs the common council that "he has been for a considerable time engaged in endeavors to apply the force of Steam to Navigation and claims to be the first in this Country who made efforts for that desirable end." As he is also "the propr[i]etor of the right of Ferrying from Hoboken to New York," he remonstrates against the petitions of the persons who have applied for the exclusive right of steam ferriage to the Jersey shore and asks the board to consider "his rights and claims to that privilege." This and all other memorials on the subject are referred to Aldermen Bingham, Mesier, and Carpenter.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 776. See also N. Y. Times, F 22, 1925. See, further, My 17, 1810.

Dec. 11

" The street commissioner is directed "to deposit in the office of his Department all Maps, Charts, Books, Plans, Diagrams, Profiles, Contracts, Accounts, papers and vouchers appertaining to Streets Roads Wharves Piers & Slip or in any way relating to this City and County and file an account thereof with the Clerk of this Board," and to present at the next meeting "a full and accurate statement of the Concerns of his Office specifying particularly the Ordinances passed and not yet acted upon, the various jobs on hand, the Contracts finished and not settled for, the Sums due on the several assessments with a Statement of the accounts of the several Collectors, the Bonds issued in relation to Streets with the time when and object for which they were given together with such other information in his possession as may be necessary to a distinct and accurate information of the Situation of the concerns of his Department." A committee is also appointed "to examine and consider the State and condition of the Department of Street Commissioner."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 779–80. The street commissioner's report was presented on Dec. 18 and referred to a committee.—Ibid., V: 785.

" The common council resolves "that a Counsel to this Board is not required and therefore that the office of Counsellor be and the same is hereby abolished."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 780.

14 The corporation of Trinity Church grants to the corporation of the city that part of Canal St. belonging to Trinity Church.—Trin. Min. (MS.). On Jan. 11, 1810, a notice relating to land wanted for public use for a canal was read, and "M[r] Harison requested to attend to the Business, . . ."—Ibid.

" Trinity vestry appoints a committee "to provide a Bell and Clock for S[t] John's Church in this City."—Trin. Min. (MS.). On Aug. 8, 1811, the bell and clock, procured by Wm. Bayard, were ordered paid for.—Ibid.

18 The common council passes "A Law For appointing Commissioners of the Alms House and Bridewell and vesting them with sufficient powers for the better governing and regulating these institutions," and appoints three commissioners.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 786–87. The ordinance was amended on Jan. 29, 1810.—Ibid., VI: 53.

" The common council passes the following resolutions: "Resolved, that for the future it shall be the duty of the Comptroller of this Board, immediately after the Minutes are read of the last Meeting to deliver to the President a paper exhibiting

"1[st] the Balance of Money in the Treasury.

"2[nd] A List of all the Accounts &c audited by him stating to whom due or by whom asked for, amount of each demand and for what services &[c] the demands are made. In order that the Warrants may if the Board think proper be issued accordingly.

"Resolved that all applications for money shall come through the Comptrollers office in order that the same may be laid before the Board for their consideration."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 785–86.

26 A committee of the Humane Society makes a report on the results of its inquiries into the number of tavern licenses, the manner of granting them, their effect upon the community, "and the other sources of vice and misery in this city;" also regarding its visit to the bridewell. To correct the evils complained of, the committee suggests "the propriety of applying to the Legislature for an act, so to enhance the expense of obtaining licenses, to retail spirituous liquors in the city of New-York, as to diminish the number of applicants for them."

On Dec. 27, the society addressed an appeal to the charitable societies of the city severally to appoint committees to meet each other at the N. Y. Free School on Jan. 10 next, to consider the evils and devise a system to remedy them. The report of the committee and the call for this meeting were published in a pamphlet (1810). See one of these in the N. Y. P. L.

" There are 35 engine companies with 847 engine-men, one floating engine, three hook-and-ladder companies with 46 men, seven engineers, and 55 fire-wardens in the city of New York.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 791–92. See also ibid., VI: 234.

" The piers between Burling Slip and Fly Market are finished.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 794.

" The common council resolves "that the Convicts employed

1809 D 26 on the Public Roads be returned to the Bridewell."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 795.

" The comptroller presents to the common council Richard L. Degroot's account for $1,089.30 "for taking down the old and raising the new Flag Staff [see O 23] at the Battery," and it is referred to the committee on the fire department.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 792. See Mr 26, 1810.

" The street commissioner presents to the common council a letter from the commissioners for laying out Canal St., requesting information as to the "points from which the Water will ultimately run into Canal Street, through the Streets which are not yet regulated between the Bowry Road and Hudson River," with his observations thereon. The board resolves that it is inexpedient "to interfere in the premises."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 794.

— In the beginning of this year, Robert Fulton published at New York a pamphlet entitled Torpedo War, and Submarine Explosions. In this he reviewed his torpedo experiments in England and at New York (see Jl 15 and 20, 1807), and pointed out the advantages and practicability of this mode of warfare as a means of defence for the harbours of the United States. The work included six plates, accompanied by detailed descriptions, showing different kinds of torpedoes and various methods of attack. Fulton estimated that the six "most important and vulnerable Ports" (New York being one) could be fitted out with a sufficient number of torpedoes for $531,000.—See copy of pamphlet in N. Y. P. L. The whole of Torpedo War was republished in the Aurora Gen. Adv. (Phila.), F 7, 9, 12, 14, 17, 22, 24, and 27, 1810, and the plates and their descriptions appeared in the Pub. Adv., Mr 15, 17, 20, 22, 26, and 28, 1810. On Feb. 9, Fulton sent several copies of his pamphlet to the members of the house of representatives, and offered to lecture before them upon the subject; but, according to a private letter from Washington, the Federal party opposed this, and "The house, contrary to every reasonable expectation decided against hearing Mr Fulton, which decision is one of the most unprincipled that ever took place in any enlightened body." —Aurora Gen. Adv., Mr 6 and 9, 1810. Fulton, however, did deliver a public lecture on torpedoes at Long's Hotel, Washington. —Ibid., F 28 and Mr 3, 1810.

— In this year, the population of Manhattan Island was 96,373. —13th U. S. Census Bulletin (1910). See also the Repertory, D 7, 1810. According to a census taken by order of the common council, there were only 94,760 people in the city and county.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 701–2.

— Between 1810 and 1812, Poppleton and Bridges made a series of 17 maps showing the shore of the Hudson River from the Battery to 75th St., and during 1810–14 they surveyed the shore of the East River from the Battery to 26th St. The original maps are filed in the bureau of topography, borough president's office. See also descrip. of Pl. 86, III: 565.

— In this year, a plan of the lots on the west side of Broadway between Vesey and Barclay Sts. was made, showing those belonging to Rutherford, Axtell, Rufus King, Roosevelt, and Harrison. —From original in Bancker Coll. (box B-F, folder "Broadway"), N. Y. P. L.

— In this year, the heirs of Capt. Archibald Kennedy conveyed the house at No. 1 Broadway to Nathaniel Prime.—L. M. R. K., III: 950; descrip. of Pl. 98, III: 590. It subsequently became the Washington Hotel (see 1848).

— Assessments are made for regulating Hudson St. and Hudson Sq.; Lombardy Park; Spring St. and paving it from Broadway to Bowery; Morton St. from Washington St. to Trinity Church grounds; and Greenwich St. from Charlton St. to Great Kiln Road; also opening Walker St. from Varick St. to Chapel St., and Bridge St. from Whitehall to State St. (and the following year for paving it).—Comptroller's Index to Assessment Rolls, Vol. I.

— In this year, a park at Bloomingdale was developed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 312, 356.

— "The Old Circus," formerly called the Olympic Theatre, and later Tattersalls, at 442 Broadway, dates from this year.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 635.

— The original reports of the board of health for 1810–1812 are now preserved in metal file No. 29, city clerk's record-room.

— In this year, Bogart's Artillery, New York, was organized.—Chas. S. Clark in the N. Y. Eve. Post, F 26, 1916.

1810 — In this year, Thomas Gimbrede "was engraving some excellent portraits in the stipple manner for the New York publishers, John Low and William Durell." In 1816, he had an office at 201 Broadway.—Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper & Steel, I: 100. See 1814.

— In this year, the so-called "Economical School" was incorporated for the education of the children of French emigrants resident in this city. In 1825, its income was inadequate for its support, and the school was closed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 354-55. See, further, Jl 16.

— In a letter to "Mr. Macomb," dated Sept. 10, 1810, Dr. Samuel L. Mitchill suggested that the following inscription be placed upon the city hall: "Jus Libertasque." In publishing the letter on Sept. 20, the editor of the Com. Adv. proposed an amendment, as follows: "Jus et Libertas," or "Justitia et Libertas," or "Justitia Libertatis Parens et Conservator." Dr. Mitchill gave his reasons for his choice of the Latin words.

On Sept. 17, 1810, the building committee, in response to an order from the board, presented "a report on the subject of the City Hall, accompanied w^h a detailed statement from M^r John M'Comb jun^r the architect, of the progress and present state of that building, of the sums annually expended thereon from its foundation in 1803 and an estimate of the additional sum, that will be requisite for the current year," and the common council resolved to raise money on its bonds to meet the present season's expenses for the hall.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 325, 339, 341. But the comptroller reported, on Sept. 24, that he was unable to borrow $20,000 on application to several banks and insurance companies.—Ibid., VI: 344. The money was eventually secured from the Manhattan Bank.—Ibid., VI: 349, 357. The build. com. informed the board on Nov. 12 that the copper for the roof had arrived, its cost being £2,425:13:9; but, the season being so far advanced, the com. proposed leaving the building this winter with "a good shingle covering," and "lay the Copper in the spring. The Committee is happy to find, that after giving directions to the architect, to go on, in finishing off a Common Council room, a room for the Mayor's office clerk's office and the comptroller's office, which are all progressing, the amount of monies received [sic] does not materially exceed the sum of $50,000 appropriated to put the new City Hall under cover with copper." The finance committee and comptroller were directed to "purchase bills of exchange for payment of the same."—Ibid., VI: 389.

Jan. 2 Congress approves the conduct of Pres. Madison in refusing to receive any further communications from Francis J. Jackson, the British minister, because of his "insolent and affronting" expressions regarding the United States government.—Laws of U. S., 11th cong., 2nd sess., 208–9.

" The street commissioner informs the board that the sum of $544.74 has been expended "in obtaining the Triangular piece of ground, at the intersection of George [Market], Lombardy [Monroe] and Cheapside [Hamilton] Streets."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 7. The site, developed in this year (ibid., 147, 212, 319, 349), later became Lombardy or Bedlow Park.—L. M. R. K., III: 970.

" The common council decides to borrow $3,570.34 at six per cent. in order to pay Daniel Woolsey and Walter Allen for making piers between Fly Market Slip and Burling Slip. The piers have been completed "in a workmanlike manner."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 5–6.

" The common council pays Thomas Scott $553.10 for paving the Albany Basin.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 6.

3 "E. Sargeant, corner of Wall street and Broadway, has for sale The Picture of New York; Or the Travellers Guide through the commercial Metropolis of the United States—Not by Mr. Knickerbocker, but by a gentleman now residing in this city. Price one dollar."—N. Y. Spectator, Ja 3, 1810.

8 Mayor Clinton informs the common council that, "having seen a publication in the News papers by Rob^t Dyde Innkeeper, stating that there would be a masked ball at Mount Vernon hotel, on the night of the 16th instant, he had directed the first Marshal of the City to write to Robert Dyde & inform him, that the intended ball was viewed by the Magistracy, as calculated to promote disorder and licentiousness; that the said letter was delivered, and that M^r Dyde's reply was, that it was his intention to hold the ball as advertised." The matter is referred to the committee on laws and ordinances.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 16. See Ja 15.

1810 Jan. 8 The trustees of the City Dispensary ask the common council to increase its subscription to the institution because their funds are "in a low state." The petition is referred to the committee of charity.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 10. On Jan. 29, the board agreed to subscribe $125 a year in future instead of $25.—Ibid., VI: 51.

" The common council passes "A Law for establishing the assize and regulating the Inspection of Bread." This provides that all bread shall bear the baker's initials and be made from "good & wholesome flour or meal," according to the assize published weekly in the newspapers. The city is to be divided into three districts, and an inspector for each district is to be appointed, at an annual salary of $400, who shall daily inspect and weigh the bread baked in his district to see whether it conforms to the regulations. Penalties are provided for infringements of the law.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 11–15.

10 A news item, headed "The Tortoise. Defence of our Harbor and City," reads: "Of all the plans suggested for this great end, one which has not yet been published seems deserving of particular attention. It is the invention of counsellor Sampson. . . . It is nothing more than a large scow, which may be made of the commonest materials, and is to carry a battery of 20 or 30 cannon of 42 lbs. calibre. It is so flat that the troops who embark in it can march on board, and proceed with a rising tide in the course of two hours towards its destination. It is so low that the shot from a ship of war can seldom . . . strike it. It may occasionally use sails, but at all times be put in motion by paddles or wheels inserted in a groove in a central line from stem to stern, which can be worked by the hands employed to fight the enemy. It is in form of a tortoise-shell . . . it is . . . shot proof. Every shot from it, if tolerably directed, take effect upon a ship, owing to the height of her sides. . . . It can move in silence and unperceived in the night. . . . The comparative expense will be much as a single button is to a suit of clothes. . . ."—Columbian, Ja 10, 1810.

" The apartments of the "Academy of Arts" in the government house are opened to visitors (see Ap 11, 1808).—Columbian, Ja 10, 1810.

15 The common council passes "A Law for the further regulation of Taverns & Boarding houses, in the City of New York." This prohibits, under penalty, all masked balls in taverns and boarding houses, as they are "of immoral and pernicious tendency, subversive of all just and honourable discrimination of character, and calculated to encourage the profligate, seduce the youth of both sexes and promote licentiousness & disorder." All persons "found masqued or otherwise disguised" are to be brought before the magistrates and fined. On the same day, Robert Dyde informed the board that the masquerade planned to be held at his house (see Ja 8) would not take place.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 23–25.

" A deputation from the Medical Society (see O 2, 1809) appears before the common council with a petition to the legislature "soliciting them to purchase the Botanic garden of Dr David Hosack, that the same may be annexed to the medical institutions of the state; in which application the Society requested the concurrence of this Board." By a vote of 15 to 2, the corporation resolves "that the Common Council fully coinciding with the medical society of this city in their opinion of the important benefits, resulting to the medical profession in particular and to the cause of science in general from the Botanical establishment of Dr Hosack & being persuaded, that the patronage of the legislature will redound to the public advantage & to the honour of the state, do most cordially and most respectfully unite with the medical Society in their application on that subject."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 25. See F 8.

" The canal committee presents to the common council an account of the money expended and owed by the board in connection with Canal St. and which is to be assessed upon the persons benefitted. It amounts to $58,405.22.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 29–30.

" "The Street Commissioner presented an assessment for the regulating and partially paving Broadway from Leonard Street to Art Street; which was confirmed & Lewis Angevine appointed Collector."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 29.

" The city inspector presents to the common council a "Comparative Statement of the number of deaths in this city for the years 1804, 1805, 1806, 1807, 1808 and 1809, with their ages, diseases &c." A comparison of this with the mortality statistics of foreign countries shows that "the city of New York is not only more healthy than any of the great & even moderately sized cities of Europe, but that it may also vie in this respect with several of the States & kingdoms of that continent taking the towns & country together." The inspector concludes: "Bills of mortality, in this city are as yet only in their infancy. Some important deductions may, however, be drawn from them even in their present state; and if the Common Council should continue to enforce accurate returns of deaths, they will, no doubt, in the course of some years, acquire a much greater degree of perfection & may become incalculably useful not only to medical professors; but also for various other useful purposes."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), V: 31–40. Jan. 15

" The comptroller presents to the common council the account of Thomas Smith "for a new vane to the new flag Staff amounting to $62.94" and a warrant is issued for the payment thereof.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 28.

" The watch committee is directed to station some watchmen "at Potter's Field."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 31.

19 Col. Williams sends Gov. Tompkins a description of "the present state of the defence of this harbor." He says:

"1. The battery off Laight and Hubert Street is ready to receive its guns, and is capable of mounting 16 guns of the heaviest metal.

"2. Fort Columbus on Governor's Island is finished, and capable of mounting one hundred and four guns, of which upwards of fifty are already on the ramparts. This is a regularly enclosed work of masonry, with ditch, counterscarp, covertway and glacis, capable of resisting a large siege.

"3. Two tier of platforms in the castle at west point of Governor's Island are finished, each being capable of receiving 26 guns, on a lower platform, eleven French 36 pounders, are already mounted. . . . The whole force of this castle when completed may be stated at 100 Guns, including the terrace on the top.

"4. At Ellis's island there are eight 32 pounders, and the platform is capable of mounting twenty.

"5. At Bedlow's island the mortar battery may be ready to receive eight or ten mortars as soon as they can be mounted, but the main work, which is calculated to mount forty guns, is about one half done: it will be completed in the course of the next summer.

"6. Also in the course of next summer the first tier of a castle off the old Battery will be completed, and mount thirty of the heaviest pieces.

"7. There are in the arsenal, between State and Wall Streets 24 pieces of heavy artillery ready mounted on travelling carriages.

"For a description of the works at the Narrows, I beg leave to refer to the annexed copy of a letter I wrote to the commissioners on fortifications by their request. . . ."—Hastings, Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, II: 250–52.

22 Robt. Fulton prepares an estimate of the expense of a steam ferry-boat for one year. For facsimile of the original, see Man. Com. Coun. (1869), 832.

" Three members are added to the committee on the fire department "for the purpose of taking into consideration the expediency & propriety of procuring the several fire Insurance companies of this city to bear a proportion of the expences of the fire department."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 44.

29 The common council directs the street commissioner "to cause a survey of the ground belonging to the Board called the Collect, to ascertain the quantity of earth requisite to fill it up and to report the same at the next meeting."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 54. See F 7.

" John R. Murray and others petition the common council "that the line within which buildings of stone or brick are to be erected may be extended so as to include Broadway, Greenwich & Washington Streets and the streets running from Broadway to Hudson river, viz Vesey, Bowery, Robinson, Murray, Warren, Chamber, Reed & Duane Streets." The committee to whom the petition was referred reported on Feb. 5 that "for the present, a further extension of the fire line for building ought not to take place," and the report was approved.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 47, 56.

" Jacob Morton is paid $350 "for deeds & maps for Hamilton Square."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 55.

F 3 At "a meeting of several persons claiming a right in the Harlaem

1810 Feb. 3 Commons, at the house of John Doughty, at Manhattan Ville" a petition to the legislature and the draft of a bill are adopted. The petition states in part: "That the Harlaem Commons consists of upwards of two hundred acres, and lies wholly unoccupied and waste, in consequence of doubts existing whether a division thereof can be made without an act of the legislature.

"And whereas we the subscribers are convinced that a partition of the said commons, by authority of the legislature, so as to vest in each proprietor his first and equal share, to hold the same in severalty, will greatly promote the interest of all the said proprietors, and be of essential advantage to the public, . . . We do, respectfully pray, that the legislature will be pleased to pass the bill which we beg leave to submit with this our petition. . . ." —Columbian, F 8, 1810. See Mr 19.

5 The committee on laws and ordinances, having been directed on Jan. 29 "to enquire into the necessity and expediency of an application to the legislature respecting the compensation to the Mayor of this city for his official services," reports to the common council that "they are satisfied that the revenues and emoluments of the Mayorality have become so great as to make the compensation of the Mayor already extravagant; and when they consider, that these revenues & emoluments are principally derived from the fees & profits of the Mayor as the Clerk of the Market and from the grants of licences and other sources, which must increase with the population of the city and that the said office of Clerk of the Market is held by the Mayor under the charter and that other parts of his revenue are received under the charter or under Laws of the State. They are satisfied also of the propriety of an application to the Legislature on the subject." The board thereupon adopts a petition and a draft of a law granting all the fees to which the mayor has heretofore been entitled, except those received as "Judge of the Court of Common Pleas called the Mayor's Court," to the city and allowing the mayor, instead, a salary not more than $7,000 nor less than $5,500, the exact amount to be determined from time to time by the common council. The petition and bill are ordered to be engrossed, sealed, and forwarded to Albany.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 45–46, 54, 60–64. The law was passed by the legislature on March 14.—Ibid., VI: 118. See also ibid., VI: 144–46.

" Mathew Clarkson and William Few, in behalf of sundry charitable societies, recommend that the prison for solitary confinement authorised by the legislature in 1802 (q.v., Mr 30) be built, because the promiscuous confinement of suspected and convicted criminals is "highly unfriendly to the morals of those, who were not already depraved." They also consider the great increase of tavern licences "a great evil" and suggest that the mode of granting such licences be revised.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 55.

" The common council adopts a petition to the legislature and the draft of a law permitting the city to raise, by tax, the sum of $125,000 to defray expenses for the current year.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 57–60. The law was passed on March 10.—Ibid., VI: 118.

7 The street commissioner reports to the common council that he has "caused a survey to be made and the soundings taken of the Collect [see Ja 29], in order to ascertain the quantity yet to be filled, a sketch whereof and the calculation is herewith presented. The soundings were made as deep as a reed pole could be made to penetrate, and the calculation made to a horizontal line, one foot, above the present surface of the ice." The calculation shows that 26,400 loads of earth are needed. The commissioner is thereupon directed "to report generally on the expediency and propriety of filling up the Collect."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 66. See F 12.

" The common council grants to the trustees of the African Free School two lots on William St. (Nos. 107 and 161), on condition that a school building be erected within a limited time, and that the property never be appropriated to any other use.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 47–48, 66–67. See Ap 5.

" A committee reports to the common council that the only thing in the way of opening North St. from First to Orchard Sts. is a rope walk now in the possession of Burnell Brown, and it recommends that the street be opened "across the said rope walk & the incumbrances removed." The report is confirmed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 68–69.

" The title of "President of Common Council" is affixed to the name of the mayor, in the minutes.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 65.

Feb. 8 "The memorial of the medical society of the city of New-York, praying that provision may be made for the purchase of the botanical garden of Dr. David Hosack [see O 2, 1809, and Ja 15, 1811], together with the recommendation of the mayor, aldermen and commonalty of the city of New-York; the governors of the New-York hospital, the medical society of the state of New York, and the certificate of Brockholst Livingston, Benjamin Moore, and others, inhabitants of the state; and the memorial and petition of Delos White, and others, students, attending the medical schools in the city of New-York to the same effect," are read in the state senate and referred to a committee.—Senate Jour., 33d sess., 32. The committee reported favourably on Feb. 12.—See printed broadside in metal file No. 38, city clerk's record-room. An act for the purpose was passed by the legislature on March 12 (q.v.).

12 Daniel French (see N 6, 1809) petitions the common council for a "lease of Powles Hook ferry, where he would employ boats moved by steam, on a plan of his own invention." The petition is referred to the committee which is considering the other steamboat petitions.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 70–71. See F 26.

" The street commissioner reports that he has "taken a general view of the Collect [see F 7] & found, that the mud has risen near to the surface of the water." He is "therefore inclined to believe it would not be expedient to make a contract for filling the same. At the same time he believes, it ought to be filled as soon as practicable." The common council thereupon directs him to contract for 10,000 loads of earth.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 75. On March 12, he reported that the 10,000 loads "had been carted into the Collect," and recommended "that the like number be ordered to be filled into it," which was confirmed.—Ibid., VI: 109. See Ap 4.

14 "Five several petitions of freeholders and inhabitants of the counties of New-York and Westchester, praying that a law may be passed authorising certain inhabitants at their own expense, to erect a free bridge over Haerlem river at Devoe's point" (see N 7 and 30, 1809), are read in the assembly and referred to the attorney-general. The bridge is to extend from Devoe's Point in Westchester to Bussing's Point "on the Island of New York." The petitioners state that it "will facilitate the intercourse from Westchester with the city of New-York, by a more convenient and shorter route, than any now in use."—Assemb. Jour., 33d sess., 81, 180. On Feb. 23, Robert Bogardus and others, "freeholders of property adjoining the Haerlem river, in the ninth ward of the city of New-York," remonstrated against "the passing of an act authorizing the erection of a bridge at or near Devoe's point," because they were "apprehensive that the navigation of the said Haerlem river will be injured and their private property below Devoe's point deteriorated by the erection of the proposed bridge at that point." This, too, was referred to the attorney-general. —Ibid., 33d sess., 125, 180. The directors of the Harlem Bridge Company, on Feb. 28, also presented a remonstrance against the original petitions, stating that the new bridge would interfere with their rights. They asked "that a declaratory act may be passed prohibiting any other bridge being built across the said river within two miles" of their bridge. This also was submitted to the attorney-general.—Ibid., 33d sess., 152, 180. For the attorney-general's report on the subject, see Mr 3.

17 "The Committee appointed by Tammany Society or Columbian Order, for the purpose of purchasing ground and erecting a building for the accommodation of said Society, and of republicans generally, give notice to the subscribers of the loan for said purposes, that the first instalment of two dollars on each share will be called for between the first and tenth of March next. . . ." —Columbian, F 21, 1810. See O 29.

" The common council resolves that on Washington's birthday "the National flag be displayed at the Battery & a salute be fired at sun rise, at noon & at sun sett."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 84, 230.

22 On the occasion of the anniversary of the Washingtonian Society, Peter Augustus Jay delivers the oration. Writing to his 1810 Feb. 22 father, John Jay, on the following day, the younger man describes the celebration as being the occasion of much exultation among the federalists. He adds: "The Society walked in procession and amounted to more than two thousand. Many Gentlemen kept aloof, but it was one of the most respectable assemblages of people that I have ever seen. It consisted of substantial Shop keepers and Mechanics, of Men of the middling Class, and of a considerable Number of old Revolutionary officers and Soldiers. Almost all of them possess Influence and can bring to the poll other votes besides their own."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 326.

" The First Presbyterian Church, on Wall St., advertises for proposals to be submitted by masons and carpenters, "for erecting a church on the scite of the present . . . one . . ."—Pub. Adv., F 22, 1810. See, further, Mr 21.

23 Because "many difficulties attend the upholding of the Lutheran religion among us," and "inasmuch as the Doctrine and Government of the Episcopal Church is so nearly allied to the Lutheran, and also on account of the present embarrassment of the finances," the congregation of the English Lutheran Church on the corner of Mott and Park Sts. resolves that "its present form of worship and Goverment be dissolved after Tuesday, the 13th day of March next, and that this Church do from that day forward become a parish of the Protestant Episcopal Church."—Hist. of Church of Zion and St. Timothy, 11. On March 13, the congregation elected wardens and vestrymen, and incorporated the church as the "Rector, Church Wardens, and Vestrymen of Zion Church in the City of New York."—Ibid., 12–15. See Mr 22.

26 In a letter to Judge Peters, John Jay says: "Our political sky still continues to grow more and more dark and threatening. Whether the clouds will quietly disperse and disappear, or whether they portend a storm, is uncertain. The present tempestuous state of the world does not encourage us to expect a long season of uninterrupted fair weather. If peace has been and is in our power, it would be mortifying to be involved in war unnecessarily." —Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 328.

" The committee on the fire department reports to the common council regarding "Aquidneck Coal," that they have "given it as fair a trial as their conveniences would admit, and do find, that in a cabin stove (or what is called a large Grate Franklin Stove) which will hold near half a bushel of coals, and may be kindled with two quarts of Virginia or Scotch Coal, the Rhode Island or Aquidneck coal to be put on, when the other is well on fire will burn five hours and, if mended and one half peck added, will warm a room 16 or 20 feet square the whole day, and at night, one third of the coal will remain unburnt." The committee recommends "one fire place in the Alms House (the Committee room) to be prepared for burning said coal, as they think it will be a saving to the public," and the report is confirmed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 90.

" A committee, chosen by the owners and occupants of the houses and lots in the vicinity of Canal St. at a meeting held at "Liberty Hall in the fifth ward" on Feb. 17, complains to the common council that those proprietors are "much agitated and alarmed, at the heavy assessment that must be proportioned and levied on them, according to the limited Principles under which the Commissioners . . . deem themselves bound to Act." The committee has been appointed to confer with the board "in order to point out the most eligible mode for an application to the Legislature, so as to extend the powers of the Commissioners . . . as that they may be enabled to assess a proportion of this heavy and burdensome assessment on the Citizens at large, still calculating upon the greatest part to be apportioned, as nearly as may be, upon the Proprietors intended to be benefited thereby, according to the advantage which each shall be deemed to acquire."

The petitioners remind the board that their "Proceedings for years past, with respect to this Collect or Fresh Water Pond and contemplated Canal and Tunnel," have "been directed to the completion of the whole Plan, and must therefore have viewed the same as a matter in which the whole City were materially interested, and of course bound to subscribe to." The petitioners also point out that "many of the Inhabitants in that neighbourhood are poor People and utterly unable to pay such assessment as would unavoidably fall upon them according to the present system of the Commissioners." Lastly, they observe that it would be very unjust to compel them "to pay for the purchase of the soil through which this street at present passes," because "the Proprietors of the property readily offered to cede the land, if the Canal had been allowed to pass through the streets already laid out," but, as it was deemed that "a straight and wide street would be more ornamental and dignified to the City at large, as well as it would tend more to the general health from the state of the low and sunken grounds; It certainly is therefore but reasonable that the Citizens at large should contribute a proportion of the expense for this very desirable object, and more especially as the Situation of these grounds have required uncommonly extensive operations. . . ."—From the original petition in metal file No. 40, city clerk's record-room. The petition is referred to the canal committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 87. On March 12, the committee reported favourably, and suggested that application be made for a lottery, "the proceeds of which to be applied towards defraying part of the expense of Canal Street, and thereby mitigate the assessment aforesaid." The report was confirmed.—Ibid., VI: 107. See also ibid., VI: 190–93. See My 28. Feb. 26

Benjamin Waldron petitions for "permission to run out Fike [sic] nets at Bellevue Dock."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 86. On March 12, the common council resolved it was inexpedient to grant the petition because "the right of the Corporation to make said grant is by no means clear," as "the navigation of the East river would necessarily be somewhat obstructed thereby and lastly because the consideration proposed by the petitioner is too inconsiderable to induce the interference of this Board in the premises."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 104–5. "

Daniel French (see F 12) invites the common council "to attend to morrow at 2 o'clock to see the operation of his Steam Boat to Courtlandt Street wharf."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 89. "

Sundry inhabitants of the Eighth Ward petition the common council "that a bridge might be erected over a Brook, at the corner of David & Henry Street, and that a lamp might be placed there." The matter is referred to the alderman and assistant of the ward "with authority to comply with the prayer of the petition."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 86. "

Christian E. Zoeller and John M. Cooper are appointed city surveyors.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 86. "

Father Anthony Kohlmann, S. J., buys the land now bounded by Fourth and Fifth Aves., 50th and 51st Sts., directly opposite the Elgin Botanical Garden, as a new site for the Catholic college (see 1808). The school was closed in 1813–14.—Farley, Hist. of St. Patrick's Cathedral, 61, 111. See My 1. For Father Kohlmann's description of the college, see S 14; also 1814. Mar. —

The attorney-general makes a report regarding the proposed bridge across Harlem River at Devoe's Point (see F 14). He states that it "does not interfere with the legal rights vested in the Haerlem bridge company," but adds that "as a road from the proposed bridge at Devoe's point, to New York, will be indispensible to render the said bridge useful; and as by the charter of the corporation of New-York the expense of laying out, opening, making and keeping in repair such road, and probably the expense of sustaining the proposed bridge, will devolve on the said corporation [common council], it is worthy of the consideration of the honorable the legislature, whether it would be reasonable to impose those burdens on the said corporation, without their consent." This report and the various petitions are referred to a "select committee."—Assemb. Jour., 33d sess., 180–81. On March 12, the committee advised that the petition for the bridge at Devoe's Point, and the petition of the Harlem Bridge Co. for a declaratory act (see F 14), ought to be rejected, and this report was approved by the assembly.—Ibid., 33d sess., 237. 3

Jacob Radcliff enters upon his duties as mayor, in the place of De Witt Clinton (see F 22, 1808).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 93. 5

The common council directs the street commissioner to have "the Public ground fronting on Chatham Street between the building occupied by the New York Free School and the Jail" and "the ground near the New arsenal and Albany Avenue belonging to this Corporation" surveyed and apportioned into lots.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 96. "

A petition from sundry inhabitants of Peck Slip "that said slip may be filled up, so as that Front Street may be carried across it," and two remonstrances against the petition are referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 94. "

The committee on the flagstaff and Battery make the following report: "That they consider the proper keeping of so elegant and public a walk among the first objects of attention and are "

1810 Mar. persuaded that every care and expence bestowed in this respect will, with the highest approbation, be noticed by the Citizens.

5 Your Committee, therefore, recommend that the Flag Staff be rented to some discreet and proper person for such sum and under such conditions as to protect the walks, grass and trees from injury and to remove therefrom every nuisance as may seem meet." The report is approved.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 100–1.

" Permission is given to carry the Manhattan water pipes "through the public grounds at the Battery to the Fort erecting at that place by the United States."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 96.

9 Stephen Jumel purchases from Leonard Parkinson part of the Roger Morris property for $9,927.50. The deed was recorded on June 25, 1810.—Liber Deeds, LXXXVIII: 79–92. On April 28, Jumel bought an additional tract for $10,000.—Ibid. LXXXVIII: 86; L. M. R. K., III: 951. See also Pl. 167-a and its descrip., III: 848–49.

" The name of the "Society of the Hospital in the City of New York, in America" is changed to "The Society of the New-York Hospital."—Laws of N. Y. (1810), chap. 44.

12 The legislature passes "An Act for promoting Medical Science in the state of New York," which provides for the purchase by the state of Dr. Hosack's Botanic Garden. The commissioners of the land office are to appraise the garden, exclusive of the plants and shrubs, and the attorney-general is to search Hosack's title and secure from him a deed for the whole property. If both the appraisement and the deed are satisfactory, five commissioners named in the act are authorised to raise the money by lottery provided that the lottery shall not start before all others heretofore authorised shall have been drawn. The garden is to be under the supervision of the Regents and to be maintained, without future charge to the state, "for the benefit of the Medical schools of this state."—Laws of N. Y. (1810), chap. 50. For the report of the appraisers, see Je 5.

" Henry Aldworth having found, as he believes, "a mine, on his land, at Newton Long Island, containing Coal," but being prevented from digging "by the water in the Pitt," petitions the common council for the use of one of the fire-engines for a few days. The board authorises the committee on the fire department to grant the request.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 102.

19 Two petitions from the proprietors of Harlem commons asking for the partition thereof (see F 3) are read in the state senate. A bill for the purpose is introduced, read twice, and referred to a committee of the whole.—Senate Jour., 33d sess., 111. The bill was passed by the senate on March 22.—Ibid., 33d sess., 119, 121. On the same day, it was read in the assembly.—Assemb. Jour., 33d sess., 291. It was read a second time and committed to the whole house on March 23.—Ibid., 33d sess., 295. On March 26, certain "freeholders and inhabitants of the township of Haerlem" asked that the Commons be not partitioned.—Ibid., 33d sess., 313. For the final action of the assembly on the subject, see Ap 5.

" As "some improvement in lighting this populous city is of great importance, to the public," the common council authorises Alexander Andrews to import 900 newly invented burners and reflectors with which to make trial on the city lamps.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 115–16.

21 The corner-stone of the new Presbyterian Church in Wall St. (see F 22) is laid.—N. Y. Spectator, Mr 24, 1810. The building was opened for worship on Aug. 11, 1811 (q.v.). The new edifice was built on the site of the first one, which was erected in 1719 (q.v.), and enlarged in 1748 (q.v.). It was of brown stone, having the front ornamented with columns of the same stone, in "demi-relief," and with Corinthian capitals. The spire was ornamented with columns to correspond, and was surmounted by a cupola and gilt vane. There were private vaults in the ground surrounding it, and the yard was enclosed with a handsome iron railing.—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 219; Greenleaf, 134. See also L. M. R. K., III: 931; and Pls. 105 and 111, Vol. III. The building stood until 1834 (q.v., S 13), when it was destroyed by fire. 23 In retaliation for the act of March 1, 1809 (q.v.), Napoleon issues the Rambouillet decree, declaring that "all vessels navigating under the flag of the United States, or possessed in whole or in part by any citizen or subject of that power, which, dating from May 20, 1809, may have entered or shall enter into the ports of our Empire, our colonies or the countries occupied by our armies, shall be seized, and the products of the sales shall be deposited in the surplus fund."—Anderson, Const. & Docs., etc., 396–97.

" "An Act for the further support of the New-York Hospital," passed by the legislature, provides that "there shall be paid to the treasurer of the New-York Hospital . . . out of the monies arising from the duties on goods sold at auction in the city of New-York," $3,500 a year—Laws of N. Y. (1810), chap. 88. This provision was repealed by the fifth section of "An Act respecting navigable communications, between the great Western and Northern Lakes, and the Atlantic Ocean," passed April 15, 1817.—Account of N. Y. Hospital (1820), 50–51.

27 The common council orders "that for the preservation of the grass in the park, the Committee, to whom the same was given in charge, be requested to prevent the assembling of the military in the park until the further orders of the Board."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 130.

" Congress passes "An Act making an appropriation for the purpose of trying the practical use of the Torpedo or sub-marine explosion."—Acts of Cong., 1st sess. of 11th cong., chap. 38.

31 The common council passes a new "Law for the due observance of the Lord's Day called Sunday."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 133–36. On April 16, Hector Scott and Divie Bethune remonstrated against "the indecent practice of persons bathing in the day time, in the river near their dwellings," and suggested that this law be amended "so that no person shall bathe within a line commencing at and including the dock built by John Townsend on the Hudson River." The request was agreed to.—Ibid., VI: 167. The address of Townsend, a merchant, was 47 Warren St.—City Direc.

" The common council leases to Gilbert Dean "the building at the Flag Staff on the Battery" for one year beginning April 1, 1810, at an annual rent of $500. In the agreement signed by him Dean promises that he will "take the charge of and well & faithfully attend to the grounds and premises South and West of State 1810 Mar. 31 Street and that part of Whitehall Street, which leads from the Broadway to Hudson's river, belonging to the Mayor, Aldermen & Commonalty called the Battery; will keep the same and the public walks free and clear from all nuisances and filth; will use my utmost endeavours to prevent all trespasses thereon, and in all things as far as in me lies, preserve the same, and all the grass, walks and fences thereon from all injury or damage whatsoever;" also that he "will not, at any time, during the said term, sell or expose to sale any wine, brandy, rum, strong waters, ale or any other sort of exciseable or strong liquors (except beer) in or at the said buildings at the Flag staff or at or upon any part of the said grounds of premises called the Battery;" and moreover that he will use his "utmost endeavours to . . . prevent all riots and disorderly conduct on any part of the said premises. . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 136–37.

Apr. 2 The legislature passes a law to amend the ferry act of April 2, 1801 (q.v.). This fixes the rates to be charged for carrying specified articles, and makes the following additional regulations: "That the owner or keeper of every ferry boat shall have his name painted with white letters three inches in length on a black ground on the outside of the stern of his boat, and the words ferry boat in the like manner on the inside of the stern of every boat. . . .

". . . That the ferry masters or owners of the ferry boats shall at all times in the months of May, June, July, August and September in every year, have their boats ready for the transportation of passengers and goods, from half an hour before sunrise in every morning to nine o'clock in the evening, and in all the other months of the year from sunrise to eight o'clock in the same evening; and that no passenger shall be detained more than five minutes. . . . Provided, the wind, weather or ice do not render the crossing of the river difficult or very dangerous.

". . . That the ferry masters or keepers of the ferries shall have the rates of all the articles enumerated in this act, and the act hereby amended, together with the fines and penalties of said act, printed on a large sheet of paper, and always keep those rates up in a conspicuous place in the ferry houses at the ferries. . .

". . . That a sufficient number of barges shall at all times be kept at the ferries for the transportation of passengers, and that the ferry masters shall not suffer any baggage or lumber whereof any passenger shall be incommoded to be put on board. . .

". . . That the ferry masters shall constantly keep in their employ not less than two men to row in every barge, and two men in every horse boat or large boat. . . .

". . . That every barge employed in the said ferries shall not be less than twenty-two feet in length, nor less than seven feet in breadth; and that the ferry masters or their agents shall not admit more than eighteen passengers on board of any one of those barges at one time. . . .

". . . That this act shall take effect from the first Monday in August next.

". . . That the harbor masters of the city of New-York, for the time being, shall be the persons who shall at all times on the complaint of any person determine whether the boats are in the order and condition in which ferry boats ought to be kept." Penalties for infringement of rules are included.—Laws of N. Y. (1810), chap. 119; Am. Cit., Ag 8, 1810.

4 The street commissioner and the comptroller report to the common council "that the ground in the vicinity of the Collect was filled . . . sufficiently to admit being disposed of," and the board thereupon directs the commissioner to cause "a quantity not exceeding ten thousand lots of earth to be carted upon the same and the ground to be forthwith levelled."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 142. See Jl 30.

" The clerk of the common council is directed to procure "a suitable desk for the Mayor's Office and Common Council Chamber, and the silver oar (or badge) appertaining to the Mayor as Water Bailiff of this city."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 147.

5 The legislature enacts that "all the waters of this state, in the bay of New-York, and the southward thereof, and not comprehended in the city and county of New-York, or in any other county, shall be and are hereby annexed to the said city and county, and shall compose part of the same: Provided always, That the said waters shall not be subject to any ordinance or by-law of the common council of the city of New-York, nor shall any thing in this act contained, affect the rights of free fishing as now existing, or any private right or privilege in any respect whatever." —Laws of N. Y. (1810), chap. 151. See also Gerard, City Water Rights, Streets, and Real Estate, 42.

Apr. 5 The assembly passes a resolution granting permission to the proprietors of Harlem Commons (see F 3 and Mr 19) "to present a bill for the partition of the said commons, to either branch of the legislature at their next session; provided such proprietors shall give public notice of their intention to present such bill, in two of the public newspapers, printed in the city of New York, six weeks successively, prior to the presenting of such bill."—Assemb. Jour., 33d sess., 396–97. The senate concurs in the resolution on the same day.—Senate Jour., 33d sess., 183.

" The legislature grants $1,500 to the trustees of the African Free School for the erection of a school building.—Laws of N. Y. (1810), chap. 192. See F 7.

8 An example of "Expeditious Travelling" at this time is that of a man who left New York at 5 A.M. on this day and arrived in Philadelphia at 3 P.M. "We are arriving to a style and celerity of travelling which brings, as it were, the two cities of Philadelphia and New York very near to each other."—Com. Adv., Ap 11, 1810.

9 The common council passes an ordinance providing for the better cleansing of the streets. The city is divided into two districts for the purpose, and two superintendents are chosen whose duty it is to hire scavengers to clean the public grounds and cart away all dirt in the streets. Householders and the persons in charge of churches, schools, etc. are required to clean before their doors twice weekly and to pile the dirt in the middle of the street whence it shall be removed by the scavengers. Snow and ice are to be cleared away immediately after the storm, and ashes are to be sprinkled on the streets so that pedestrians may walk with safety. The kind of carts to be used in clearing the streets is prescribed in detail and penalties for offences are provided.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 132–33, 158–64. See also ibid., VI: 184–85.

16 The common council orders that Mulberry St. be regulated.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 171, 222. See Ag 23, 1786.

" The common council passes an ordinance for paving the streets around Hudson Square.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 117, 171.

" The common council directs the superintendent of repairs to place bells on the Duane Street, Catharine Street, and Corlaers Hook markets.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 154, 170.

18 John H. Contoit announces that he has "removed the New-York Garden to that pleasant part of Broadway, No. 355, between Leonard and Sugar Loaf [Franklin]-streets," on the west side of Broadway. He serves all kinds of ice-cream and other refreshments.—Merc. Adv., Ap 18, 1810; Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 544, 600. For earlier locations, see O 26, 1809.

21 "The Panorama of the city of New-York [see N 8, 1809], which has so much excited the attention and approbation of the public, will this evening, for the first time, be exhibited by Candle Light, and so continue during the summer season. This painting forms an entire circle. The spectator standing in the centre, views it from an eminence of 165 feet above the level of Broadway, near St Paul's Church. It is 25 feet in height, and 136 feet in circumference, and is on a larger scale than has ever been seen in the United States, and equal to any now exhibiting in Europe." —N. Y. Com. Adv., Ap 21, 1810. Cf. the description of May 29.

23 The common council agrees that Morton St. be opened, because "it would be a public convenience . . . particularly to the inhabitants of the village of Greenwich."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 176.

27 An advertisement reads: "To commence on Tuesday next [May 1], Steam Boat Rariton, Will sail every morning at 6 o'clock precisely from the north side of the battery for Elizabethtown Point, Perth and South Amboy, (Thursdays excepted) and return again the same evening, leaving South Amboy at one, Perth Amboy, (Brighton) at two, and Elizabethtown Point at or about five o'clock on the days of her sailing. Stages are furnished to meet Passengers for Philadelphia at each of the above places. . . . Breakfast, Dinner, and Tea, on board as usual."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 27, 1810. See Jl 26.

28 Congress passes "An Act to establish Post Roads." These roads, throughout all the states, are described in the act. Those in and near N. Y. City are:

"From Jersey city, by New York, Harlaem and New Rochelle, to Rye." Cf. Randel's description, 1808.

1810 Apr. 28 "From New York city, by Brooklyn, Jamaica, Hemstead, Merrick, South Oyster Bay, South Huntington, Islip, Patchogue, Fireplace, Morriches, Westhampton, Southampton and Bridgehampton, to Sag Harbor."

"From New York, by Kingsbridge, Yonkers, Greensburg, Mount-pleasant, Peekskill, . . . to Youngstown or Niagara." —Acts of Cong., 1st sess. of 11th cong., chap. 48.

May 1 Congress excludes French and English war-ships from American waters.—Laws of U. S., 11th cong., chap. 56.

" Congress passes an act appropriating $666.66, with interest from March 1, 1792, to compensate P. C. L'Enfant "for his services in laying out the plan of the city of Washington."—Acts of Cong., 1st sess. of 11th cong., chap. 63.

" "The New-York Literary Institution, opposite to the Botanic Gardens [see Mr], is now opened."—Com. Adv., My 1, 1810. See, further, S 14.

5 "A Visitor" writes to one of the newspapers concerning the "American Museum," saying: "This recent establishment in Chatham-Street, opposite the New-York Free-School, promises to become an honour to this City. The selection, preservation and arrangement of the various subjects of Natural History, do infinite credit to the taste, skill and judgment, of Mr. Scudder, the proprietor. . . . Most of the subjects are secured in elegant glass cases, the appropriate arrangement of which, together with the extreme neatness and propriety of the apartment, greatly enhance the gratification of the spectator.

"The object which most attracts our notice is a white Arctic Bear, in the highest preservation, a sight of which, alone, is worth more than the whole charge, (a quarter of a dollar) of admission. . . . Parents will find this Museum an instructive school to teach their children to behold and admire the marvelous works of creation. . . ."—Com. Adv., My 5, 1810. See also ibid., O 15, 1810, and My 15, 1812.

7 Dr. Hosack petitions the common council to release him from the payment of his quit rent of 16 bushels of wheat per annum on his botanic garden so that he may convey it to the state free from all incumbrances.—Hosack, Statement of Facts relative to the Estab. and Prog. of the Elgin Botanic Garden (1811), 41–42; M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 186. On May 21, the board decided that his request be granted on condition that he pay the city $285.71, the value of the wheat.—Ibid., VI: 203.

" The common council passes an ordinance imposing a $5 fine upon any one who shall wilfully cut down, break, remove, destroy, or in any way damage any tree in the public streets of the city without the consent of the alderman and assistant of the ward.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 188.

8 A New Yorker complains in one of the newspapers of the "gay young men" who ride and drive through the streets at a reckless pace and endanger the lives of other citizens. "So great is the danger of taking an afternoon's airing in any carriage, that many invalids . . . are frightened at the hazard they encounter . . . on the common highway."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., My 8, 1810. See Je 4.

9 "At no period, for a great number of years past, have the citizens of New-York witnessed such numerous and extensive evidences of the increase of wealth and prosperity in the city as at the present. At no time within our recollection have we seen so many improvements in streets and buildings progressing. Almost every street in the city is lumbered with the rubbish of old and wooden houses pulled down to make room for more valuable and permanent edifices of brick. New streets are opened; old streets are extended, paved and ornamented with trees; churches and other public buildings are erecting; and the whole face of the city exhibits the appearance of active business and growing population, riches and great prosperity. Who can consider these circumstances, notwithstanding the hacknied complaints of hard times, commercial depression, and universal calamity, without feeling a glow of patriotic satisfaction, and grateful consciousness of the superiority of our situation over that of the unfortunate and oppressed nations of Europe!"—Columbian, My 9, 1810. See My 23.

17 "About twelve months ago, our citizens were much flattered with the prospect of having a safe and commodious passage across the North River by means of Steam Ferry Boats; a company of gentlemen actually subscribed to the amount of sixty thousand dollars, to complete the establishment; . . . but the last elections for members, of the corporation gave a federal majority, since May which time, delays and embarrassments have been presented to 17 every advance on the part of the subscribers . . . finally the feds . . . rejected the whole plan. Thus are the citizens doomed for the present to risk their lives and suffer the inconveniences of one of the worst ferries in the United States."—Columbian, My 17, 1810.

Street Commissioner Stilwell is granted leave of absence for 21 a few days in order that he may go to Philadelphia and examine some "hydraulical improvements" there and make "such drafts as might be useful to this city."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 202.

"An Old Man" writes to one of the newspapers: ". . . to in- 23 dulge in the exercise of walking, induced me two weeks since, to determine to go through every street in this city. I have hobbled through all the principal streets. As far as I went, my astonishment was continually excited at the great improvements that were going on—I counted 432 houses and stores that were began this spring, and now going up; and from inquiries of Master Carpenters and Masons, who had ascertained nearly the whole number of new buildings that were now in a state of forwardness, I was informed that the number was between six and seven hundred. It will be fair to suppose that there are not less than 600. The buildings upon an average will not cost less than 5000 dollars each (exclusive of the City and Washington Halls) amounting to the enormous sum of three millions of dollars besides 3 millions more for the ground. It is probable that at least ten masons and carpenters are employed on each house, making a total of 6000 mechanics, besides labourers, now in employ at these two branches of business, When I contrast this state of things with the situation of New York on my arrival, I am almost inclined to believe that in a trance I have been insensibly thrown upon some other parts of the globe. . . .

"It is said that the new City Hall will cost upwards of half a million, and Washington Hall nearly one hundred thousand dollars. Beside the above there are several Churches building in the city and suburbs."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., My 24, 1810.

The commissioners for laying out Canal St. inform the com- 28 mon council that "the amount of the verdicts of the juries for ground & buildings wanted for Canal Street was $102,901 55/100 which verdicts were confirmed by the court on the 2d day of March last, excepting the verdict in favour of the heirs of Anthony Lispenard, amounting to $8798 30/100, which was confirmed on the 28th April."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 209, 213–16, 219, 233. See Jl 2.

An advertisement reads: "Illumination of the City of New 29 York. Panorama, No. 350, and 352, Broadway, Will be elegantly illuminated every evening till further notice; every public building and every house with the surrounding country for ten miles is correctly delineated—it is exhibited in a building erected for the purpose, 186 feet in circumference [cf. Ap 21], and 35 high, the spectators view the whole city according to scale, 170 feet above the level of Broadway, at St. Paul's Church, from which situation they see at one view St. Paul's Church, St. Peter's do. College, Windmill at Hoboken, Hoboken Ferry, Hamilton's Monument, St. John's Church, Greenwich do. The common council passes the following resolution: "Re-

1810 June 4 solved, that the ground in front of the United States arsenal be levelled and regulated under the direction of the Road Committee, and that they be authorised to dispose of the old building remaining thereon and to have so much of the ground inclosed by an ornamental fence and planted with trees, as they may think proper."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 229.

" The common council resolves to present a "regimental colour or standard" to the Third Regt. of Artillery, having already made presentations to the First and Second Regts. The committee recommending the action calls attention to the fact that "the artillery Corps . . . have peculiar claims to the patronage of the Common Council, in as much as their contemplated services are more local and in case of maritime or naval attack, would be more important to the defence and security of the City than any other corps."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 220.

" The common council passes "A law to regulate the driving of horses, carts & carriages in the City of New York," south of Grand and Vesey Sts. This provides that no person shall ride or drive a horse "on a canter or gallop" or faster than "a slow trot or pace, not exceeding at any time the rate of five miles per hour;" that horses shall not be driven tandem "otherwise than on a walk;" that all wagons, carriages, etc. shall slow up to a walk in turning corners and while passing churches during services on Sunday; that after June 20, all drays shall be numbered, and be driven only on a walk; and that no timber, planks, or poles, longer than 35 ft., shall be carried in the carts. Fines are to be imposed for infringement of these regulations.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 223–25. See also N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Je 7, 1810.

" The common council directs the superintendent of repairs to cause "a gate to be erected in front of Bridge Street leading to the battery" and "to cause the shed on the Battery erected by Andrew M'Laughlin to be forthwith removed."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 229.

" The common council passes a law "to prevent the vending or exposing for sale tin plate ware in any of the public streets or slips in the city of New York."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 226–27.

5 The appraisers appointed under the act of March 12 (q. v.) report that "having viewed the botanic garden belonging to David Hosack, commonly called Elgin, with the appurtenances, situate in the ninth ward of the city of New-York, containing, according to a survey therof upon oath, nineteen acres, three roods and thirty eight perches. And taking into consideration the delay of payment resulting from the mode adopted by the legislature (which we consider as equivalent, upon an average, to a delay of five years and a half)," they estimate the value of the property at $103,137.—Hosack, Statement of Facts relative to the Estab. and Prog. of the Elgin Botanic Garden (1811), 42–43. See also the letter of June 6 from Dr. Hosack to Abraham Van Vechter, in Emmet Coll., No. 11180. This estimate was regarded as excessive (see Je 11). See also Je 11, S 24.

11 The salary of Mayor Jacob Radcliff is fixed at $7,000 per annum.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 236. See F 5.

" "A memorial from Elias Boudinot and others proposing to lease the ferry from this city to New Jersey and establishing thereon steam boats" is read in common council and referred to the steamboat and ferry committees.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 231. Another communication from the same people on the same subject was received on July 23.—Ibid., VI: 289. They had also petitioned in 1809 (q. v., Jl 17).

" In a communication to the press regarding the recent appraisement of Dr. Hosack's botanic garden (see Je 5), "T" says: "How the appraisers could estimate the botanic garden at this sum, particularly as the plants, by law, are to form no part of the estimation, is really inexplicable. That it is greatly overrated must be evident to any person at all acquainted with the value of property in the vicinage of the garden. And this fact will show it incontestibly, that the public ground on which the powder-house is erected, which is two lots only above Dr. Hosack's, together with the expence of clearing the land, building the magazine, stable, house, and the appendages, which are all surrounded by a high wall, cost the state, when completely finished, $7,500 only; and this lot contains ten acres.

". . . if a botanic garden be necessary to the state, one may be established in the neighborhood of the city, which would answer every public purpose, for, at the utmost, one fourth of the above appraisement. . . . (For purchase and sale, see L.M.R.K., III: 946.)

"One hundred and three thousand dollars would be sufficient to establish six extensive charity schools or to found a university. It would be sufficient to turnpike the whole island of New-York. It would purchase 10,000 stand of arms for the militia, or nearly complete the fortification of our harbour. It is more than the university at Schenectady cost, and is within a trifle of the expence of building the capital at Albany. . . ."—Columbian, Je 11, 1810. See Je 13. June 11

The "New York Museum," at 166 Greenwich St., cor. of Dey St., was one of the attractions of this period.—Columbian, Je 11, Jl 3, 1810. "

In answer to various complaints that the appraisement of the botanic garden is excessive, one of the newspapers says: "The valuation of $103,000 payable at the distance of five years and a half will not give more than the value of about 69000 dollars. This is the circumstance which makes the valuation appear high, when it is not so in fact. The state could not intend that Doctor Hosack should sell this property at a cash price, wait five years, without interest for the money, and make a present of the plants into the bargain. Money will double itself in about 11 years, it is clear therefore from arithmetic that the amount of the valuation is less than 69000 dollars, which is a sum no person would deem excessive. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 13, 1810. See S 24. 13

The common council resolves "that a census be taken of the persons residing in the city of New York and qualified and of sufficient ability and understanding to serve on juries in the several courts mentioned in the act entitled 'An act for regulating trials of Juries and the returning able & sufficient jurors' passed the 31st March 1801; and that two fit and discreet persons be appointed in each ward of the said city to take the census in such ward accordingly." The census is to be completed in 60 days. The last one was taken in 1806.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 240–42. See also ibid., VI: 256. 18

The common council agrees that piers be built in the Corporation Dock and the Duane Street basin and that a basin be made at the foot of Spring St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 243, 245. "

Sundry inhabitants petition the common council "that the pavement of Broadway may be continued to the Art Bridge." The matter is referred to the road committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 237. Probably the stone-arch bridge is meant.—L. M. R. K., III: 926. "

Daniel Insley opens a "New and elegant Columbian Garden" at No. 307 Broadway.—Pub. Adv., Je 19, 1810. See, further, Jl 10, 1812. 19

Inhabitants of the Ninth Ward complain to the board that the hill near Harlem Heights is so steep as to be unsafe for travelers.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 250. 25

John Pintard informs the common council that he has forwarded "the indexes of their minutes agreeably to the report of their Committee of the 20th November last [q. v.]," and requests payment therefor. He was paid $300 on July 2.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 250, 271. "

The common council receives a communication from Samuel Russel, William H. Ireland, and Daniel J. Ebbets, commissioners for laying out Canal St., in which they state that they have "laid out the said Canal Street—beginning at the East side of Collect St eighty six feet. North and East from where Pump Street is reputed to meet Collect Street and two hundred and seventeen feet, South & West from where Hester Street is reputed to meet Collect Street, and running from thence a straight course, One hundred feet in width, throughout in the direction of North forty two degrees West, until it meets the Hudson River beyond West Street, so that the North East line of said street strikes the centre of the Post, on the South West corner of Lorton's Dock, being four thousand two hundred and thirty five feet in length on the North East side and four thousand two hundred & eighty seven feet one inch and an half inch, on the South west side of said street and they have caused monumental stones to be placed at the corner of the principal intersecting streets with the elevations above high water marked on the same, and have likewise, caused maps to be made of the said street on which are marked the distances from one intersecting street to another, with the angles at such intersections with Canal Street, with such explanatory notes, as are deemed necessary, accompanied with profiles of the same, on which are marked the elevations from High Water at the intersecting streets with Canal street, with such field notes and elucidations as the nature of the case was deemed to require and July 2

1810 July 2 the Commissioners have also made and compleated according to their best judgment a just and equitable assessment of all the expence for laying out & opening the said Canal Street . . . and the Commissioners have caused a copy of the same to be filed of [on] record in the office of the Clerk of the City and County of New York together with a map and profiles of the said street. . . . The Commissioners have also in pursuance of the said act, caused notice to be given by advertisement in five of the Public Papers printed in the City of New York and by hand bills to all persons interested in the said assessment to state their complaints or objections in writing to the Commissioners within the period of one calender month from the date hereof. . . ." The common council orders "that the map and profiles be filed with the Comptroller."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 262–63. See also Columbian, Jl 5, 1810. The duplicate profile, dated June 25, 1810, sent to the common council is now (1926) filed in the topographical bureau, borough president's office, as map No. 195. See Jl 23 and Ag 20.

" Petitions from a number of inhabitants complaining of the "indecent practice of swimming at the Battery and at Courtland Street ferry" are received by the common council and referred to the city inspector, "with directions to him to select and report a suitable place on the North & also one on the East River, where the inhabitants may bathe."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 264. On July 16, a law was passed imposing a five dollar fine for bathing "in the waters of the East or Hudson rivers adjacent to any ferry stairs or to the Battery."—Ibid., VI: 286.

" The common council passes "A law to prevent disorderly assemblies of persons in the City of New York." It states that "Whereas by the constitution & laws of this state, the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession & worship, without discrimination or preference, shall for ever be allowed within this state to all mankind, provided that the liberty of conscience thereby granted shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness or justify practices inconsistent with peace and good order; And whereas the practice of assembling together persons of all descriptions and characters in the park and other public places in this city has been introduced and carried to an extent, which is inconsistent with the preservation of peace and good order; And tends to licentiousness and to degrade and bring into contempt and ridicule all religious worship: And whereas those places and the public streets of this city are wholly unfit for religious assemblies, and are, by law appropriated to other purposes," the board orders "that no assembly or assemblies of persons shall be permitted, under the pretence of public worship in the park on the battery, or in any of the public markets or streets of the said city, or in any other place in the said city laid out and appropriated for the common use and benefit of the citizens." Fines are to be imposed for infringements of the law.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 268–69. The law was amended on Aug. 6.—Ibid., VI: 306–7.

" The pay of the city watch is increased to 87½ cents per night and that of the captains and assistants raised "in the same ratio."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 270.

4 The Independence Day celebration is "more splendid than any . . . before witnessed in this city." Salutes are fired and bells rung at sunrise, noon, and sunset, and the ships in the harbour display their colours all day. The "uniform corp" assembled on the Battery at 7 o'clock and after a review, paraded through State, Whitehall, Beaver, Broad, Wall, Pearl, and Beekman Sts., down Broadway, and by way of Partition and Greenwich Sts. back to the Battery where they were dismissed after firing a salute. The Washington Benevolent Society assembled on the "College-Green" at 10 o'clock, at 12 they were joined by the Hamilton Society, and both, accompanied by banners and bands of music moved in elaborate procession through Robinson St. to Broadway, round Bowling Green, through Beaver, Broad, Wall, Pearl, Magazine, and Anthony Sts. to the circus. Here the Declaration was read, music played, and an oration delivered by Joseph Warren Brackett. The procession then marched back to the college green where it disbanded. In the evening several dinners were held.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Jl 5 and 6, 1810. Delacroix' spectacle, this year, was called "American Independence."—Columbian, Jl 3, and 10, 1810.

John Melish (see Ag 4, 1806), who is again in New York, writes that this "anniversary of independence was celebrated with great splendor, and was equally attended to by both the political parties. The federal procession consisted principally of the Washington and Hamilton Societies, in number 700 or 800; that of the republicans was composed of the Tammany Society, Manhattan Society, and the different trades' societies in the city. The processions were conducted respectively to different churches, where, after prayer, the declaration of independence was read, and an oration delivered; accompanied with several pieces of appropriate vocal and instrumental music. July 4

"An outward display of great festivity was exhibited all over the city, by firing guns, ringing bells, with military and other processions; and the evening was spent generally in a social manner, by different societies and private circles. In every party, they had a regular series of 17 toasts, one for each state, and a number of volunteer toasts from the company. These toasts were very sentimental, and may be considered as a very good barometer for discovering the particular political opinions of the party."—Melish, Travels in the United States of America, etc., I: 384.

The corner-stone of the Spring Street Presbyterian Church was to be laid on this day.—Columbian, Jl 5; Pub. Adv., Jl 6, 1810. Greenleaf erroneously states that the stone was laid in April.—Hist. of the Churches, 142. 9

The common council agrees that Stone St. at its intersection with the west side of Broad St. be widened.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 285, 290. 10

The trustees of the "Economical school" petition the common council for the grant of "a lot of ground whereon to erect a school house."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 284. On July 23, the committee on the subject reported "that having attended to the mode of instruction in said school, and having witnessed the improvement of the pupils, they are of opinion, that the institution is admirably calculated to be of extensive utility; and from the circumstance of teaching a foreign as well as the language of this country must be beneficial not only to emigrants children; but also to those of our own citizens. The respectable character of the Trustees and the indefatigable philanthropy of Monsieur Neufville its principal conductor excites a confidence, that any grant made by this Board will be properly applied and extensively promote the wishes and views of the friends of literature. The legislature at their last session not only incorporated this school; but also evidenced their opinion of its good tendency by a liberal grant of money; and should this Board further aid it with a site for a school room, it will then progress rapidly. By instructing (as is promised) in the higher branches of education, such paupers as may in their course, through our free school, give proof of talents, we will not only extend this branch of the charitable fund; but create an important addition to the charitable institutions of our city." The committee therefore recommended that lots Nos. 24 and 25 on the south-east side of Augustus St. be granted to the trustees, "on condition, that said lots be occupied exclusively for the use of said school, and that when they shall cease to be so occupied, they shall revert and become again the property of this Board; And also on the further condition that the trustees of said Economical school shall always receive and educate such paupers from our present free school as may in the opinion of the Trustees thereof be proper objects for the higher branches of education as taught in said economical school." The report of the committee was at first confirmed by the common council, but upon reconsideration it was negatived.—Ibid., VI: 292–94. See also ibid., VI: 296–97. See also 1810, supra. 16

The common council resolves "that it shall and may be lawful for any of the Auctioneers Using Chatham Square for the sale of all horses and other animals to Canter or Gallop any horse or horses offered for sale at the said place provided that Cantering or Galloping shall only be within the limits of the Curb-Stone around said Square."—From original MS. in metal file No. 39, city clerk's record-room. This paper is endorsed: "Resolution authorising Horses to be cantered &c at Lombardy Park." See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 286. "

The common council votes to grant a petition of "the inhabitants of Harsenville at Bloomingdale" that a fire engine may be established at that place.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 283. On July 30, the board decided to lend the petitioners "fire engine No. 31 now out of use."—Ibid., VI: 297. "

"Now that St Paul's Church is undergoing repair, a good opportunity is presented of ornamenting the Monument of Mont- 20

1810 July 20 gomery, by substituting a marble urn for the wooden sun-bleached thing that now degrades the beautiful porphory column it surmounts. The original urn, it is understood, was lost shortly after it was brought from France, and for the sake of economy the present one was set up."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 20, 1810; Com. Adv., Jl 21, 1810.

23 "Equity" addresses the following communication "To the Public:" "I have noticed with regret, the conduct of certain individuals, who under a plea of being unfairly dealt with, are exciting a deal of noise and clamor, in order to arraign the motives and conduct of the three Commissioners, who were appointed by an Act of the Legislature at their session in the year 1808 [error for 1809, q. v. Mr 24], for the purpose of laying out a certain street known by the name of Canal Street. It is well known that a large tract of land, probably including not less than one hundred and fifty acres, and generally known by the name of the Collect and Swamps, was situated in the centre of our city. In order to render this tract habitable, and to cut off a source from whence originated pestilence and fevers, it became necessary to fill up this receptacle for filth, and at the same time, to open a Canal for carrying the waters which might be collected not only from its surface, but likewise from that of at least one hundred and fifty acres of high ground, which could have no other outlet. The Commissioners have proceeded upon their business, and discharged their duties with faithfulness to themselves, and with the strictest impartiality towards every person concerned. Yet, what is the result? Why truly, a number of Proprietors of Lots situated on the adjoining hills and high grounds, have raised a mighty clamor and even held a public meeting of those interested, in order to denounce and protest against the Assessment, which has called upon them to contribute a small proportion towards the expences of opening the Canal street. . . . The gentlemen who are endeavouring to excite clamours against the Commissioners for performing their duties, ought first to have inquired what has been the custom on similar occasions, before they ventured to publish at every corner, that they have been shamefully imposed upon, by being included in the assessment for Canal street. The result . . . would have informed them, that in the assessment made for the sewer in Gouverneur's alley, the owners of lots in Water and Front Streets, . . . were included in the assessment, . . . that for the opening of Cross-street, the proprietor of lots in Chamber, Reed and Mulberry Streets, had likewise to contribute. . . ."—*N. 30 The trustees of Columbia College adopt an address to the public in which they state that "their funds having been greatly impaired by the Revolutionary War, and by the loss of large landed property in the State of Vermont," they are obliged to resort to the liberality of public-spirited individuals, and add: "In making their appeal to the citizens of New York, they feel a confidence of success proportioned to the value of the object, and the justly famed munificence of the City. As the College is immediately intended for the benefit of the Youth of our own City and its vicinity; and as no application has been made to private bounty on its behalf, for more than fifty years, the Trustees indulge a hope that they shall be amply supported by their fellow-citizens, in their efforts to render Columbia College a seat of learning every way worthy of the commercial Metropolis of the United States."—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1754–1904, 92–93.

Aug. 5 France announces the revocation of the Berlin and Milan decrees; this is to take effect after Nov. 1.—Annals of N. Am., 509. See N 2.

6 The trustees of Columbia College grant as much of the college grounds as will be necessary to make Murray St., opposite thereto, as wide as it is between Church St. and Broadway. The ground is to remain part of the street. The city corporation is to take down the stone wall, which now supports the college ground on Murray St., and after digging the ground away, is to erect as good a stone wall along the south side of the street, and on it shall erect a new board fence, of the height of the present fence and painted in the same way.—*M. " The common council directs that the basin at Canal St., "measuring from what is called Lorton's Dock, be 284½ feet, that 30 feet be reserved on the South side for a street on the side of the basin, and that the grantees of the land adjoining shall make and keep in repair the said thirty feet street."—*M. 13 The engineers of the fire department write to the common council regarding the danger "of ringing all the Bells at the same time on days of public rejoicing; for should a Fire break out at that time, it would probably make great progress before the alarm could be spread and the Firemen assembled at their different Engines." They explain that, on the Fourth of July last, "while all the Bells were Ringing in the Evening, that the Wood work in front of the Theatre at the Park, whereon the lamps were fixed for the Illumination, accidentally took fire, and had it been a Wooden Building, the whole must have been envelop'd in flames before any alarm could have been given. . . ." They recommend that certain bells be reserved, and not rung at the same time on days of rejoicing, and propose "that the Fire Bell at the City Hall, Goal Bell, Watch House Bells and such Bells on Markets, and other places as are intended for alarm Bells (only) would be most suitable to answer the above purpose." The committee to whom this was referred reported on Oct. 5 in favour of the proposal, and advised that an ordinance be passed allowing these bells to be rung only in case of fire; and that the ringing of other bells in the city be regulated on days of rejoicing by commencing at a certain hour and continuing a certain limited time. Consideration of the report was postponed.—From the original memorial and report, in metal file No. 41, city clerk's record-room; M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 310, 363.

14 The steeple of St. George's Chapel is being improved. It is suggested that the church authorities shall cause "the removal of the British Crown from the top of the same, and in its place substitute some emblem more congenial with the spirit of our city, the feeling of our citizens, and the principles of our Government."—Pub. Adv., Ag 14, 1810. It was soon removed.—Ibid., Ag 18, 1810.

20 The commissioners for laying out Canal St. write to the common council that, having advertised the assessment for the street (see Jl 2) and considered all objections thereto, they revised and adjusted the assessment and now present to the board a corrected copy. The assessment amounts to $159,267.21, and includes "all damages assessed or payments agreed to be made for lands together with the compensation and expence of the Commissioners and of the persons employed by them and of all . . . costs of legal proceedings . . . and all other expences incurred." On Aug. 22, the board ordered that the papers be filed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 313–14.

22 The superintendent of repairs reports that there are 1,687 public lamps in the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 316.

27 The common council resolves that the heirs of Anthony Lispenard be directed "to erect the bulkhead to enclose their ground adjoining the basin at the outlet of Canal Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 322.

" The committee on the fire department is authorised to have "the house over the floating engine" extended 30 feet if deemed necessary.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 324.

" The expenses in 1810 for filling the Collect Pond amounted to $1,578.29.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 93, 118, 164, 261, 324.

S 10 The common council directs the recorder "to examine the laws

14 Rev. Anthony Kohlmann, S. J., writes from New York to a priest in London: "The [Catholic] College is in the centre not of Long Island but of the Island of New York, the most delightful and most healthy spot of the whole island, at a distance of four small miles from the city, and of half a mile from the East and North rivers, both of which are seen from the house; situated between two roads which are very much frequented, opposite to the botanic gardens, which belong to the State. It has adjacent to it a beautiful lawn, garden, orchard, etc. . . . Every one thinks that, if the reputation of the house be kept up, it will in a short time rivalize any college in this country. I expect we shall have thirty boarders for the beginning of next month.

"This city will always be the first city in America on account of its advantageous situation for commerce. From the West Indies parents will send their children to this port in preference to any other. The professors of the State's or Columbia College have sent us these two years past a kind invitation to accompany, at what they call the annual commencement, the procession of students from the college to some or other church, where speeches are delivered and degrees conferred; they had never paid that attention to the Catholic clergy before. . . .

"Be pleased to let me know what a good electrifying machine, a machine pneumatica or air pump, a good telescope, and a machine for surveying, and the most essential instruments for navigation would come to. 24 The comptroller having reported that the Mechanics Bank is willing to lend the city $20,000 for the work on the city hall, providing an account is opened with the bank, the common council resolves that it is "inexpedient to open an account with the Mechanics Bank for the purpose of procuring a loan therefrom, inasmuch as an account opened with that would change the deposits from the Manhattan Bank, in which last mentioned bank the Corporation is a large stockholder."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 344–45.

" Upon the request of the commissioners of the land office, the appraisers of Dr. Hosack's botanical garden report that, exclusive of any allowance for the delay of payment (see Je 5), they estimate the value at $74,268.75. On Oct. 12, Hosack agreed to accept this sum.—Hosack, Statement of Facts relative to the . . . Elgin Botanic Garden (1811), 46–48. See O 3 and 6.

" The common council resolves that Roosevelt St. "be continued, opened and regulated from Water Street to Front Street, the full width of the ground purchased for that purpose, and that the same be paved without delay."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 345.

25 "Business along our streets and docks is now unusually brisk, and the warehouses and stores begin to be crowded with European and India Goods. The importations this Season are like to be larger than for many years past, and are arriving in time. No less than five ships arrived here yesterday from the single port of Liverpool; most of them loaded with crates and dry goods, and many more are daily expected; so that country dealers will find no difficulty in supplying themselves with every article necessary for their stores on reasonable terms."—Repertory, S 25, 1810.

Oct. 3 A Mr. "B.," in a letter to a friend in Albany, describes a visit he made to the Hosack Botanic Garden. After expatiating on the splendid place he expected to see because of the valuation put on it by the appraisers, he says: "My sensations were indescribable, tumbled as I was in a moment from the very acme of ardent expectation into the deep Trophonian abyss of disappointment. I do not know whether to vent my execrations, or my laughter. There never was in the world, such a piece of downright imposture as this Botanic Garden, & as it is dignifiedly called Elgin. . . . Take away from it the 'Orangerie' or Green-house, which stands at the remote end of it, and it looks more like one of those large pasture-grounds near Albany, in which the western drovers refresh their cattle. . . . It is a lot of twenty acres, with no other buildings on it but the green-house just mentioned, which has two small wings, and two other buildings of about twelve feet square, fancifully called porter's lodges (because there are no porters in them) one of which is placed at each gate. There is a small culinary garden on the western side, laid out in the common way in Squares; and the east of the grounds are in grass. No fruit whatever is to be found here; no large trees to furnish a retreat from the meridian sun; no little porticos; no knolls; nor in fine is there any thing which tends to embellish or diversify the grounds. Bating the green-house, which is like those generally found in private gardens, the tout ensemble of this celebrated Elgin, has, as already observed, the air of a common pasture ground. . . . we visited the interior of the greenhouse. There we found orange and lemon trees, geraniums, two or three coffee and pine apple plants, and all those little quelques choses which are usually to be seen in the gardens of private gentlemen, but nothing whatever of national importance. Such, my, friend, is what is absurdly called the botanic garden. . . ."—Columbian, O 3, 1810. For a refutation of these statements, see ibid., O 15, 1810. See also O 6. Oct. 3

5 A committee of the common council reports that the people who bought Inclenbergh lots in 1806 are much dissatisfied because the streets communicating with them, and particularly Albany Ave., have not been opened. The board thereupon resolves "that lawful interest be allowed to the several purchasers of the said lots on the sums paid by them respectively on their paying to this Board the balances due by them, which interest to be computed from one year after the respective payments. Provided such balances be paid on or before the first day of May next: and also ordered, that the several streets laid down or designated on the map of the lots be opened without delay."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 355, 357–62. See O 15.

6 "A Member of the Legislature" writes to Editor Holt: "The letter published in your paper on the subject of the Botanic Garden [see O 3] afforded me infinite gratification . . . I am one of the persons who voted for the law whimsically entitled 'an act for promoting the medical science in the State of New-York,' which ought properly to have been called 'an act for the relief of doctor Hosack,' and know the sentiments of the gentlemen who, like myself, voted the bill. I have, therefore, no hesitation in declaring that the appraisement made by the persons appointed by the land office ought not to be sanctioned, Because it never was contemplated by the most zealous friends of the Botanic garden, that so large a sum as that returned by the appraisers should be appropriated to that purpose: And because, the appraisement, such as it is, is not just. There was undoubtedly too much intrigue and management out-doors, at the time this bill was on the tapis. But the very persons who were so active in furthering the success of the garden, to my certain knowledge represented the probable price which the state would have to pay for the garden [as] about $30,000. . . . Every person acquainted with the value of land on this island, must know and feel this truth. . . . Lands in the neighborhood of the garden never have been as high at any one period as they are rated in the appraisement . . . everyone knows that lands on this island have been retrograding in price, and that they can be purchased one third cheaper now than three years ago. But here has been the error of the appraisers. When they were making the valuation, doct. Hosack, as I am credibly informed, sent them a statement of the prices at which lots at the cross-roads, at Murray's-hill and at Hamilton Square, had previously been sold. Now these three places are unquestionably the most eligible spots on the island in every respect whatever. . . . But here is a fact which will put this matter beyond the possibility of a doubt, namely, that the lot directly opposite Hosack's garden, containing twenty-five acres five in fee, and twenty leasehold; together with all the improvements on it, which may safely be valued at twelve thousand dollars, sold last March to Mr. Andrew Morris of this 1810 O 6 city, for seventeen thousand dollars only. . . ."—Columbian, O 6, 1810. See O 17 and 22.

15 The common council directs the street commissioner to carry into effect its resolution to open the streets communicating with the lots at Inclenbergh (see O 5), particularly Albany Ave.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 371. Albany Ave. "ran from 26th Street, between 5th and Madison Avenues, northwesterly, crossing 5th Avenue, between 29th and 30th Streets to the corner of 6th Avenue and 42nd Street; then northerly on the present line of the 6th Avenue and 93d Street."—Post, Old Streets, 3.

21 Cadwallader D. Colden, the district attorney, writes to Dr. Hosack: "The law under which the Commissioners of the land Office have referred to me the affair of the Botanic Garden makes it my duty to examine your title to the 'lands comprising the Botanic Garden commonly called Elgin' and if I shall find the title perfect and the lands free from all incumbrances I am to receive a deed from you to the people of the State. I have no hesitation in saying that the title you have exhibited to me is perfect as to all the lands conveyed to you by the corporation but I find that in the Garden, and making part of it, are certain portions of land which are described in your deed from the Corporation and on the Map therein referred to as laid out for Streets. To these streets your deed does not give you a title. Whatever may have been the view of the Gentlemen who appraised this property, whether they took into consideration this circumstance or not and altho' I believe that the lands are more valuable with streets running thro' them than they would otherwise be, yet the Act in question does not leave me at liberty to make any other enquiry than whether you can Convey a good title to all the lands within the lines of the Garden. And this I think you can not do until you have obtained a grant of the streets.

"Probably the Corporation considering the Public advantage that the Garden would be, when in the hands of the State, how long it will be before it can be necessary to open streets in that quarter, and that when opened they would enhance the value of the Lands to the State, might be induced to make you a grant of the reserved lands to enable you to make to the State a Complete Title to the whole Garden. The moment this is done it will give me great pleasure to execute the duty which the law requires of me.

"I am Dear Sir with great respect & esteem your obed^{t} humble serv^{t}. Cadwallader D. Colden."

22 Dr. David Hosack presents a memorial to the common council stating "that an appraisement having been made, agreeably to a late act of the legislature, of the Botanic garden for the purchase of the same . . . he had represented, that in the deed from the Corporation for those grounds, certain reservations had been made for the purpose of streets, by which reservation in the opinion of the . . . attorney the memorialist could not make out a perfect title for those grounds to the state. As, therefore, this purchase on the behalf of the state was made for valuable public purposes, the memorialist solicited the board to make a grant to him of these reservations to enable him to make a perfect title to the state." This is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 373. The petition was adversely criticised in the newspapers (see N 5 and 6). For the board's decision, see D 24. See also N 3.

" The corner-stone of the second free school is laid at 114–122 Henry St. by Col. Rutgers, the donor of the ground (see Ap 12, 1807). John Vanderbilt, one of the trustees of the institution, delivers an address.—Com. Adv., O 22, 1810; Am. Cit., O 31, 1810. The school became known as "the old Seventh Ward School." Its site has been used for a school from 1810 to the present time; Grammar School No. 2 is now there.—L. M. R. K., III: 941. See also Pub. Adv., My 16, 1810.

" The common council resolves "that the Superintendant of repairs, at the time of his repairing the wharf at the outlet of Canal Street be directed to cause piles to be driven sufficient to protect the North part of the basin from the ice."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 376.

Oct. 27 A correspondent writes to one of the papers: "Several pieces have lately appeared in the Columbian respecting the Botanic Garden. . . . I am ready to believe the Garden to be worth double the appraisement, and wishing well to the owner, should be willing he should keep it at that price. But as the doctor is ready to part with it for public good, and as there is a great pressure on the public to take it far under its real value, there is certainly no hazard in the purchase, especially as it is to be paid for in a lottery to be drawn six years hence. . . ."—Columbian, O 27, 1810. See N 3.

29 Tammany Hall's building committee petitions the common council, stating that they have purchased the south corner of Frankfort and Nassau Sts., whereon they propose to erect a building for the purposes of the institution, and they ask permission to use the triangular spot of ground formerly occupied by the kine pock establishment to deposit materials for the building. The petition is granted.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 379.

Nov. 2 The French government having promised to repeal its decrees on Nov. 1 (see Ag 5), Pres. Madison proclaims the cessation of the exclusion of French warships from American ports (see My 1).—N. Y. Com. Adv., N 5, 1810.

3 The "proprietors of land adjacent to and in the vicinity of the Botanic Garden" subscribe to a certificate giving their assent (so far as they are concerned) to the cession of the garden to the state. This is done because the common council has "expressed some hesitations" to make the cession of land reserved for streets, "lest it might injure the rights of individuals in the neighbourhood."—From the original certificate (MS.), in metal file No. 38, city clerk's record-room. See N 5.

5 "A communication of John Stevens on the subject of the steam boats" is referred to the steamboat committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 383. See D 10.

" "Hyacinthus" addresses the following communication to the press: "The Botanic Garden sticks by the way, the district attorney to whom the matter was by law referred having raised a very silly objection, to wit that Dr. Hosack has not title to the whole of his garden, the corporation having reserved certain streets of sixty feet width through the same. And, will you believe, gentle reader, that the doctor has presented a petition to the corporation, praying them to give him (not to sell him!) the public streets and highways, in which every citizen has a common estate [see O 22]! And all this 'for promoting medical science in the state of New York, and for other purposes.' . . . The public streets within the enclosure of the Botanic Garden, constitute, by estimation one fourth of the whole ground, or five acres. The land has been valued by the appraisers, at the rate of 2500 dollars per acre, exclusive of all improvements, Ergo, the value of the streets without improvements is 12500 dollars. Surely the grave and reverend fathers of our faithful city of Gotham, will not hesitate to give away 12,500 dollars 'for the promotion of medical science in the State of New York.' . . . The only argument urged in favour of giving to doctor Hosack the streets, is this, that commissioners have been appointed to lay out the city anew. To this it may be answered, that the commissioners may continue the same streets which have been granted by the corporation, and may take into consideration, the fact of honest purchasers having bought and made improvements according to those streets. . . ."—Columbian, N 5, 1810. See N 6 and D 24.

6 "Motherwort" writes from "Haerlem Heights" to one of the newspapers about Dr. Hosack's petition "praying a gratuitous cession of the streets intersecting the Botanic Garden" (see O 22). He says in part:

"Now it appears to me, Mr. Editor, that a compliance with the prayer of that petition, will be neither more nor less than a present to an individual of the above sum [$12,000] to be reimbursed at no distant period, by a tax on the proprietors of adjoining land. For, after the state has been made to pay $12,000 for these streets, it is not to be expected that they will be opened gratis whenever the convenience of the other proprietors of common lands may require. . . . If the corporation are determined at all events to make Doctor Hosack a donation to the above amount, it will be more equitable to make the appropriation directly out of the city Treasury, so that the money given away may be refunded by a general tax, and not by a partial assessment on a particular district. . . ."—Pub. Adv., N 12, 1810. See D 24.

16 The Republican Watch-Tower (see Mr 8, 1800) is discontinued.

17 "We congratulate the lovers of dramatic representations, on the arrival of the late reinforcements to our theatrical corps. Mr Cooke the celebrated Covent Garden tragedian and Messrs McFarlan, Smalley and Doige comedians, arrived last evening in the Columbia from Liverpool . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 17, 1810. See N 21.

19 With the issue of this date the American Citizen was discontinued. It was succeeded by the New York Morning Post (see N 20).—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 379.

" "Whereas James Hardie has, at his leisure moments, indexed the 21st volume of the minutes of this board, and whereas it is desirable to have the residue volumes of minutes indexed," the common council appoints a committee to inspect the work done by Hardie and to report whether the other volumes should be done by him.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 397.

20 Garret C. Tunison begins to publish the New-York Morning Post. Joseph Osborn is editor. This was really a continuation of the American Citizen (see N 19), although having a new title and new volume numbering.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 467. See N 27, 1810 and Ag 20, 1812.

21 George Frederick Cooke (see N 17), the famous English actor, makes his first appearance in America, at the Park Theatre in the character of Richard the Third. The occasion was notable in the theatrical annals of New York. Mr Cooke writing about it in his personal memoirs said: "My appearance throughout the play and at the conclusion exceeded my utmost expectations. It was said to be the greatest house ever known in America. It was a resemblance of the audiences at Drury Lane when Mrs. Siddons first appeared there."—Dunlap, Memoirs of George Fred. Cooke Esq. (London, 1813), II: 160. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, N 21, 1810. Cooke died in New York on Sept. 26, 1812 (q.v.).

23 An item of New York news reads: "The coal recently brought to this city from the mines of Lewis Hepburn and Abijah Smith, which were discovered about 2 years since on the banks of the Susquehannah river, is apparently of a superior quality to any of the European coal hitherto imported into this country. The sample of the cargo furnished for the use of the city hotel and for other domestic uses in this city has excited the surprise and admiration of all the gentlemen who have been to see it burn . . . it can be dug, brought to this city and afforded here for ten or twelve dollars a chaldron."—Aurora Gen. Adv., N 23, 1810. This is probably the first use of domestic coal in New York City. Regarding the coal mines here mentioned, see also ibid., N 26, D 5 and 6, 1810. See also Mag. Am. Hist., V: 452.

26 An invitation list is prepared for the city's celebration on this day. From this date until 1831, similar check-lists of names of persons invited to Corporation functions were prepared, and are now preserved with "Filed Papers, Miscellaneous, 1810 to 1831," city clerk's record-room.

29 Gouverneur Morris writes to Mayor Radcliff: "I am directed to inform you, that the Commissioners for laying out the Manhattan Island [see Ap 3, 1807] have completed their work so far forth as depends on them; but much is yet to be done on the ground. It would be useless to detail the causes, which have delayed their operations. The unpropitious weather for the last and preceding season is not the least. So much, however, is accomplished, that with tolerable success in the operations now going on, it will be practicable, to make within the time fixed by the Statute a report complying substantially, if not literally with the law, shewing all the streets to be laid out and specially designating those, on which monuments have not been placed. These streets may hereafter, without the superintendance of Commissioners be accurately traced by a skilful, practical man, possessed of suitable instruments. It is, however, proper to remark, that in order to establish points, which have been ascertained by measurements already made, the course of operations commenced this year ought to be continued next year by the surveyor now employed, after which, the work may be conducted in such manner as the corporation may deem most expedient.

"That they may the better be able to form a judgment, I am directed to state, that only one surveyor can be employed in what remains, and that the commissioners have been under the necessity of directing the construction of particular instruments in order, that he might attain to that degree of accuracy, requisite in a work of this sort, where the difference of an inch may afterwards be a source of contention. There are, however, measured and to be measured with this extreme precision upwards of five hundred & fifty thousand feet, that is to say upwards of one hundred miles. A work so extensive, although enjoined by the statute was not, perhaps, contemplated, when it was proposed. To place and take the elevation above high water mark of about three thousand five hundred monuments will also require a little time. Yet all this must be done to comply literally with the provision of the Statute in relation to so much only of the island, as may, in the opinion of the Commissioners, become part of the city in the course of ages. If the whole were embraced, the labour would of course be increased with a proportionate increase of expence. Nov. 29

"They have directed estimates to be laid before them and find, that to complete the work will require (exclusive of the compensation allowed to them & the expence of making maps) a sum of seventeen thousand dollars, to which must be added six thousand dollars more, if the monuments be made of marble; and it has been found by experience, that those of common free stone are daily defaced by men, who, in cultivating their fields, do not perceive them until the mischief is done. Sixteen hundred dollars are needful now to pay what is done and compleat the field operations of this season." The communication was laid before the common council on Dec. 3 and referred to a committee. A warrant for $1,600 was, however, immediately issued.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 405–6. See D 10.

The common council resolves that Mayor Radcliff be requested to sit for a portrait to be painted for the board.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 404. Radcliff's portrait was painted by Trumbull in 1816 and now hangs in the city hall.—Cat. of Works of Art Belonging to City, 12. Dec. 1

The fort erected on Governor's Island is named "Castle Williams," under a salute of 17 guns. On this occasion Col. Williams, who designed and executed the work, gave a dinner to the mayor and corporation of the city and some of the military and naval officers.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., D 3, 1810. Castle Williams presents 104 pieces of cannon to an enemy, 26 of which are 42-pounders in the water tier, 26 are 32s on the lower tier, 20 are 18s on the third tier, and 50-pound Columbiads on her upper.—Columbian Cent. (Boston), D 18, 1810; Boston Gaz., D 17, 1810. The salary of superintendents of streets is fixed at $800 a year.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 404. "

The Euterpean Society, "proposing to give a benefit for the relief of the Sufferers by the late fire in Charleston South Carolina," sends the common council 50 tickets for disposal, and the board orders that they be deposited with the clerk "for such persons, as may chuse to purchase them."—*M. "This evening . . . will be open at the Museum, No. 166 Greenwich-street, a Panorama of the City of Rome. . . . The Museum has undergone considerable repairs, with new additions. The N. Y. Hist. Soc. celebrates the festival of St. Nicholas in the north court-room in the city hall. An oration is delivered by Hugh Williamson. At 4 o'clock, a dinner was held at the Washington Hotel.—Com. Adv., D 11, 12, 1810; M. C. C. (1784–1831), IV: 398. This was the first celebration of the kind held by this society. 6

The committee to whom was referred the letter from Gouverneur Morris (see N 29) reports to the common council "that they have had a conference with Mr Randall the principal surveyor of the Commissioner from which together with Mr Morriss's letter it appears that some arrangement and provision on the part of this Board will be necessary to give effect to their Plans and opperations that although from the above communication the Commissioners entertain the Idea of making their report within the time limited by law yet much will remain to be done on the ground in measuring and delineating the Streets and avenues in placing and taking the elevation above high water mark of many monuments &c 10

"The Committee from their present view of the subject are of opinion that a contract for finishing the surveys placing monuments and completeing the work marked out by the Commissioners would be proper still however they think it would be adviseable before any definitive step be taken by the Corporation to have a 1810 Dec. 10 conference with the Commissioners themselves or some one of them to know more precisely their views and opinions on the subject." The report is confirmed, and the same committee is directed to confer with the commissioners.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 425–26. See D 17.

" The steamboat committee makes the following report:

"1st we have agreed to lease the Hoboken Ferry to Mr John Stevens with its appurtenances and privileges as now held and enjoyed, from and immediately after the expiration of the present Lease and for and during the Term of Fourteen years for the rent or sum of three hundred and fifty dollars for the first year and to increase annually during the said term in such a ratio as would double the rent of the first year in twenty years

"2d One Steam boat (to be built on such construction as Mr Stevens may Judge best but of Capacity and dimentions sufficient to transport Horse Chairs and passengers) must be placed on said Ferry and kept there plying within Two Years from and after the commencement of the said Term under the Penalty of forfeiting the said Lease And to render the ferry still more accomodating it is further agreed that in four years after the commencement of the said Term another Steam Boat of such improved construction and dimentions as experience may dictate and of equal Capacity at least, with the aforesaid Boat, shall be placed on said Ferry and kept there plying as a ferry boat

"3d such accommodations as may be deemed fit and necessary for the steam Boats on this side of the River shall from time to time be made by the Corporation and in the interim between the commencement of the Term and the readiness of the steam Boats the Ferry must be kept on the present establishment or on one equally accomodating . . ." The report is confirmed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 427–28. See, further, Ap 1, 1811.

" The common council decides to employ the Columbian as one of the newspapers for printing its laws and ordinances.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 454.

12 A New York news item states: "We learn with great pleasure, that our city corporation have at length concluded a contract for the permanent employment of Mr Fulton's steam boats at the Powles Hook ferry. The contract is said to be upon terms highly advantageous to the public. . . . we are informed that provision is made for allowing market waggons to pass at a low toll; and we are told the boats will start every half hour by the clock, . . . It is also stated that the boats intended are of such size, and construction, that passengers may remain in their carriages, and drive in and out with perfect safety and convenience; and each boat will receive eight or ten waggons or carriages at a trip. If our informant is correct, we presume that this ferry, so long the terror of travellers and the disgrace of the city, will as soon as the boats can be built, become one of the safest and most expeditious in the union. . . ." —Aurora Gen. Adv. (Phila.), D 17, 1810; Boston Gaz., D 17, 1810. On April 15, 1811 (q. v.), the lease of the Paulus Hook Ferry was ordered to be executed. For the beginning of the application of steam to ferry-boats, see Ag 10, 1812.

13 On the application of the Free School Soc., Trinity vestry appropriates two lots of ground on the west side of the city, on which to build a school. On Jan. 14, 1811, they appropriated another lot. —Trin. Min. (MS.).

15 Edward Gillespy begins the publication of a newspaper devoted to Irish interests called The Shamrock; or, Hibernian Chronicle.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 492; Early Newspapers, II: 428. See Je 3, 1813.

17 The committee, directed on Dec. 10 (q. v.) to confer with the commissioners for laying out the streets, roads, etc., reports that they have consulted with Gouverneur Morris and John Randel, the surveyor, and are confirmed in their opinion that after the commissioners have made their report, much will still have to be done to complete the work. "The avenue and intersecting lines not having yet been measured and designated by monuments, so as to give a finish and precision to the work, to provide for this, the Commissioners advise, that Mr Randell, the surveyor employed by them, be continued by the Corporation to complete the surveys and measurments already begun in conformity to their plans to place the necessary monuments &c." There are about 605,000 feet still to be measured, and the probable expense will be $13,000. The commissioners also suggest that such parts of the act of April 3, 1807 (q. v.), as may be necessary to protect the surveyors and agents be renewed, and that the common council purchase, at an expense of about $1,000, "certain instruments of peculiar construction" for the use of the surveyor. The "cost of the monuments and the transportation of them to the ground, where they are to be placed, . . . will probably amount to $4000 making a total expense, now to be incurred of about $17,000 or $18,000." The board directs the committee "to contract with Mr Randell for performing and perfecting the surveys and measurements, placing the monuments and all other things necessary in relation to the subject," but the contract is not to go into effect unless "the report of the Commissioners with their maps and field notes be actually filed in the Clerk's office, according to law, prior to the third day of April next."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 435–37. See also ibid., VI: 446. See, further, D 24 and 31. Dec. 17

A New York merchant writes to a friend at Genesee: "It is with great satisfaction I inform thee, that the commissioners who explored the country from the Hudson to Erie, to ascertain the most proper route for a contemplated canal, will make a favorable report to the legislature at the commencement of their next session; and a more important subject will never be discussed by any deliberative body in the United States, as it respects the internal improvement of our country."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 1, 1811. 22

William Bridges addresses the following petition to the common council: "Understanding that it is contemplated by your Honbl Body to complete the Survey & Laying out of the Island by having Permanent mark Stones placed at the Intersections on each of the Principal Avenues upon the Commissioners filing their Map by the time limited 24

"The Subscriber one of Your City Surveyors having been engaged by the said Commissioners for running out a considerable Number of the said Avenues & Cross Lines and likewise of ascertaining the Levels of them & nearly every other Intersecting Line that has been run by their direction and having a general local knowledge of the Island together with a permanent residence in the vicinity where the Business is to be done enables him to offer his Services to Your Honble Body to execute the work with accuracy & Dispatch for a Sum not exceeding nine Thousand Dollars & respectfully requests that he may be engaged to perform the same."—From the original petition in metal file No. 41, city clerk's record-room. The petition is ordered to lie on the table.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 446–47.

Upon the request of Gouverneur Morris, the common council directs that John Randel "be furnished with any maps deposited in the offices of the Comptroller or Street Commissioner, which may be necessary in his opinion, to finish the map he is now preparing, he giving receipts & rendering himself responsible for replacing them in their respective offices."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 439. See also infra. "

Ald. Hardenbrook makes the following motion in common council: "Resolved, that the Committee, to whom was referred the subject of the Commissioners touching the laying out of streets and roads in the city of New York be requested to report to this Board, at their next meeting, how far the Commissioners will have their map completed, and touching all the sections of the law appointing said Commissioners and how far their map will extend over the island, and whether they will or will not give the said elevations generally." No action is taken on the motion.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 446–47. See Mr 22, 1811. "

The common council decides to grant to Dr. Hosack (see O 22) the land in his Botanic Garden reserved for streets, on condition that he convey to the city in exchange "lot 84 containing five acres more or less as designated on the map of the Common Lands represented now to be held by the said Dr Hosack."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 425, 442–43. Hosack agreed to the exchange.—Ibid., VI, 452; Statement of Facts relative to the Estab. and Prog. of the Elgin Botanic Garden (1811), 52. "

Supplementing his work on the Commissioners' Map, a contract is entered into between a committee of the corporation and John Randel, Jr., under which he is to measure accurately all the avenues and their continuations across the public places laid out by the commissioners; also the lines at right angles to those avenues, across the island at convenient distances, and to place where practicable at every intersection made by the avenues and streets such monuments as the corporation shall procure, or iron bolts in rocks where the placing of monuments would be impracticable; and also to take the elevation of all the said monuments above high-water mark, and measure the distance of such buildings as may be 31

1810 Dec. 31 prescribed to him by the corporation from the nearest monument. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 44–45.

Randel was engaged in this survey during the next seven years. By Nov. 9, 1812 (q. v.), he had nearly completed the measurements of all the avenues as far north as 79th St. At that time the common council decided to have him make his report of progress and completion of the work by a map or maps.—Ibid., VII: 297–99. In 1814, the board made an extra allowance to Randel, who, it was reported by the committee on surveys, "being more ambitious of accuracy than of profit, was induced (notwithstanding said contract did not require it) at considerable encrease of trouble and expense, to set them [the monuments] one foot deeper, and to fix them at the bottom as correct as the top . . . so that the angular point might be preserved as long as a piece of the monument remained." He also made every effort "to improve his Instruments." —Ibid., VII: 782–83. The work was completed early in 1817.

Randel was obliged to measure and re-transit 160,160 feet on account of the displacing of pegs before the monuments were set, and he voluntarily re-measured an extensive section of the ground to prove the accuracy of his work.—Ibid., VIII: 745; IX: 45, 131–32. See, further, Ag 12, 1817.

" Joseph Mangin is paid $6.12 for "taking profile of a mud machine."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 448.

— In this year, John Jacob Astor founded the American fur trade at Astoria, on the Columbia River, Ore.—Winsor, VII: 558.

— In this year, the Literary Miscellany was established.—North, Hist. & Present Condition of the Newspaper and Periodical Press, 117.

— In this year, a booklet entitled Description of the View of New York, as exhibited by the Grand Panorama, at the corner of Broadway and Leonard Street appeared. It contained a brief account of all the principal landmarks in the city. The date of the handbook is determined from the description of the unfinished city hall.

— Thomas Pope, in a treatise on bridge architecture, published in this year, refers to "the sorry taste of the unskilled builders of the present day," but mentions several buildings in New York as proof that it is an error to conclude "that we are wholly destitute, in this part of the world, of those specimens, that bespeak a better knowledge and more refined taste in the science of architecture." The first, he states, "that justly claim our notice, is the New-York Free School, which for boldness of feature, and general chasteness of design, may vie with any of the productions of modern times." The Bank of Pennsylvania (in Philadelphia), and the "Gothic part of Trinity Church in this city," are noticed, and he adds: "there are some excellencies in the new Grecian structure called Grace Church." But "The Spire of the Brick Meeting, is, without exception, the greatest ornament of New-York, in the distant view; and make[s] some amends for the too conspicuous and squat phenomena of the Theatre, and other public edifices, which, at a much smaller expense than that which has been lavished upon them, an appearance might have been produced, that would have contributed to the elegance and grandeur of this our commercial metropolis."—A Treatise on Bridge Architecture, by Thomas Pope (1811), xxvi–xxx:

The book contains a history of various bridges erected in different parts of the world from an early period, a detailed description of the author's "Flying Pendent Lever Bridge," some general remarks on timber and other materials, and a description of the author's "Patent Bar Arch, for buildings." Pope made a model of his Flying Pendent Lever Bridge "to illustrate a Bridge suitable to span the East River at New-York, with a single arc, the chord of which would be 1800 feet, the Altitude or versed sine 223 feet . . ."—Ibid. The model of Pope's bridge was exhibited in Philadelphia in Feb., 1812.—Aurora Gen. Adv. (Phila.), F 10 and 14, 1812.

— About 1811, "All that was romantic in scenery and prepossessing in cultivated grounds immediately above Canal Street was quickly doomed. The city was on the march, and every form of hill and dale and pleasant valley must be sacrificed. From the Bayard mansion, on the summit of the high point of land between Grand Street and Broome, the views . . . embraced a curious variety of suggestive scenes. The valley of Canal Street at its foot had been transformed into a busy thoroughfare, . . . and over the roofs and foliage of the new street the City Hospital could be seen, and then the city itself in outline, its smoke and spires reaching into the sky; to the southwest the handsome country-seat of Leonard Lispenard was plainly visible, crowning a beautiful eminence near St. John's Church; to the north of west appeared, above the intervening fields and glens, the green woods which surrounded Richmond Hill; to the north and north-east a half-dozen villas, including those of the Stuyvesants, met the eye in peculiar fellowship with intermediate dwellings of every description scattered along the neighborhood of the Bowery road; while in the distance the Hudson and East Rivers, the magnificent bay, and the shores and heights beyond, completed as fair a prospect as could be found on either continent. 1811 —

"The enemy, with its armor of pickaxes, stood back appalled at the strong, firm, bold front which the Bayard Hill presented. It seemed invincible. But the assault was finally made, the citadel yielded, and the inhabitants fled. As for the real-estate owners, they were solaced by the rise of property. Fortunes grew while dwellings, stables, flower-gardens, fruit-orchards, grassy lawns, summer-houses, lovers' walks, and finely shaded private avenues tumbled promiscuously into the mass of worthless ruins—and posterity was enriched."—Lamb, Hist. of the City of N. Y., II: 569–71.

In this connection, Mrs. Lamb reproduces an "etching by John P. Emmet," through the courtesy of his son, Dr. Thomas Addis Emmet, entitled "Corporation Improvements." This humorous sketch, showing the condition of Broadway during the levelling of Bayard's Hill was made, Mrs. Lamb says, "from near the corner of White Street and Broadway, looking toward Canal Street." —Ibid., 570. The original drawing was sold with the Emmet collection on April 13, 1921.

"The city records afford picturesque glimpses of the details of the labor. Streets were pushed through a block or two in length one year and allowed to rest the next. Springs and rivulets impeded progress and were finally choked into subordination to the laws, and buried without ceremony. Litigations arose involving the rights and privileges of citizens, and questioning the vast extent and complexity of powers assumed by the corporation. The investigation of land-titles was troublesome, and the settlement and collection of assessments upon individual property attended with an incalculable amount of hinderance and vexation." —Ibid.

— In this year was published An account of the New-York Hospital. It contains an engraved frontispiece entitled "View of the New-York Hospital," drawn by John R. Murray and engraved by Leney; also a ground-plan, from designs of J. H. Eddy, engraved by C. Rollinson. The view is reproduced and described as Pl. 88, Vol. III.

— In this year, Dr. John W. Francis was the first graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons. For a sketch of his career in his profession and in literature, as well as in the social life of New York, see Lossing's Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 432–34.

— In this year, Michael Paff opened, at 208 Broadway, a gallery for the sale of paintings. In 1812, he moved to 221 Broadway (later a part of the site of the Astor House) and subsequently made other moves, returning, in 1820, to 221 Broadway, where he remained until 1834.—Howe, Hist. of Met. Museum of Art, 79–80; descrip. of Pl. 108, III: 611. See also Blunt, Stranger's Guide (1817), 137–38.

— In this year, John H. Eddy made a "Map of the Country thirty Miles round the City of New York." It was engraved by Peter Maverick and issued in 1812. It is reproduced as Pl. 82, Vol. III.

This date is found upon a pen-and-ink elevation of the Murray St. Church, evidently drawn by John McComb, Jr.; it is reproduced in Vol. III, A. Pl. 11-b.

— In this year, assessments were made for improving Beach St. with curb and gutter along Hudson Sq. and "Leight" St. with curb and gutter between Varick and Hudson Sts., and for regulating it from Greenwich to Hudson St.; also for regulating and paving Pearl St. between Elm and Chatham Sts.; regulating Grand St. from Goerck St. to Dock St.; regulating and paving Beekman St.; paving Marketfield St. from Broadway to Greenwich St.; opening Washington St. between Barclay and Hubert Sts.; and opening Collect St. between Magazine and Anthony Sts.—Index to Assess. Rolls. Vol. I.

— The year 1811 saw the city hall occupied, but not finished. On March 18, an application for painting the building was received 1811 — by the common council from a firm of painters and referred to the build. com.—Ibid., VI: 521. On July 1, the board agreed to meet on the Fourth of July at 12 o'clock at the hall (ibid., VI: 649); and, on July 15, it was resolved that on "the [second] Monday in [August] next" the common council would meet there for public business, in the room intended for the mayor's office, the old furniture to be used until the council chamber should be completed; and that the comptroller and street commissioner be directed to move their offices to the apartments intended for them. The committee on arrangements presented a bill for $375 for the expenses of a dinner on the Fourth of July, and a warrant was ordered to be issued to pay it.—Ibid., VI: 655, 656. The first regular meeting was held in the hall, as arranged, on Aug. 12, at four p. m.—Ibid., VI: 672.

On Sept. 2, the board passed a resolution that the build. com. "be requested to designate the rooms in the New City Hall for the several offices of the Corporation and of the State" and to make report (ibid., VI: 695); and on Sept. 30, a committee was appointed to procure suitable furniture for the common council chamber (ibid., V: 721).

On Oct. 14, McComb reported that 126 workmen were employed—48 carpenters, 16 masons, 30 laborers, 25 stone-cutters, and 8 stone- and wood-carvers—whose weekly wages were $925; that the stone balustrade and chimney tops would be finished in a few days; that they were waiting for the capitals and statue to complete the cupola, the other part being nearly done; that all the west wing with the housekeeper's apartments would be finished in the fall; and that the interior of the east wing was likely to be "under scratch coat" before winter set in, so that the carpenters might put up and complete the woodwork in the course of the winter. The roof was complete, the window sashes nearly all done and glazed, and might be put in, and the building secured from the weather, in about three weeks.—Ibid., VI: 731. On Oct. 21, the chancellor and justices of the supreme court were to be invited to visit the hall for their opinion "as to the room most suitable to be finished for the accommodation of that Court."—Ibid., VI: 737. On Nov. 27, the board being informed that "a set of Tapestry" had been recently imported, the committee appointed to furnish the common council chamber was authorised to buy the set if deemed suitable.—Ibid., VI: 767–68.

Jan. 1 "Since Steam Boats are no more the rage," and as "going by steam is out of date," John Puffer advertises the establishment of a new line of stages between New York and Albany along the east side of the Hudson.—N. Y. Morning Post, Ja 1, 1911.

2 The following illuminating description of the work on Canal St. appears: ". . . The draining and filling up of the marshes usually called the Collect and Lispenard's Meadows, and the levelling and regulating the adjacent grounds, has always been a subject of much speculation and concern. Various plans have at different times been proposed, and much embarrassment and difficulty have continually arisen. Finally however, after having abandoned the idea of a navigable canal, after levelling most of the surrounding eminences, lowering one street and raising another, then again elevating the former and reducing the latter, until perplexity and confusion have gained a complete ascendency, it has been determined as a desperate resort, to make an experiment with a Sewer or paved channel above ground, extending from the Collect to the North river. The meadows in the meantime having been filled up, or rather covered with sand for the purpose of making streets and building lots, it was natural to imagine, that without a canal, these new made grounds would not be very eligible situations; and it no doubt appeared obvious that if a street one hundred feet wide could be laid out across these meadows so as to afford a spacious way on each side of this canal, the property would not diminish in value on that account. . . . The purchase of the ground then for the street and canal became the first object of attention, and application was made by the corporation to the Legislature for power to purchase accordingly, and to impose an assessment in order to raise the requisite sum. This was accordingly granted, and authority was given to three commissioners [see Mr 24, 1809] to procure a valuation of the ground required and then to impose an assessment for the amount, in the words of the act, on all the owners and occupants of houses, lots and lands intended to be benefitted by the regulation in proportion to the advantage which they might respectively be deemed to acquire. The purchase of this ground for the street was accordingly effected at the expence of about one hundred and sixty Thousand dollars; and the next question was, by what rule or standard is the principle contained in the Act to be applied, in order to apportion this assessment, or in other words, who are the persons to be benefited by the regulation? To solve this question, the Commissioners above mentioned, (with upright motives no doubt, however erroneous their views and incorrect their information,) devise and adopt the following rule, viz. That all those grounds from which the water runs, so as to find its way to this intended street and Sewer, must be exclusively taxed to defray the expence of purchasing the street. To carry this rule into operation, persons are employed to make a survey of the neighbouring grounds, and to ascertain the points from which water may be found to flow and steal its way to these meadows. These Surveyors, pursuing the sagacious scheme of the late famous Street Commissioner, whose notable and profound skill in the business of street making they no doubt much admired, go diligently to work, and after torturing as it were the surface of the ground, in order to force the water to take a direction to Canal-street, but which after all, a great proportion of it will never be able to reach, they furnish a map, comprehending ground between Chamber street on one side, and Amity Lane on the other. This map the Commissioners presuming to be correct, they accordingly adopt, and make the basis of the assessment, of one hundred and sixty thousand dollars, which is now so much the subject of just and serious complaint." —N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 2, 1811; descrip. of Pl. 83-b, III: 561. See F 26 and Jl 23, 1810, and O 8, 1811. Jan. 2

5 At a "numerous and respectable meeting" held at the Tontine Coffee House, a memorial to congress is adopted asking that the charter of the First Bank of the U. S. be renewed.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 8, 1811. See Ja 24.

14 Upon the petition of the inhabitants residing in the vicinity of the U. S. arsenal, the common council agrees to lend them "engine N° 10 with its leader . . . Provided that they procure a suitable building to shelter the same and be responsible for its safe keeping and that they shall return it when desired by the Common Council."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 464–65.

23 An editorial reads: "We are informed that Daniel French, (Machinist and Engineer) of this city, has invented a very useful improvement in the art of weaving. The machinery is very simple in its construction, and cheap to build, and may be moved with the hand, water, or any other convenient power. Mr. French has one of these machines in operation, at his works in the village of Greenwich. . . . This machine is constructed to weave several pieces at once of narrow stuffs such as webbing and narrow cloths of various kinds, and will be a valuable acquisition to our infant manufactories. We understand some of his machines are already engaged for the state prison, to be used by the criminals. Would not this be a valuable acquisition to this city, by being introduced into the Alms-house or other convenient places, where many of the infirm and children, would be able to earn a living, and diminish the burden on community?"—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 23, 1811.

24 The renewal of the charter of the First Bank of the United States is indefinitely postponed in the house of representatives by a vote of 65 to 54. In the senate it was lost by the casting vote of Vice-Pres. Clinton on Feb. 20.—Sumner, Hist. of Banking in the U. S., 48–54. See Mr 4.

28 Street Commissioner Stilwell, reporting on the petition of A. Arden for compensation for damages, "said to have been sustained by a canal dug by direction of Doctor Browne thro' a lot of ground belonging to the petitioner on the West side of Elizabeth Street, between Hester and Grand Streets," thus describes the topography of this part of the city:

". . . previous to any regulation of Streets and lots in the neighbourhood of the lot in question, when the surface of the earth was in a state of nature, there was a pond of water between Bowery Road and Elizabeth Street at the foot of Bunker's Hill on the South side. And when a greater quantity of water ran into the pond than could be contained therein, it found vent thro' this lot, passing off in a Westerly direction and obliquely across the lots and streets to the Collect Meadow, crossing Hester Street near the intersection of Orange Street. This was the natural state of the ground as long as the oldest inhabitants can remember.

"In 1803 Bowery road was regulated and dug down about 4

1811 Jan. 28 feet at the intersection of Grand Street, which made it lower than the outlet above mentioned and caused the water to pond in the road. The next year, Grand Street was dug out from Bowery to Elizabeth Street, and being not yet dug through the hill, the inhabitants were greatly annoyed by the standing water. To remove as far as possible, the cause of complaint, Doctor Browne ordered a ditch or canal to be dug from Grand Street along Elizabeth Street about 155 feet, which brought it to the lowest ground being at the said lot of Miss Arden. . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 475–76.

5 Because of the illness of George III and his inability to exercise the royal authority, George Augustus Frederick, Prince of Wales, is appointed regent by act of parliament.—Robertson, *Select Statutes, Cases, and Documents to illustrate Eng. 6 De Witt Clinton is appointed mayor. He took the oaths of office on Feb. 12.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 495. Clinton succeeded Jacob Radcliff, who had served since March 5, 1810 (q. v.). He held the office until March 6, 1815 (q. v.).

11 As "great and serious evils," such as long delays, imprisonment of innocent persons for want of bail, escape of necessary witnesses, etc., are caused by the fact that the court of general sessions is held only six times a year, for two weeks at a time, the common council adopts a petition to the legislature with the draft of a bill for the establishment of an "Inferior Court of Sessions of the peace in and for the City and County of New York," which is to consist of three judges, to sit daily, and either with or without a jury to "try and determine according to law upon all indictments or informations to be brought before the said court for every pettit larceny, assault and battery, unaccompanied with no other charge, and disorderly house keepers committed within the said city."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 481–83, 492–93.

13 A committee of the legislature in reporting on a petition for the incorporation of the City Bank of New York, says: "The city of New-York contains the greatest number of inhabitants of any city in the United States, and is the capital of the state . . . that the tonnage of the port of New-York is more than double that of Philadelphia, and nearly three to one to that of Baltimore, and that in exports and imports the city of New-York exceeds the above-named places in a greater proportion than in her tonnage; and it may fairly be stated, that New-York pays one third to one fourth of all the imports of the United States, and at the present time, the present actual bank capital of Philadelphia and Baltimore exceeds that of New-York about two million of dollars, which must necessarily give them greater facility in transacting their mercantile business than what is experienced in New-York, and which place, under the above mentioned existing circumstances, is entitled to a larger banking capital than either Philadelphia or Baltimore, both of which are rivals to New-York . . ."—Assemb. Jour., 34th sess., 68–69. The bank, however, was not chartered until June 16, 1812 (q. v.).

14 Henry Brevoort writes a lively letter to Washington Irving describing some of the theatrical events of the season. George Frederick Cooke, the English actor, was most in the public eye then and interest was divided between his stage performances at the Park Theatre and his bacchanalian performances at the inns, coffee houses, and some less savory resorts of the town. Mr. Brevoort tells that "Old Cooke gave a dinner, at Hodgkinson's, a few days ago to the fag ends of the Company . . . The first part of the feast I understand was conducted with great harmony, jocundity &c, but about the time the third bottle ascended their perècraniums, the spirit of dire confusion and fierce debate took full possession of them. 'God save the King' was drunk standing by all that would and all that could stand except the Manager who had not loyalty enough to rise from the chair; straightways all was noise and uproar & the spirit of party raged furiously." Then, so the letter says, all the members of company plunged into an all-around fight, until "at length the Mighty Cooke, began to brandish his potent arm, swearing, that, if this was the way his guests chose to honour his feast, he would . . . make one among them."—Hellman, Letters of Henry Brevoort to Washington Irving (N. Y., 1916), I: 11–16.

15 "A reading room has lately been established in this city, in front of the City Hotel, by Mr. John Howard Payne, better known perhaps, by the appellation of the American Roscious. This reading room as his prospectus informs us, is designed to be, a general depository of Newspapers, Magazines and Pamphlests, and will be found to contain every newspaper and magazine published in New-York, Charleston, Washington, Baltimore and Boston, all preserved and filed in due order; besides such of the principal European miscellanies as may be judged most worthy of selection. Such an institution if well conducted, must furnish our citizens with the best and certainly the cheapest means of making them well acquainted with all the interesting topics of the day, and will gratify strangers from abroad with the earliest intelligence from their homes. . . . The terms are but $10 a year, for which the subscriber is entitled at all hours of the day from 9 in the morning until 10 at night, to the perusal of more than forty newspapers, besides numberless pamphlets, magazines and miscellaneous works, both European and American. . . ."—*N. 18 The common council resolves to apply to the legislature for permission to raise $120,000 by tax to defray the expenses of the city and county for the current year.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 498–500. The memorial was adopted on Feb. 25.—Ibid., VI: 504–5.

" A committee appointed "to take into consideration the propriety of making an application to the Legislature respecting the Government house" (M. C. C., 1784–1831, VI: 492) reports to the common council "That in their opinion the Style and appearance of the Government house, from its being so conspicuously situated and presenting especially to Foreigners so prominent a feature of the pride and taste of our City, must always be an object of solicitude and concern to this Board. And as public Bodies are frequently characterized by their public buildings, So this Board will, by all who are unacquainted with this property, be charged with having shamefully permitted decay and ruin to deface and destroy this Edifice.

"We therefore recommend that a respectful memorial be presented to the Legislature, representing the ruinous condition of the Government house, how neglected and disgraceful every object connected therewith appears, how essentially the reputation and interest of both State and City is injured thereby, and praying that measures to repair the same may be adopted."—From the original report, in metal file No. 44, city clerk's record-room. The board agrees to this, and the committee is required to draft and report such memorial.—From clerk's endorsement on above report; M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 496. The memorial was submitted to the board by the committee on March 4.—See report of committee of that date in same file; M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 511–12. See also ibid., VI: 525.

21 A committee appointed "to enquire and report what grounds can be procured for the permanent establishment of the Alms House and Bridewell and other public buildings of the city," reports to the common council that Great Barn Island, consisting of about 130 acres, can be purchased for $850 per acre, that 15 acres belonging to Martin Hoffman on the East River can be bought for $18,000, that Randall's Island, of 150 acres, can be purchased for $500 per acre, that 28 acres at Bloomingdale, near the five-mile stone, with a frontage of 200 ft. on Hudson River, can be bought for $30,000, and that "a parcel of land near Greenwich, having a front on Hudson River belonging to Samuel Boyd Esquire may be purchased." Motions to purchase Great Barn Island or Randall's Island having been negatived, the board directs the committee "to ascertain upon what terms the grounds belonging to Martin Hoffman or Mr Seaman can be purchased."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 501–2. On March 4, the corporation decided to buy Hoffman's land for $17,500, on condition that the title be cleared from certain claims.—Ibid., VI: 513. At a special meeting on March 8, the committee reported that the ground could not be freed from the claims, so "no further proceedings were had upon the subject."—Ibid., VI: 514.

24 Robert Fulton assures the public that "although the [torpedo] experiments have hitherto been very imperfect, in consequence of being limited to 1500 dollars, and not having one man practised to the use of the engines, yet I have every reason to be satisfied with the rapid progress of this infant art, to a state of important utility. Since the experiments, I have made several improvements on the anchored or permanent torpedoes, and combinations for harbor defence, which has satisfied many gentlemen at Washing-

1811 Feb. 24 ton, that with such engines in the hands of men organized and practised in the use of them, it is impossible for an enemy to enter a port where these shall be placed, or used with the usual courage and skill of nautical men. . . . I have not had any reason to abandon my first opinion of the final effect of sub-marine explosions. . . ."—Aurora Gen. Adv., F 27, 1811.

27 A public meeting is held at Martling's Tavern at which resolutions are passed and a memorial to the legislature is adopted "praying sundry alterations in the Charter of the city, making the office of Mayor elective &c." On March 4, a committee consisting of John Bingham, James Townsend, and Benjamin Romaine, requested the concurrence of the common council therein, but consideration of the proposal was postponed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 510, 518.

11 The legislature, at the request of the Harlem Bridge Co., appoints three commissioners "to explore the tract of country between the Harlem river and the Bronx river, as far up as Williams's bridge, and within two miles thereof, for the purpose of ascertaining and reporting to the legislature, whether any other bridge across Harlem river than what is already built, and whether any and what new or other roads than those already made in the tract of country above described, are required for public convenience."—*Assemb. 12 In a preface to a second, enlarged edition of Hortus Elginensis: or a Catalogue of Plants, Indigenous and Exotic, Cultivated in the Elgin Botanic Garden, Dr. Hosack states: "The greater part of the ground is at present in a state of promising cultivation, arranged in a manner the best adapted to the different kinds of vegetables, and planted agreeably to the most approved style of ornamental gardening. Since that time, an extensive conservatory, for the more hardy green house plants, and two spacious hot houses, . . . the whole exhibiting a front of one hundred and eighty feet, have been erected. . . . The whole establishment is surrounded by a belt of forest trees and shrubs, both native and exotic, and these again are enclosed by a stone wall, two and an half feet in thickness, and seven feet in height. . . . For information upon this subject the reader is referred to a production entitled, 'A statement of Facts relative to the Establishment and Progress of the Elgin Botanic Garden, and the subsequent disposal of the same to the State of New York,' just published."

16 Sometime before this date the stone bridge on Broadway was widened, for a petition of Thomas Duggan drawn up on this day and presented to the common council on March 18 complains: "The subscriber has been assessed $25 for widening the Bridge in Broadway he thinks it unreasonable that the four Corner lots Should pay for said bridge that is as usefull to those ten miles of [off], besides it is a great Damage to him, as the water is now stopt and no geting at the old bridge to take away the dirt, there has been Gentlemen wanted to hire his house but when the [they] see the water green the [they] say the [they] would not live there. If your honourable Board thinks he ought to pay it he prays that he may have time intill the 2d of June when he expects to receive money from the Corporation and that you will please to Allow your Controler to Except his order for sd Assessment and his tax intill than some of your Board knows he has lost 50000$ by the alterations of Canal Street which has almost ruined him."—From the original petition, with the report of the street commissioner attached, in metal file No. 44, city clerk's record-room. The time for paying the assessment was extended to June 2.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 531.

18 The common council adopts a memorial to the legislature and a draft of a bill for authority to regulate the chimney sweeping department, because "no responsibility being attached to the poor little sweeps or to their cruel taskmasters, the business, at present, is executed carelessly."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 524. The act was passed by the legislature.—Ibid., VI: 357–38.

22 Final report is made by Gouverneur Morris, Simeon De Witt, and John Rutherford, the commissioners appointed by legislative enactment of April 3, 1807, to lay out the streets, roads, and public squares of New York City lying between the Hudson River and the East River and north of Fitzroy Road, Greenwich Lane, Astor Place, and Houston St. It was printed by Bridges, to accompany his map (see N 16), in a small volume entitled, Map of the City of N. Y. and Island of Manhattan. See Ap 1. Mar. 22

" The legislature passes a law to encourage manufacturing. "Any five or more persons who shall be desirous to form a company for the purpose of manufacturing woolen, cotton, or linen goods, or for the purpose of making glass, or for the purpose of making from ore bar-iron, anchors, mill-irons, steel, nail-rods, hoop-iron and iron-mongery, sheet-copper, sheet-lead, shot, white lead and red lead," may, on filing the proper certificates, be erected into a corporate body for the term of 20 years.—Laws of N. Y. (1811), chap. 67. Under this act the "Eagle Manufacturing Company" was incorporated, Ap 26, 1813 (q. v.).

25 Sophia Usher, the widow of George Usher, "the inventor of the distillation and preparation of mineral waters," asks permission of the common council to sell the waters "in the vestibule of the City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 528. On April 1, the committee to whom the petition was referred reported favourably and added that they had selected "a suitable place for the Lady in the vestibule, where the Honourable the Corporation, the Courts and our Fellow Citizens generally may be supplied with her most excellent waters." The report was confirmed.—Ibid., VI: 537. On April 15, Sheldon Usher remonstrated against the grant, stating that he was "the original distiller of said waters," but the board decided that he "have leave to withdraw his petition."—Ibid., VI: 551. 1 The Randel Survey or Commissioners' Map, drawn in triplicate by John Randel, Jr., from surveys made by him for the commissioners who were appointed under the act of April 3, 1807 (q. v.), is finished, and is filed as required by that act,—one "in the office of the Secretary of State, to remain of record," the second "in the office of the Clerk of the City and County of New York, to remain of record," and the third (the one reproduced here as Pl. 79, Vol. I) "to belong to the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New York." At the present time (1925), the first of these copies is still in the office of the secretary of state, Albany; the second, which was originally filed on March 30, 1811, as shown by the certificate on the map itself, is kept in the record-room of the clerk of the county of New York (Room 3, 8th floor, Hall of Records); and the third, originally filed April 1, 1811, is preserved in the bureau of topography, borough president's office, Municipal Building. See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 538, 560–61.

The improvements devised by the commissioners of 1807, as shown by their map and the report which accompanied it, included a symmetrical rectangular plan, with avenues 100 ft. wide and most of the streets 60 ft. wide. Such avenues as could be extended to the village of Harlem were numbered west from First Ave. to Twelfth Ave.; and east of First Ave. were four short avenues designated A, B, C, D, respectively. The cross streets were laid out as far north as 155th St. Ground for a public market (Market Place), 3,000 by 800 ft., was reserved between 10th and 7th Sts., First Ave. and East River; and for a Parade, 1,350 by 1,000 yds., between 23d and 34th Sts., Third and Seventh Aves. The other public places projected on the map were: Harlem Marsh, between Fifth Ave. and East River, 106th and 109th Sts. (about 67 acres); Harlem Sq., between Sixth and Seventh Aves., 117th and 121st Sts. (20 acres); Hamilton Square, between Third and Fifth Aves., 66th and 68th Sts. (18 acres); Observatory Sq., between Fourth and Fifth Aves., 89th and 94th Sts. (26 acres); Bloomingdale Sq., between Eighth and Ninth Aves., 53d and 57th Sts. (20 acres); Manhattan Sq., between Eighth and Ninth Aves., 77th and 81st Sts.; and Union Place, an "irregular trapezium" formed by the junction of the Bloomingdale and Bowery Roads.

1811 Apr. 1 In laying out the streets and avenues the commissioners preserved certain old roads already shown on the Goerck Map of the Common Lands (1796), such as Albany Ave. or West Road, Middle Road, and East Road. Thus, West Road was widened 40 ft. on the west side, making it 100 ft. wide, and was named Sixth Ave.; Middle Road which was 100 ft. wide was called Fifth Ave.; East Road was widened 40 ft. on the east side, making it 100 ft. wide, and was called Fourth Ave., and the other avenues were run parallel to these. The streets as laid out by these commissioners superseded the old roads; and the ground of the old roads was later conveyed to private buyers wherever not required for the new streets,—as, for example, the release of several old streets to James Lenox, Sept. 2, 1858 (City Grants, Liber 76, p. 243).—From remarks on Holmes' Map of the Common Lands (1874).

The commissioners' report, together with the act of April 3, 1807 (q.v.), and a list of references to public buildings, churches, etc., was published (with some slight modifications) in 1811, in a 54-page pamphlet accompanying the so-called Bridges Map (see N 16, 1811).—Descrip. of Pl. 79, I: 471–73.

A supplementary act of the legislature was passed on April 9, 1811, "respecting Streets in the City of New York" (Laws of N. Y., 1811, chap. 146), which provided "that it shall and may be lawful for such persons as shall be appointed for that purpose by the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New York in Common Council convened, to enter upon the lands of private persons and to run out streets and fix the boundaries thereof, and to erect monuments designating such streets and boundaries, according to the maps and plan of the said Commissioners, and generally the said persons shall be invested with power to do all such matters as may be necessary to carry the said plan into execution: Provided that the provisions contained in the 17th section of the act entitled 'an act respecting streets in the City of New York' shall be and hereby are extended and applied to the proceedings authorized by this section." And about one year after the filing of the Commissioners' Map, another act was passed, June 16, 1812, "relative to the opening, laying out and forming, and extending, and otherwise improving streets, avenues, squares, and public places in the City of New York" (ibid., 1812, chap. 174), which repealed sections IX, X, XI, of the act of April 3, 1807, and authorised certain debts to be funded. Again, on April 9, 1813, a revised law was passed making provision for street openings (ibid., 1813, chap. 86), and the substance of these acts was incorporated later in the act of 1815 (ibid., 1815, chap. 92), "relative to Public Squares and Places in the City of New York." For the various amendments to the act of April 9, 1813, see Gerard, 135–36.

On Oct. 26, 1812, the common council of the city adopted a resolution thanking Gouverneur Morris and John Rutherford for performing gratuitously "the arduous duties of Commissioners for laying out the Streets of the City;" and each of them was presented with a handsomely coloured and mounted map of the city (doubtless the Bridges Map).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 287.

The act of 1807 required that the commissioners should "erect suitable and durable monuments at the most conspicuous angles . . . and upon the shores of the North and East rivers, to be noted on said maps." Their map and report show that they did as required; but on Dec. 31, 1810 (q.v.), John Randel, Jr. was engaged by the common council to erect monuments at the intersections of all the streets and avenues, and in the course of the next seven years he was occupied with this work.

Although the plan of the future city was to be "final and conclusive," many changes have been made in it by authority of the legislature. The principal acts modifying it are listed by Gerard, pp. 99–104. For Randel's own testimony in regard to his appointment and work, see 1808; Hist. Mag., 2nd ser., III: 166 et seq.; and descrip. of Pl. 80-b, III: 548.

"The map and plan of the Commissioners," says James Kent, "laid out the highways on the island upon so magnificent a scale, and with so bold a hand, and with such prophetic views, in respect to the future growth and extension of the city, that it will form an everlasting monument of the stability and wisdom of the measure." —Kent, Charters, 144. As a matter of fact it destroyed most of the natural beauty and interest of the island which, but for the commission of 1807, might have possessed the charm and variety of London.

" The law passed on April 5, 1810, requiring all deeds of land in the city of New York to be recorded, commences operation.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 26 and 28, 1811.

Apr. 1 A lease to John Stevens of "the ferry at Hoboken to be navigated by Steam Boats" is ordered to be executed, and the steamboat committee is directed to report "what alterations are necessary to be made on this side the river to accommodate the Steam Boats." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 537. See S 18.

2 Washington Irving writes from Washington to his friend Henry Brevoort of his arriving in that city after "a very expeditious journey of fifty-two hours from New York," having been "extremely fortunate in meeting with no delays." He tells us that at the moment of his arrival in Philadelphia "the packet was about starting from Newcastle so that we were in full sail in about twenty minutes. . . . The next morning at half-past six we arrived at Baltimore, breakfasted and set off at eight in an extra stage, and reached Washington about half-past four in the afternoon."—Life and Letters of Washington Irving by Pierre M. Irving (N. Y., 1862), I: 276.

" During the year ending on this day, three members of the board of directors of the N. Y. Tontine Coffee House Assn. died (Gulian Verplanck, Wm. Laight, and John Broome). This left only two surviving members (John Watts and John Delafield). In conformity with the constitution of the association—that, whenever the trustees, in whom the fee-simple of the Coffee House was vested, should be reduced to less than three, then five others should be elected, and the property conveyed to them—the two survivors now transfer their trust to Richard Varick, Matthew Clarkson, Francis B. Winthrop, John B. Coles, and Gulian Ludlow. At this time the Tontine Coffee House was at the height of its commercial activity as a merchants' exchange. It had operated as such since its opening in 1793 (q.v.), and the demolition of the old exchange on Broad St. in 1799 (q.v.); and so continued until the merchants' exchange was opened on the south side of Wall St. in 1827 (L. M. R. K., III: 924, 925, 981).—Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City, 321–22.

At this time, the operation of the Tontine Coffee House was in the hands of Jas. Bryden, who had leased the house on Jan. 31, 1809. He was followed by Edw. Bardin (April 3, 1812), Ebenezer Storer (Feb. 15, 1817), and Bethuel Bunker (May 2, 1823). As usual in these early days, the coffee-house was frequently referred to by the name of its proprietor. The provisions of their leases, in the case of this coffee-house, were about the same. The building was painted inside and out for Bardin, and an "orchestra" erected in "the Long Room on the second floor." —See the original papers in vol. lettered N. Y. Tontine Coffee House, in N. Y. H. S. See also Com. Adv., My 3, 1817. See, further, My 20, 1815.

3 The legislature passes a law providing that one third of the assessment for Canal St. shall be borne by New York City at large and two thirds by the property benefitted.—Laws of N. Y. (1811), chap. 108. See also petition in metal file No. 43, city clerk's record-room; M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 692, 728; N. Y. Eve. Post, O 7, 1811.

8 The legislature appropriates $34,500 for the support of the state prison, and orders that it be applied to "erecting a building for the female convicts; and to extend the yard of the southwest wing one hundred and six feet towards the Hudson river, and one hundred and nineteen feet along said river, and to erect such docks and improvements as will be necessary to support the same." —Laws of N. Y. (1811), chap. 173. A south-east view of the state prison, made in 1814, is reproduced in Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 461. See Ap 12, 1820.

" "Whereas a communication by means of a canal navigation between the great lakes and Hudson's river will encourage agriculture, promote commerce and manufactures, facilitate a free and general intercourse between different parts of the United States, and tend to the aggrandizement and prosperity of the country, and consolidate and strengthen the union," Gouverneur Morris, Stephen Van Rensselaer, De Witt Clinton, Simeon De Witt, Wm. North, Thos. Eddy, Peter B. Porter, Robert R. Livingston, and Robert Fulton, are appointed commissioners "for the consideration of all matters relating to the said inland navigation," and $15,000 is appropriated for their use in carrying it into effect.—Laws of N. Y. (1811), chap. 188. See also ibid. (1812), chap. 231, and Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 621–23. See Ap 17, 1816.

" Wm. Bridges petitions the common council "for the copy right of the map filed by the Commissioners of Streets and roads

1811 [see Ap 1] offering to have the same engraved and to furnish the Apr. corporation free of expense [blank] copies of the same." The 8 petition is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 540. On April 29, the board directed the committee to "give exclusive permission to Mr Bridges to make a copy of said map, on condition that he furnished to this board 60 copies free from expense, it being understood that he make compensation to Mr Randell for certain memoranda and explanations respecting said map which at the request of the Committee, the said Mr Randell is to furnish."—Ibid., VI: 575. 15 A lease to the Paulus Hook Company of the Paulus Hook ferry, "to be conducted by Steam Boats," is ordered to be executed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 554. On May 10, Robert Fulton was "directing the building of the boat, and constructing the machinery."—Pub. Adv., My 10, 1811. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1866), 736–37. See, further, Je 30, 1812.

20 James S. Kip and others, heirs of Samuel Kip, convey to the city 6 acres, 1 rod, 28 perches, "adjacent to the estate of the Corporation at Bellevue." The location in the present plan of the city is on the East River in the neighbourhood of 26th St. The land is to be used for a new almshouse.—Liber Deeds, XVII: 176 (New York); M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 557, 561–63, 572. See Ap 1, 1793; Ap 19, 1798; L. M. R. K., III: 953 ("Bellevue Hospital"); Pl. 176, Vol. III. See, further, Ap 29 and My 25.

22 The common council resolves "that Maiden Lane be opened on the South West side thereof from Broadway to Nassau St. agreeably to the plan exhibited to this Board, which was to make that part of the street forty two feet nine inches wide."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 564, 575. See My 6.

29 The common council appoints a committee "to select the proper scite for an Alms House on the ground belonging to the Corporation at Bellevue" (see Ap 20), and authorises them "to procure a suitable plan for the building or buildings to be erected and to give a reasonable compensation for the same, not exceeding one hundred dollars: and to take all such measures as shall be consistent with a proper regard to oeconomy, to facilitate the erection of such buildings and the completion of such improvements, as shall be necessary and proper for the Alms House establishment at that place." The finance committee is directed "to report an estimate of the probable expense of such buildings and improvements and the best manner of raising the requisite sums of money to meet the payments for the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 572–73.

" The common council changes the name of Magazine St. to Pearl St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 574.

4 Various persons petition the common council for opening Third Ave. The petition states, in part: ". . . This Avenue commencing at the Bowery road near the dwelling house of Mangle Minthorne Esquire, and running on a direct line thro' Rose-Hill farm and Kips-bay farm, strikes the Old Boston post road at or near the four mile stone, and your Petitioners respectfully represent that by opening the same to the said last mentioned place, the distance from the Compact parts of the City East and South of Broadway to Rose-Hill farm the grounds above it on the shore of the East River [see N. Y. Morn. Post, Ja 31, 1811; N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 20, 1812; L. M. R. K., III: 951] will be shortened nearly one mile. Your Petitioners further represent that the Avenue in question passes for the most part over high firm ground and interferes very little with improvements so that it will not require any very great expence to open and regulate the same as a public road.

"Your Petitioners further represent that at present there is no great street or avenue to the City nearer to the East River than the Bowery and that from the Junction of Broadway and the Bowery to the Junction of the Bloomingdale and Boston roads all the passing and repassing is necessarily confined to one street and is frequently so thronged as to become difficult and dangerous to the Citizens and Travellers, whereas the avenue in question will take its share of the travelling which will be divided between it, the Broadway and Bowery to the obvious advancement of the usefulness and safety of them all.

"Your Petitioners therefore pray that your Honorable Body will May be pleased to cause the necessary steps to be taken for opening 4
the said street called the Third Avenue from the Bowery road to the four mile stone on the Boston post road. . . ." Among the signers are Bert. Peter Cruger, H. M. N. Cruger, Daniel D. Tompkins, Fran. Bayard Winthrop, Samuel Kip, John Y. Van Tuyl, Thomas Buchanan, Mangle Minthorne, Corns Kip, David Dunham, Thomas C. Pearsall, George Waite, and John Gilston.—From the original MS. with "Filed Papers, 1810–1814," city clerk's record-room.

On May 4, the board referred the petition to the road committee and street commissioner.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 577. The committee's report, on May 13, was at first unfavourable. It says, in part: "That the public convenience, as well as the particular accommodation of the petitioners, make it desirable, that a street or avenue should be opened between the Bowery road and the east river.

"That from an examination of the Map, and a knowledge of the ground, it appears, that the 2nd Avenue is preferable to the 3d in many respects, as well as in relation to the public, as to many of the petitioners, some of whom have so expressed themselves.

"The Committee therefore recommend that legal measures be immediately taken for opening the 2 nd Avenue from its commencement at first street to its intersection of the old post road between the four & five mile stones."—From the original report, filed with petition. The report was read, and further consideration postponed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 586.

On May 20 (q. v.), the report was amended by inserting the words "and 3rd Avenue" after the words "2nd Avenue" in the last paragraph, and was agreed to by the board.—Ibid., VI: 597. The added words were also interlined in the original MS. report.

The common council orders that the Oswego Market be re- 6 moved in order that Maiden Lane may be widened to 50 feet.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 550, 580. On Oct. 7, an ordinance was passed for widening the street.—Ibid., VI: 725, 732. See My 20.

"It is much to be regretted that some attention is not paid to 7 the repairing the pavements of the sidewalks of our city. Broadway, Wall-street, and a few more excepted, the most shameful neglect prevails in this particular. In some places the roots of the poplars loosen the bricks, and the hogs amuse themselves with snouting them up, in order to devour the roots; which, to be sure, has a very rural and picturesque effect in a populous city. In other places, the bricks are so worn away, that the foot passenger, in the evening, is continually stumbling; and strangers are apt to mutter a curse against our excellent police, for not having these things in better order. . . .

"There are many obstructions in the side walks, which, if practicable, ought to be removed; such, for instance, as steps and cellar-doors. By contracting these, many of our narrow streets might be much improved, both in appearance and convenience."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 7, 1811. Another complaint against obstructions in the streets appeared in ibid., My 11, 1811.

The 22d anniversary of the Tammany Society falling on Sun- 13 day, it is celebrated on Monday, and the corner-stone of the first Tammany Hall or "Great Wigwam" erected by the society is laid on the south-east corner of Nassau and Frankfort Sts. (see L. M. R. K., III: 939). Addresses are made by Clarkson Crolius, grand sachem, and Alphus Sherman. In the afternoon the society had dinner at Martling's Tavern, where they were "honored with the attendance of maj. Paulding, one of the surviving captors of maj. Andre . . . and several other survivors of the revolution." The Manhattan Society also joined in the celebration, and the Tammany men who were confined in the debtor's prison commemorated the day there. Joseph Delacroix held a special exhibition of fireworks at Vauxhall Garden in honour of the occasion.—Columbian, My 10, 16, 17, and 18; N. Y. Eve. Post, My 11; Pub. Adv., My 11 and 15, 1811. Ineffectual attempts to build a Tammany Hall had been made in 1792 (q. v., Ja 18, 27, and Mr 8) and 1802 (q. v., D 9), and the success in 1811 was due to Col. Rutgers and others, through whose efforts the sum of $28,000 was subscribed.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 869.

The corner-stone of this first Tammany Hall has been preserved by the society, and bears the following inscription: "Tammany Society or Columbian Order. Founded by William Mooney in 1786 [see Ap 30, 1787]. Organized under a Constitution and 19 On this Sunday morning a fire breaks out in Chatham St., destroying almost 100 wooden buildings in the vicinity. The steeple of the Brick Meeting House and the cupola of the jail catch fire, but both are saved, the former by a sailor and the latter by one of the prisoners. St. Paul's Chapel, St. George's, and the Scotch church in Cedar St. are also threatened, but not burned.—Columbian, My 20, 21, and 23; Pub. Adv., My 20 and 22; and N. Y. Eve. Post, My 21, 1811. C.* (1784–1831), VI: 572, 599. On May 27, the plan for the building was adopted.—Ibid., VI: 606. The corner-stone was laid on July 29 (q. v.).

27 The common council passes a law imposing a tax upon all owners of dogs of three dollars for each dog, and prohibiting the running at large of all dogs.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 596–97, 603–5. The law was amended on June 10.—Ibid., VI: 625.

" Sundry inhabitants petition the common council "that a road might be opened from Harsin ville to the North River," and the subject is referred to the road committee.—*M. C. It ceased to be used by the Presbyterians on Sept. 20, 1846 (q. v.).

June The common council resolves to extend Hudson St. to meet
3 Eighth Ave.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), 612. On Sept. 16, the committee on the subject presented a map drawn in June by Wm. Bridges, city surveyor, on which was delineated the course which in their opinion the street ought to take. It was resolved that the street be continued in the direction of and agreeably to the dotted line marked on this map, and that the map be filed in the office of the street commissioner.—Ibid., VI: 706–7. " The common council requests the Bellevue committee "to direct Mr Randell to run out the lines of the Second & Third Avenues [see My 20] and also such of the Cross Streets, as they shall deem necessary for the convenience of the Public buildings about to be erected at Bellevue." It also appoints a "General Superintending Committee," whose duty it shall be from time to time "to direct & instruct Mr Randell in running out the lines & fixing the monuments of the several streets on the island agreeably to the map of the Commissioners of Streets and roads."—*M. 10 The street commissioner is directed to report "a plan of piers for the accommodation of the Steam Ferry Boats at Paulus hook with an estimate of the probable expense of the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 625. He reported on June 24 a "plan proposed by Mr Fulton" accompanied by a drawing to illustrate the intended improvements. This was referred to the steam ferry-boat committee.—Ibid., VI: 638–39; original report in metal file No. 44, city clerk's record-room. 17 A committee appointed to consider what improvements might be made in the fire department reports "That the principal difficulty in extinguishing fires is to procure a sufficient supply of water, at an early period. In the central parts of the city, the pumps and cisterns, which are principally relied on are soon exhausted and before a line composed of engines & leaders can be formed to the rivers, the fires may & often do get to a great height." The board thereupon agrees to the following resolutions recommended by the committee:

"1st Resolved, that two reservoirs of stone sufficient to contain two hundred hogsheads each be built & placed at or near each wing of the New City Hall to be supplied from the roof thereof: & that the water be used for no other purpose than the extinguishment of fires

"2d Resolved, that it be recommended to the different religious societies in the city to cause to be built a reservoir for water, at or near their respective places of worship, to be supplied with water from their respective places of worship, and that the water be used only at fires

"3d That a new supply engine be built under the direction of the Committee on the fire department."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 631–32.

21 The British frigate "Melampus" fires upon the pilot boat "Brothers" off Sandy Hook.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 1, 1811.

24 The common council directs the street commissioner to contract for 15,000 loads of earth "to be deposited in such parts of the collect where it is most wanted," and resolves that "three temporary bridges be erected over the ditch [in Collect St.], in such places as will be most convenient to the citizens."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 625, 640.

" The common council pays Wm. Hoghland $100 "for a plan of New Alms House at Bellevue."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 632–33, 641.

" The common council authorises John Randel, Jr. to "cause the South side of North Street to be surveyed," and to "ascertain and fix the lines of the street, from which the avenues take their direction."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 641. See Ag 10, 1812.

The Commissioners appointed by joint resolutions of the Honorable Senate and Assembly of the State of New York of the 13th & 15th March 1810 to explore the rout of an inland navigation from Hudsons river to Lake Ontario and Lake Erie beg leave to —

Report —

That they have examined the country as critically as time and circumstances would permit, and caused surveys to be made for their better information —

They beg leave to observe on the present navigation by the Mohawk River, Wood Creek, Oneida Lake, and the Oswego River, which extends from Schenectady to Lake Ontario (saving only a portage at the falls within twelve miles of Oswego) that experience has long since exploded in Europe the idea of using the beds of Rivers for internal navigation, where Canals are practicable — The reasoning on that subject applies with greater force in America. For in the navigation of Rivers reliance must be had principally on the labour of Men, whereas along Canals, the force employed is generally that of Horses — But the labour of Men is dearer and the subsistance of Horses cheaper in America than in Europe —

PRELIMINARY REPORT OF THE COMMISSION WHICH SURVEYED THE ROUTE OF THE ERIE CANAL; MADE TO THE NEW YORK LEGISLATURE IN FEB., 1811. SEE ADDENDA, VOL. VI.

1811 June 28 Robert Fulton writes to Joel Barlow: "My time is now occupied in building North River and Steam ferry boats, and in an interesting lawsuit to crush 22 Pirates who have clubbed their purses and copied my boats and have actually started my own Inventions in opposition to me by running one trip to Albany: her machinery gave way in the first voyage and she is now repairing, which will detain her I presume until we obtain an Injunction to stop her. A more infamous and outrageous attack upon mental property has not disgraced America."—Dickinson, Robert Fulton, Engineer and Artist, 248–49.

July 1 The common council agrees that, "on their adjournment, they would adjourn to meet on the 4th instant at the New City Hall at 12 o'clock."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 649. See Jl 15.

4 "The Triumph of America" is the title of Delacroix's spectacular display of fireworks, etc. this year at Vauxhall.—Columbian, Jl 3, 1811. It proved to be his last performance.—See Jl 31.

5 Venezuela declares its independence of Spain.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 28, 1811.

6 "The inhabitants of the southern part of our city have not had a pitcher of Manhattan water for the last five or six days. The extreme heat of the weather, and the parching drowth which at present afflicts the city, have made this unaccountable deprivation doubly afflicting. We are informed that the northern parts of the town have been amply supplied; how then does it happen that the southern parts are entirely neglected? There must be an unpardonable fault somewhere. The citizens pay a high price for the necessary article of water, and to be deprived of it when it is most wanted is not only extremely vexatious, but it actually endangers the health of the people. . . ."—Com. Adv., Jl 6, 1811. See Ap 11, 1812.

13 Mr. Palmer, "who directs the Diving Bell, on board the gunboats, now in Hurl-Gate, and who has been for some months past, without avail, endeavouring to obtain a part of the wrecked British frigate Huzza, which sank there during the revolution," (see N 23, 1780), succeeds in getting up her rudder. "The quantity of copper which is on it, together with the chains and bolts, will be of considerable value. . . ."—Columbian, Jl 16, 1811. See, further, Jl 18, 1818.

15 The common council resolves "that on the Second Monday of August next, the Common Council will meet for public business, at the New City Hall in the room intended for the Mayor's office; that the old furniture be used, until the Council Chamber is completed and that the Comptroller & Street Commissioner be also directed to remove their respective offices to the appartments intended for them."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 655. See Ag 5.

18 Under the heading "Military Hall," Robt. Dyde "respectfully informs military gentlemen his ground is now well laid out, and is perhaps the best that can be found so near the city for troops to exercise and parade on.—He has likewise built a Target Bank for Riflemen to practice at, upon the same plan as those in Hyde Park, London." The ground is "Little more than a mile up the Broadway, on the left-hand side."—N. Y. Morning Post, Jl 18, 1811. There was a sham battle here on Aug. 16.—Ibid., Ag 16; Columbian, Ag 17, 1811. See also Morning Post, Ag 31, 1811.

22 The common council appoints a committee "to take into consideration how far it would be proper to fill up the Collect and whether it would not be expedient to leave some of the Springs or fountains of it open & report thereon to the Board."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 660.

26 Col. Irenée Amelot de la Croix, formerly "Chief de-Brigade in the French service," establishes in New York a school of military instruction, with a view to forming a "Battalion of Independent Cadets." His published notice says that "the system introduced by Baron Steuben into this country, and all other systems of the old school, were good in former times, but must now be totally reformed, to enable America to cope, in case of necessity, with the wonderful improvements in the science of war, invented of late years."—N. Y. Morn. Post, Jl 26, 1811. His "Military Room" was in Tryon Row.—Aurora, O 3, 1811. He gave a tournament at the Circus, with award of prizes, for the military exercises, fencing, etc., of his pupils.—N. Y. Morn. Post, O 17, 1811; see also ibid., O 22, 24, 29, and N 2, 1811.

29 The corner-stone of the new almshouse (see My 25) is laid under the south-east corner of the chapel wing.—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 96; Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 577; Address of Dr. Francis, N. Y. H. S. pamphlet (1857), 189. See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 665–66. For progress of the building operations see ibid., VI: 765–66, and the original Bellevue committee report (Nov. 27), with "Filed Papers, 1810–1814," city clerk's record-room. This is the beginning of Bellevue, later Bellevue Hospital, called so because six acres of the tract acquired by the city had belonged to Lindley Murray and were called by him Bellevue Place. See Ap 1, 1793; Ap 19, 1798; Ap 20, 1811; L. M. R. K., III: 953; Pl. 176, Vol. III. The almshouse, penitentiary, etc., were ready for occupancy on April 22, 1816 (q.v.). July 29

" The common council orders that Chatham Square be enclosed with a fence, and the sale of horses and carriages by auction is hereafter prohibited in the square, the horse market being removed to the ground near the arsenal at Anthony St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 663, 674; Pub. Adv., Ag 1, 1811. See also 1819.

31 Jos. Delacroix, "desirous of retiring from business, offers for sale 14 1–2 years Lease of that handsome, profitable and well known establishment [Vauxhall Garden]. The new building is calculated for business in winter as well as in summer, and is to be valued and paid for at the end of the lease." He will "dispose of his Distillery separately, with a large assorted stock of Cordials . . ."—N. Y. Morn. Post, Jl 31, 1811. The ad. ran through the issues to Aug. 17, inclusive.—Ibid., passim. On Aug. 22, Nicholas C. Bachia, the "artist" who designed the fireworks at Vauxhall, advertised an exhibition there for his own benefit.—Columbian, Ag 22, 1811.

Aug. 3 The Mercantile Advertiser publishes a communication from "Spectator" concerning the Pitt statue, entitled "An Overture in favour of the Fine Arts." This statue of marble, the writer says, "once stood at the intersection of Wall street and William street [see Je 25, 1770], and was surrounded by an iron railing. On the sides of the pedestal were inscriptions [see S 7, 1770] expressive of the considerations leading a grateful people to such a high mark of their regard. The friend of the Colonists in that awful struggle, was represented in the Roman Toga, without the covering of a hat, and with a scroll in the left hand. The form was tall and majestic, and the robe fell gracefully round the body and limbs. He looked like a person of senatorial rank, addressing the dignified body to which he belonged. During the Revolution this noble figure was deprived of its head [see N 30, 1777] and hands. In this mutilated condition it was removed—by the municipality [see Jl 16, 1788], and deposited for safety in one of the public yards. Judge, now, of my surprise, when on viewing the magnificent City Hall, now erecting, I saw, this morning, this famous statue to Pitt, placed, in its headless and handless condition, as a prop to support one of the sheds under which the stone cutters work! I could, however, fully discover the sculptor's skill in finishing the trunk, the lower limbs and drapery, which are, as yet, in tolerably good preservation. I could read below the rest of the right hand the words 'Articuli Magnae Chartae Libertatum'—Articles of the Great Charter of our Liberties. And I discovered beneath the inscription a medallion, representing in bass relief, justice in a sitting posture, with her sword and truncheon. . . . It immediately ocurred to me, that there was an association of gentlemen to whom this decaying semblance of a truly great man would be acceptable:—I mean the Academy of Fine Arts. As an individual, I wish they would apply for it. Or if they should not, I hope the Corporation of the city will make them an offer of it [see Aug. 12]. For I own to you, Messrs Editors, it hurts my feelings, both as a whig and an amateur, to see this finely wrought piece of Marble so disfigured and dishonored. I sincerely hope it may be removed from the work-house to the Gallery."—Merc. Adv., Ag 3, 1811. See Ag 12.

5 "The Board agreed to meet at the New City Hall and that part of the former resolution [see Jl 15], which directed the removal of the several offices was suspended till the further order of the Board."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 671. See Ag 12.

8 Trinity vestry orders "that the Treasurer be directed to pay to Mr William Bayard the Cost of a Bell and Clock procured by him under the authority of the Vestry for the use of St Johns Church."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

11 The new First Presbyterian Church on Wall St. is opened for worship.—Miller, Memoir of Rev. John Rogers, 275. See also summary under Mr 21, 1810.

12 In accordance with its resolution (see Jl 15 and Ag 5), the 1811 Aug. 12 common council holds its first regular meeting "in the New City Hall, in the room designated for the Mayor's office."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 672.

" The statue of William Pitt (see Jl 16, 1788) is presented to the Academy of Fine Arts by the common council. "Though, at present, in a very mutilated state," it is deemed worthy of preservation, "on account of its excellent workmanship [see Ag 3]."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 675–76. The statue was in the same custody in 1827 (N. Y. Daily Adv., Jl 25, 1827), and continued to be, probably, until 1841 (q.v.), when the society was dissolved. For the next mention of the statue, see 1843.

13 "The Managers of the New-York [Park] Theatre have pleasure in announcing to the public, that, during the vacation, the internal part of the Theatre has been painted in a style of splendour and ornament far surpassing what has been before exhibited in this city. The lobies have been altered so as to present an entirely new appearance, and to afford very considerable comfort and accommodation to the ladies visiting the Theatre. The Managers trust that the arrangements they have made for lighting the house, will not only answer the purpose of display, but that the theatre will be kept perfectly clean and free from smoke. The front of the house still retains its unique appearance.

". . . The Theatre will be opened on Monday, September 2d."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 13, 1811. The theatre was again redecorated in 1816 (q.v., Ag 26 and S 3).

14 "A French picaroon privateer full of men, came into Sandy-Hook last night, and is skulking about in our bays and creeks, no doubt in search of plunder. . . . After the repeated and outrageous robberies that have been committed by these freebooters upon American vessels, and sometimes in our own waters, it behoves defenceless merchantmen, who are about sailing, to be on their guard."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 14, 1811.

15 With the issue of this date, the title of the Public Advertiser (daily) is changed to American Patriot, and Public Advertiser.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 483; Early Newspapers, II: 427. See Ap 20, 1812.

19 An "old obtrusive building" is removed "from the scite at the head of Agustus-street, near the alms house," and there is thus formed "a beautiful space, which is already decorated with every requisite for a growing park."—Am. Patriot, Ag 19, 1811.

" The common council authorises the street commissioner and superintendent of repairs "to cause the Old Canal in Canal Street to be kept open, if they judge it proper."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 682. See also ibid., VI: 707.

21 "Thanks are certainly due to the proprietors who keep the Flag-Staff on the Battery, for their assiduity to render it a pleasant place of innocent amusement during these warm summer evenings. Many thousands of Gentlemen and Ladies resorted to the Battery last evening, and were highly delighted by the performance of an excellent Band of Martial Music, accompanied with fire-works. A number of rockets were set out from the Flag-Staff, and by a gentle breeze from S. E. were carried in a direction across the North River, and produced the most pleasing effect."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 21, 1811. See also Janvier, In Old N. Y., 239. See, further, Ap 1, 1812.

28 The British letter-of-marque "Tottenham" is brought into New York Harbour as a prize by the French privateer "Duke of Dantzic."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 28 and 29, 1811.

Sept. 2 The common council resolves "that the Building Committee be requested to designate the rooms in the New City Hall for the several offices of the Corporation and of the State and report thereon to the Board."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 696.

5 The Manhattan Society celebrates its first anniversary. After forming in line in front of their "Great Wigwam" in the Bowery, the society parades down the Bowery and Chatham St. to the Park, around the Park, up Broadway, down Chamber St. and up Greenwich St. to the State Prison. After visiting the prison, the procession moved along Sandy Hill and Stuyvesant St. to "Brandy-muley Point." Here James Elliot delivered an address, and after a sham battle, the society dined and drank toasts.—Pub. Adv., S 10, 1811.

9 Two English frigates (one the "Guerrière") and a brig are cruising off New York Harbour. "Their declared purpose is to keep a look out for the French privateers which swarm on the American coasts and take shelter and refit in our harbours."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 9, 1811.

Sept. 9 "A Watchman" writes to one of the papers: "This harbor is intended to be defended by several strong, and I believe well constructed, batteries and towers—two or three of them are nearly completed, and have their guns mounted; and I presume, if manned, would present such a powerful barrier to an enemy approaching the city, as to dispose them to advance with great caution. But alas! the improvidence of our government has never been more clearly discovered, than it has respecting these works—the Water Battery at Staten Island, called Richmond, when all the guns are mounted, is some distance from any dwelling, and is left without any guard; what is then to prevent one of the British frigates, now lying at the Hook, from sending up one or two well armed boats with muffled oars, at night, and spiking up all the guns? The same might be done at Castle Williams, and even at the works at the foot of Duane street. It is astonishing to see with what apathy our government appear to behold our present critical situation, whilst our enemy is using every exertion to place her provinces, bordering on us, in the best possible state of defence—her troops are assembling on our frontiers, and her ships are blockading our harbors. . . . The most important work in the harbor is in the most incomplete state, and might with the greatest ease be possessed by an enemy."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 12, 1811.

13 Benjamin Waldron advertises that he has erected "a large Target in a field adjoining his garden, situated in Stuyvesant-street, near the two mile stone, Bowery. Any number of gentlemen, civil or military, may have the use of this Field and Target gratis: likewise he can furnish them with Liquors. . . ." Waldron's place is called the "Sign of the Noah's Ark."—Com. Adv., S 13, 1811.

18 An advertisement reads: "Hoboken Steamboat.—Mr. Godwin respectfully acquaints the citizens of New York and the public at large, that he has commenced running a steamboat on the Hoboken Ferry, of large and convenient size, and capable of affording accommodation in a very extensive degree. The boat moves with uncommon speed and facility, and starts from the usual ferry stairs, at the Corporation wharf, foot of Vesey Street, New York, where passage may be taken at any hour of the day."—Columbian, S 18, 1811. This was "the first announcement of a steam ferry boat."—Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City, 355. On Sept. 30, the common council accepted an invitation from John Stevens to inspect the new steamboat, and on Oct. 14 the members who "crossed the river in the Hoboken Steam ferry boat" expressed "their approbation of the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 714, 723, 731. See also De Voe, Market Book, 194. See Je 7, 1813.

27 A New Yorker, in a communication to one of the papers, describes an experiment he performed, "in the rear of Mr. Lispenard's house," to illustrate a "new method of blowing rocks with powder."—Repertory (Boston), O 22, 1811 (in the archives of the Am. Institute, N. Y.).

30 A New Yorker writes to one of the papers that, although Philadelphia is "allowed to be nearly the same size as New York," it employs only about 40 watchmen who also act as lamplighters and receive about $10,000 a year, whereas New York has 150 men employed as watchmen only, and pays them from $45,000 to $50,000 per annum.—Merc. Adv., S 30, 1811.

" The common council appoints a committee "to procure suitable furniture for the Common Council Chamber in the New City Hall."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 721.

Oct. 2 The "new fort erected on the lower point of Staten Island, at the Narrows" is opened "under the designation of Fort Hudson."—Aurora Gen. Adv. (Phila.), O 7, 1811.

7 Mayor Clinton informs the common council that "a dangerous fever" prevails in the bridewell and some of the sick have been sent to the marine hospital on Staten Island. He adds that it is necessary to cleanse and ventilate the bridewell, and the corporation authorises the board of health to take measures "for remedying the evils complained of and for the preservation of the health of the city."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 722.

14 The common council directs the street commissioner to open "the ancient drain through what are called Lispenards meadows to the Hudson River."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 732.

16 "The deputation of the seven Indian Chiefs of the Ottoway Tribe, under the direction of Dr. Le Baron, have arrived here from Washington, having settled a treaty with the United States—they leave this [city] on Wednesday [Oct. 18]. We understand they 1811 O 16 will attend the Theatre to night, dressed in their national costume." —N. Y. Eve. Post, O 16, 1811.

17 The 1st, 2d, and 3d Regiments of Gen. Morton's brigade and the troop of horse artillery are reviewed on the Battery by Gov. Tompkins and Gen. Stevens. "Their firings and evolutions were performed in a style that reflected the highest honour on both officers and men."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 18, 1811.

28 The common council passes the following resolution: "Whereas it has been represented to the Common Council that sundry persons owners & proprietors of Great Barn Island under a pretence of having power from the Legislature of the State of New York to erect a Bridge across Haerlem river & to keep the same in repair, have in part filled up the Channel with Stone and are now actually engaged in extending such nuisance & which it is apprehended will greatly increase the Current of the East river & injure the navigation thereof, for prevention of which Resolved that his Honor the Mayor be authorized & requested to cause such coercive measures to be taken as he may deem proper & sufficient to prevent the Channel of Haerlem river from being further obstructed except so far as may be actually necessary for the purpose of repairing the said Bridge."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 737, 741. See also ibid., VI: 750.

" A general committee of surveys is requested to take charge of the stone monuments marking the streets on the island, and see that they are not injured.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 741.

Nov. 4 The vestry of Trinity Church approves a report which prescribes terms for the separation of the congregation of St. George's Chapel, which will become incorporated as "the Rector, Church Wardens and Vestrymen of St. George's Church in The City of New York."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See N 23.

" Gunning in the neighbourhood of Greenwich Village is complained of.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 743.

" "It having been represented to the Board that a very considerable number of the Maps of the City remain unsold," it is referred to the comptroller and clerk of the board "to sell them to the best advantage" that they can.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 744. The Goerck-Mangin Map (see Pl. 70, Vol. I) is the one referred to.

" Amos Corning, city surveyor, makes a plan of a proposed sewer from Pearl St. through Collect and Canal Sts.—See original (map No. 155), in bureau of topography, borough president's office, Municipal Bldg. Another plan, filed in the same place as map No. 161, shows a sewer in Canal St. between Collect St. and the Hudson River. This is endorsed "Built 1811" and "Canal Street ditch."

13 Free School No. 2, in Henry St., is opened to pupils.—Com. Adv., My 6, 1812. See also L. M. R. K., III: 941.

16 William Bridges publishes an engraving of the Randel Survey (or Commissioners' Map), bearing copyright date of Nov. 16, 1811. It is reproduced and described as Pl. 80-b, Vol. III. The steps which led to the making of this map appear in the following brief history of his connection with the city as surveyor. He was appointed city surveyor May 19, 1806 (q. v.). His map-making began at this early period. Four years prior to the publication of the so-called Bridges Map, an advertisement appeared in the Eve. Post of Sept. 22, 1807 (q. v.), announcing: "This day is published by Isaac Riley and for sale by Brisban and Brannan, City Hotel, Broadway, a plan of the City of New York, with the recent and intended improvements.—Drawn from official survey, by William Bridges, City Surveyer. Either in sheets, mounted on rollers, or in cases for the pocket." On March 7, 1808 (q. v.), for reasons not stated in the minutes, he was dismissed from office. One year later, April 10, 1809 (q. v.), he petitioned the common council for reappointment, and the petition was granted.

On Dec. 24, 1810 (q. v.), Bridges stated in a communication to the board the terms on which he was "willing to fix permanent marked stones," and his letter was ordered to "lie on the table." On the 31st, however, John Randel, Jr., being the successful one to enter into a contract with the board to do this work of setting up monuments at the intersection of streets as laid out by the Commissioners' Map (see D 17 and 31, 1810), undertook its execution.

Bridges now arranged to act as publisher of the Commissioners' Map. On April 8, 1811 (q. v.), he petitioned the common council for the copyright of the map filed by the commissioners of streets and roads, offering to have it engraved, and to furnish the corporation with free copies. The petition was referred to the committee to whom the Commissioners' Map had been referred: Alderman Fish, Mr. Hardenbrook, and Mr. Jones. This committee, on April 29, reported favourably on the petition, and the board ordered "that they give exclusive permission to Mr. Bridges to make a copy of said Map, on condition that he furnish to this Board 60 copies free of expense, it being understood that he make compensation to Mr. Randel for certain memoranda and explanations respecting said Map," which at the request of the committee Mr. Randel was to furnish. On May 13 (q. v.), Mr. Bridges wrote to the common council requesting the loan of the Commissioners' Map to enable him to complete the copy of it, on which he was now engaged; and it was ordered that the clerk of the board lend it to him. On the same day there appeared in the Public Advertiser an advertisement entitled "Proposals for publishing," which was an announcement of his intention of placing his issue of the map on sale, "with the Field Notes and remarks, annexed to the said Map." Nov. 16

The Bridges Map was sold by subscription, the list of subscribers being printed at the end of Bridges' book, which accompanied it. This book also contains the laws of April 3, 1807, and of March 24, 1809 (regarding the duties of the commissioners), the commissioners' remarks (which originally accompanied the Commissioners' Map), and a list of references to the public buildings, churches, etc.

A year after the Bridges Map was issued, Mr. Bridges found that his privilege to reproduce the Commissioners' Map was not an exclusive one as he supposed. To use his own words, as stated in the minutes, he believed that the right to publish the map was to be "exclusively his property;" for he wrote to the common council, on Nov. 23, 1812, "that at the time the Corporation gave to him the right to print the Map of the City and Island furnished by the Commissioners of Streets and Roads, it was understood that the same was to be exclusively his property; that as a consideration therefor he agreed to furnish to the Common Council sixty maps; but that it had been discovered that as the Map was a public record exclusive privilege to publish it could not be given to him." He asked the common council, therefore, to say what number of maps he ought to furnish under such view of the case; and the subject was referred to the committee of surveys with authority to settle the matter with him as they should consider just and equitable.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 305. The committee reported on Jan. 4, 1813 (q. v.), that on information it was evident "that Mr. Bridges commenced his operations for publishing the Map under an erroneous construction of the resolution of the Board. His impression was that an exclusive right was conveyed to him, by virtue of the resolution, and when too late convinced of his mistake, he was compelled, to prevent competition, so to reduce the price," and they added that, "unless the Corporation grants him some indulgence, he must inevitably be a sufferer." The committee recommended "that, upon his producing certificates to the Comptroller of having delivered forty Maps completely mounted, and furnished in the best style, to the Board and its members," the comptroller be directed to pay him therefor as follows: $9 per map for 30 maps, and $15.50 per map for 10 maps, he to be entitled to receive back again all unmounted sheets already delivered. The minutes of Nov. 1 and 29 state that the city gave copies of the map of the city (probably the Bridges Map) to the commissioners and the purveyor of the almshouse, and to certain former members of the common council, other copies having been already given out.

John Melish (see Ag 4, 1806 and Je 30, 1810), quoting from "A Brief Topographical and Statistical Manuel," which he saw during a tour of New York State, gives a table of statistics about the different counties. This table shows that New York County has a population of 96,373, two post-offices, three looms, nine tan works, eleven distilleries, fifteen breweries, five hat factories, and two carding-machines.—Travels in the U. S. etc., II: 427. 21

"Penn" writes to one of the papers in praise of the "New-York African Free-School, which is kept in a building in Cliff-street, which, altho' not sufficiently commodious for its object, yet above one hundred children of the African race, are enjoying here, the advantages of education. . . ."—*Com. 7 A correspondent suggests that a subscription be opened in New York for erecting a statue of Washington.—Columbian, D 7, 1811. Several earlier attempts had failed (see D 15, 1802, and Ja 20, 1806), and nothing was done at this time. The matter was revived in 1821 (q.v., O 1). See also F 4, 1812.

9 Five years ago "it was considered impracticable to make a useful steam boat, and Livingston and Fulton were universally ridiculed for the attempt," but now there are 13 steamboats in the U. S.—Aurora Gen. Adv. (Phila.), D 9, 1811.

10 "Aquedneck Rhode Island Coal" is for sale at the "Coal yards of March & Van Tassel, near the bottom of Warren street, and Prince and Waterbury, a few doors above Peck-slip in Water-street."—N. Y. Morning Post, D 10, 1811. On Dec. 28, directions were given for setting the coal on fire.—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 28, 1811.

11 Gov. Tompkins writes from Albany to Alderman Peter Mesier: "It is very certain that it will not be advantageous to the state to repair the Government House in New York, and it is equally true that without very extensive repair it will soon be a reproach to the city. The corporation did once, I think, offer the state 50,000 Dollars for it, which was thought, by the Surveyor General and others here, to be an inadequate price, and indeed the amount for which some gores near Mr. Gracie's sold, evinced that the price offered by the corporation was far below the real value of the Government House and Ground. My own opinion is that £25,000 equal to $62,500 would be a proposition to which the Legislature would accede, and in case that offer shall be made I shall use my influence to induce them to accept it. It appears to me the first thing necessary to be done on your part is to have an accurate survey made of the Ground. The next thing will be to procure a Resolution of the corporation 'reciting the ruinous and disreputable appearance of the Buildings and fences.'—The provisions of the act which prevents the state from appropriating the ground to any other than public uses [see Mr 16, 1790], and the objects of the corporation in wishing to have it retained for public uses &c., and then resolving that they will give such a price in stock or money or securities for money to be applied to the purchase of Ground and the erecting a Government House at Albany or to such other publick object as the Legislature may direct. Upon my being furnished with an official copy of such Resolution with a survey annexed, I will make it the subject of a special message and doubt not that a bargain will be immediately closed."—Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, II: 382–83. The letter was laid before the common council on Dec. 30 and referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 792. See My 26, 1812.

12 Peter R. Maverick, the engraver, dies at No. 73 Liberty St.—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 13, 1811.

15 Four or five buildings on Broadway, beginning at the corner of Warren St., are destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Spectator, D 18, 1811. "A Citizen" writing on Dec. 16 praised the "activity and zeal displayed by the firemen." He added: "They have brought their system to a great degree of perfection; . . . The leathern hose which they now employ have entirely superceded the necessity of the ranks which formerly required the exertions of all the citizens, so that at present few more persons are necessary than immediately connected with the fire companies. . . ."—Com. Adv., D 19, 1811.

17 The completed fortifications at New York are described in a report to congress, made by order of the president. Briefly, these consist of:

Fort Columbus on Governor's Island, consisting of an enclosed work of masonry, comprehending four bastions and a ravelin; a brick magazine; brick barracks; and a furnace for heating balls red hot. Dec. 17

Castle Williams, a fortress on a projecting point of Governor's Island, with a bomb-proof covering, and two stone magazines; another stone magazine on that island, a brick arsenal, a wooden gun-house, and wooden barracks.

A star fort of masonry on Bedlow's Island, having a stone magazine; with barracks of brick, and a brick arsenal.

A circular battery of masonry on Ellis Island, opposite Fort Columbus, with barracks of stone and wood.

A circular battery of stone at the south-western extremity of the city (the present Castle Garden), having 28 heavy cannon mounted; two magazines and cisterns, and barracks. See L. M. R. K., III: 983.

North Battery, about a mile up the Hudson, a semi-circular work of stone, having a stone magazine, and a furnace for heating shot.—See L. M. R. K., III: 945.

A brick arsenal near the custom-house (formerly the government house), and a three-storey brick magazine.—See L. M. R. K., III: 924.

An arsenal near the junction of the Harlem branch (Eastern Post Road) and the Bloomingdale branch of the Bowery Road (see Pls. 175 and 176, Vol. III), together with a magazine, and a laboratory, all of stone and brick, and enclosed with a high wall. See L. M. R. K., III: 924.—Am. State Papers, Docs. of Congress (1832), 309–10; and the same reprinted in Man. Com. Coun. (1868), 882–83.

" . . . The militia of the city and county consist of ten regiments of infantry, one battalion of riflemen, one squadron of cavalry, three regiments of artillery, one company of flying do. and one company of veteran volunteers. The field-pieces are of brass in complete order for service, and well provided with amunition. 19

"Exclusive of these, the heavy iron pieces, mounted on travelling carriages, and the small arms and accoutrements, in the arsenal, under commissary M' Lean, are numerous and in perfect readiness, but to what amount we are not precisely informed.

"The fortifications belonging to the United States, exclusive of the forts of the Narrows, and immediately attached to the city, are as follows, and could be strengthened by almost any number of cannon at the shortest notice.

City Battery.		28 thirty-two pounders
North do.		16 do.
On Bedlow's Island.		30 twenty-fours.
On Ellis's do.		14 thirty-twos.
At Castle Williams,		26 forty-twos,
		26 thirty-twos,
	and	50 fifties
Fort Columbus		43 twenty-fours
	and	57 eighteens, besides Field Pieces
	Total	290"

—Columbian, D 19, 1811.

"Those citizens who are in the habit of walking or riding out to Corlaer's Hook or Manhattan Island, are informed, that now, by order of the corporation, both Broome and Grand-streets are opening, which make their passage extremely dangerous, particularly at night. Travellers may at least save much trouble, and perhaps life, by keeping the Bowery as far up as Delancy-street, before they cross—or, by keeping Cherry-street; both of which routes are perfectly safe, and but little farther than the dangerous passages above mentioned."—Columbian, D 20, 1811. 20

The common council pays $8 for "Cartage to bridge in Broadway."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 795. This probably was the stone bridge at Canal St.; and we may fairly assume that now it was filled in and covered up.—See descrip. of Pl. 83-b, III: 559, 562. See also Mr 16, Ag 19, and N 4, 1811. 30

The expenses in 1811 for filling the Collect Pond amounted to $2,191.18.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 472, 534, 555, 565, 599, 742, 795. "

In this year, life insurance was introduced in the U. S. by the incorporation of the Pennsylvania Company for Insurance upon Lives.—Winsor, Mem. Hist. of Boston, IV: 187. For the first life insurance company in New York City, see Mr 9, 1830. —

1812 In this year, Columbus, Ohio, was founded.—Winsor, VII: 547.

— In this year, the military company called the "New York Hussars" was organized.—Chas. S. Clark, in Eve. Post, F 26, 1916.

— In this year, Asher B. Durand was apprenticed to Peter Maverick, and, in 1817, he became his partner under the firm name of Maverick & Durand. His reputation as an engraver was established by his large plate of Trumbull's "Declaration of Independence," and, according to Stauffer, "his portrait work has never been surpassed in excellence by an American engraver." In 1836, he abandoned engraving, and soon became famous as a landscape painter.—Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 72; Dunlap, Hist. of the Arts of Design (Goodspeed ed.), III: 60–65.

— A water-colour drawing, bearing the inscription "Collect Ground Arsenal & Stone Bridge Garden Militia Drilling View from the East Side of Orange & Pump St. N. Y. 1812, No. 23. [signed] Wm. Chappel," is one of a set of 29 water-colour drawings of New York street scenes, etc., drawn by Wm. Chappel. It is reproduced and described in Vol. III, A. Pl. 14-a. The original set consisting of 29 drawings (of which two have been lost) is owned by Edw. W. C. Arnold, Esq.

— In this year, the North Battery was referred to as "Fort Nonsense" by the Com. Adv., Jl 8, 1831; and see ibid., Jl 13 and 16, 1831.

— At the beginning of 1812, all the departments of the city government had not yet removed into the new city hall, for on March 23 it was ordered "that the several offices attached to the Corporation be removed to the new City Hall in the first week of April next."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 80. On May 5, it was dedicated by the order "that the Building fronting the Park, lately erected for that purpose by the Corporation shall be the City Hall of the City of New York and that this Resolution shall be deemed to take effect from the 4^{t} Ins^{t}."—Ibid., VII: 131.

On May 11, the common council ordered that a warrant be issued in favour of the treasurer of the finance committee for $8,000 out of the first moneys received on account of the sale of the old city hall.—Ibid., VII: 141. The old hall on Wall St. was sold May 15 (Com. Adv.), and immediately demolished (M. C. C., 1784–1831, VII: 146–47, 177).

The running expenses of the new hall began with an order on May 25 that Mr. Skaats, the keeper of the building, be directed to provide fuel, and when necessary to have fires made in the common council chamber, and in the several courts and offices,—the supreme court, the oyer and terminer, sessions, mayor's court, mayor's office, street commissioner's office, jury rooms, comptroller's office, and the watch. Persons occupying the building were "requested to see the Fires carefully extinguished before they quit their offices for the day."—Ibid., VII: 155. By June 25, the expenses of the build. com. were retrenched, "so as to accommodate them as far as practicable to that economy demanded by the exigencies of the Times keeping at the same time in view the necessity of not depriving too many of the Workmen of employment."—Ibid., VII: 184–85. For a record of carpenter's time in the course of the construction of the building, see My 30, 1803.

McComb's last account-book of his financial transactions, audited by the build. com., runs from July 22, 1812, to May 1, 1815; it is on file in the present Hall of Records, "No. 367." Some of the interesting items of payments are:

1812, Sept. 17—No. 84—"By John Dixey for cutting the figure of Justice &^{c}—$310." (Regarding Dixey's work, see Dunlap's Hist. of the Arts of Design, Goodspeed ed., 1918, p. 390–91.)

1812, Nov. 2 —No. 141—"By Norris & Kain for two marble chimney pieces—$500."

1813, Mar. 12—No. 240—"By Peter Devoe ball^{e} full for cutting 8 urns—$140."

1813, Apr. 30 —No. 266—"By Alex^{r} Macomb for 2 Busts—$36."

1813, May —No. 293—"By Paulus Hedl ballence in full for Stair Railing—$1194.68."

1813, Aug. 2 —No. 356—"By Henry Hedl for five Iron Gates in front, etc.—$1069.03."

1813, Aug. 23—No. 368—"By W^{m} Green for three window Blinds for the Governor's Room—$128.93."

1813, Aug. 23 (?)—No. 369—"By Alex^{r} Willey for Lettering—$3.50."

1813, Aug. 30 (?)—No. 373—"By Jn^{o} Cugier (?) for Painting & Gilding six Window Cornices for Mayors Court Room—$30." 1812 —

1813, Sept. 5—No. 475—"By Charles Catten for Modle for the City Arms—$100."

1813, Oct. 7—No. 934—"By Ward & Talman in full for Iron Castings for the principal Stairs—$309.31."

1813, Oct. 22—No. 399—"By Ja^{s} B. Durand for 11 pieces of moreens for furnishing Supreme Court Room—$297."

1813, Nov. 15—No. 406—"By Donald Malcolm for 141 Yards Carpet and 82 Yd^{s} Binding for Supreme Court—$272.07."

1814, Feb. 28—No. 430—"By Jn^{o} Dixey for 10 Window ornaments—$130."

The national debt amounts to $45,035,123.70.—Am. State Papers, IX: 23. Jan. 1

"We are authorised to state, for the satisfaction of those who frequent the [Park] Theatre, that there are now six doors, which open from the avenue that leads directly from the boxes into the street. Two of those doors have been recently made. These openings are such as to preclude all possibility of the audience being prevented from retiring in case of accident."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 2, 1812. See also Com. Adv., Ja 8, 1812. 2

A New Yorker writes to a correspondent in Boston: "Business is now brisk here. The late arrivals from England have bro't large orders for wheat, flaxseed, ashes, &c. Ashes have taken a start, from 88 to 130 dols. per ton, and the article of logwood has risen from 40 to 80 dols. per ton, bought up for the Russian markets. 4

"Our shipments to France are also very numerous; 40 vessels have gone the last month—we now only need the permission of Congress to import from England, and our Commerce will once more flourish."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 13, 1812.

A motion that the common council adjourn to meet at the old city hall is lost by a vote of 5 to 15, and the board then resolves to hold its next meeting at the almshouse.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 798–99. See Ja 17. 6

Announcement is made that "Sealed proposals will be received till the 22d. inst. for renting for the term of one, or three years, from the first of May next, the whole of the building called Tammany Hall [see My 13, 1811], excepting the offices fronting on Nassau-street, and the Lodge Room in the attic story, and reserving to the Society the use of the large room in the second story, on each Monday evening, on the 12th day of May, on the 4th day of July, and on the 25th day of November, in every year. . . ."—Columbian, Ja 6, 1812. See My 12 and Jl 14. "

A correspondent, criticizing a pamphlet on the New York police, suggests certain reforms, one being that the city watch instead of sitting in "snug boxes" should be provided with warm caps and coats and keep in constant motion.—N. Y. Morn. Post, Ja 8, 1812. 8

"A Copy of the certificate of the Incorporation of S^{t} George's Church in the City of New York as a seperate church," is presented and read at a meeting of Trinity vestry.—Trin. Min. (MS.). 9

"An application was presented to the board from the Fire Company belonging to Engine Number 24, asking permission to erect an Engine House in the burial Grounds of Trinity Church. Thereupon ordered that the said Company be permitted, . . . to erect an Engine House . . . at the Corner formed by the Intersection of Broad Way and Rector Street. . . ." This was found to be impossible because of the graves, and it was ordered that it be placed in St. Paul's churchyard.—Ibid.

President Madison communicates to congress a letter from the British minister to the secretary of state and the secretary's answer, adding: "The continued evidence afforded by this correspondence of the hostile policy of the British Government against our national rights, strengthens the considerations recommending and urging the preparation of adequate means for maintaining them."—Annals of Cong., 12th cong., 1st sess., 795. 16

The common council receives a petition from the proprietors of the lots in Hamilton Square, stating that, when they bought these lots (see 1807) they were to be of a certain size, and bounded by certain streets of a certain width, a certain square being reserved for the sole and private use of the purchasers and future owners of the lots; that the Commissioners' Map changes this plan, the size and position of their lots in reference to the streets being different, and that a public square is laid out on the premises, instead of a private one. They demand return of the purchase 17

1812 Jan. 17 money. The council refers the petition to a committee, together with others previously presented to the board (Sept. 2, 1811) on the subject of ground reserved in the Commissioners' Map for a "Parade" and a square called Union Place.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 2–3. See F 17, 1812 and D 6, 1813.

" The common council orders an ordinance drafted for licensing sweeps and protecting the boys employed by them. The matter was brought to the attention of the board by the Manumission Society.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 4.

" The common council votes that when they adjourn it be to meet at the new city hall.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 6. At the board meeting in the new city hall, three days later, the danger of having fires therein, on account of the unfinished condition of the building and the presence of much combustible material, was discussed. As a matter of precaution, it was moved that the next meeting be held in the old city hall, but this was negatived.—Ibid., VII: 10–11.

27 It becomes possible for the common council to allow the number of fire buckets, which each house must keep, to be reduced, but it is not considered best to do away with them altogether. Reasons for the reduction are given in the following extracts from a committee report: "That not withstanding great facility in conveying water for the extinguishment of fires has been experienced by the application of Leaders from one engine to another, yet your Committee are of opinion cases may occur still in the interior of the City, where by a speady collection of Buckets the fire might be extinguished ere the line by Engines & leaders could be formed, . . . perhaps it would be adviseable with a view to relieve the Citizens of this burthen as far as practicable to permit the number of Buckets . . . to be kept in each house to be reduced not more than one third."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 14.

Feb. 4 In a letter to Assemblyman Abraham Van Vechten, Gov. Tompkins writes: "Arsenals have been built at the following places, New York, Albany, Elizabeth Town Essex County, Plattsburgh, Rome, Watertown, Onondaga, Canandaigua and one preparing at Batavia. We have an excellent Powder Magazine on York Island, a beautiful & substantial Bomb proof Magazine near the Fortifications at the Narrows, and a new and capacious one near this City. . . .

". . . The works at the Narrows have been completed for one hundred & ten Guns. But there is no provision for manning the works or for guarding them against injury by mischievous persons of the neighbourhood or by the most inconsiderable number of an Enemy or intended enemy. Power ought to be given to apply to the United States to garrison the works, and in case of their refusal, to place a detachment of Militia, there . . . Possession of the Fortifications & Ground appurtenant at the Narrows ought to be declared to be in the Governor or some other Public Officer, to simplify the Remedy for the numberless tresspasses which are committed upon it. . . ."—Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, II: 459–67.

" An advertisement reads: "To the admirers of the fine arts, is offered for exhibition, at No. 190 William-street, specimens of elegant writings, poetry, and paintings executed on a plan of a Monument of the Illustrious Washington, the only thing of the kind ever done in America. The plan represents a marble monument fifteen feet high, the pedestal is 8 feet, on the front of which is an appropriate inscription in writing inscribed to the memory of the American Fabius, by Doctor Isaac Ball, of this city.—The sides consist of the figures of Faith, Fame, and the Goddess of Liberty, recording the deeds of her hero.—Also, the Genius of America, weeping over the grave of the departed hero with appropriate verses, composed by a lady in this city, much admired for her poetical productions.

"The pyramid consists of a full length portrait of the friend and father of his country, holding in his hand his farewell address of the 17th of September, 1796. The whole executed with the pen, by Mr. George Thresher, professor of penmanship of this city."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 4, 1812.

6 Congress authorises the president "to accept and organize certain Volunteer and Military Corps," and appropriates $1,000,000 to defray the expenses thereof.—Annals of Cong., 12th cong., 1st sess., 2235–37.

10 The "very considerable increase of the city of New York" causes the common council to draft a bill to be presented to the legislature providing for the extension of the limits within which "Dwelling Houses, Store Houses, and other buildings are required to be constructed with Stone or Brick." The new fire limits are to cover the section "lying to the northward of the point of the Battery and included between the said point of the Battery and a line beginning upon the East River opposite Montgomery Street, thence through Montgomery Street to Cherry Street, thence down Cherry Street to Roosevelt Street thence thro' Roosevelt Street to Chatham Street, thence down Chatham Street to Chambers Street & thence thro' Chambers Street to Broadway, thence up Broadway to Canal Street thence commencing again at Chambers Street & running to Hudsons River including also the Lots of Ground on the Northerly & Easterly sides of the said Streets . . . & including also the lots of ground fronting on both sides of the Broadway between Chamber Street & Canal Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 24–25. The law was passed by the legislature on June 1.—Laws of N. Y. (1812), chap. 72. Feb. 10

" The common council agrees that Hudson or Bear Market be demolished and that a new market (Washington) be erected on the site of the old Corporation Basin. This had been contemplated as early as July 1, 1805 (q. v.), but was not carried out at that time because the leases of some of the lots proposed to be used or sold had a long time to run. These leases, however, will expire on May 1, 1813.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 29–31. For the exact location of the new market see Je 1.

17 The committee appointed to consider the proposal to reduce the size of some of the public squares, as laid down on the Commissioners' Map, reports as follows: 1, "Grand Parade," which contains 270 to 280 acres, may be reduced to one-half of its present size or less and still be large enough for a parade ground. 2, "Union Place," which is at the angle formed by the junction of the Bowery Road and Broadway, should be "discontinued," and it is argued that this will render the continuance of Broadway beyond "Union Place," as laid down in the said map, altogether unnecessary; whereas it would be necessary (should Broadway be extended in the manner laid down upon the map) to take a very considerable quantity of valuable ground, and several expensive buildings; and the discontinuance of Union Place would relieve the corporation from "very heavy and unnecessary expense." "Hamilton Square," having been settled and agreed upon by the corporation before the act for the appointment of the commissioners was passed (see Mr 30, 1807), it is recommended that in other respects the original plan be carried out and that, to remove all doubts, application be made to the legislature for confirmation of the plan. All of these three provisions were separately passed by vote of the common council on March 2. It was also voted that the application to the legislature should embrace an application for power to reduce or discontinue at the discretion of the corporation the Market Place bounding on the East River, as laid down by the commissioners.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 40–43, 56–57, 61–62, 68–69. See Ja 17, 1812, and D 6, 1813.

19 "A petition to the legislature is now handing about this city (rather secretly) to obtain for the benefit of a few individuals and to the injury of the manufacturing interests of the state, an exclusive privilege of lighting cities and manufactures with Gas for 14 years . . . it is to be hoped, that the legislature will be on the alert, and not grant an exclusive right to what has long been known in Europe, and used with great benefit, in most of the large establishments for manufactures in England."—Columbian, F 19, 1812. A gas company was not chartered in New York until March 26, 1823 (q. v.).

" Communications printed in a newspaper of this day, and on Feb. 21, 26, and March 2, show that inhabitants of Harlem find Ward's Bridge over the Harlem River (see F 20, 1807) a nuisance; they desire its removal by act of the legislature, and if another one is built that it be one "of arches or piles."—Columbian, F 19, 21, 26; Mr 2, 1812.

24 John Stevens addresses to the canal commissioners a memoir recommending that a railway be constructed between Lake Erie and Albany in place of the Erie Canal. The commissioners reported adversely on the project, considering it too expensive and too impracticable. In May, Stevens published his correspondence with the commissioners under the title Documents tending to prove the superior advantages of Rail-Ways and Steam-Carriages over Canal Navigation (N. Y., 1812). This was the first book printed in America on the subject of railroads. There is a copy in N. Y. P. L.

1812 Mar. 2 The common council agrees to the following resolution: "That the Street Commissioner and Comptroller lay before the Board at the next meeting a Map of the Collect Lots belonging to the Corporation . . . Also, a Map of the Inclenberg property laid out into suitable lots agreably to the new regulation of Streets & Avenues—Likewise of such portions of Common Lands as are not already disposed of; together with a Map of Brooklyn lots near the Old Ferry. And also a description of the lots of ground corner of Pearl & State Streets near the Battery occupied by John S. Delamater, the ground on Chatham Street adjoining the Free School, and the ground at the Old City Hall." It is also ordered that a report be made as to the most suitable time and manner for the sale of above property, together with other scattering lots.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 54–55.

9 President Madison lays before congress certain documents proving that, "at a recent period, whilst the United States, notwithstanding the wrongs sustained by them, ceased not to observe the laws of peace and neutrality towards Great Britain, and in the midst of amicable professions and negotiations on the part of the British Government, through its public Minister here, a secret agent of that Government was employed in certain States, more especially at the seat of Government in Massachusetts, in fomenting disaffection to the constituted authorities of the nation, and in intrigues with the disaffected, for the purpose of bringing about resistance to the laws, and eventually, in concert with a British force, of destroying the Union, and forming the eastern part thereof into a political connexion with Great Britain."—Annals of Cong., 12th cong., 1st sess., 165.

" The common council orders that the clerk of the board procure a book in which to enter ordinances when passed. This shall be considered the "Book of Record of the Ordinances and Laws of the Corporation of the City of New York."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 58.

12 At a meeting of Trinity vestry, "Mr Barrow on behalf of the Committee of leases" presents "a plan of the new burial Ground in Hudson Street, . . ."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

At the same meeting, the vestry resolves to supply St. John's Chapel with an organ.—Ibid. In the latter part of 1813, the organ was captured by the British ship "Plantagenet" off Sandy Hook. It was ransomed for $2,000, and was brought up to the city on Dec. 11.—Com. Adv., D 11, 1813. Regarding St. John's, see also 14th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1909), 72–80.

13 The "Register's Office in and for the City and County of New York" is established by act of the legislature.—Laws of N. Y. (1812), chap. 27. See My 1.

14 A petition to the legislature seeks permission to erect a telegraph on "that part of York Island reserved in the map of the comrs . . . as an observatory and grand reservoir." The advantages of the situation are described.—From the original MS., in metal file No. 47, city clerk's record-room. The subject is not entered in the M. C. C.

16 The common council receives from the corporation counsel "a Deed from Samuel Verplanck for the right of Way to the East side of the Lot at the Old City Hall." The board directs that it be recorded and filed in the comptroller's office.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 68.

18 In accordance with the report of the committee on amendments to the "Laws for the suppression of Vice and Immorality," the common council orders a bill prepared for presentment to the legislature. Some of the "evil practices" on Sunday referred to for correction are the "Grocery and Fruit Stores, Public Gardens and Taverns, kept open for the reception of Company and Customers; Hackney Coaches, & other carriages; and Horse riding for pleasure, Barbers Shops open, marketing for Fish and Meat, Skating[,] Ball playing, and other plays by Boys and Men, and even Horse-racing. . . . that an Editor and his Patrons can be found hardy enough to print and support a Sunday Newspaper, is a reflexion, at which the mind of morality cannot but recoil." Drunkenness, gambling, cockfighting, shuffle-board, billiards, brothels, houses of seduction, and the use by children of "odious imprecations and obscene language" are other vices which cry for betterment.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 71–76.

On March 30, an appeal to the public was made when a resolution was agreed to respectfully requesting the clergy of the city, as far as this measure may coincide with their sentiments, "to inculcate in their hearers, the propriety and public importance of desisting from and discountenancing the practise of purchasing and selling groceries or other articles on the first day of the Week called Sunday—And also to solicit parents and others to use their influence in suppressing and opposing the prevailing vices of the day." The report of the committee was also ordered printed in the newspapers employed by the corporation.—Ibid., VII: 93. See Je 8. Mar. 18

Hon. Samuel L. Mitchill sends a communication to the recorder, which is read in the council meeting, urging that the city be placed "in a state of defence," by reason of "the present aspect of public affairs." It is ordered referred to the committee of defence.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 77. 23

It is agreed by the board that the "several Offices attached to the Corporation be removed to the New City Hall in the first Week of April next."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 80. "

The common council decides to sell in fee at auction at the old city hall on Wednesday, the 15th of April at 12 o'clock, the old city hall, the lots on which it stands, and the adjacent lots, upon condition that the building be delivered to the purchaser on the first day of May next, that he cause the same to be removed by the first day of July next, and that possession of the lots be delivered to the purchaser by the first day of July next. "

It is also directed that in the conditions of sale of the old city hall a reservation be made of such parts of the building as might be useful in other buildings now being erected by the corporation if such reservations would not injure the sale of the property.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 80–81. Advertisements of the intended sale appeared in N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Mr 26; Columbian, Mr 27; N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 31, 1812. Because of the proposed widening of Nassau St., the finance committee was authorised, on April 6 (q. v.) to postpone the sale of the ground where the old city hall stands.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 101. On April 20 (q. v.), the sale of the ground on which the old city hall stands was postponed for a fortnight from the 22nd on account of a bill pending in congress, authorising the purchase of the ground as a site for a custom-house.—Ibid., VII: 117. A further postponement was made May 5, when the old city hall, the lots on which it stood, and those adjacent were ordered sold at auction on the 13th (q. v.), unless proposals for the purchase of the same were made to the finance committee previous to the next meeting of the board.—Ibid., VII: 131–32; Columbian, My 6, 1812.

Gov. Tompkins resorts to the extraordinary expedient of using his constitutional authority to prorogue the legislature rather than allow it to pass, by corrupt means, the bill to charter the Bank of America. The bank was to be in New York City.—N. Y. Spectator, Ap 4, 1812; Hammond, Hist. of Political Parties in the State of N. Y., I: 309; Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., III: 211–12. See Je 2. 27

In a letter (to some one not named in the letter itself) Robt. Fulton defines his right to be considered the real inventor of the steamboat. The principal part of the letter reads: 28

"New York, March 28, 1812.

"Dear Sir:

". . . I have always informed you that on the discovery of the power, proportions and velocities of the parts of the machinery depended the success of steamboats, and that I was the first who discovered, or what is commonly called, invented them, and proved their truth by practice.

"In developing the laws of nature as connected with steamboats lies the merit of my invention. There is perhaps some merit in making a good combination of machinery and the application of principles, but the man who thinks he has invented steamboats, useful steamboats such as I have built, merely because he has thought of boats, steam engines and wheels, or paddles, or chains, or oars combined, is totally mistaken. He might as well say he could have written a poem like the Columbiad because he knew all the letters and had some thoughts on versification.

"Without first discovering the principles, no man could have made a useful steamboat, one to run 4½ or 5 miles an hour, but by chance.

"No one has ever given any rule, no one ever attained 4½ or 5 miles an hour, and hence I say no one before me invented steamboats, but all failed.

"And now I have invented them, and driven them by steam six miles an hour.

"Not more than three persons, myself included, know the principles.

"The man who cannot now tell the power necessary to drive a

1812 Mar. 28 given boat 10 miles an hour in still water, could not have told the power necessary to drive her 5 miles an hour, until he had seen the powers in my boats, and now that he sees the powers and can copy them, he cannot divide them and tell where they are lost, or well applied, or why so much power is applied.

"Hence I can prove that before my success there was no experiment, no patent, nothing written or printed which gave any idea of a successful steamboat or hope of success, and for this reason considered impracticable. Any common mechanician, by almost any application of steam, can make a boat go 3 miles an hour; 4 require good works; 4½ or 5, a knowledge of principles. Your boat, you say, is 120 feet long, 15 beam to draw two feet of water, to which you are giving a 40 horse power to go 10 miles an hour, to win your bet of Mr. Gwin. You will, I know, be astonished when I tell you that 160 horse power is required to drive her 10 miles an hour. An engine of this power could not be put in the boat. It is therefore impracticable. I tell you this fact because I know the science. You will, of course, not request me to let you into my secret until all acknowledge that in this subject I am first, and my claims to priority be substantiated by law.

"Yours respectfully,

"R. Fulton."

30 Because "odium" attaches to them as inhabitants of Bedlow Street, "owing to the disorderly Conduct of some of their neighbors," and this has caused a depreciation in the value of their property, these inhabitants petition the common council to change the name of the street.—From the original petition (MS.), in metal file No. 47, city clerk's record-room. The name is changed to Bancker St. accordingly, and the proper change made in the "Direction boards."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 91. Later, it became Madison St.—L. M. R. K., III: 993, 1005.

Apr. 1 "A writer under the signature of 'A Citizen,' in the Mercantile Advertiser, calls the attention of the public to the Old City Hall, which is advertised to be sold at Auction on the 15th inst. He recommends that it be purchased for the purpose of Converting [it] into an Exchange, for the accommodation of the Merchants, and others. Now we would suggest to this writer the impropriety of the measure.—The Hall is considered in its present situation as a very great nuisance, as it projects about thirty feet into Wall-street, and almost stops up the entrance into Nassau-street. The Corporation has done well in ordering its removal, as it will tend to beautify the handsomest street in the City. If a company could be formed to purchase the Lots which are to be sold at the same time, for the purpose of building an Exchange, we shall heartily approve of it."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ap 1, 1812. The old city hall was sold on May 13 (q.v.).

" "The Proprietors of the Flag Staff respectfully inform the Ladies and Gentlemen of this city who may visit this delightful and healthy retreat, which for prospect and salubrious air has not its equal in any city of the union, that every exertion has been made by them to provide a choice assortment of fruit and refreshments in order to render the walk a still greater source of comfort and accommodation to the citizens."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 1, 1812. On April 2, they announced that "the subscription Book for the Spy Glass" was ready for signatures.—N. Y. Morn. Post, Ap 2, 1812. See also Janvier, In Old N. Y., 239.

2 The "afflictive intelligence" that congress intends to pass another embargo act reaches New York.—N. Y. Spectator, Ap 4, 1812. The act was passed on April 4 (q.v.). On April 7 it was stated: "Since the News of the projected Embargo reached this city . . . Seventy Vessels have cleared from our Custom House for foreign ports . . . all of them are beyond the Hook. . . .

"These vessels probably contain more than twenty thousand tons of surplus American produce."—Ibid., Ap 8, 1812. Another New York paper said that, "had the city been enveloped in flames. property could not have been moved off with greater expedition, From the morning of the 2d of April until the evening of the 4th forty-eight vessels cleared from the port of New York."—Guernsey, N. Y. City & Vicinity during the War of 1812–15, I: 16.

" Gov. Tompkins writes to William Irving: "There are two things which weigh upon my mind in relation to the Southern District. The one is the dread which I entertain of having Federal Senators returned at the next election in consequence of the schisms which appear to prevail about the right of nominations; and the other is my anxiety to have the City of New York regain its Republican character & send a Republican representation to the Assembly. The eyes of our friends in every part of the State are directed to New York, and their universal wish and prayer is that the spirit of discord may be charmed down or be merged in the importance of the present crisis."—Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, II: 523–24.

6 An ordinance presented to the common council for building a bulkhead across and filling in Cortlandt St. slip is passed and assessors are appointed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 99.

" Arrangements are made by the common council for widening Nassau St. 22 ft. on the east side between Wall and Cedar Sts. The committee recommending this action reports: "The Application for widening Nassau Street presents in the opinion of your Committee a case of as much importance as can perhaps arise in relation to improving Streets. The present arrangement of that part of the Town is confined, inconvenient and dangerous, and as the Corporation when making a disposition of the ground on which the old City Hall stands can comparatively with little expense remove these difficulties and render this street both elegant and commodious. . . . This Street when properly arranged will open from the Exchange Slip through the center of the Town and parallel with Broad Way a spacious and elegant communication to the New City Hall. It is the only street which presents similar advantages, and if improved from time to time as circumstances warrant will for convenience be estimated among our principal streets."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 100–1. See also ibid., VII: 351.

" It is resolved by the common council "That the street commissioner cause the ditch from Lispenard's Meadows to Hudson river to be cleared out, and that the superintendant of Repairs be directed to have the Drain across Greenwich enlarged to a capacity sufficient to carry off the waters that run into said meadows."—From original MS. of the resolution, in metal file No. 39, city clerk's record-room; M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 102. See Je 19.

9 A Washington editorial says: "That an important crisis has arrived in the U. States is seen by every one: that it has been unavoidable is equally certain: and that it may be made to terminate with honor and advantage to Republican government, cannot admit of doubt. . . .

"G. Britain took the lead in the career of violence and injustice. Every stage of the present war has been marked by some act which evinced the distinguished hostility of her government to this country. She has impressed our seamen from on board our own vessels, and held them in long and oppressive bondage. She has intercepted our lawful trade with nations with whom we were at peace. She has violated our jurisdiction; insulted us on our coast and in our harbors, and finally usurped the absolute dominion of the sea, forbidding our commerce with all nations with whom it does not suit her to allow it, and allowing it to none with whom she is not herself permitted to trade. . . .

"France has exhibited, in her conduct towards neutral powers, the counterpart to this disgusting picture; . . . If she has done less harm at sea, it was because her means were inferior to those of her rival. She declared the British Islands and all the British dominions in a state of blockade, when she had not a single ship on the ocean: . . . By her Rambouillet, her Bayonne and other decrees, she has seized and confiscated all the vessels of the U. States and their cargoes that were in port. . . .

". . . this crisis . . . has been forced on us by the voice of the whole American people, who, deeply incensed at these wrongs, have called on their government for redress."—National Intelligencer (Wash.), Ap 9, 1812. " The frigates "President" and "Essex" leave their anchorage in the North River and proceed to the Watering Place. As they pass, they fire seven shot at Castle Williams "for the purpose of trying her strength," and five balls hit the castle and the other two strike the foundation. " "It appearing desirable for the Mercantile Interest of this City to have a Custom-House in a part more convenient for Business than the present, and it being probable that the corporation will be willing to dispose of the Scite of the Old City Hall for that object, a meeting of the Merchants is invited at the Tontine Coffee House, this day at 12 o'clock, to consider on the most fair mode of carrying such a measure into operation. . . ."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ap 20, 1812.

A petition to the common council, with the name of John Jacob Astor heading the subscribers, is prepared, requesting that body to postpone "for a fortnight" the sale of the old city hall property. The reason offered is that "a bill is now before Congress authorising the purchase of the ground on which the Old City Hall now stands for the purpose of erecting thereon a Custom House."—Original petition in city clerk's record-room; M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 117. For the sale of the property at auction, see My 13. Its purchase from private parties after a new building had displaced old "Federal Hall" was finally consummated on D 2, 1816 (q.v.).

" The common council agrees to a recommendation that $225 be granted the "French Committee of Charity" for aid in administering their work. They relieve about ninety paupers annually.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 113–14.

" Anthony L. Bleecker's offer to cede Bleecker St. extending from Broadway to Bowery Lane, on condition that it be left as a public street, is accepted.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 108, 117.

24 Upon learning of the death of Vice-Pres. George Clinton, the common council immediately adopts resolutions of sorrow and appoints a committee "to devise and report a Plan for such public demonstration of regret and sorrow as in their opinion this late national bereeavement requires."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 121. The arrangements were agreed to on May 11.—Ibid., VII: 138–39. The ceremonies took place on May 19 (q.v.).

" A newspaper editorial reads: "We have received several communications, complaining bitterly of the want of water; stating that the Charter of the Manhattan Company ought to be dissolved, in consequence of the continued violation of the contract for several years past; and inviting all aggrieved citizens to meet on Monday Evening next at 8 o'clock at Kent's Hotel in Broad-street. The object of the Meeting is to prepare a statement of facts, in the form of a Petition, to be laid before the Legislature at the session in May."—Com. Adv., Ap 14 and 25, 1812. 27 The common council permits the managers of the "State Lottery" to use a room in the old city hall on Wall St. until the building is sold.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 122. This was the last recorded use to which the building was put; as the city offices had already been removed to the new city hall.—See Ag 12, S 2, et seq. 1811, and summary under My 26, 1803. It was sold on May 13 (q.v.).

May 1 The office of "Register of Deeds" (see Mr 13) opens in the city hall.—Donegan, Office of the Register. Three Years' Report, 1918–20, 46. The fact that the office is shown on Pl. 75, Vol. I, indicates that the designations were added to the plan at a considerably later period than its drawing in 1803.

5 "A Stockholder" writes to one of the papers: "It is high time that there was some steps taken to compel the Manhattan Company to supply this city with good and wholesome water. Agreeably to their charter the Recorder is duly to see that the company does supply the inhabitants with water.—The water works are farmed out to a contractor. For five weeks we have received no water, and the collectors call and insult the inhabitants for not giving them the money for water which they do not receive. It is abominable indeed for the city to be thus trifled with and abused by the company."—Com. Adv., My 5, 1812. See Ap 25 and O 28.

" The new city hall is dedicated, and the common council passes the following resolution: "Resolved and it is hereby declared that the Building fronting the Park lately erected for that purpose by the Corporation shall be the City Hall of the City of New York and that this Resolution shall be deemed to take effect from the 4th Inst."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 131. The original draft of the resolution is in metal file No. 39, city clerk's record-room. For items regarding the building of the new city hall, see Mr 24, 1800, and My 26, 1803 with cross-references there given.

" The common council orders that the superfluous furniture of the old city hall be sold at auction, under the direction of the finance committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 132.

11 The common council, in response to a petition of April 27, appropriates $200 to Charles Gobert to enable him to complete models of machines which he conceives will be useful for blowing up ships in the harbour.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 140.

12 "Instead of that alacrity with which every man in the United States was to turn out, as a volunteer, to fight Great Britain, as triumphantly foretold by the administration prints, we hear of nothing but lamentations and dissatisfaction from every militia man who has been so fortunate as to draw a prize, as it is called, by which he becomes liable to be called on any moment to join the detachment of thirteen thousand men that make up the quota of this State."—Hist. Mag. (1864), 147, citing N. Y. Eve. Post, My 12, 1812.

" The "new and commodious building erected by the Society of Tammany, at the corner of Nassau and Frankfort-streets, opposite the Park" (see My 13, 1811, and Ja 6, 1812), is taken possession of "in a formal and appropriate manner, by the Society, which celebrated their 23d annual festival in the spacious hall provided for that purpose in the building. The building committee . . . delivered the keys to the grand sachem, and the insignia and banners of the order were deposited in their new premises, denominated the Great Wigwam No. 1. The society formed at the old wigwam and marched in grand parade round and through the park to their new quarters. . . ."—Columbian, My 15, 1812. See Jl 14.

13 The old city hall building is sold (see Ap 1 and 20) at auction

1812 May 13 for $425, and one of the lots on which it stands for $9,500. The sale of the remaining lots is postponed (see Ja 18, 1813). The building is in a dilapidated condition.—Com. Adv., My 14; N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., My 14; Merc. Adv., My 15, 1812. The hall was removed by Aug. 10, 1812 (q.v.). The one lot sold was purchased by Joel Post and John B. Lawrence.—Liber Deeds, CI: 410. See also descrip. of Frontispiece I, III: 539, in which, however, the statement that the lots were sold "on April 15th" is without foundation, and a wrong date of issue of the Gazette and General Advertiser is cited—it should be May 14 (as above), not March 26.

16 G. Douglas begins to publish a weekly of octavo size called The Western Star, and Harp of Erin. Although devoted chiefly to Irish interests, it contained a considerable amount of current news. It was discontinued with the issue of May 1, 1813.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 513.

18 A "Roman Museum" is advertised at the "Commercial Building, No. 28 Park, next door to the Theatre." It is under the direction of Louis Chiappi, a native of Rome.—N. Y. Morn. Post, My 18, 1812. See also Columbian, Jl 9 and S 10, 1812.

" The council orders that a footwalk on the south side of Marketfield St. along the Battery be paved with stone lately taken from the old city hall.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 146–47.

" The use of convict labour at this time is illustrated by the following resolution of the board: "Resolved that Mr Hazard be instructed to employ the Convicts in Bridewell in constructing matting to cover that part of the floor of the Court of Sessions occupied by the Audience & that a Committee be appointed to superintend the making of the same, and that some cheap material be provided as carpeting for that part of the said room which is occupied by the Court & the Gentlemen of the Bar."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 147. For earlier employment of the bridewell inmates, see ibid., O 5, 1785; D 3, 1788.

" The common council resolves that the board appoint a street inspector, whose duty it shall be, together with the deputy street commissioners, to see that the ordinance regarding the removal of filth and dirt from the streets be observed as well by the contractors as by the citizens at large. Samuel Green was appointed inspector.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 149.

19 In accordance with the plans of the common council (see Ap 24), a public demonstration of respect to the memory of the late George Clinton is held in New York. A procession composed of city, state, and national officials, clergy of all denominations, various societies, foreign consuls, military and naval officers, private citizens, etc. assembles in the Park and marches to the Presbyterian church in Wall St., where Gouverneur Morris delivers a funeral discourse. "The bells of the different churches were tolled, and minute-guns fired at Fort Columbus and the battery, while the procession moved 'its slow length along:' the colors of the different public buildings, the vessels in the harbor, and forts in the vicinity, were hoisted half-mast: the citizens and military bore the usual testimonials of grief, the standards shrouded in crape, and the musical instruments and arms in mourning: the stores and shops were closed, and business suspended: and an immense concourse of citizens witnessed the sensibility felt by a bereaved community on the loss of one of its brightest and worthiest pillars and ornaments. An address adapted to the occasion was also delivered at Tammany-Hall, by Mr. Jonas Humbert."—Columbian, My 16 and 20, 1812. On June 1, Morris presented to the common council a copy of his oration, and it was accepted with thanks and ordered to be printed. The thanks of the board were also conveyed to Rev. Doctor Romeyn "for his pious & eloquent discharge of the religious services."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 158–59.

21 The legislature, in the interest of the state's prison, authorises the appointment of a chaplain who may be allowed annually not exceeding $250 for performing divine service for the benefit and reformation of the "convicts."—Laws of N. Y. (1812), 376. Rev. John Stanford (see Ap 18, 1808) was appointed to this office by the board of inspectors and "continued as the able and indefatigable minister of Christ in that institution until its removal from this city to Sing-Sing in 1828."—Sommers, Memoir of John Stanford, 163. Mr. Stanford was wont to speak of the prisoners as "his Greenwich Congregation."—Stanford, Aged Christian's Companion, introd., xv. For his connection with the city institutions, see Je, 1813.

" "We are happy to learn that a society has been established in this city, having for its tutelary patron the immortal George Clinton. . . . We hope this infant institution will prove a germ, which, by its expansion and growth, will assist to counteract, and, in some measure, extinguish the baneful effects of the Washington and Hamilton societies. . . ."—Columbian, My 21, 1812. 22 The "Olympic Theatre," formerly the "Circus" (corner Broadway and Anthony St.), is opened to the public, by Dwyer and McKenzie, with Sheridan's "Rivals."—Columbian, My 13 and 22, 1812. On Nov. 3, 1813, it reopened as the Commonwealth Theatre.—Ibid., N 2 and 4, 1813. For further history of this theatre or circus, see Greenwood, The Circus (1909), 108, and Wilson, *Mem. 23 Gov. Tompkins sends a special message to the legislature, saying in part: "The colonel of engineers is authorized to erect an additional battery on the North river, in New-York, to prevent an enemy from anchoring above and under cover of the state-prison, and annoying the north part of the city with shells; and on account of the prominent position of the public wharf at the prison, and the turn in the shore of the river a small distance above, that wharf has been selected as the most eligible site for the proposed battery. Legislative provision will however be requisite to authorise the occupation by the United States of a part of the state-prison wharf for the above purpose. . . ."—Assemb. Jour. 35th sess., 341–42. The agent and inspectors of the state prison remonstrated against the building of a battery on the prison wharf, and permission for the U. S. to do so was refused in the assembly on June 2, "by a strong vote." Gov. Tompkins informed Col. Williams, on June 3, that he would therefore have to choose "some other site for the proposed fortification."—Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, II: 616–17.

25 The common council agrees that whenever the United States shall erect a battery or fortification on Corlaers hook for the defense of the harbour it will grant "so much of the water right in front thereof" as the engineer shall deem requisite and "so much of the Streets terminating on said grounds as shall be necessary for the Continuity of said works."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 153.

" The common council orders "that Mr Skaats, the Keeper of the City Hall, be directed to provide Fuel and when necessary to have Fires made in the Common Council Chamber and in the following Courts and Offices only

In The Court of Chancery
The Supreme Court
The Sittings
The Oyer & Terminer & Sessions
The Mayors Court
The Mayors Office
The Street Commissioners Office
The City Inspectors Office
The Jury Rooms for the above Courts
Fuel for Watch
The Comptrollers Office

"And that all persons occupying Offices in the City Hall be requested to see the Fires carefully extinguished before they quit their offices for the day."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 155. The numbers of the rooms occupied by the various public offices are given in Longworth's N. Y. City Directory (1812–13), 38–39, and some of those here mentioned are shown on Pl. 75, Vol. I.

" The common council resolves that hand bells shall be provided for the deputy clerks of the several markets, who shall "ring the same in the said markets, one quarter of an hour previous to the time directed by the ordinance for the Butchers to leave the Market." The time for leaving their stalls is fixed "at 2 O'Clock P. M. each day throughout the years."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 155.

" Between this date and Oct. 26, the common council paid $599.51 for draining the Collect and filling in the ground in that vicinity.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 157, 199, 217, 238, 265, 287. Further payments were made in 1813 (q.v., Je 7).

26 The legislature authorises the state comptroller to sell (and convey in fee simple) the government house and adjoining grounds to the city, for a sum not less than $50,000, and to receive a 10-years' bond of the city in payment, with interest at six per cent.; provided the city shall not sell the grounds "for the erection of private buildings or other individual purposes."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 230; Trask, Bowling Green (1898), 58 et seq. See Mr 8, 1813; and L. M. R. K. III: 974.

1812 May 29 Mrs. Fulton gives a "splendid entertainment" on board the steamboat "Paragon," at which Col. Barclay and the commander of H. M. S. "Bramble" are guests. "The fineness of the day induced them to take an excursion up the East River as far as the city extends, back through Butter Milk Channel, down to Staten Island and back to the city. . . . When the Paragon was passing the Bramble a salute of 18 guns was fired from the latter. During the excursion, the company was entertained by a band of music, which, with a profusion of good things, rendered the whole truly convivial."—Com. Adv., My 30, 1812. The "Paragon" is shown in Man. Com. Coun. (1852), 438; it is described by Lieut. Hall in his Travels in Canada and the U. S. in 1816 and 1817 (London, 1818), 20–21.

Summer Charles Redheffer causes much excitement in Philadelphia by announcing that he has invented a machine for perpetual motion. The city council and the state legislature became much interested in the reputed discovery, but the machine was finally proved to be a fraud.—Scharf & Westcott, Hist. of Phila., I: 561–62.

June — Thomas M'Kean writes to John Adams from Philadelphia: "Our venerable friend Clinton has gone before us [see Ap 20]. So has the illustrious Washington, eleven years ago. I remain the only surviving member of the first American [Stamp Act] Congress, held in the City of New York in October 1765; and but three more, of whom you are one, remain alive of the second, held in this city in September, 1774." The two others were Jefferson, and Charles Carroll of Annapolis.—Trevelyan, The Am. Revolution, Part III, 15 (footnote).

— There were four arsenals in the city at this time: (1) the state arsenal, a three-storey brick building, erected in 1808, at the corner of Elm and Franklin Sts.; (2) the U. S. arsenal on Bridge St. back of the government house near South Battery, authorised to be built by the laws of 1808 (chap. 9); (3) the U. S. magazine and arsenal at the foot of West Twelfth St.; and (4) the U. S. arsenal on the Parade (now Madison Sq.), at the junction of the Old Boston Road and the Middle Road.—Guernsey, N. Y. City & its Vicinity during the War of 1812–15, 66–67; Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., III: 254.

1 Pres. Madison sends a confidential war message to congress, in which he says in part: "British cruisers have been in the continued practice of violating the American flag on the great highway of nations, and of seizing . . . persons sailing under it. . . .

"Against this crying enormity, which Great Britain would be so prompt to avenge if committed against herself, the United States have in vain exhausted remonstrances and expostulations. . . .

"British cruisers have been in the practice also of violating the rights and the peace of our coasts. They hover over and harass our entering and departing commerce. To the most insulting pretentions they have added the most lawless proceedings in our very harbors; and have wantonly spilt American blood within the sanctuary of our territorial jurisdiction. . . .

"Under pretended blockades, without the presence of an adequate force, and sometimes without the practicability of applying one, our commerce has been plundered in every sea; the great staples of our country have been cut off from their legitimate markets; and a destructive blow aimed at our agricultural and maritime interests. . . .

"Not content with these occasional expedients for laying waste our neutral trade, the Cabinet of Britain resorted, at length, to the sweeping system of blockades, under the name of Orders in Council; which has been moulded and managed, as might best suit its political views, its commercial jealousies, or the avidity of British cruizers. . . .

"Anxious to make every experiment short of the last resort of injured nations, the United States have withheld from Great Britain, under successive modifications, the benefits of a free intercourse with her market, the loss of which could not but outweigh the profits accruing from her restrictions of our commerce with other nations. And to entitle these experiments to the more favorable consideration, they were so framed as to enable her to place her adversary under the exclusive operation of them. To these appeals her Government has been equally inflexible, as if willing to make sacrifices of every sort, rather than yield to the claims of justice, or renounce the errors of a false pride. . . .

" "In reviewing the conduct of Great Britain toward the United States our attention is necessarily drawn to the warfare, just renewed by the savages, on one of our extensive frontiers; a warfare which is known to spare neither age nor sex, and to be distinguished by features peculiarly shocking to humanity. It is difficult to account for the activity and combinations which have been for some time developing themselves among tribes in constant intercourse with British traders and garrisons, without connecting their hostility with that influence. . . .

"Such is the spectacle of injuries and indignities which have been heaped on our country; and such the crisis which its unexampled forbearance and conciliatory efforts have not been able to avert. . . .

"We behold, in fine, on the side of Great Britain, a state of war against the United States; and on the side of the United States, a state of peace towards Great Britain.

"Whether the United States shall continue passive under these progressive usurpations, and these accumulating wrongs, or, opposing force to force in defence of their national rights, shall commit a just cause into the hands of the Almighty Disposer of events, avoiding all connexions which might entangle it in the contests or views of other Powers, and preserving a constant readiness to concur in an honorable re-establishment of peace and friendship, is a solemn question, which the Constitution wisely confides to the Legislative Department of the Government. . . ." —Macdonald, Select Docs. illustrative of the Hist. of the U. S., 1776–1861, 183–91. The U. S. declared war on Great Britain on June 18 (q. v.).

" The common council agrees that the new market which is to take the place of the Hudson Market (see F 10) be erected on the square bounded by Washington, West, Partition, and Vesey Sts. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 163–64. The new market became Washington Market.—De Voe, Market Book, 327, 407. See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 358, 366–67.

2 The Bank of America is incorporated by act of the legislature. —Laws of N. Y. (1812), chap. 78. "The charter of the Bank of America, in 1812, was an occasion of bribery and corruption. John Martin, a preacher and sub-agent of the bank, was convicted of attempting to bribe members of the Legislature, and was sentenced to confinement in the State prison. There was a Legislative investigation and a great political scandal."—Sumner, Hist. of Banking in U. S., 43. The bank began business in this year at the n. w. corner of Wall and William Sts.—L. M. R. K., III: 924. See also Mr 27 and Je 29.

" The "New York Circus," just completed, "on the lot where the Boston Panerama was lately exhibited" (Merc. Adv., My 28, 1812), at the corner of Broadway and White St., nearly opposite 405 Broadway, gives its opening performance.—Columbian, Je 2 and 3, 1812. The proprietors are Cayetano, Codet, Menial & Redon.—Merc. Adv., op. cit. See also Greenwood, The Circus (1909), 106.

5 "The town is likely to be the spectator of ingenious rivalships between the managers of the Old Park Theatre and of the New Olympic Theatre [see My 22] . . . One carries on the war with an 'Elephant at great expense;' the other, in addition to its 'real horses,' with a 'whale' that dances a hornpipe. . . ."—Columbian, Je 5, 1812.

8 The legislature passes an act prohibiting on Sunday all wilful disturbance, plays, shows, horse-racing, gambling, and the sale of liquor within one mile of any place of public worship.—Laws of N. Y. (1812), chap. 84. See Mr 18.

" Brig.-Gen. Bloomfield is placed in command of all the troops in the city and harbour of New York.—Com. Adv., Je 24, 1812. This was Brig-Gen. Joseph Bloomfield, of New Jersey.

12 The legislature authorises the governor to employ a guard of artillery "to guard the fortifications and other public works at the Narrows, near the city of New-York," to establish "a telegraph, observatory and signal poles on the said public ground, as he may deem most conducive to the interests of this state, and to the safety of the city and harbor of New-York," and to equip at state expense "a boat or barge, in the harbor of New-York, for the use of the state." It also approriates $25,000 for completing the fortifications on Staten Island.—Laws of N. Y. (1812), chap. 139.

15 While the bill for the declaration of war against Great Britain is being considered by the senate, a petition is presented to that body, signed by most of the large mercantile houses of New York

1812 June 15 City and by many of its wealthy and influential citizens, praying that the embargo, which, on April 4 (q.v.), had been laid for 90 days on American shipping, be continued, and urging that non-importation laws would produce all the benefits of war, while preventing its calamities.—Guernsey, N. Y. City & Vicinity during the War of 1812–15, I: 17; Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., III: 234–35. See Je 18.

" After visiting the bridewell, the jail, and the Collect, the grand jury makes certain suggestions to the common council regarding improvements in sanitation. Two rooms in the bridewell, one containing 61 white females; and one, 36 black females, are too crowded, and more room is recommended.

With regard to the Collect, they "find much to complain of; besides great quantities of stagnant water it seems to be made the common place of deposit for dead animals & filth of all kinds, where they are left to corrupt the air and endanger the health of the City; besides all this, the Cellars in the neighborhood & particularly in the lower end of Orange Street are filled with water, w^ch^ from its appearance has been in them some time, for all which reasons they present the said Collect as a public nuisance to the city."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 168–69. June 15

On June 22, the common council agreed upon recommendations for remedying the evils at the Collect, both in the public and private lots. It was decided that the cellars in Little Water St. and Orange St. should be filled.—Ibid., VII: 178.

" The common council requests that a warrant be issued to John Youle for four box stoves for the city hall.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 175.

16 The City Bank of New York is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1812), chap. 175. This bank was organized to replace the First Bank of the U. S., whose charter expired in 1811 (q.v., Mr 4).—N. Y. Times, Jl 18, 1921. See Je 23.

CHAPTER V

A.—THE WAR OF 1812

1812–1815

B.—PERIOD OF INVENTION, PROSPERITY, AND PROGRESS

1815–1841

CHAPTER V

A.—THE WAR OF 1812

1812 June 18 FOLLOWING his war message of June 1 (q.v.) and subsequent discussion in congress (see Je 15), President Madison signs an act "declaring War between the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the dependencies thereof and the United States of America and their territories"—Laws of U. S., 12th. cong., chap. 102. The war was caused chiefly by Great Britain's impressment of American seamen, her orders in council, and her paper blockades. On June 19, Madison issued a proclamation announcing the declaration of war.—Winsor, VII: 276, 342, 370, 420, 482; VIII: 143, 179, 414. News of the proclamation reached New York on June 20 (q. v.).

" The literature on the War of 1812 is very considerable. A descriptive bibliography of a large part of this material, published prior to 1889, is found in Winsor's Narrative and Critical History of America, VII: 420–37, and (works by Canadian writers), VIII: 179. The subject is treated topographically by Lossing in his Field Book of the War of 1812.

A brief summary of the principal events of the War of 1812, and important local history connected with the completion of the Commissioners' Map of the city on March 22, 1811 (q.v.), as well as the expansion of the city and general progress which followed these events, is contained in Chapter V, Vol. III, of the ICONOGRAPHY.

19 The legislature appoints Cornelius Howard, of Baltimore, Eli Whitney, of New Haven, and Robert Fulton, of New York City to be commissioners "to ascertain the best Method of conveying off the Waters from the Collect and Lispenard's Meadow, in the City of New-York."—Laws of N. Y. (1812), chap. 212; descrip. of Pl. 83-b, III: 562. Cornelius Howard resigned as commissioner on Sept. 12, and Thomas Poppleton, of Baltimore, was appointed in his place.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 258. Poppleton's journal and other manuscripts relating to the work of the commissioners are in N. Y. P. L. (N. Y. City MSS., box K-L). For extracts in the Chronology, see O 7, 15, N 25, and D 3. The report of their work was drawn up on Feb. 15, 1813 (q.v.).

" Gouverneur Morris makes a trip from New York to Albany in one of the new steamboats of Robert Fulton, and describes his experiences. He says that, embarking in the steamboat on June 19 a few minutes before five in the afternoon, he reached Albany at midnight on the following day. The return trip was made on June 22 and 23, with some delay from engine trouble. He was pleased with the journey, writing: "Thus in five days and an hour I have dined in New York, gone to Albany, spent two complete days there, and returned. . . . The price of a passenger is $7—a servant half as much."—Diary and Letters of Gouverneur Morris (N. Y., 1888), II: 533–34.

20 News of the declaration of war against Great Britain (see Je 18) arrives in New York, and Gen. Bloomfield announces it to the troops.—Com. Adv., Je 20; N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 20, 1812; Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., III: 237–38. See Je 22 and 24.

21 A midshipman on board the U. S. sloop-of-war "Hornet," in the port of New York, writes in his diary: "This morning the declaration of war by the United States against Great Britain was read. . . . At ten o'clock A. M. Commodore Rodgers hove out the signal to weigh; never was anchor to the cathead sooner, nor topsail sheeted to the masthead with more dispatch, than upon the present occasion. The smallest boy on board seemed anxious to meet what is now looked upon as the common tyrant of the ocean, for they had heard the woful tales of the older tars. . . . When the ship was under way, Capt. Lawrence had the crew called to their quarters, and told them if there were any amongst them who were disaffected, or one that had not rather sink than surrender to the enemy, with gun for gun, that he should be, immediately and uninjured, landed and sent back in the pilot boat. The reply was, fore and aft, 'Not one.' "—Guernsey, N. Y. City & Vicinity during the War of 1812–15. I: 3–4. The fleet which sailed from New York on this day under the command of Commodore Rodgers consisted of the "President," the "United States," the "Congress," the "Argus," and the "Hornet."—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., IV: 70; Chauncey, Letter-Book (1809–1812), 200, in N. Y. H. S. Guernsey, op. cit., I: 4, says the departure of these ships "was the first 'letting slip the dogs of war' against Gt. Britain in the war of 1812." June 21

About 80 of the "finest recruits yet received at this rendezvous," enlisted at Hudson, arrive at Governor's Island.—Com. Adv., Je 24, 1812. "

The common council refers to the committee of defence the "General Orders" of Gen. Bloomfield, dated June 20 (q.v.), announcing that war is declared by the United States against Great Britain. The orders were forwarded to the council by Maj. Gen. Ebenezer Stevens.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 179–80. 22

One hundred men from the detached artillery of the city take charge of the "north fort (near Duane street) with orders to exercise the cannon &c. for one month."—N. Y. Spectator, Je 24, 1812. "

Capt. John M'Lean issues the following notice: "The Veteran Corps of Artillery is requested to assemble at the new Arsenal, the 25th inst. precisely at 9 o'clock in the morning, to take their station on the North Battery, where the first shot was received from the Asia at the commencement of our bloody, yet glorious contest, with their trans-atlantic oppressors the British; and I trust you will show by your punctuality and prompt attendance, that the flame of seventy six is not entirely extinguished by the frost of time. You will appear with military hat and side-arms. The above request only extends to New-York, Westchester, Kings, and Richmond." —Columbian, Je 22, 1812. The Veteran Corps was the first organization to volunteer in New York during the War of 1812.—Wilson, Mem. Hist. City of N. Y., III: 254. "

Great Britain revokes her orders in council.—Winsor, VII: 276. 23

The directors of the City Bank (see Je 16) purchase the "United States Branch Banking House, with its appendages, in this city." The sale price is said to be $100,000.—Com. Adv., Je 24, 1812. The bank was at 52 Wall St.—L. M. R. K., III: 924. "

A general meeting called by the Republican (or Democratic) party is held in the Park. Col. Henry Rutgers and Marinus Willett having been chosen chairman and secretary respectively, the declaration of war and the president's proclamation are read, and resolutions are adopted reviewing Great Britain's repeated violations of our national rights, declaring the federal government justified "in its appeal to arms," and pledging in support of the United States "our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor."—N. Y. Spectator, Je 27, 1812. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 475. 24

The committee of defence, in accordance with directions from the common council, reports the following suggestions for improving the defences of the city: that a representation be made to the general government suggesting "the propriety of erecting a Castle or other strong Fortification on Hendrick's Reef and a line of old vessels or Hulks to be anchored at convenient distances from each other across the channel at the Narrows from Hendricks Reef to Fort Richmond on the Staten Island shore to be united by a chain which is already prepared. . . . also a Line of Block Ships in the rear of the chain in the nature of strong floating Batteries. 25

"As the Castle cannot be erected for a considerable time the Committee are of opinion that a representation be in like manner 1812 June 25 made to our State Government urging the erection at the Expense of the State of a Battery near Denyses on the Long Island Shore."

It is also recommended that the common council take immediate measures to make two floating batteries to be manned by volunteers.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 182–83.

" The common council grants the request of Col. Fleet for the loan of three watch-boxes for the use of the detachment of the "N Y S Artillery," now stationed in the north battery.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 182.

" The following resolution is agreed to by the common council: "Resolved that the committee of defence be directed to take measures for procuring a Copy of the Signals to be used at the Telegraph at the Narrows also a good Glass and the necessary Utensils and fixtures to give the same Signals from the Cupola of the City Hall." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 183.

" The common council agrees that the following "Badge of Office" shall be immediately adopted and worn by marshals and constables: "a white Wand one foot long and one Inch in Diameter with the Arms of the City painted thereon and the word Marshal, Constable, High Constable or First Marshal as the case may be written thereon in large letters underneath the Arms, said Wand to be made of some hard and strong Wood such as lignum vita and to be worn in a side Pocket, in the coat."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 183. This, apparently, is the origin of the policeman's "billy" survival of the old English "staves of office."

27 Samuel Woodworth & Co. begin the publication of a weekly paper of quarto size called The War. The paper was suspended with the issue of Sept. 6, 1814, but in order to complete the record of the war, it was revived in Feb. 1817, and three additional issues were printed.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 502.

29 A "riotous collection of people" assembles in James St. and tries to pull down one of the houses there. The disorder is quelled by the police.—N. Y. Morn. Post, Jl 1, 1812. The common council, meeting on this day, agrees to several regulations for preventing and suppressing riots.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 188–89. On July 6, it thanked the several persons who helped to preserve "the peace of the city" on this occasion.—Ibid., VII: 192. Five of the rioters were convicted and sentenced to a year's imprisonment.—Columbian, Ag 1, 1812.

" John M'Lean addresses the following communication to the common council and the commissioners of fortifications: "I would suggest to your consideration, the utility of erecting two Bomb Batteries, one near Rhinelander's wharf, the other near the L. at Whitehall dock; the battery near Rhinelander's wharf, to consist of 2 ten inch mortars, making up the Hudson, and 3 thirteen inch do. to bear across the river and down the Channel; the one at Whitehall to be composed of 2 or 3 ten inch mortars, to rake across Buttermilk Channel, and towards the Navy-yard, with 3 thirteen inch do. bearing down the Bay, and across the Channel towards Bedlow's Island. I trust by an experiment, that I shall be able to convince you Gentlemen, of the essential benefit which must obviously result from such fortifications, inasmuch as their annoyance to all floating batteries, has been sufficiently ascertained and proven. I shall hold myself ready to exhibit to you Gentlemen, any practical proof thereof."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Je 29, 1812.

" The finance committee of the common council reports regarding the offer made June 22 by Archibald Gracie and William Bayard, in behalf of the Bank of America, for the three remaining lots on which the old city hall stood. The bank directors offer $25,000, but the committee considers $30,000 in cash no more than an adequate price and advises that the lots be offered for that sum. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 177, 184. See F 8, 1813.

" The common council passes the following resolution as a war measure: "Resolved that the Building and Bellevue Committees be requested to retrench the Expenses of the Buildings under their care so as to accomodate them as far as practicable to that Œconomy demanded by the exigencies of the Times keeping at the same time in view the necessity of not depriving too many of the Workmen of Employment."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 184–85.

30 "Commissions for Privateers were received at the custom-house this morning, and several vessels fitting out on private speculation will be dispatched immediately. The Paul Jones, capt. John Hazard, is expected to be the first out, and sail on Wednesday [July 1]."—Com. Adv., Je 30, 1812.

" "Preparations for telegraphic communications between the Narrows and the Navy-Yard are making with all practicable expedition, by Captain Chauncey and the officers of government. A mast and Yard were yesterday erected on Signal Hill, at Staten-Island, and the whole line will be completed immediately."—Com. Adv., Je 30, 1812. June 30

" "We understand, and it is with pleasure we inform the public, that the large and commodious Steam-Boat, which has been for some time erecting in this city by Mr. Fulton as a Ferry Boat to ply between this city and the city of Jersey [see Ap 15, 1811], will be in full operation on Thursday next [July 2]; that from the experiments already made, she will answer the expectations of the public, and will not on an average be more than from fifteen to eighteen minutes in crossing. She is so large and convenient, that carriages of all descriptions may drive in and out of her as if on a bridge.

"The crossing of the North River has been such an obstacle to the communication with this city, that it is a matter of real congratulation to the public that their difficulties are removed. The most timid may now cross without fear. No expence in the erection of the boat has been spared to render her both safe and complete, and it is confidently hoped that she will not only give universal satisfaction to the public, but be an honor to Mr. Fulton, the inventor.

"As the fare of a market wagon loaded, will be but fifty cents, there is no doubt but our markets will be better supplied than ever they have been."—Com. Adv., Je 30, 1812. For a description of the new ferry-boat, see Columbian, Jl 20, 1812; De Voe, Market Book, 195–96. See also Jl 25.

Capt. David Porter of the U. S. S. "Essex" sails from New York on a cruise against the British. The motto on his flag is "Free Trade and Sailors' Rights."—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., IV: 70, 77–79; Lossing, Pict. Field Book of the War of 1812, 439. See Mr 28, 1814. July 2

The thirty-sixth anniversary of American independence is observed with "unusual splendor." The celebration includes a review of the militia by Maj.-Gen. Stevens and Brig.-Gen. Bloomfield, a parade on the Battery, and an address by John Anthon before the Washington and Hamilton Societies at Washington Hall.—N. Y. Spectator, Jl 8, 1812. See also Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., III: 255. 4

Gen. Jacob Morton presents to "the Corporation of the City of New York" a porcelain punch-bowl, as appears from an inscription on the bowl itself, there being apparently no other official record of the event. It is also stated on the bowl that it was made by "Syngchong" in Canton, and painted by "Fungmanhi." It shows in colours and gold the seal of the U. S., the seal of the city, and sea scenes including ship building. On the inside is a view of New York copied from the first state of the engraving published by Birch in 1803 (Pl. 76). One of the inscriptions is "Drink deep. You will preserve the City and encourage Canals." The bowl was deposited in the Metropolitan Museum in Sept., 1912, after having been previously kept in the governor's room of the city hall.—Bulletin, Metropolitan Museum of Art, VII: No. 9 (Sept., 1912). "

The common council requests the mayor to forward a copy of the following report to the president of the United States: "That tho' they [the committee of defence] have not been advised of any direct communication having been made from the Executive of the United States on the subject of their last Report to the Common Council respecting the defence of this City, yet they have been informed that instructions have been this day received directing additional works to be made on this Island at Corlears Hook & on the North River. 6

"While your Committee are of opinion that the interior line of defence of this Harbor has been projected with skill and executed with ability, and may in the last Resort be of importance, Yet they are decidedly of opinion that the protection and defence of the City ought not to rest upon them, but should be placed on strong & efficient Works at the Narrows where the attacks of an invading Naval Force may be resisted and repelled without involving the necessary or probable damage, if not destruction of the City they are intended to protect.

"They would therefore beg leave to report as their Opinion that the Executive of the United States should be earnestly solicited to carry into effect the remaining part of the plan of defence heretofore proposed by Colonel Williams of the Corps of Engineers

Sir,

The Essex has been completely called inside and out both sides home out her copper all repaired, a false keel put on her, & is now with all her Ballast on board, and is now ready with her water casks stowed. yesterday (Sunday) we took all her masts out, & by 12 o'clock to day her main mast mizen have been altered for a foremast and stepped. Her main and mizen masts will be completed by Thursday, and I think by Saturday next that she will be completely ready for sea. Nineteen gun boats will go down to day ready to co-operate with the Ships or Forts. — I have

" "One of 76" suggests the following method of defending New York from attack: "On every wharf, or on as many as may be thought necessary, let there be erected a covered way, capable of receiving bales of cotton, of which we have plenty. This could be done in a very little time, and at little expense; under which our large cannon would range, and our men be less exposed to the enemy's fire. This would make a chain of defence on each side of the city, on the North and East Rivers, which would be the means of defeating a formidable enemy. We should have a range of covered batteries, simple in their construction and powerful in their effect. Should the enemy approach the city, the money from the different banks could be carried into the interior in a few hours, by putting our cartmen in a state of requisition for that purpose."—Columbian, Jl 9, 1812. See also Addenda.

10 Daniel Insley (see Je 19, 1810) publishes a notice, which has above it a wood-cut view of his "Columbia Garden," showing a band stand, walk, wall, trees, etc., which, he says in his notice, "has been considerably enlarged, and is now laid out in complete order. . . .

"Ice creams of various kinds, including pine apple, strawberry, raspberry, &c. will be furnished in their respective seasons equal to any in America.

"One side of the Garden contains an apartment newly built, in which gentlemen can be accommodated with different sorts of Relishes[!]. . . ." Ice is also offered for sale.—N. Y. Morn. Post, Jl 10, 1812.

12 Gen. Wm. Hull invades Canada.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., III: 557–58. This may be said to begin the land activities of the War of 1812. A swift summary of the progress of the war shows the following outstanding events:

"The forces actually available on the American side when the war began consisted of a small squadron of very fine frigates and sloops in an efficient state. Twenty-two was the extreme limit of the naval force the States were able to commission. The paper strength of the army was 35,000, but the service was voluntary and unpopular, while there was an almost total want of trained and experienced officers. The available strength was a bare third of the nominal. . . . On the British side, the naval force in American waters under Sir John Borlase Warren, who took up the general command on the 26th of September 1812, consisted of ninety-seven vessels in all, of which eleven were of the line and thirty-four were frigates. . . . The total number of British troops present in Canada in July 1812 was officially stated to be 5004, consisting in part of Canadians."—Encyclopædia Britannica, Vol. I.

Hostilities began on the Canadian frontier shortly after the declaration of war. The British general, Sir Isaac Brock, seized Mackinac at the head of Lake Huron on July 17, and then drove Hull back and forced him to surrender at Detroit on Aug. 16 (q. v.). Brock then transferred himself to the western end of Lake Erie where Gen. Henry Dearborn was attempting invasion. Brock fell in action on Oct. 13, while repulsing Dearborn's subordinate, Van Rensselaer. The discontent of New England with the war both hampered the American generals and also aided the British, who drew their supplies to a great extent from U. S. territory. July 12

The year 1813 opened inauspiciously for the Americans by a defeat at Frenchtown, Mich., on Jan. 22 (q. v.). In April (q. v., 27), they took York (now Toronto) and repelled a seige of Fort Meigs (see Ap 28), and in May they captured Fort George, and Gen. Brown repulsed a British attack on Sackett's Harbour. Harrison was successful on the Thames on Oct. 5 (q. v.). On the lakes, Chauncey gained little advantage over Sir James Yeo on Ontario, but Perry completely defeated the British on Lake Erie (see S 10). The Creek Indians also started hostilities in this year, massacring a number of Americans at Fort Mims, Ala., on Aug. 30 (q. v.). Four expeditions were set on foot to attack these hostile Indians, and during a campaign in Alabama from Oct. to Dec. were generally successful, especially that from West Tennessee under Gen. Jackson.

By 1814, most of the incompetent American generals had been replaced by real soldiers. On the Niagara frontier, Gen. Brown took Fort Erie, won at Chippewa (see Jl 5) and Lundy's Lane (see Jl 25), and repelled a British seige of Fort Erie (see Ag 15). These gains, however, were lost by Gen. George Izard in the autumn.

Great Britain, after the abdication of Napoleon, sent detachments of veteran troops to America, and invasions were planned from Canada and at points on the seaboard. The first of these armies of invasion, numbering about 12,000 men under Sir George Prevost, started from Montreal early in September. The British fleet on Lake Champlain, however, was defeated by Commodore Macdonough, and the land forces by Gen. Macomb, on Sept. 11 (q. v.), and Prevost retreated to Canada.

The second army of invasion was commanded by Gen. Robert Ross and had for its objective point, the Chesapeake. Accompanied by a powerful fleet under Sir Alexander Cochrane and Sir George Cockburn, it made innumerable attacks of a destructive character on the docks and harbours, destroying stores and capturing vessels and merchandise. During the most famous of these raids, it defeated the Americans at Bladensburg, marched on to Washington, and burned most of the public buildings there (see Ag 24). A subsequent attack on Baltimore, in which Gen. Ross was killed, was a failure (see S 13). In December, the British undertook the invasion of Louisiana with a large fleet and 10,000 troops commanded by Sir Edward Pakenham. After several minor engagements, the final attack was made at New Orleans on Jan. 8, 1815 (q. v.) and was repelled by Gen. Andrew Jackson.—Winsor, VII: 376–404.

Meanwhile, a treaty of peace had been signed at Ghent (see Ag 8 and D 24, 1814), news of which arrived at New York on Feb. 11, 1815 (q. v.).

" The British minister, Mr. Foster, and the British consul, Col. Barclay, embark on board the "Colibri" to sail for England.—Com. Adv., Jl 11, 1812.

" The common council receives a letter from John H. Eddy asking for aid in his preparation of a chart of the harbour of New York "exhibiting every part of the coast with a delineation of the various Ship & Boat channels, with the soundings." It is referred to the committee of defence with authority to grant such aid as they may deem proper.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 200.

14 "David Barnum, late of the city of Philadelphia, has opened a Public House at Tammany Hall [see My 12], corner of Nassau and Frankfort-street, opposite the New City-Hall. . . . The building being new, neat, and elegant situated in front of the Park, on high ground, in the centre of the city, renders Tammany Hall as pleasant, airy and healthy, as a country village. . . ."—Columbian, Jl 14, 1812. See My 10, 1813.

17 Letters from the sec. of war and from Gov. Tompkins are of such a nature as to leave the common council very uneasy as regards the defences of the city. Alderman Fish, chairman of the committee of defence, and Pierre C. Van Wyck, recorder, are appointed to "repair forthwith to the seat of the Gen[l] Government & to represent to the President of the U S the sentiments of the Com[n] Council on the unfortified situation of this Port."

The common council authorises the commissioners of fortification to purchase land, not exceeding five acres, on which to erect works on the east side of the narrows as a means of defence. As 1812 July 17 the state legislature has not authorised such purchase the board takes the responsibility and trusts for reimbursement by the state.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 205–6. These efforts of the corporation for the defence of the harbour were praised by the Com. Adv., Jl 21, 1812.

" An advertisement reads: "Ursuline Convent, Under the direction of the Rev. Anth. Kohlmann, near the 6 mile stone, on the Bloomingdale Road.

"The object of this establishment (now opened) is to afford to Young Ladies of all denominations, the . . . important advantage of a polite and virtuous education . . ."—Columbian, Jl 17, 1812. The convent was incorporated on March 5, 1814 (q.v.).

20 "Among the preparations by our indefatigable commissary-general M'Lean, for the exclusive use of this city and harbor, are five 18 pounders, eight 12 do. and five 9s, mounted on travelling carriages, with harness, apparatus and ammunition complete; with 1,000 muskets and accoutrements of the best quality and in the best order, and 18,000 rounds of fixed ammunition (besides 450 casks of loose powder); the whole ready for service at a moment's notice . . ."—Columbian, Jl 20, 1812.

" "Christian Bergh and others" are permitted to build at their expense a market-house on the ground called "Gouverneurs Slip."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VI: 473; VII: 212. This was the beginning of Gouverneur Market.—L. M. R. K., III: 959. The common council later appropriated $137.95 to cover a deficiency in the private contributions, "without enquiring into the propriety of erecting public Markets by subscription."—Ibid., VII: 416. The market was ready for occupation in less than six weeks, and was the smallest in the city at that time.—De Voe, Market Book, 404.

" The common council authorises payments of $2,521.37 for furniture for the common council chamber, and $300 for "gilding cornices Stars Canopy," presumably within the new city hall. The bills thus paid were those of H. Andrew, "Upholsterers Bill furniture Common Council Chamber" ($2,002.03); Wm. Mandeville, for "Tables Desks &c Do" ($519.34); and John Crigier for the gilding.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 213

25 One of the newspapers says in regard to "Fulton's Paulus-Hook Steam Ferry Boat" (see Je 30): "This is the 7th day since she commenced her regular passages, in which time she has surpassed the utmost extent of public expectation. The Paulus Hook Ferry has ever been one of the most inconvenient and difficult in the United States: in head winds and a strong tide, it has often required three hours to make the passage, and in a calm it has been next to impossible to get over such a boat as would be able to take in a Horse and Carriage. . . . It was a preventative to social intercourse between this city and Philadelphia: happily a work of art, has removed all those difficulties by means of a floating-bridge on each side of the river—Carriages and Horses are driven on to the deck of the steam boat without the persons alighting, and with all the safety and facility which a bridge gives: she can take in at one time 6 carriages, with their horses, and 300 passengers; with such a load she can pass the river in a calm [in] 14 minutes, in a strong tide in 20. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 25, 1812.

The following day (July 26), "the Paulus Hook Steam Ferry Boat crossed the River 25 times, and carried upwards of 1500 persons, besides horses, gigs and carriages; she had 300 persons on board at one time. This invention, opening a safe, rapid and agreeable communication with Jersey we submit to the consideration of the inhabitants of that City, whether it would not be good policy in them to clean and improve one of the most neglected towns in the United States. . . ."—Ibid., Jl 27, 1812. 27 "Mr Greame, we are informed, is about to open, in Broadway, what he calls a Stadium, for the accommodation of those who wish to exhibit extraordinary feats of Horsemanship, Military Tactics, Gunnery, Fortification, civil or military Mechanics, or any new inventions, or interesting objects, that cannot be displayed to advantage within the confined space of a covered building."—*N. 28 John Jay writes to Peter Van Schaack: "No event that is highly interesting to our country can be viewed with indifference by good citizens; and there are certain occasions when it is not only their right, but also their duty, to express their sentiments relative to public measures. July 28

"As the war has been constitutionally declared, the people are evidently bound to support it in the manner which constitutional laws do or shall prescribe.

"In my opinion, the declaration of war was neither necessary, nor expedient, nor seasonable; and I think that they who entertain this opinion do well in expressing it, both individually and collectively, on this very singular and important occasion."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 360–61.

The common council orders that the clerk employ a suitable person "to Index such of the Minutes of the Common Council as are not indexed and to cause the papers which were in his office previous to his appointment to be examined and duly arranged."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 218. Aug. 3

In a petition to the common council, Cadwallader D. Colden, in behalf of "the Steam Boat Ferry Company," says: "That after a variety of accidents and disappointments which have produced great delay and expences, Your Memorialists have been enabled to complete a Steam Ferry boat, which has been some time in operation on the Ferry leased by your Memorialists of your Honorable Body. Your Memorialists are happy to be able to state that the boat above mentioned exceeds the most sanguine expectations with respect to her performance—making her passages on an average in less than twenty minutes, and being capable of transporting with the utmost safety and convenience in the roughest weather a burthen heretofore unthought of for any vessel employed as a ferry boat—This establishment your Memorialists believe will be of incalculable advantage to the City. It's success will have an influence on all parts of the world—It will form an epocha in the history of the arts, and can not fail to be highly honorable to the genius of our Country. It is but justice to our fellow Citizen Mr Robert Fulton to say that this success has been owing to his extraordinary ingenuity and perseverance. "

". . . As this is the first steam boat ever built for the purpose to which she is applied, your Memorialists were desirous to see her in operation, and to have the advantage of some experience before they proceeded with their second boat, so that they might avoid any errors or inconveniences which might be found in her construction. And they were in hopes that they might do this and yet have both boats in operation within the time limited by their contract: But owing to several casualties, and disappointments by workmen employed by your Memorialists, the time of completing the first boat has been protracted—beyond all calculation. Your Memorialists are confident that it would be of advantage to the public as well as to themselves, to delay building the second boat till further trial can be made of the one now running, that it may be seen how she will perform in all weathers and particularly in the Winter season, whereby your Memorialists may be enabled to improve on her construction if it should be seen that improvement is practicable.

"The work for the second boat is in forwardness, and she may be completed by the next Spring."

Colden follows this introduction with a request "that the time limited by their contract for building a second boat may be extended to the first of June next;" and that "some place for shelter for passengers in bad weather while they are waiting and while the ferriage is collecting," may be erected by the company to "serve as a ferry house, near the floating bridge."

He says the company intends "so to regulate the ferriage as that they presume a number of market waggons would be induced to cross—But an objection to their doing so at present is that no place is assigned for them when they are in the city."

He asks "whether it would not be of great public benefit to fix a stand for Market Waggons in some convenient place," adding:

"The preservation of the ferry Steam boat is a matter in which the Citizens generally have a deep interest as well as your Memorialists. At the same time the machinery of a steam boat is easily damaged, and a mischievous person might in a few minutes do an injury which it would require a length of time to repair. Nothing would be so likely to prevent an occurrence of this nature as putting the boat in some measure under the protection of the City Watch. Your Memorialists hope that you will be pleased to order that the watch shall pay some attention to the boat."—From the original petition (MS.), signed by Colden, now preserved in metal file No. 47, city clerk's record-room. "

1812 Aug. 3 The board extends the time, as requested, to June 1. It refers the subject of a stand for wagons, and erecting ferry-houses to the market committee; and, for a watchman, to the watch committee. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 219.

" The common council resolves that a standing committee of police, to consist of three persons, shall be appointed with power to report such measures as they deem proper for "promoting the Police of the City and to act in concert with the Magistrates for that important object." It is also resolved that in each ward a company of not more than 100 citizens be organized under the direction of the police magistrates and the police committee as an "extraordinary City Watch," and $500 is appropriated to be placed at the disposition of the committee of police for the detection of offenders.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 221.

" Ephraim Jennings informs the common council that "the contract he entered into for the removal of the old City Hall" has been complied with on his part, and asks that his bond be cancelled. The board grants his request.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 224; descrip. of Pl. 166, III: 848.

" By the common council it is "Resolved, in consideration of the high sense entertained by the Corporation of the City of New York, of the important & beneficial Services rendered to the United States in general and more particularly to the interests and accomodation of this City, by his invention and improvements in Steam Boat navigation, that the freedom of this City be presented to Robert Fulton Esq^r."—*M. " "The Steam Ferry boat Company," with which Robert Fulton is associated, invites the city officials "to Witness the opperations of their Steam Boat across the Hudson to Pawles Hook on friday next."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 227.

" The common council confirms a report which John Randel, Jr. has submitted in conformity to the resolution of June 24, 1811 (q. v.). In this, Randel states: "That he has measured North St. from the Bowery Lane to Lewis Street. That the Streets coming into North St from the south are so irregular as to make it impracticable to obtain their points of intersection with North Street by ranges with any degree of precission.

"That the distance between the Westerly sides of First Street and Lewis Street as measured by him and reduced to horizontal measure of a medium temperature is 4161.385/1000 feet

"The Street Commissioner certifies the distance between these points to be filed in his office as 4150 feet this leaves an excess of 11 385/1000 feet." He suggests that this be divided among the streets in proportion to their width.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 227–28.

" It is resolved by the common council that Third Ave. be opened throughout as designated on the map of the commissioners of streets and roads.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 228. See also ibid., VII: 216.

15 New Yorkers are "highly gratified . . .by a display of military talents and skill in gunnery" on this day, when Gen. Morton's brigade, the "Veteran Corps," the brigade at the West Battery, and the men at Castle Williams, practise shooting, by firing from different points at a hulk anchored for the purpose "in the Bay about 1000 yards from the shore, and equidistant from Castle Williams and the Battery." The firing continued for about two hours, and finally the hulk was ignited, either "by the red hot shot fired by Col. Curtenius' regiment, and which were heated in a travelling forge attached to the brigade, or by the shot from Castle Williams."—Columbian, Ag 16, 1812. The "friends of Liberty, Peace and Commerce" (Federal Republicans) hold a meeting at Washington Hall and adopt numerous resolutions to the effect that the "war lately declared by a slender majority of Congress, is unwise," and that they fear "the American people will, under the name and form of an alliance, be submitted to the will and power of the French emperor." They propose that representatives be chosen in the various counties and that these correspond and co-operate with one another and with the "friends of peace" in other states in pursuing "such constitutional measures as may secure our Independence, and preserve our union; both of which are endangered by the present war."—*Com. News of Capt. Hull's victory over the "Guerrière" is published in New York and characterized as an event "which will endear him to his countrymen and immortalize his name."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 2; N. Y. Spectator, S 5, 1812. See S 7. 2

Capt. Isaac Hull, of the American frigate "Constitution" (see Ag 19), is voted the freedom of the city in a gold box with an appropriate inscription. On Sept. 14, he was requested to sit for his portrait.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 247–48, 253–54. The original MSS. of these resolutions are in metal file No. 39, city clerk's record-room. The gold box cost $325.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 293. The portrait was painted by Jarvis and deposited in 1815 in the picture gallery of the city hall. It cost $400.—Cat. of Works of Art, etc., p. 9; Journal B, 112, comptroller's office. The freedom was formally presented to Hull on Dec. 28(q. v.). 7

"We understand, that in addition to 13 fine companies of uniformed artillery and infantry which Gov. Tompkins brought with him down the Hudson, and which are stationed at Forts Tompkins, Richmond, and Hudson, for the defence of N. York; the following troops are ordered to rendezvous and be encamped for the same service on the 15th inst. viz.: "

1812 Sept. 7 "Gen. Morton's Brigade of uniformed artillery, consisting of Curtenius, Scitcher, Fleet, and Harsin's regiments.

"Colonel Van Beuren's and col. Mape's regiments of infantry, Captain Stryker's company of Riflemen and Captain Piersey's troop of cavalry.

"One company artillery—one of infantry, and one troop of cavalry, are also called into service in Suffolk county for the defence of the East End of Long Island. The whole militia of Suffolk and Queen's counties will be reserved and held in readiness for the last mentioned service.

"We likewise understand that Gen. Hopkins's brigade of infantry, immediately north of the Highlands, have not yet been called out, for which reason it is presumed they are to be retained as a corps de reserve, to march towards the southern and northern frontier, as may be rendered expedient by circumstances.

"The detached regiments of artillery, cavalry, light infantry, and rifle-men, have not yet been put in requisition; but we are informed, that the officers of these corps are in daily expectation of receiving similar orders."—Pub. Adv., S 7; Com. Adv., S 9, 1812. See also Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, I: 393–94.

" The common council agrees that a light four-wheel carriage be obtained to convey the thousand feet of hose which on June 29 the board authorised to be made; and that a company of 12 men, to be known as the "Hose Company," be organized to take charge of the hose and carriage.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 245.

15 What may be called "The First National Nominating Convention" holds its sessions, in New York City, during this and the two days following. Seventy Federalist delegates from eleven states are gathered, all keenly opposed to "Mr. Madison's war;" most prominent among these is Rufus King, who "attends with reluctance." De Witt Clinton is chosen as the nominee for president despite Mr. King's opposition; Jared Ingersoll of Pennsylvania is nominated for vice-president.—Life & Corr. of Rufus King, V: 276–81; Murdock, "The First National Nominating Convention," in Am. Hist. Review, I: 680–83. "No convention was ever assembled from more pure and patriotic motives," says one of the delegates, "nor any whose members were more worthy and respectable, as men and citizens."—Sullivan, Familiar Letters on Public Characters (1847), 349. This was "a highly interesting meeting, as being the first convention of the same sort as those which now present presidential candidates. The meeting was strictly private, and no report of its proceedings was published in any newspaper." —Stanwood, Hist. of the Presidency (1898), 101. Clinton received 89 electoral votes against 128 for Madison.—Ibid., 104.

" "The Drafted Militia, of this city and of Westchester crossed the East river this morning, and proceeded to the encampment at Bath.

"The Artillery were reviewed on the Battery; but for want of sufficient camp equipage they are not to pitch their tents until Saturday. They will then take their station on the North river about two miles above the city."—Com. Adv., S 15, 1812.

22 "The sloop of war John Adams now lying at the Navy Yard, N. York is to be dismantled, and used as a prison ship, during the war.—This vessel was originally a frigate; was cut down to a sloop of war, and was afterwards built upon. After the last alterations she was found so unwieldy, as to be unfit for service. . . ."—Repertory, S 22, 1812.

23 Jas. Jay writes from New York to Jas. Monroe suggesting the use of invisible writing in securing information concerning the enemy's posts; also regarding an embassy to England to see if peace can be secured.—See the original with the Monroe papers, in the N. Y. P. L.

25 The inhabitants of Brooklyn publish their thanks to New York firemen who aided in putting out a fire which threatened to destroy a large part of the town.—Columbian, S 25, 30, 1812.

26 George Frederick Cooke, the English actor, dies in New York. He had been in America for two years (see N 21, 1810), achieving great professional success, which however was constantly interrupted by spells of drunken debauchery. Dr. David Hosack, who attended him during his last illness, afterward wrote to his biographer: "His case . . . adds another lamented example to the long catalogue of those who have prematurely fallen the victims of intemperance." At the time of his death he had been for several months living at Mechanics Hall, on the north-west corner of Broadway and Robinson St. (afterward Park Place). He was buried in the burying-ground of St. Paul's Church, Sept. 27, 1812. —Dunlap, Memoirs of George Fred. Cooke Esq. (1813), II: 334–49; N. Y. Eve. Post, S 26, 1812. See Pl. 90, Vol. III. Sept. 26

Oct. 5 A memorial is presented to the common council signed by committees representing the New York Society Library, The Academy of Arts, and the New York Historical Society, and also by "several highly respectable Citizens of the City," asking for a building in which may be centered the various activities of the before mentioned organizations. The particular subjects which they should wish to include in said Institution would be, "1st a Museum of Natural History. 2d an Academy of Fine Arts 3 Means of Instruction in useful and liberal Sciences such as Chemistry Mechanical Philosophy Agriculture and Botany. 4th a Society for the encouragement of Arts, Manufactures and Commerce. 5 An extensive public Library 6 an Historical Society. 7 An Atheneum or public reading room."

The specific request contained in the memorial was that the common council permit the establishment of an "Institution for the promotion of arts an[d] sciences in this City to be called the 'New York Institution for the promotion of arts and sciences' and to appropriate so much of the present Alms House as may be needful for its compleat accommodation together with such further provision for its perfect establishment as may hereafter appear to be necessary."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 269–70. See Je 13, 1815.

" In a petition (dated Oct. 4) to the common council, Robert Fulton says: "The practicability and, I hope, usefulness, of steam ferry boats being proved in the Paulus hook experiment, I feel a desire to establish a similar communication between this City and Brooklyn. Although the navigation of steam ferry boats on the East river may involve some difficulties which do not occur on the Hudson, yet I have no doubt they may be overcome; And if your honorable body are disposed to show a like liberal patronage to that manifested towards the Steam ferry already established, I shall use my utmost exertions that the result shall be satisfactory to you Gentlemen as patrons of the useful arts.

"I beg leave therefore to propose taking a lease of the ferry from the Fly market to Brooklyn; Should this proposal meet your approbation I shall be happy to confer with such committee as you may think proper to appoint for that purpose."—From the original petition (MS.), signed by Fulton, preserved in metal file No. 47, city clerk's record-room. The board refers it to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 270. See N 30 and D 4.

" The common council orders that Greenwich Market be built on a site offered by Trinity Church for market purposes, 50 feet wide, along the south side of Christopher St., extending from Greenwich St. to Washington St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 211, 273–74. The land was ceded by Trinity on Nov. 2.—Trin. Min. (MS.). This is the second market to be called Greenwich Market, the name having been officially assigned in 1800 (q. v., O 27) to the Spring Street Market. The new market was finished in 1813, and enlarged in 1819.—De Voe, Market Book, 399, 401.

7 "Public Law Library.—The Corporation of the city of New-York having assigned a room in the new City Hall, for the purpose of keeping a Law Library, for the use of the Common Council, the other officers of the Hall, and the judges and lawyers who attend courts; accordingly a well chosen variety of authors, both in the common and civil law, have been supplied by Gould, Banks and Gould, law booksellers of this city, under whose care the library is now kept—It is this day opened for use. The books cannot be taken out of the Hall, but may be consulted in the library room, or taken into any of the courts gratis. . . . The room is in the northwest corner of the Hall, on the same floor with the mayor's and recorder's office."—Columbian, O 7, 1812.

" Thos. Poppleton arrives in New York from Baltimore to enter upon his duties as one of the commissioners for ascertaining the best method of draining the Collect and Lispenard's Meadows (see Je 19). On Oct. 8, he was introduced to Robert Fulton, and on Oct. 12 he was presented to the mayor and some of the corporation.—Poppleton's Journal (MS.) in N. Y. P. L. (N. Y. City MSS., box K-L). See O 15.

12 The common council approves of the street commissioner's map for improving the part of the city between Montgomery and Corlears Sts. south of Water St. It shows the present extent of the docks and wharves and the depth of water to a line 400 ft. south of Water St. The street commissioner has drawn thereon with pencil lines "Front Street 50 feet wide—140 feet from Water 1812 Oct. 12 Street and South Street 70 feet wide 140 feet from Front Street, making in all 400 feet from Water Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 278.

" The corporation of Trinity Church is permitted to "enclose" the Old Greenwich Road from Morton St. to the state prison in accordance with the terms of an agreement made when Trinity Church ceded new Greenwich St to the corporation.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 272, 278–79.

15 By the middle of October, only four months after the declaration of war, 26 privateers had left the port of New York. In all, 52 privateers from New York served in the war.—Coggeshall, Hist. of Am. Privateers and Letters of Marque, 1812–14, 3–4; Appendix, 453–59. See also Maclay, Hist. of Am. Privateers; and Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 883–84.

" Poppleton (see O 7) begins a survey of the Collect. On Oct. 16, the three commissioners (see Je 19) met at Fulton's house and agreed that "the Survey & Levels should be compleated before entering further upon the Business." Poppleton was busy with the survey until the middle of November.—Poppleton's Journal (MS.) in N. Y. P. L. (N. Y. City MSS., box K-L). See, further, N 25.

18 The British sloop "Frolic" is taken by the American ship "Wasp" under the command of Capt. Jacob Jones.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., IV: 80–81. The original signal-book of the British squadron, in which are inscribed the names of the British ships, including the "Frolic," is owned by the N. Y. H. S. See N 30.

24 The American Antiquarian Society is incorporated by act of the legislature of Massachusetts.—A. A. S. Proc. (1812–49), 3–5. The first meeting of the society was held at Boston on Nov. 19.—Ibid., 6–8. Worcester was chosen as the site of the library as this city was at a safe distance from the seaboard.—Ibid., 18.

25 In a sharp action off the Azores, Commodore Stephen Decatur in the "United States" captures the British frigate "Macedonian," killing 43 and wounding 61 of her crew.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., IV: 81–82. See D 16 and 17

26 The common council agrees to open Tenth Ave. "from its intersection with the Bloomingdale Road at Harsenville, to its intersection with the fifteenth Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 286. For the location of Harsenville, see L. M. R. K., III: 987.

" A vote of thanks of the common council is passed to Gouverneur Morris and John Rutherford, who "have performed gratuitously the arduous duties of Commissioners for laying out the Streets of the City." It is also resolved: "that the copies of the Map of the City filed on record in the Secretary's Office be handsomely colored and mounted and that each of said Commissioners be presented with one."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 287.

28 Announcement is made from the office of the "Manhattan Water Works" that "The distribution of water will be stopped tomorrow morning, at 7 o'clock, to clean the Reservoir, and connect a new Reservoir with the old one."—Com. Adv., O 28, 1812.

Nov. 3 James Madison and Elbridge Gerry, Republicans, are elected president and vice-president over their Federalist opponents, De Witt Clinton and Jared Ingersoll.—Mc Kee, National Conventions and Platforms, 14–16.

9 The committee of surveys recommends to the board that the surveys of John Randel, Jr. (see D 31, 1810) will be best reported by "a Map or Maps protracted on a Scale sufficiently large to exhibit accurately the Hills Valleys Rocks Houses. Creeks &c," in order "to render the same a useful and valuable document by which the future regulation of Streets and avenues may with facility be made and giving a profile of the elevations of all the avenues and cross lines." The common council thereupon authorises the committee to make arrangements with Randel for the map.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 297–98. Though Randel proceeded with his surveys, his written contract for the map is dated 1818 (q.v., Ja 26).

25 Evacuation Day is celebrated with the usual parades. Also, the 3d Regiment of N. Y. State Artillery takes possession of the "new fort at Greenwich, called Fort Gansevoort," and in the evening the officers dine with Gov. Tompkins, Gens. Armstrong and Morton, and Adj.-Gen. Paulding at Mechanic Hall. The fort was named after the late Brig.-Gen. Gansevoort.—Merc. Adv., N 27, 1812; Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., III: 257. It was near the intersection of Little W. 12th St. and Tenth Ave. and was commonly called the "White Fort."—L. M. R. K., III: 944; Guernsey, N. Y. & its Vicinity during the War of 1812–15, I: 175–76. There is a view of Fort Gansevoort in Emmet Coll., No. 11361.

Nov. 25 The commissioners for draining the Collect and Lispenard's Meadows resolve "to employ the following Day in accurate observations on the tide in both North & East Rivers at the same instant of time—to ascertain if any, & what difference, either in time or height of the Tide in those Rivers."—Poppleton's Journal (MS.) in N. Y. P. L. (N. Y. City MSS., box K-L). Wm. Bridges made the observations on the North River and Poppleton those on the East River.—Ibid. See, further, D 3.

30 The freedom of the city and an "elegant sword" are voted to Capt. Jacob Jones, late of the U. S. sloop-of-war "Wasp," for his capture of the British warship "Frolic" (see O 18), and thanks are rendered to his brave officers and crew.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 317. The original MS. of the resolution is in metal file No. 39, city clerk's record-room. On March 15, 1813, the corporation paid $35 to G. Thresher for "painting Diploma for Capt Jones of the U S Wasp," and on April 3, 1815, $250 was paid for the sword. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 408; VIII: 178; Journal B, 3, comptroller's office. The presentation of the freedom and the sword took place on April 6, 1815 (q.v.).

" "A Communication from Eli Whitney, Robert Fulton and Thos. H. Poppleton, Commissioners upon Canal Street was read and referred to the Street Commissioner and Canal Committee."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 312. The letter was drawn up on Nov. 27.—Poppleton's Journal (MS.), op. cit.

" Robert Fulton writes a letter to a special committee of the common council again offering to rent the Brooklyn Ferry (see O 5) and "to run a steam Boat calculated for carriages from Beakman Slip; and another for passengers and freight from the fly market." —Original letter in city clerk's record-room; M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 317. See D 4.

Dec. 2 An advertisement reads: "Those Young Men who wish to take an active part in the protection of their country, will have a good chance of volunteering their services for the defence of the City and Harbour of New York, as Artillerist, for the term of One Year, at the rate of Fifteen Dollars per month, Victuals and Cloathes found, as likewise a Musket and Belts, which will be given them at the expiration of a year—The Rendezvous will be opened at Wilkie's Tavern, Cherry-street, between Roosevelt and Pearl-sts. this evening, from 6 until 10 o'clock, when the names of their Officers will be made known."—Com. Adv., D 2, 1812.

3 Poppleton (see O 15 and N 25) writes: "This day we reviewd the general Mass of Ideas Sketches &c &c which at our several meetings had been roughly thrown together in a Common stock; after selecting what we considered most desirable, arranging or combining them into System & altering & improving thereon we unanimously decided on the plan which appeared to us under all circumstances the best to be adopted.—M^{r} F. & M^{r} Whitney undertook to manage the Report & T. P. to proceed with the necessary drawings which are to accompany & explain said report." —Poppleton's Journal (MS.) in N. Y. P. L. (N. Y. City MSS., box K-L). Poppleton was engaged on the drawings until Jan. 29. He made the plans and cross sections, and Fulton made the perspective drawings. The réport was signed on Feb. 15, 1813 (q.v.).

4 The following report of the committee of finance indicates good management of the city's finances: "The Committee of Finance have the honor to inform the Board, that in such high credit does the Corporation stand at present with their fellow Citizens That the Loan ordered on Monday last to be opened for one hundred thousand Dollars at Six per C^{t} per Ann^{n} was subscribed for and filled up in less than five Minutes on Tuesday Morning."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 322.

" The common council agrees to lease the Brooklyn (Fulton) Ferry to Robert Fulton and William Cutting at the rate of $4,500 per annum, steamboats to be placed on the ferry.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 270, 309, 317, 322. The lease was ordered to be executed by the corporation on Feb. 1, 1813.—Ibid., VII: 361. The terms were altered on May 17, 1813.—Ibid., 436, 445, 468, 499. See D 3, 1813.

7 News reaches New York of the victory of the "United States" over the "Macedonian."—Com. Adv., D 7, 1812. See D 16.

" Having been voted the freedom of the city (see Ag 10), Robert Fulton appears before the common council and takes the oath prescribed by law.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 323.

14 Permission is given to an agent of the U. S. to erect a temporary building for a guard and store-house adjacent to Fort Gansevoort on the North River.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 328.

1812 Dec. 15 An advertisement issued from the "Stadium-Broadway," reads: "The running of Mr. Mackenzie's new Carriage, without horses, and now exhibited at this place, is at a rate of five miles per hour, its common speed; but it may be driven at the rate of eight miles; and if the course was rectilinear, it would run at the rate of ten miles per hour. . . . The use of the Stadium, which is very spacious, and susceptible of great convenience, may be had for an observatory, for the display of Military Mechanics, models of new inventions, or any interesting and respectable objects, that cannot be displayed to advantage in a covered building, Apply to Mr. Greame, at the Stadium."—Columbian, D 15, 1812. Mackenzie's carriage was apparently the first American automobile. The Stadium was on the north-east corner of Broadway and Prince St., later the site of Niblo's Garden.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 631; L. M. R. K., III: 985.

" A new daily paper, edited by Henry Wheaton and published by Geo. White, is issued under the title of The National Advocate.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 469. See also Annals of N. Am., 521.

16 "The Frigate United States, Commodore Decatur, and her Prize, the Macedonian [see O 25], are at anchor just above Hurl Gate, waiting for wind and tide."—Com. Adv., D 16, 1812. See D 17.

17 Upon receiving an official account of the action between the "United States" and the "Macedonian," the common council votes the freedom of the city in a gold box and the honour of a portrait to Commodore Decatur, and offers its thanks to his officers and crew. The board also decides to give a public dinner to Decatur, Hull, and Jones (see D 29), and another to the officers and crew of the "United States" (see Ja 7, 1813). In addition, it resolves "that on the arrival of the Frigate United States and her prize in this port the national Flag be displayed on the City Hall. That Brig^{dr} Gen^{l} Morton be requested to cause a national salute to be fired by a Detachment from his Brigade. That the Vessels in the Harbour hoist their colors Mast high and that the Bells in the City be rung for one hour on the occasion."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 333–34. The original MS. of these resolutions is in metal file No. 39, city clerk's record-room. Decatur did not actually receive the freedom until Nov. 4, 1814 (q. v.). His portrait was painted by Thomas Sully in 1814, and cost $500.—Cat. of the Works of Art Belonging to the City of N. Y., 8; Journal B, comptroller's office, 64.

18 A general meeting of merchants and other citizens, "without distinction of party," is held at the Tontine Coffee House, and resolutions are adopted praising the "Gallantry, Skill and Patriotism" of Commodore Decatur and Capts. Hull and Jones. A committee of 15 is chosen to unite with the corporation (see D 17) in honouring these heroes.—Com. Adv., D 19, 1812. See D 29.

21 "The situation of the Lots whereon the old City Hall stood having been represented in a situation offensive and inconvenient to the neighbourhood, it was referred to the St Commissioner City Inspector and Superintendant of Repairs to cause the Lots owned by the Corporation and by Individuals to be enclosed with a Fence and the Street paved."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 337.

26 The British foreign office announces that "the necessary measures have been taken, by the command of his Royal Highness, for the blockade of the ports and harbors of the Chesapeake and of the river Delaware, in the United States of America; and that from this time all the measures authorised by the Law of Nations will be adopted and executed, with respect to all vessels which may attempt to violate the said blockade."—Com. Adv., Mr 1, 1813. See My 26, 1813.

28 In accordance with the resolution of Sept. 7 (q. v.), the freedom of the city, "enclosed in a superb golden box," is formally presented to Capt. Isaac Hull.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 340–41; N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., D 29, 1812. The original MS. of the mayor's address to Hull is preserved in metal file No. 48, city clerk's record-room.

" "Washington Hall [see Jl 4, 1809]. This elegant and spacious Building, situated in Broadway, corner of Reed-street, is now nearly completed; and will be Let or Leased from the first of May next, or Sooner if required. It is well calculated for a splendid Hotel, having forty-one Rooms, thirty-two of which are supplied with fire places. . . ."—Com. Adv., D 28, 1812. The first entertainment at Washington Hall took place on May 4, 1813 (q. v.).

29 Capt. William Bainbridge in the U. S. frigate "Constitution" destroys the British frigate "Java" off the coast of Brazil, killing 48 and wounding 102.—Mc Master, Hist. of the People of the U. S., IV: 84–86. News reached New York on Feb. 18, 1813 (q. v.).

Dec. 29 A public dinner is held at the City Hotel in honour of Commodore Decatur and Capts. Hull and Jones.—National Advocate, D 31, 1812; MS. diary of De Witt Clinton, in N. Y. H. S. Washington Irving, writing to his brother Peter, thus described the occasion: "It was the most splendid entertainment of the kind I ever witnessed. The City Assembly Room was decorated in a very tasteful manner with the colors and flags of the Macedonian. Five rows of tables were laid out lengthways in the room, and a table across the top of the room, elevated above the rest, where the gallant heroes were seated, in company with several of our highest civil and military officers. Upwards of four hundred citizens of both parties sat down to the dinner, which was really sumptuous. The room was decorated with transparencies representing the battles, &c. The tables were ornamented with various naval trophies, and the whole entertainment went off with a soul and spirit which I never before witnessed. I never in my life before felt the national feeling so strongly aroused, for I never before saw in this country so true a cause for national triumph."—Life and Letters of Washington Irving, by Pierre M. Irving (N. Y., 1862), I: 292–93. The corporation paid $200 for the transparencies.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 347. See also Com. Adv., D 30 and 31, 1812.

31 An elaborate ball is held at the City Assembly rooms in honour of the commanders and officers of the victorious frigates. The decorations include flags, mottoes, and transparencies. One of the latter, made by J. J. Holland, is a large painting divided into three compartments, one representing the action between the "Guerrière" and the "Constitution," another depicting the capture of the "Macedonian," and the third showing the defeat of the "Frolic" by the "Wasp." The ball on the whole, it was said, "for splendor of decorations, and brilliancy of company has never been equalled in this country on any public occasion."—National Advocate, Je 4, 1813. See also Guernsey, N. Y. City & Vicinity during the War of 1812–15, I: 158–59.

" The original petitions, orders, and other documents on file in the city clerk's record-room are so voluminous that it has proved impractical, for the purposes of this Chronology, to examine them thoroughly beyond 1812. The extracts already quoted from this source indicate the important character of the material as a contribution to our knowledge of the city's history.

— In this year, the firm of D. & G. Bruce established at New York the first stereotype foundry in the U. S.—Bishop, Hist. of Am. Manufactures, I: 214.

— In this year, the Naval Militia, the Sea Fencibles, Mc Clure's Riflemen, the Republican Greens, and the Eleventh Artillery, were organized in New York.—Chas. S. Clark, in Eve. Post, F 26, 1916.

— "In 1813 there was a distinct church and congregation formed in Garden street, and the Middle and North Churches remained under the charge of the original corporate Church, now [1856] familiarly termed the Collegiate."—De Witt's Discourse (1857), 49.

— In this year, the College of Physicians and Surgeons, having previously occupied temporary quarters (see Mr 12, 1807), built its own building on the north side of Barclay St., west of Broadway.—Francis, Hist. Sketch of the Origin, etc. of the College (1813), with illustration showing façade of new building; Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 288–89. In 1836, it removed to 67 Crosby St.—Colton, A Summary Historical (1836). See, further, L. M. R. K., III: 940.

— In this year, assessments were levied for opening Fair St., and for paving Broadway between Leonard and Canal Sts.—Index to Assess. Rolls, Vol. I.

— In this year, "a few individuals, desiring to add to the value of their property west of Lumber Street, conceived a plan of putting a street through the northern portion of Trinity churchyard. Favorable action on their selfish scheme was taken by the Common Council, and nothing but a thorough and vigorous protest from the authorities of this [Trinity] Parish and many influential citizens prevented the desecration of ground which for nearly one hundred and fifty years had been used as a burial-place. The part of the churchyard which it was proposed thus sacrilegiously to invade, was that in which many of the soldiers and officers of the American Army, . . . were buried. . . ."

"In 1832 the project was renewed. Though meeting with ap-

1813 proval from a portion of the daily press, it was resented by the more — thoughtful as an indignity and a misuse of private property."—Dix, Hist. of Trinity Church, IV: 156–57. See S 25, 1832.

— In 1813, improvements were still being made in the city hall. The common council ordered, on March 8, that chairs be furnished for the grand jury room (M.C.C., 1784-1831, VII: 398); on May 10, that window blinds be put up "in the room appropriated as an office to His Exc^y the Governor of the State" (ibid., VII: 463); and on Oct. 4, that the supreme court room be "suitably furnished" (ibid., VII: 578). See, further, 1814.

Jan. Washington Irving writes: "This war has completely changed — the face of things. You would scarcely recognize our old peaceful city. Nothing is talked of but armies, navies, battles, etc. . . .

"Had not the miserable accounts from our frontiers dampened in some measure the public zeal I believe half of our young men would have been military mad."—Guernsey, N. Y. City & its Vicinity during the War of 1812–15, II: 39.

4 The increasing practice of taking ignorant, poor, and unwary persons to prison for the purpose of obtaining fees is noted with disapprobation by the common council.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 345–46.

" The Commissioners' Map (or Randel Survey) is a public record, and the common council has decided that an exclusive right to publish it cannot be given. The board, nevertheless, orders 40 of the engraved maps made by Wm. Bridges.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 305, 345. See also summary under N 16, 1811.

15 The commissioners, appointed by the act of June 19, 1812 (q.v.), "to ascertain the best method of conveying off the waters from the collect and Lispenards Meadows in the City of New York," Feb. 15 report as follows:

"That we have taken an accurate survey and delineated a correct topographical plan of the district comprehending the Collect, Lispenards Meadows and the adjacent lands, and are unanimous in the opinion, that Canall Street may be so constructed as to afford ample means of conveying off all the waters which, under any circumstances, may collect from said district.

"It has formerly been proposed to cut a Canal across the Island, from the North to the East River, which should answer the double purpose of taking off the water from the streets of the City and admitting Boats and Vessels to deposit their Cargoes on its Banks. Those who advocated this proposition entertained an opinion that at certain times of the tide the water was several feet higher on one side of the Island, than on the other; which they alledged would produce a strong current thro' the proposed Canal and keep it clear of all sediment—By an attentive observation of the attitude of the tide on both sides of the Island, at the same time, during its rise and fall, we find there is no material difference—Hence it appears, that the cause which was supposed would keep the Canal clear of sediment and filth, does not exist.

"A more recent proposition, is a Canal beginning at the North River and terminating in a Bason at the Collect, with a lock at the North River, where it commences: In this case, if the water in the canal is brought on a level with the water in the Bason, it will require the banks of the Canal to be raised so high as to prevent the water flowing from the adjacent grounds into it, and thus defeat one of its primary objects. If there are two locks, one at the North River and one at the Bason, in dry weather, Engines would be required to supply them, and it would also be difficult to dispose of the Surplus Water, by which the Canal and Bason would be overflowed in heavy rains. There are other serious objections to this proposition, one of which is the necessity of having nearly twenty Bridges across the Canal, within the distance of about four thousand feet.

"It has likewise been proposed in building Canal Street, to form an open passage in its center, of an uniform descent from the head of the Collect to the North River, to receive only the water from the streets—It is believed, this passage would be liable to obstruction by snow and ice in Winter, and that in Summer, its contents exposed to the action of the Sun, would render the atmosphere in the vicinity disagreeable—it would be a great blemish to the aspect of the street and is liable to the objection of numerous Bridges, before mentioned.

"A considerable part of the District in question, is a Glade of low ground, extending across the Island, which will in a short time, be covered with Buildings and must in a few Years, be embraced in the very heart of the City; hence it becomes a consideration of incalculable importance that a plan should be adopted, which will effectually prevent an accumulation of filth and stagnant waters, generating noxious exalations. Should this section of the City be overspread with temporary, indifferent and irregular buildings of all shapes and dimensions promiscuously Located as caprice or circumstances may dictate, it is greatly to be apprehended that it would become such a prolific source of Contagion and disease as often to render a large portion of the City uninhabitable. That it will be so filled up is certain, unless prevented by some positive regulation.

"Whatever may be the origin of that deplorable malady which has more than once depopulated this City, all parties will agree in the fact, that it is in the atmosphere of such a place as above described, that it becomes most contagious.

"We have bestowed much attention upon the subject referred to our consideration, and submit the following as the best plan, which we have been able to devise—viz^t

"That a tunnel or covered Sewer, of an Eliptical form, be laid along the Center of Canal Street, from the North River to Broadway —The horizontal diameter of the tunnel to be sixteen feet, and the vertical diameter eight feet.—said tunnel to continue uniformly diminishing from Broad Way to the head of Collect Street—That the bottom of the tunnel be placed on a level with low water mark, at the North river and three feet above low water mark, at Broadway:—That for the purpose of promoting a free circulation of air through the tunnel, eliptical apertures or openings, six feet long and four feet wide, be left in the roof of the tunnel—one in the space of every hundred feet, throughout its whole length. Each opening 1813 Feb. 15 to be covered with a trellis work of Cast Iron, rising eighteen inches above the pavement, and terminating in a suitable Spire for Supporting a Lamp:—By this method, a large volume of tide water extending itself up to Broad Way, will be admitted into the tunnel, every twelve hours, which will drive out an equal volume of air, and thus the tunnel will be ventilated twice in twenty four hours."

[Advantages of this plan are mentioned. It is also proposed to have this part of town restricted to uniform and attractive buildings, to make it more inviting, having the depth of all cellars limited to prevent water accumulating in them and not flowing off.]

"More fully to illustrate our ideas in this particular, we have caused a perspective drawing of a part of a street, built in the manner we propose, to be made and placed among the exhibits, accompanying this report."

[It is stated property values will increase, both in this locality and elsewhere.]

"It appears to us there are many considerations, which forcibly recommend the continuance of Canal Street, from the North River to Broad way, as at present laid out. This street being an hundred feet wide and running nearly in a North west and southeast direction, affords an excellent inlet for ventilating the City; at the same time it is itself finely ventilated, by numerous cross streets." [They suggest that the direction of Collect St. and part of Canal St. be varied] "so as to make this avenue lead, in a direct line from the junction of Canal Street and Broadway, to the junction of Pearl and Chatham Streets, corresponding in width throughout with Canal Street. . . . Being a leading avenue, it would of course become a street of business, and thus it would not only derive support from its own importance, but greatly enhance the value of the whole district thro' which it passes.

"Viewing New York as preeminently designated by nature to be the point where the streams of Commerce meet, and from whence they again diverge in foreign enterprise, and believing it destined to become the great emporium of North America, we cannot but regard whatever may contribute to the Salability, convenience or embellishment of the City as of incalculable importance, both to its present and future Citizens, and to the inhabitants of this and the neighbouring States. If that portion of the City, which is the subject of this report, is suffered to be built up, in an irregular, huddled, promiscuous and confused manner, it will entail a curse upon the City and posterity. . . .

"We have delineated a plan of the ground to which this subject immediately relates, together with profiles, sections and drawings, accompanied with estimates and explanations, by which the method we have adopted, is more specifically exhibited. . . .

The street commissioner presents to the common council the plan of the commissioners appointed to ascertain the best method of draining Lispenard's Meadows and the Collect (see F 15). He also presents a plan "that will not cost more than one third of that proposed by the Commissioners and can be kept clean at less than one fifth of the Expense and if constructed in the manner which is contemplated no water would stand or remain in it and could be kept perfec[t]ly clean. The Maps and profiles now exhibited are imperfect Sketches, but with a little explanation may shew the intention." The several plans are referred to the canal committee.—*M. C. Robert Macomb presents a memorial to the common council stating that he intends to petition the legislature for permission "to build a Bridge & Dam from Bussings point to Devoux point in Westchester," and asking the approval of the board, "as he proposes to fix a moderate Toll . . . and is willing to devote one half to the use of the poor of this City." The matter is referred to the road committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 384. The committee reported favourably on March 8, but as they understood that an application of a similar nature was pending in the legislature and as they did not know how far the rights of third persons might be involved, they recommended that the corporation take no specific action, which was approved.—Ibid., VII: 397. The original MS. report is preserved in metal file No. 48, city clerk's record-room. See, further, Ap 8. "

The Canal St. committee reports to the common council that the street commissioners' plan for draining Lispenard's Meadows (see F 23), although it "is not without its objections," is preferable to that of the commissioners (see F 15). The objections to the commissioners' plan include: the "extreme difficulty of securing proper Foundations for the proposed Tunnel;" the "want of sufficient descent to carry off the sediment;" the "impracticability of cleansing the Tunnel or the lateral conduits;" the "impossibility that an eliptical Tunnel of the dimensions proposed, which at flood Tide must be nearly full of tide water, . . . would be able to carry off the torrents of water which must seek their way into it, in the rainy Seasons;" the "quantities of mephitical or noxious airs which are always generated and condensed in Sewers under ground and which must be continually extricating thro' the air wells proposed to be made, especially during the rising of the Tide;" and the "enormous expense of constructing it, the extreme difficulty of repairing it." The common council approves the report and directs that a memorial be sent to the legislature asking it to reject the plan of the commissioners.— "

12 Common schools having been established by the legislature for the state of New York outside of the city of New York, by chap. 242 of the laws of 1812, the provisions of this act are now extended to the city, under special regulations. The common council is authorised to appoint annually for the city five "commissioners of school money," whose duty it shall be to distribute school moneys to the Free School Society, Orphans Asylum Society, Economical School Society, African Free School, and to other such religious societies in the city "as now support or hereafter shall establish charity schools," such distribution to be made "in proportion to the average number of children between the ages of four and fifteen years, taught there in the year preceding such distribution, free of expense." Any such school must have been in session for at least nine months the preceding year, and the money must be used solely for "wages of the teachers."—Laws of N. Y. (1813), chap. 52. See also ibid. (1814), chap. 192, and ibid. (1815), chap. 252. See, further, N 19, 1824. The Free School Society, in 1815, received $3,708.14 as its share in the first apportionment. 15 Gov. Tompkins sends to the assembly the following message regarding the protection of New York City: "Fort Columbus, Castle Williams and a fort to guard the pass at Buttermilk channal, (all upon Governor's Island) are completed and equipped, with everything needful for action. The battery on the Southwest point of New York Island, the battery at the foot of Hubert and Laight Street; fort Gansevoort and the works on Ellis's and Bedlow's Islands are likewise furnished and equipped, excepting however Fort Gansevoort, the guns of which are not mounted, but they will be so in a short time.

"The foundation of an extensive work on Hendrick's reef opposite to the State fortifications at the Narrows, is laid, and I am assured that it will progress the moment the state of the weather will justify the commencement of the mason's work. . . .

"A work has also been begun at Sandy Hook. These together with the fortifications on the westerly side of the Narrows, erected by this State, and those at the navy yard, at the Wallabout, are the only sites which are occupied, either with batteries, or with works in a State of forwardness.

"An Arsenal has been built by the United States on the high ground of New Jersey, north west of Harsimus, and equi-distant from Hoboeken and Paulus's hook; and they possess a magazine, laboratory arsenal &c. in & near the City of New York. . . . Mar. 15

"It is probable that 3000 troops in actual service, are now stationed in and about the harbour of New York. . . . That number is, however, in my opinion, very inadequate to render that important city secure. . . .

"Preparatory to an estimate of the forces which may be sufficient for the harbour of New York, it will be proper to mention the points, which, in addition to the present fortifications may be occupied to great advantage.

"I. A battery upon the block which has been sunk opposite the Navy Yard, on the mud bank or Island formed between the East River, and the Channel of the Wallabout Bay, would be a great protection to the easterly side of the city; such a work it is probable will be erected by the navy department.

"II. An open excavated battery of position on the high bank of the Long Island shore, between the house of Jeremiah Johnson and Williamsburgh would be very powerful and commanding.

"III. A similar work will be required on the westerly side of the river, at or near Corlear's Hook.

"IV. A Battery of 8 or 10 Columbiads at some proper place on the shore of the East River between Throggs Neck and Blackwell's Island, is necessary to guard against the approach of vessels from the sound.

"V. Works at Hoeboeken and Paulus's hook should also be occupied.

"VI. A Bomb battery for 5 or 6 ten inch mortars, at or near the Quarantine ground, will be essential to prevent vessels from laying in that anchorage, to repair damage, or to waite for a favorable wind or tide.

"VII. Redoubts, each containing a block house, upon the high ground of Long Island, southwest of Brooklyn, which commands Redhook, Governor's Island, and the City, and also upon the eminence in the rear of the fortifications on Staten Island will be of great importance. . . ." If these latter defences are built and properly manned, Tompkins estimates that the forces at New York, "with the seamen, mariners & fencibles in the harbour," will amount to at least 12,500 men.—Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, III: 282–90.

The freedom of the city and a piece of plate are voted to Capt. James Lawrence for capturing and destroying the British sloop-of-war "Peacock" with the American sloop-of-war "Hornet" (see F 24), and a public dinner is planned for the "gallant crew"—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 418–19, 583–85. The corporation paid G. Thresher $70 for "Execu^{g} Freedom City for Com^{dr} Bainbridge & Capt^{n} Lawrence."—*M. C. 1813 Mar. 29 The ferry committee reports favourably on the petition (M.C.C., 1784–1831, VII: 365) that a ferry be established at Spring St. Basin to "Harsimus Hoboken and Wehawk," to which recommendation the common council agrees.—Ibid., VII: 417. See L. M. R. K., III: 943.

" On account of the delay of the state legislature regarding provisions for defences of this city and harbour, the common council resolves that the comptroller be authorised to borrow, from time to time from the city banks, money not to exceed $100,000, to be used at the discretion of the committee of defence. It is hoped that the state will later reimburse the city for such expenditure.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 420–21. See Ap 5.

Apr. 5 It is enacted by the state legislature "that the mayor, recorder and aldermen of the city of New-York shall . . . perform all the duties enjoined . . . on the supervisors of the respective counties of the state."—Laws of N. Y. (1813), II: 519. There was no distinct board of supervisors for the county of New York until Ap 15, 1857 (q. v.).

" The common council agrees to the following recommendations of the committee of defence: 1, That the necessary wages for manning 15 of the unused gunboats now lying in the harbour be paid by the common council, and that authority be given to open a rendezvous for the purpose of engaging and organizing the necessary number of men, who shall be engaged to serve for three months (see My 24);

2, That the corps of 120 cartmen, enlisted in September last to move the 20 or 30 pieces of heavy ordnance now stationed at the United States arsenal to such positions as may be requisite, be called into practice twice a week to accustom the horses to that particular kind of draft, and the drivers to their duties.

These recommendations are made in view of the present prospect of an appropriation by the legislature for the purpose of the defence of this city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831,) VII: 426–27.

8 Robert Macomb (see Mr 1) is authorised by the legislature to build a dam across the Harlem River, from Bussing's Point in the Ninth Ward to Devoe's Point in Westchester, having a gate or lock in the centre. The rights of John B. Coles and the Harlem Bridge Co. are not disturbed, as the dam is required by the act of the legislature to be built above the bridge authorised to be built by the Harlem Bridge Co.—Laws of N. Y. (1813), chap. 148. On April 19, Macomb informed the common council of the passage of the act, and asked that he be permitted "to build said Dam forthwith agreably to said act; and that the City surveyor may be ordered to locate the same so as to conform as nearly as possible with the Plan of the City." The matter was referred to the committee on surveys.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 435. See Je 21. See also ibid., VII: 384, 397.

9 The legislature passes "An Act to reduce several Laws, relating particularly to the City of New-York, into one Act."—Laws of N. Y. (1813), chap. 86 (36th sess.) This act was published in this year by the common council as a separate volume. There is a copy in the N. Y. P. L.

" To further encourage manufacturing (see Mar. 22, 1811), the state legislature incorporates "The Commission Company" to aid manufacturing companies, as well as private individuals engaged in domestic manufactures, in "disposing of articles solely of American manufacture," and "to make loans thereon when deposited for sale." The business and transactions of the company were "limited to the city of New-York."—Laws of N. Y. (1813), chap. 150.

" The legislature authorises the common council to make public wells and pumps in any of the streets, the expense thereof to be "estimated and assessed among all the owners or occupants of the houses and lots of ground intended to be benefited thereby." Overseers of the wells and pumps in the several wards are to be appointed annually by the mayor, recorder, and aldermen; such overseers to render quarterly accounts.—Laws of N. Y. (1813), II: 425–27. See Ja 31, 1817.

" "Yesterday afternoon [April 9], alarm guns were fired on Staten Island and echoed from our City Batteries. Some of the Pilots, who came up from the Hook last evening, state, as the ground of the alarm, that the Acasta frigate was in sight of the Light House."—Com. Adv., Ap 10, 1813.

The Anthony St. Theatre, on Anthony St. (now Worth St.), near Broadway, is opened.—Brown, I: 82. 12

It is ordered that Washington St., from Morton St. to the state prison, be opened and rendered passable.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 433. "

The legislature appropriates $22,000 "for the purpose of erecting a redoubt or protecting work on Signal Hill, near the Narrows on Staten Island."—Laws of N. Y. (1813), chap. 203. 13

The legislature repeals the proviso in the act of May 26, 1812 (q. v.), concerning the sale of the government house and grounds.—Laws of N. Y. (1813), chap. 203. See Ap 19. "

Fulton writes from New York to Secretary of the Navy Jones, outlining plans for the destruction of British boats by means of his torpedo invention, and accompanying them here and there with pen-and-ink sketches.—Cat. of Fulton MSS. and documents, sold at Andersons, Ap. 26–27, 1921, by order of Mrs. A. T. Sutcliffe, item 166. See also ibid., items 168 and 178. See Mr 26 and Ap 27. 19

The comptroller presents a report to the common council containing suggestions for gradually paying the city's debt, the establishment of a sinking fund being one of the chief ones.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 437–40. On July 2 (q. v.), the board agreed to a recommendation that a law be framed to establish a sinking fund. "

The common council orders that a new brick house be erected for Engine No. 11 at Old Slip near the old site, and that another brick house be built for Engine No. 9 at the head of the drain in Broad St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 440–41. "

The common council resolves "that the Finance Committee and Comptroller be directed to effect the purchase of the Government House in this City agreably to the Terms of the act in that case made and provided at the last session of the Legislature" (see Ap 13).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 442. "

The "Eagle Manufacturing Co." is incorporated (one of the earliest industrial organizations in New York), for the purpose of making cotton, woolen, and linen goods.—Laws of N. Y. (1813), 568; ibid. (1817), chap. 61. This company was reported, in 1818, to have "erected an extensive building at Greenwich, where they have a great number of people employed." Having neglected to provide by-laws, for the election of directors for the second year, this company ceased to be a corporate body; but this was remedied by an application to the legislature, which revived the charter on Feb. 28, 1817, for 20 years from its original date.—Blunt, Strangers' Guide (1818), 161–62; Laws of N. Y. (1817), chap. 61. Until 1923, when it was torn down, a frame house stood at 11 Christopher St., one of a row of houses formerly occupied by Scotch weavers.—Peterson, Landmarks of New York, 61. Cf. 1822. 26

About 1,600 Americans under Gens. Pike and Dearborn assault and capture York (Toronto), the capital of Upper Canada.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., IV: 43–44. 27

An agreement is signed by Robert Fulton and Elijah Mix under which the former turns over to the latter two torpedoes with their igniting locks to be used in destroying British vessels of war. Fulton is to receive one-third of all bounties and Mix and his men two-thirds.—Cat. of Fulton MSS. and documents, sold at Anderson's April 26–27, 1921, by order of Mrs. A. T. Sutcliffe, item 169. "

Col. Proctor with a force of British and Indians invests Fort Meigs (in north-western Ohio near Lake Erie), commanded by Gen. Harrison, and begins a seige which lasted until May 9. The timely arrival of Gen. Clay with a body of Kentucky volunteers compelled Proctor to retire. He made another unsuccessful attempt to take the fort in July.—Winsor, VII: 387, 431. See also McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., IV: 25–27. 28

Publication of a monthly paper, entitled The Booksellers' Advertiser, and Spirit of the Literary World, and devoted exclusively to advertisements, is begun by Charles Wiley.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 385. May —

1813 My 3 The British under Admiral Cockburn burn Havre de Grace, Md.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., IV: 124–25.

4 The common council gives a "Splendid Naval Dinner" at Washington Hall (see D 28, 1812) to Capt. Lawrence of the "Hornet" and his crew, this being the first entertainment held at the hall. The petty officers, seamen, and marines dine in the ball room, and Lawrence and his officers with the corporation, the judges of the courts, Col. Swift, etc., in one of the dining-rooms on the first floor. Both rooms are decorated with paintings, by Holland, descriptive of the various American naval victories and complimentary to the commanders who achieved them. In the evening the company visited the Park Theatre, which was "brilliantly illuminated" in their honour.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 5, 1813; Guernsey, N. Y. City & Vicinity during the War of 1812–15, I: 208–9. One of the printed invitations to the dinner is preserved in metal file No. 39, city clerk's record-room. On May 10, the corporation paid $517 for this entertainment.—Journal B, p. 10, comptroller's office. In less than one month, Lawrence was killed in an engagement at sea.—See Je 1.

10 Martling & Cozzens announce that they have moved to "Tammany Hall, near the Park and New City Hall," where they have opened "a house of public entertainment."—National Advocate, My 10, 1813.

" The common council orders that First Ave. between 10th and 25th St. be opened and directs the proper officers to carry the same into effect.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 458. On Nov. 1, the attorney was directed to open the avenue from 10th to North St. as it would afford a short and direct route to Bellevue.—Ibid., VII: 596–97.

" The common council grants two lots at the corner of Elm and Leonard Sts. to the Mechanics Society for the purpose of a free school for the education of children of poor mechanics.

The board also agrees to aid the trustees of the African School by remitting to them rent which must be paid on unexpired leases on the lots in William St. nearly opposite Harmony Hall, where a school for 400 pupils is to be built. The trustees are to be given a lease on these lots on the terms and conditions specified in a report agreed to in the common council, Feb. 7, 1810.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 461–62.

" The common council orders that the road committee take measures for placing milestones at proper places on the island. The measurements are to start at city hall.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 463. Regarding the milestones on Manhattan, see 18th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1913), 90–91; 21st Ann. Rep. (1916), 221–22; 23d Ann. Rep. (1918), 240–46; also L. M. R. K., III: 960–61.

13 The "Macedonian" and the "United States" are anchored at the Hook "in full view of the enemy."—Com. Adv., My 12 and 14, 1813.

14 "The Telegraph on Staten Island displayed, at 12 o'clock this day, four black and two white balls, indicating the approach of four ships of the line and two frigates. One of the ships of the line was, we understand, near the bar."—Com. Adv., My 14, 1813.

" An editorial on the "State of our city" declares: "General Izard, by permission of the corporation, ordered the beautiful walk of our Battery fronting on the water, to be broken up, just sufficiently to present a shapeless mass and ruin the promenade, and there he has left it. He has no money we believe to go any further. Three regiments of volunteers raised for the defence of the city, have been discharged. And we feel authorised to ask the question if the General has not received express orders from Washington, that in no event is he to call out the militia at the expence of the General government? They want their money to lay out for purposes of more consequence to themselves, in the western district. Lastly, the flotilla has been ordered out of service all excepting 15 boats. The corporation, however, have requested Com. Lewis to retain them until they can receive an answer from Washington to their letter entreating that they may not be discharged, but be left for the defence of the city; which request was complied with, on condition that the corporation would themselves engage to pay them out of their own funds, if government should persist in discharging them. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 14, 1813. These statements were contradicted by the National Advocate, which said: "It is untrue, that General Izard has left the battery a shapeless mass, after breaking it up by permission of the corporation. On the contrary, the work has been delayed by unfavorable circumstances, the effect of which have now ceased, and it will be immediately completed, and the cannon mounted. It is untrue that he has no money to go further. It is untrue that the three regiments of volunteers raised for the defence of the city have been discharged. On the contrary, there are several thousands now in service for its defence. And we are authorized to answer the question put in the Post, by saying that the General has not received orders from Washington, not to call out the militia at the expense of the United States' government. On the contrary, there is now a large body of Jersey militia in the pay of the government, and stationed at different important posts. . . ."—National Advocate, My 15, 1813. See, however, N. Y. Eve. Post, My 18, 1813. May 14

Nine deserters from the "Acasta" frigate arrive in New York via Elizabethtown. "They informed us, that the crew of the Acasta were almost in a state of mutiny . . . and that the frigate had not more than six days supply of water—her crew consisted of about 300 men. These seamen further state, that the Valiant 74, has about 700 men, and mounts 92 guns—that they could see our frigates every day and intended to attempt to destroy them in the course of a few evenings, with their Rocket Arrows."—Com. Adv., My 18, 1813. Besides the "Acasta" and the "Valiant," another 74 gun ship and three more British frigates were off the Hook, and two ships of war were "off Broad Sound."—Ibid., My 17, 1813. 15

The first lieutenant of the "Acasta" frigate informed an incoming ship on May 17 that "the Port of New-York would be considered in a state of rigorous blockade after the 19th inst."—Com. Adv., My 19, 1813. See My 26. 19

The common council confirms the report of the comptroller which recommends the establishment of proportionable quit-rents for grants of water lots. "It is proposed to have a maximum & a minimum Rate; the Maximum to be the highest sum for grants in the most valuable and highly improved parts of the City. The Minimum the lowest sum for which grants in any of the Districts herein after proposed shall be made, and that an additional quit rent be paid every seven Years, on the minimum rate, until it becomes by improvement equally valuable with any other, (or nearly so) and then to pay the maximum rate." 24

In estimating the rates to be paid the following matters are taken into consideration: ". . . it [would not] be proper to have the same rates on the North and East rivers, because property is not so valuable or productive now, and probably never will be on the former as on the latter, it being much more hazardous for Vessels to lie at Wharves in the winter at the North, than the East side.

"The difference however would not be so great as might at first be imagined, because the docking out and making of Bulk heads on the Hudson, (where the water is generally shoal) is much less expensive than on the East, where the Water is in most places very deep." It is therefore proposed that the maximum rate per foot on the East River be fifty cents more than on the North River. For the purpose of fixing the minimum rates and the amounts of increase proportionably the East River from the Battery to North St. is divided into five districts and the North River is divided into three.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 476–80. See also ibid., VII: 501.

Regarding the action of the common council with reference to manning 15 gunboats (see Ap 5), the secretary of the navy having reported that the department could not order the boats into service unless the corporation would pay and maintain the men, the board therefore agrees "to man & vitual 15 Gunboats for the space of three months."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 480. "

The "United States" and the "Macedonian" sail from New York.—Com. Adv., My 25, 1813. 25

Admiral Sir John Borlase Warren, by proclamation from Bermuda, announces to all neutral powers that there is a "most strict and rigorous Blockade of the ports and Harbours of New York, Charleston, Port Royal, Savannah, and the River Mississippi in the United States of America."—Com. Adv., Jl 6, 1813. See N 16. 26

The "beautiful Steam Boat Fulton" is launched from Brown's ship-yards. "We understand she is intended to run between New-York and New-Haven as a packet boat."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 29, 1813; Man. Com. Coun. (1866), 733, 734. See N 26. 29

John Jay, writing to Noah Webster, says: "It is not improbable 31

1813 May 31 that doubts prevail respecting the design and tendency of the work you have in hand. The literary productions of Britain and America being interesting to each other, many are of opinion, and I concur in it, that the English language and its orthography should be the same in both countries. Apprehensions have been entertained that your dictionary would tend to impair that sameness; and those apprehensions may, to a certain degree, have had an unfavourable influence."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 373.

" A memorial is sent to Washington urging the government to take immediate further steps to protect New York Harbour against attack. Among the facts related in the memorial are these: "that hostile Ships of War are at this moment cruising within 25 Miles of this City and that with a favorable Wind Ships of the line can come up to our Wharves in two hours, from the Ocean . . .;" also that "the number of Men stationed in the different Forts is totally inadequate, and no call has been made upon the Militia to supply the deficiency: . . . that the important works on Hendricks Reef on the adjoining heights of Long Island at Sandy Hook, at the Battery on this Island, & at Fort Ganzevoort are in a very imperfect state—and the pass to this City by the Sound is entirely undefended and it is now well understood that a Ship of the line can approach us in that d[i]rection with very inconsiderable risk as to the Navigation. . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 486–87. The original draft of this memorial is in metal file No. 48, city clerk's record-room.

" The common council agrees that Avenue A shall be opened from the northerly side of North St. to the East River.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 487.

" Alderman Mesier, from the market committee, reports to the common council that Washington Market (see Je 1, 1812) is not "in a state to receive the Butchers," and it is thereupon ordered that the committee make "temporary arrangements for the Butchers near the Old Hudson Market."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 488. Washington Market was "fully established" before the close of the year.—De Voe, Market Book, 407.

June — During this month, Rev. John Stanford, chaplain of the state prison (see My 21, 1812), became chaplain also of several municipal institutions, the bridewell, Magdalen house, orphan asylum, debtors' prison, penitentiary, lunatic asylum, marine hospital, and city hospital.—Sommers, Memoir of John Stanford, 112.

1 The American frigate "Chesapeake" is captured by the British ship "Shannon" off Halifax. Capt. James Lawrence and Lieut. Augustus Ludlow of the former are mortally wounded during the engagement.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., IV: 91–95. See Je 4 and Ag 28.

3 "We understand that the late conduct of the Indians on our frontiers has been such as to have induced their red brethren of this city [the Tammany Society] to come to a determination to dissolve the connection between them. The accounts of the very ill-behaviour of the great chief Walk-in-the-water, are so bad, that his near name sake here, Water-Lot, has come to a formal determination, of which he gave notice at the last meeting, to abjure the Society, unless they would immediately express their decided disapprobation of the British allies, by discarding the custom of painting & wearing bear skins on the 4th of July. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 3, 1813. See Je 24 and 30.

4 News of the engagement between the "Chesapeake" and the "Shannon" (see Je 1) reaches New York.—N. Y. Spectator, Je 5 and 9, 1813.

5 The Shamrock; or, Hibernian Chronicle (see D 15, 1810) is suspended with the issue of this date. It was revived on June 18, 1814.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 492–93; Early Newspapers II: 428.

7 Robert Fulton writes to Cadwallader Colden: "You will have the goodness to immediately take the necessary measures for obtaining an injunction to stop the Steam ferry boat which runs from the Bear Market to Hoboken."—Cat. of Fulton MSS. and documents, sold at Anderson's, April 26–27, 1921, by order of Mrs. A. T. Sutcliffe, item 173. On Aug. 2, John Stevens informed the common council that he had been prohibited by Fulton from running steamboats at Hoboken Ferry, and asked that horse boats might be considered an adequate substitute.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 533.

" Three payments made by the common council between this date and Aug. 9 for filling in Collect lots total $486.48.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 496, 511, 544. See My 25, 1812, and My 30, 1814. June 7

Daniel W. Crocker announces that "Washington Hall, No. 282 Broad-way, New York, Is now opened for the accommodation of the Public, as a Hotel . . . the rooms are spacious and airy, and the bed-rooms (in a building separate from the Hotel) are neat, convenient and retired, with one bed in each room. In the vicinity of Washington Hall are, the City Hall, and the New York, Manhattan, Washington, and Salt-Water-Baths. The Coffee-Room, in which the Daily Papers will be kept, and which will be open to the Public, fronts, as well as the Dining-Room, on Broadway. In the second story of the Hall is the most elegant and spacious Assembly-Room in the City, perhaps in the United States. . . ."—Com. Adv., Je 12, 1813. 12

The common council refers to a committee on surveys a remonstrance of John B. Coles against "a Bridge & Dam across Harlaem River about to be erected by Rob[t] MacComb Esq[r]" (see Ap 8).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 497. On Aug. 9, Robert Morris, "proprietor of lands in the County of Westchester in the vicinity of Devoes Point," presented a memorial stating "that the exclusive priviledges granted by the Legislature to John B. Coles for his Bridge across Haerlem River have been injurious to the Petitioner and to the owners of land in that neighbourhood," and urging the common council to approve the proposal of McComb.—Ibid., VII: 539. See also ibid., VII: 547. See, further, S 20. 21

An editorial reads: "The Fourth of July is approaching, when it is customary for the Tammany, and some other societies in this city, to wear bucks-tails in their hats, dress themselves like savages, and imitate the manners of the red men of the woods.—These exhibitions, at all times ridiculous and absurd, will, after the cruelties which have been committed by the Tammany-men of the wilderness, be little short of criminal,—we hope, therefore, never to see our city again disgraced by them."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 24, 1813. See Je 3 and 30. 24

An unsuccessful attempt is made by private individuals to blow up the British fleet off New London.—Com. Adv., Je 28, 29, and 30, 1813. See also Guernsey, N. Y. City & Vicinity during the War of 1812–15, I: 279–81. 25

The Tammany Society announces its preparations for the celebration of Independence Day, and a postscript to the notice states: "Members will be furnished with badges to be worn on the occasion, at the Society room, as provided under the new arrangement."—National Advocate, Je 30, 1813. Commenting on this, the Evening Post (see Je 3 and 24) says: "It always gives us pleasure to see the birthday of our liberty noticed by proper demonstrations of joy and gratitude: But what gives us the most satisfaction is to observe by the above mentioned notification that the Tammany Society are about to abandon their savage habits; and intend to celebrate the day with decency and decorum. In the notification we find none of the unmeaning jargon, which has so long disgraced the advertisements of the society;—no Sachem, Winskinski, season of flowers or fruits—no Panther tribe—Bear tribe—Raccoon nor Skunk tribe. From the N. B. it appears that the dresses and badges of the members are also to undergo a change; and we hope under 'the new regulation' mentioned, the use of the ridiculous cars, loaded with ferocious animals, Indian canoes etc. will be laid aside. On the whole we think there is now reason to hope our homespun Savages may in time become civilized, and that in future we shall hear no more of Indian tribes in our cities—it is quite enough to suffer their cruelties and depredations in the wilderness."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 30, 1813. See Jl 5 and Ag 9. 30

The common council agrees to the recommendation that a sinking fund be established for the gradual extinction of the city debt (see Ap 19): such fund is to be controlled by the mayor, the recorder, the city treasurer, and the chairman of the finance committee, who shall be denominated "The Commissioners of the sinking Fund for the redemption of the City Stock," a majority of whom shall at any time be empowered to act. The fund is to be composed of moneys received for commutation of quit rents; for water lot grants issued prior to 1804; for licences of hackney coaches, pawn brokers, and street vaults; for market fees hereafter received; for 25% of the net proceeds of all sales of real estate belonging to the public; for any surplus arising from sale of the government house; and for money from such other sources as July 2

1813 July 2 the corporation may hereafter think appropriate to use for such purpose. It is recommended that the fund be invested in city stock, in bank stock, or in United States stock but preferably in city stock. It is also recommended that some portion of the $97,593.22 now in the treasury be transferred to the fund. The counsel of the board is to frame a law providing for the establishment of the sinking fund.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 509–11.

3 The blockading squadron off the Hook now consists of one 74, one frigate, one brig-of-war, and one or two tenders.—Com. Adv., Jl 3, 1813.

" Christopher Colles announces to the subscribers to his "Telegraph" and the public in general that "he has completed two of these important instruments, one at the top of the Custom-House, and another at Governor's-Island, which are now daily in rehearsal and actual operation—he has asked several questions, and received back direct and speedy answers. He proposes, on Friday next, the 9th inst. . . . to exhibit a number of accurate and conclusive experiments, by which they may plainly discover the superiority and many singular advantages of this mode of construction; it is of small expense, perfectly accurate, and capable of conveying any unexpected intelligence which can be written, with a celerity exceeding common belief, and also that it can convey registered pre-concerted sentences, orders or other intelligence with equal celerity, and at the same time, with perfect accuracy and privacy."—Columbian, Jl 3, 1813. On July 21, he added that he had made "an experiment of 164 letters, from the top of the custom-house to Governor's-Island, in the presence of some respectable gentlemen, which experiment was accomplished in 20 minutes, at the rate of 8 letters to a minute, whereas it appears by the Encyclopœdia Britannica, vol. 18th, page 336, that the French exhibit only 3 in a minute." Experiments were to be repeated on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays from 4 until 6.—Ibid., Jl 21, 1813. See also ibid., Jl 27, 1813. See, further, Jl 26.

5 The anniversary of American independence falling on Sunday, it is celebrated on the 5th "in the customary style."—Com. Adv., Jl 6, 1813. The Tammany Society appears, but with reduced numbers, and all Indian display is discarded.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 6, 1813. See also Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., III: 274.

12 President Madison informs congress of the repeal of the Berlin and Milan decrees.—Winsor, VII: 522.

" John McComb, Jr., is appointed street commissioner in place of Samuel Stilwell, resigned.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 518. On June 22, 1817, he began to keep an account-book to show payments made to cartmen, etc., its last date of entry being Oct. 17, 1821. It is owned by the N. Y. Hist. Soc.

19 A bond for the purchase of the government house and adjacent grounds (see Ap 12) is presented to the common council and ordered to be paid.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 525. See Jl 26.

26 "C. Collis" (Christopher Colles) petitions the common council for funds to construct his "telegraph." The petition is referred to the committee of defence, with a grant of $100.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 526.

" Comptroller Mercein reports to the common council that he has received a deed for the government house and grounds, and that he has forwarded to Albany the bond for the same (see Jl 19). As the bond draws six per cent interest, he suggests that a considerable saving may be made to the city by paying part of it now. A warrant for $20,000 is thereupon ordered to be issued.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 529. See Ag 2.

" The common council requests the street commissioner to report a plan for the general regulation of the village of Greenwich.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 529. See Mr 3, 1817.

" The common council resolves that Nassau St. be altered by running the westerly line thereof from the southerly corner of the lot of ground belonging to John W. McComb to Wall St. "in a course parallel to the westerly line of Eastburn, Kirk & Downe's Lot; and that the Street Commissioner take possession of the lot fronting on Wall Street which will be formed by the alteration for the purposes of a watch and engine house."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 532.

Aug. 2 The British, under Col. Proctor, attack Fort Stephenson (in northern Ohio, on the Sandusky River), but are repulsed with great gallantry by Maj. Croghan and a small garrison.—Winsor, VII: 387; McMaster, Hist. of People of U. S., IV: 27–28.

" The comptroller reports to the common council that "the purchase of the Government [House] has been made and completed in conformity to instructions received from the Board," adding that "the whole property is under lease to the Academy of Arts for one year from the first day of May next ensuing, at the rate of $1,750 dolls. per annum." The report has principally to do with the improvements proposed on the property. It is contemplated to commence improvements in May next (1814). "A speedy decision on the latter subject may be important to the Custom house department, as it may require some time to procure a place sufficiently commodious for that establishment." Among the comments made on this subject is this: ". . . the removal of the Government house will afford an opportunity (never again to recur) of filling in that part of the Ground at present bare at low water mark, as the ground, rubbish and stone (of which the new bulk head could be formed) that could be collected there, would certainly be sufficient for the purpose."—From the original report, in metal file No. 47, city clerk's record-room. See S 6 and D 31. Aug. 2

" The common council receives from Trinity corporation "a cession of the Streets belonging to Trinity Church between North Moore and Christopher."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 533. See Ag 30, 1802.

9 The matter of using gas for the city lamps is reported upon by the watch and lamp committee, who have had an interview with Ward & Tallman, and are convinced that gas is superior to oil for lighting, but find the terms of the above-named men inexpedient for the board to accept. The committee suggests that an experiment be tried by using gas in the lamps in front of city hall or some other suitable place.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 541–42. See S 20.

" New public and private constitutions are adopted by the "Society of Tammany or Columbian Order." These are practically identical with those of 1789 (q.v., Ag 10), except that the Indian designations of "sachems," "Grand Sachem," and "tribes" are replaced respectively by "Councellors," "President," and "Sections." The reasons for the change are given as the "innumerable unprop[i]tious circumstances caused, on our frontier borders."—From photostats (made from originals in Tammany Hall) in MSS. Div., N. Y. P. L. See N 10, 1817.

14 The American brig "Argus," after a successful voyage in the Irish Sea in which many prizes were taken and destroyed, is captured in those waters by the English brig "Pelican."—Winsor, VII: 387, 457.

23 By resolution of the common council, the name of Robinson St. (which runs from Broadway to the College Green) is changed to Park Place; Lower Robinson St. is changed to Robinson St.; and Bowery Lane is changed to The Bowery. The superintendent of repairs is directed to change the "sign boards" accordingly.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 549.

8 "A British Squadron, consisting of four Vessels of war, are now in the Sound, capturing all the Coasters they can find. . . . At sun set last evening, two of the vessels had proceeded . . . as far as Captain's Island, a distance of only thirty miles from this city; and had captured seven Coasters which had sailed from the city yesterday morning. . . ."—Com. Adv., S 8, 1813.

" The mayor and common council pay a visit to Spermaceti Cove below Sandy Hook to review the flotilla of gunboats stationed there under Commodore Wm. Lewis and to inspect the fortifications. The gunboats, drawn up in a crescent and gaily decorated, salute the magistrates, and the troops go through their manœuvres, after which the visitors go to Fort Gates. While the review was in progress, news came that some British ships were approaching the city by way of the Sound. The flotilla immediately set sail, passed through Hell Gate during the night, and about noon on the 9th anchored in Hempstead Bay. One British frigate approached within 3 miles of the gunboats and fired 30 or 40 shots which were returned, but the range was too long for the guns to be effective. The enemy then stood to the eastward, and the flotilla returned to Sandy Hook. This encounter caused considerable commotion and anxiety in the city and its vicinity for several days.—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 8 and 9, 1813; Guernsey, N. Y. City & Vicinity during the War of 1812–15, I: 297–300; Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., III: 275.

11 "Yesterday the British frigate Statira and an armed schr. were cruising off the Hook; and this morning the telegraph exhibits signals for three hostile ships of war."—Com. Adv., S 11, 1813.

14 The common council, in adopting its committee's recommendations for a public testimonial of respect to the remains of Capt. Lawrence and Lieut. Ludlow (see Je 1), adopts a resolution that the sum of $1,000 "be granted to each of the two Children of Capt^n^ Lawrence and be vested in the Commissioners of the sinking Fund of the Corporation . . . in case of the death of both, the Sums to revert to the Common Council to be hereafter applied to reward such Naval merit as the Common Council shall determine."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 558. See also ibid., XVII: 181–82, 259–60.

16 The funeral obsequies of Capt. James Lawrence and Lieut. Augustus C. Ludlow take place in accordance with the plans of the common council (see Ag 28). A newspaper thus describes the ceremonies: "The corpses were brought from the Navy Yard in barges, each rowed by 14 seamen dressed in white. These barges were accompanied by several others filled with naval officers and marines. They passed around the Battery and Fort, exhibiting a very solemn and interesting spectacle; and landed at the dock at the foot of Greenwich street. The Procession then formed . . . and moved up Greenwich st. and Chamber st. down Broadway, along the front of the City Hall, down Chatham st. and Broadway to Trinity Church. The funeral service was performed by Bishop Hobart. During the procession, which consumed about three hours, the bells were tolled and minute guns were fired from the Navy-Yard and from the Battery; and the colors of the public and private vessels in port were displayed at half mast."—Com. Adv., S 16, 1813. The bodies were buried in the south-west corner of the Trinity Church burying-ground.—Lossing, Pictorial Field-Book of the War of 1812, 712–13. See Ap 2, 1825.

20 The common council accepts an invitation of Mr. Gennings to view an exhibition of his gas-light in front of the bridewell.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 561.

" Samuel M. Thompson, Theodosius Fowler, and John B. Coles, in behalf of themselves and other proprietors of Harlem Bridge, present a petition to the common council "stating that they mean to apply to the Legislature for permission to build a Bridge across Haerlem River from Bussings Point to Devoes Point . . . and praying the Common Council would signify their approbation of said Law." The matter is referred to the committee on surveys and the committee on laws and ordinances. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 562. On recommendation of the committee, the act was approved by the council on Nov. 1.—Ibid. VII: 595. Sept. 20

" The common council resolves "that this Board do consent that Robert MaComb build a Dam across Harlaem River from Bussings Point to Devoes Point conformably to the act of the Legislature passed in his favor [see Ap 8] and his petition for such consent: the location of such Dam and the Terms of the grant to be under the direction of the Street Commissioner and Comptroller of this Board. That this Board do consent to the building of a Bridge between the above mentioned Points by the Harlaem Bridge Company provided the Toll to be taken at the same do not exceed one half of the Toll allowed to be taken at the present Harlaem Bridge and that this Board do recommend to the Legislature to pass a Law authorizing that Company to build said Bridge."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 564–65. In 1814, the Harlem Bridge Co. applied to the legislature for permission to build the bridge between Bussings Pt. and Devoes Pt., but no such law was passed. —Ibid., IX: 82–83. Macomb, however, proceeded to build his dam, which was finished by Dec. 21, 1815 (q. v.). See also O 18, 1813, and Ja 10, 1814.

" The names of the following streets in the Eighth Ward are changed: Charlotte St. is changed to Pike St.; Catharine to Factory St.; Columbia to Burrows St.; William to Asylum St., and George to Market St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 566–67.

5 The British and Indians under Gen. Proctor are disastrously defeated in the battle of the Thames by the Americans under Harrison and Johnson. Tecumseh, the leader of the Indians, is killed. This battle utterly crushed the right division of the British army in Upper Canada and put an end to the Indian confederacy in the North-west.—McMaster, Hist. of People of U. S., IV: 39–41.

8 Gov. Tompkins writes from New York to Secretary of War Armstrong: "I arrived at this place on Sunday and on Tuesday morning went round Staten Island, and examined the only practical landing place of an enemy; after which I visited the Flotilla at Spermaceti Cove. The Block house on the beach, the work at the Hook and the fortifications on each side of the Narrows and returned to town last night. They are all in good order, excepting at the Hook where I was disappointed in finding a want of that cleanliness and order, and above all, that alertness in the officers, which is indispensible at that important out-post. There is not to exceed 250 men exclusive of the crew of the flotilla fit for duty at either of the posts and that number is utterly inadequate to the defence of either of them. Indeed you are so well acquainted with my opinion of the insufficiency of the number of men now in service on this frontier, and with my firm belief of an attempt upon the harbour or City this fall, that I need only repeat my readiness to order out troops from the margin of the Hudson to meet the expected emergency, the moment you will make a requisition for them."—Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, III: 394–95.

14 Fulton records: "The dry dock finished at the steamboat works In Jersey City on the 14 October on that day at One Oclock the Original North River steamboat ["Clermont"] entered for the first time and I believe is the first Vessel that has been on a dry

18 The common council approves the report of a committee which recommends that Robert Macomb's dam and bridge "ought to commence at the end of the 7th avenue, presuming the avenue will be continued for about 150 Feet from the present Shore. This will enable Mr MaComb to lay the dam at, or nearly at right angles with the Current, commencing at Bussings point a little to the Westward of the Westerly side of the 7th Avenue crossing the River to a small Island, at Devoes point forming an angle with the 7th Avenue of about 22 Degrees."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 584–85. The original MS. report is filed in metal file No. 48, city clerk's record-room. See Ja 10, 1814.

21 By a vote of 12 to 5, the common council refuses to agree to resolutions granting an "elegant sword" and the freedom of the city to Maj.-Gen. William Henry Harrison.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 589–90. See also Guernsey, N. Y. City & Vicinity during the War of 1812–15, I: 360–61.

23 In honour of the victories of Perry on Lake Erie and of Gen. Harrison in Canada, the new city hall, Tammany Hall, Washington Hall, Mechanic Hall, the theatre, the City Hotel, and many private residences are illuminated from seven until ten in the evening. A newspaper says: "The appearance of the City Hall was beautiful and sublime. Many of the windows exhibited very appropriate and elegant transparencies, representing the two hostile fleets on Lake Erie; the dying exclamation of the gallant Lawrence, 'Don't give up the ship!' in large letters; and a number of others. A full band of music was placed in the gallery of the portico, and the minds of the spectators were agreeably diverted with the popular airs peculiar to our country.

"In the front of Tammany Hall was a most superb painting, exhibiting a full length likeness of General Harrison, and the figures of several Indian warriors, of whom the chief was on his knees before the General suing for peace; offering at the same time a squaw with a papoose on her back as hostages for their fidelity. It also represented the two hostile fleets, with the brave Perry in the act of going in his boat from the Lawrence to the Niagara.

"The Theatre was also brilliantly illuminated, and was decorated with several transparencies suited to the joyful occasion; amongst them were a view of the engagement between the Hornet and the Peacock; and the expressive sentence of Perry in his brief letter to General Harrison, 'We have met the enemy, and they are ours.' "—Com. Adv., O 25, 1813; M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 589. This was the first time the new city hall was illuminated.

25 A New York lady, writing to her sister about conditions in the city, says in part: "The times are very hard. Money almost an impossibility. The necessaries of life are very high. Brown sugar $25.00 per cwt., Hyson tea, 17 shillings per lb. . . . We are obliged to use beans steeped in hot molasses. Many are living upon black butter-pears, apples and quinces stewed together.

"The Brick Meeting has been newly painted, with the addition of a mahogany pulpit and balustrade. They have placed in the church two of those new-fashioned Russian stoves. The first Sunday they were used the church was so full of steam they were obliged to open the windows. . . . It is high time this cruel war was at an end. . . . Many have been made widows and orphans through the cruel realities of this war. Provisions dear, the necessaries of life so high that the poverty in the city is great. . . ."—23*d Ann. Rep.*, Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1918), 596–97.

Nov. 1 By a unanimous vote of the common council, it is agreed to request Col. Jonathan Williams "to sit for his likeness to be preserved in the Gallery, of portraits belonging to the City." Such action is taken in consideration of his services in preparing and executing plans of defence for the port of New York.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 597. His reply, dated Nov. 3, is preserved in metal file No. 48, city clerk's record-room.

" The committee on surveys reports to the common council regarding John Randel, Jr.'s accounts in connection with the board's contract with him of Dec. 31, 1810 (q.v.). The account of "measurements of avenues & cross lines" is correct. There is a balance due Randel of $3,696.36, and the board orders that the comptroller report a warrant for $2,696.36.

Nov. 1 The "setting of Monumental stones at the intersections made by the avenues and Streets," as provided for by the contract, has progressed so far that "by the middle of next may it will in all probability be compleated."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 595–96. See, further, Ag 12, 1817.

3 That part of Gen. Morton's brigade which is stationed in the city parades on the Battery is reviewed by Gen. Dearborn preparatory to firing at the hulk of a small vessel prepared as a target. The hulk "was anchored opposite the Battery, in a range with the quarantine ground, about 1000 yards distant. The firing commenced on the right, and was continued in regular succession from right to left for an hour and a half, during which time both masts were carried away, the sides of the vessel were much splintered and the hull bored through in several places. At the eighty eighth shot she sunk. . . ."—Com. Adv., N 4, 1813.

15 A meeting of Republican electors of the Fifth Ward is held at Liberty Hall, and resolutions are adopted recognizing the justice of the present war against Great Britain and praising the administration's prosecution of it. In addition, it is "Resolved, That the proceedings of the corporation in relation to the achievements of the navy and army have been insidious in the extreme, and calculated to produce dissention and jealousy with men who are united 'heart and hand' for their country's good.

"Resolved, That under the terms republicans and federalists, we formerly contended with each other on matters of minor importance; when in fact we were 'all republicans, all federalists.' Now we can no longer recognize our opponents as federalists; but under the specious mask of peace men, we discern the real foe—the worst of enemy.

"Resolved that the management of the corporate concerns of this great city, have been too long in the hands of this peace faction, and that the character of this great emporium of the United States and the best interests of the union, require that republicans should resume its government."—*Merc. — The year 1814 is the last, in this Chronology, in which a summary of the year's transactions regarding the city hall is inserted at the beginning of the year, instead of being given in detail on the respective days mentioned in the summary. The entry below, under 1814, will be found to embrace cross-references to transactions of later years.

The Day Book of the building committee, dated 1802–1814 (No. 303 in record-rooms of finance dept., Hall of Records), contains a loose sheet giving the amounts of yearly expense at the city hall, the total being $516,716.09. On Oct. 24, 1815, a published report placed the "whole expense of building and furnishing this elegant building" at $538,000.—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., O 25, 1815. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 470.

When the building was completed, two tablets were placed below the coping of the south front. The exact date when they were put there has not been ascertained. Weather-beaten almost beyond recognition, they were removed in 1903 and placed on the wall of the west corridor leading to the mayor's office; in the summer of 1913 they were transferred to the wall of the east end of the corridor in the basement. The left-hand tablet bears the following inscription at the extreme left, the rest of it being blank:

Alderman	Morss	Building Committee
"	Fish
"	Douglass
Messrs	Waldron
	Lawrence

The right-hand tablet is inscribed as follows:

	John McComb Junr	Architect
John Lemaire Sculptor	Abna Labagh	Master Stone Cutter
	Anth'y Steenback	Master Masons
	Arthur Smith
	Joseph Newton,	Master Carpenter
	James Hobson,	Clerk.

When removed from the façade, the following commemorative 1814 — record was inscribed on a white marble tablet and placed on the wall beside them near the mayor's office; and it was transferred with them to the basement:

"In accordance with a resolution | adopted by the City Council | December 20, 1898 | by the Board of Aldermen | January 17, 1899 | and approved by | Robert A. Van Wyck, Mayor | these two tablets were removed from their | former position, as portions of the coping | on the south front wall; and were placed | here in May, 1903, at which time certain | alterations were made in the interior of this building. |

Seth Low, |
Mayor of the City of New York. |
City Seal
Jacob A. Cantor, President of the Borough of Manhattan. |
WM. Martin Aiken, | Consulting Architect. |"

An excellent historical sketch of the city of New York and of its internal affairs at the period when the city hall was being built was published in the N. Y. Tribune, Ja 22, 1893. A contemporaneous and detailed description of the city hall as it was five years after completion was published in 1817 in Blunt's Stranger's Guide, 45–66. See also 9th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1904), 57–59; 15th Ann. Rep. (1910), 383–424; 16th Ann. Rep. (1911), 72–76. For references to the later history of the city hall, see 1817, 1828 (to 1831), 1830, 1834, 1836, 1841, 1858, 1891, 1893, 1903, 1908, etc. For views of the interior, see The Georgian Period (1908), Vol. I, Pls. 30, 34–37. 3 Stephen Decatur, John Jones, and I. Biddle, having examined the model and plans of a steam vessel of war invented by Robert Fulton, "to carry 24 guns, 24 or 32 pounders, and use red hot shot, to be propelled by steam at a speed of four to five miles an hour, without the aid of wind or tide," draw up a favourable report upon it.—Cat. of Fulton MSS. and documents, sold at Anderson's, Ap. 26–27, 1921, by order of Mrs. A. T. Sutcliffe, item 139. Soon after this, a number of New Yorkers organized the Society for Coast and Harbor Defence, and Fulton exhibited to them his model and this report. They were so impressed with the practicability of the invention that, through a committee headed by Oliver Wolcott, they immediately brought it to the attention of congress and the secretary of the navy, and congress on March 9 (q. v.) authorised the building of such a vessel.—Colden, Life of Fulton, 220 et seq.; Dickinson, Robert Fulton, Engineer and Artist, 260–61; descrip. of Pl. 83-a, III: 556. See Je 20.

5 The U. S. formally accepts Great Britain's offer to treat directly for peace. Pres. Madison named as commissioners, John Quincy Adams, James A. Bayard, Henry Clay, Albert Gallatin, and Jonathan Russell.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., IV: 259, 262. See F 25 and Ag 8.

" St. George's Church and five dwelling-houses in Beekman St., and one dwelling-house and the African school-house in Cliff St., together with a number of workshops and other small buildings in the rear, are destroyed by fire. The steeple fell within the church. The loss on the church was about $100,000, less $30,000 in insurance.—Com. Adv., Ja 5; N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 5, 1814; Stanford, A Concise Description of the City of New York (May, 1814), 14-15. Women with buckets helped to fill the engines.—Sheldon, The Story of the Volunteer Fire Dept. (1882). Thereafter, for a time, the services of this congregation were held in the French Church du St. Esprit on Pine St.—Anstice, Hist. of St. George's Church, 62. The church was immediately rebuilt on the same site.—Descrip. of Pl. 153-b, III: 774. See O 31, 1815.

10 Among the expenditures of 1813, as shown by the report of the comptroller to the common council, appear the following: For new almshouse, $90,000; Washington Market, $15,000; completion of new city hall, $24,000; defence of the harbour, $31,054.75.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 659. Jan. 10

" Owing to war conditions, the greatly increased cost of maintaining the almshouse and bridewell causes the comptroller, Thomas Mercein, to urge upon the common council some form of productive employment for the inmates. Incidentally, some interesting reforms in institutional management are recommended. Speaking of the inmates of the penitentiary, he says, "Under the management of intelligent commissioners this sluggish & hitherto dormant capital of human strength & talent might be brought into great productive activity. No habits however confirmed or laziness however rivited, but by wholesome regimen & dicipline may be corrected or amended & rendered in a degree productive." For the accomplishment of this end he advises a longer term of confinement and, as an aid to getting work, the gift to those regularly discharged of a suit of clothes and a reasonable sum of money, for "it is a well known fact that the appearance of most convicts when discharged forbids employ and the only alternative is to beg or steal."

He proposes to introduce into Bellevue a system of "manufactories," to be directed by commissioners.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 660–61. On Feb. 7, the common council appointed a special committee to consider that part of the comptroller's report which referred to the almshouse and to report a plan for its better government.—Ibid., VII: 683.

" The corporation counsel presents to the board "a grant to Robert M^{c}Comb Esq^{r} of the right and privelege of erecting a Dam across Harlaem River," and it is ordered to be executed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 653. See D 21, 1815.

11 A public dinner is held at Tammany Hall in honour of Commodore Perry.—Com. Adv., Ja 13, 1814.

13 De Witt Clinton, in his MS. diary (now in N. Y. H. S.), writes under this date: "Attended a meeting at my office to form a literary and Philosophical Society." On Jan. 20, he recorded: "Attended Literary & Philosophical Society at City Hall." The society was incorporated on March 25 (q. v.).

24 In response to a call for aid made by the inhabitants of Niagara and Genessee counties, who have been driven from their homes by raids of the enemy, the common council appropriates $3,000. Wednesday, Feb. 2, is set apart as a day of fasting and prayer, and the clergy are asked to have special collections taken for the cause on this day.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 667. The sum of $1,285.94 was collected in the churches and $3,023 by personal subscriptions, and this money, together with the corporation's donation, was forwarded to the committee of relief.—Ibid., VII: 685–86.

" A communication from Joseph F. Mangin, "on the subject of a Plan for Canal Street," is read in common council and referred to the canal committee and street commissioner.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 668.

" The common council appoints James Fairlie and Thos. R. Mercein as commissioners "to negociate an exchange of property with the Government of the U States for the property now held by them in the rear of the Custom House in such manner as they may deem most conducive to the interests of the Corporation."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 674. See Mr 30 and Ap 18.

27 Ryer Schermerhorn publishes proposals for reprinting by subscription Wm. Smith's history of New York to 1732, "With an appendix Exhibiting a correct and impartial view of the History of the State from the year 1732 to 1814."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 27, 1814.

Feb. 1 In addition to ground already owned by the city (part of the original Common Land), the city acquires title to land which extends from 66th to 67th Sts. between Park and Lexington Aves. On this the armory of the Seventh Regiment was afterwards built.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), citing Libers of Conveyances.

2 John Jacob Astor offers for lease "the beautiful Villa Richmond Hill, with the land and out-houses belonging to it. The house is in excellent condition and the out-buildings are numerous and convenient. The grounds afford a good garden and sufficient grass for a cow and a pair of horses."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 2, 1814. See Je 29, 1817.

Feb. 3 The state senate presents its thanks to Commodore Perry for his victory on Lake Erie.—Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, III: 443–44.

4 A public dinner in honour of Commodore Chauncey is held at Washington Hall. "Interest was given to the occasion by the presence of several gentlemen belonging to Holland with the Orange cockade in their hats, in compliment to whom the Orange flag was made to form a part of the decorations of the room."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 5, 1814.

" The Humane Society of the City of New York, founded Jan. 26, 1787 (q. v.) as the Society for the Relief of Distressed Debtors, is incorporated.—See handwritten copy of the original act, made April 5, 1814, now preserved with MSS. relating to the society in the N. Y. P. L.

11 The legislature agrees to grant to the city the lands bounded by White-Hall St., Bridge St., State St., and the government house, as soon as the U. S. no longer requires them, on condition that the city grant other lands to the federal government for fortifications.—Laws of N. Y. (1814), chap. 13.

" Eastburn, Kirk & Co. open their new "Literary Rooms," at the north-east corner of Wall and Nassau Sts.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 15. An oration on "The Utility of Literary Establishments" (libraries) was delivered by John Bristed. This was published in 1814. See also Pl. 105, Vol. III. Their building became the custom-house two years later.—See D 2, 1816.

14 A census report presented by the city inspector to the common council gives the total population of the city and county of New York as 92,448.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 689.

" Trinity vestry agrees to "rebuild Saint George's Church [see Ja 5] upon the original plan except as to the steeple which is to be replaced by a Tower. . . ."—Trin. Min. (MS.). The new church was completed and consecrated Nov. 7, 1815.—Anstice, Hist. of St. George's Church, 68. See also O 31, 1815.

18 The frigate "President," under the command of Commodore Rodgers, runs the British blockade off Sandy Hook and enters New York Harbour.—Com. Adv., F 19, 1814. She remained until January, 1815, and "her presence may have been of weight enough to have warded off the contemplated attack on New York in the summer of 1814, and to have diverted the enemy to Baltimore and Washington, because they were less protected."—Guernsey, N. Y. City & Vicinity during the War of 1812–15, II: 22–24.

22 The U. S. frigate "Independence" is launched from the Charlestown Navy Yard.—Winsor, Mem. Hist. of Boston, III: 343.

25 The sloop-of-war "John Adams" sails from New York with the peace commissioners, Clay and Russell.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 23 and 26, 1814. The other commissioners, Adams, Bayard, and Gallatin, were already abroad.

26 The frigate "President" (see F 18) comes up from Sandy Hook and anchors off the West Battery.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 26, 1814.

Mar. 4 As William Cutting and Robert Fulton intend, in accordance with their contract with the common council (see D 3, 1813), to place steamboats on the Brooklyn (Fulton) Ferry, the legislature authorises an increase in the ferry rates.—Laws of N. Y. (1814), chap. 29.

" The "gentlemen of Germany and Holland" hold a ball and supper at Washington Hall "in celebration of the late glorious emancipation of their native countries from the fell tyranny of the French usurper."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 5, 1814.

5 The "Ursuline Convent of the City of New-York" (see Jl 17, 1812) is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1814), chap. 57.

7 An entertainment and dinner are held at Tammany Hall in honour of Commodore Rodgers.—Columbian, Mr 8 and 9, 1814.

9 Congress appropriates $500,000 for building, equipping, and putting into service one or more "floating batteries" for the defence of the U. S.—Laws of U. S., 13th cong., chap. 80. For the steps leading to this, see Ja 3. See also Je 20.

14 The common council directs the street commissioner to have a survey made of the shore along the North and East Rivers, as far as their limits extend; that along the North River to commence at the state prison, that on the East River, at Walnut St. The survey is to show the high- and low-water marks and will be useful in granting water rights and in making public reservations.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 712–13. The surveys here referred to have not been located. They are evidently not the ones mentioned in the description of Pl. 86, III: 565.

" The common council agrees that "application be again made to the Legislature agreably to the application made by this Board at the last Session [see Mr 1, 1813] requesting that the plan for draining the waters of Canal Street projected by Mess^rs^ Fulton Poppleton & Whitney [see F 15, 1813] may not be adopted and also that the Corporation may be permitted to colect the remaining sum due on the assessment of said Street." The canal committee is entrusted with the preparation and transmission of the memorial. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 713. See descrip. of Pl. III: 562. Mar. 14

" The common council resolves that one member from each ward shall form a committee "to devise prepare and report a Plan for the laying out of the grounds belonging to the Corporation adjoining the new City Hall; also of the Grounds on which the Bridewell, Goal, Alms House now stand, & the manner which, in their opinion it would be most proper and advantageous for the public Interest and to beautify the City, that said grounds should be disposed of." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 715–16. John Pintard, commenting on this on March 18, wrote:

"The Common Council of this city at their last meeting appointed a Committee to take into consideration the propriety of selling that part of the public ground in rear of the new City Hall on which the present Alms-House now stands—to extend Warren Street—East of Broadway—& dispose of the Block on the north side. This is a most inconsiderate measure which if executed will deprive this City of the only piece of valuable property accommodated to the erection of future buildings which posterity may require. My efforts shall not be wanting to prevent it.

"It is but a few days that M^r^ M^c^ Comb—the Street Commissioner showed me the rough draft of a design for improving the front of the present Bridewell to render it suitable to the elegance of the City Hall. On reflection it appeared that the expense to take down the present front & rebuild with marble would be very great & after all that the Building is so narrow—only 20 or 30 (?) feet as not to afford without a Rotunda in the rear, sufficient capacity for the purposes it is required to accomodate the Academy of Arts, the Philosophical & N. Y. Historical Societies. The alternative is to request the Corporation to make a temporary grant of the present Alms House which would afford ample room for the above institutions, for the City Library & the American Museum owned by John Scudder—where they could remain for some years, until the increase of the wealth of this City sh^d^ afford sufficient patronage to erect two wings of marble & correspondent Architecture on each side the City Hall."—John Pintard's Diary (MS.), pp. 28–29 in possession of Pintard family.

18 The "York and Jersey Steam-Boat Ferry Company" is incorporated, with the right to run the Powles Hook Ferry (see Ap 15, 1811). It has two steamboats already running. The legislature dates the act of incorporation back to 1811.—Laws of N. Y. (1814), chap. 52; Blunt, 175.

21 Announcement is made that John Randel's "Map of Manhattan Island with the opposite shores, the harbor, bay and narrows," is in the hands of the engraver and will be published shortly.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 21, 1814. In April, the MS. map was exhibited at the bookstore of Messrs. Eastburn, Kirk & Co. in Wall St.—Ibid., Ap 8, 1814. However, it apparently never was engraved because of the controversy which arose between Randel and Bridges, for details of which see descrip. of Pl. 80-b, Vol. III. Randel's MS. map is reproduced as A. Pl. 15, Vol. III.

25 The "Literary and Philosophical Society of New-York" (see Ja 13) is incorporated by act of the legislature.—Laws of N. Y., 1814, chap. 60. De Witt Clinton, the society's president, delivered an introductory discourse before it on May 4, which was published in 1815. See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 738.

28 The U. S. frigate "Essex," under Capt. David Porter, having made an 18 months' cruise in the Pacific during which she captured 13 British vessels, is attacked on her return to Valparaiso by the enemy's frigate "Phoebe" and the sloop "Cherub," and destroyed.—Winsor, VII: 395, 434.

30 Congress authorises the president to convey to the corporation of New York the land in the rear of the custom (or government) house and to receive in exchange other lands in the city or its vicinity.—Laws of U. S., 13th cong. chap. 38. The U. S. was granted land at the Narrows (see Ap 18).

31 After a two months' campaign on French soil, the allies (Great Britain, Austria, Russia, and Prussia) enter Paris.—Hazen, Modern European Hist., 240. See Ap 11.

" The president recommends the repeal of the embargo.—Eve.

1814 Post, Ap 2, 1814. De Witt Clinton, in his MS. diaries (in N. Y. H. S.), says the notice of the president's recommendation caused "great consternation." See Ap 14.

Apr. 4 The commissioners of estimate and assessment report that it is not expedient to open Second Ave. beyond the north line of 29th St. on Kip's Bay Farm. "From 29th Street to Beekman's Gate The buildings to be paid for are of much greater value than the adjacent ground can be reasonably deemed benefitted, and were the ground for the avenue obtained, the natural obstacles to be overcome in making a road from the northerly part of Kips Bay Farm to Beekmans Gate are such that public convenience would not require so great an expence for many years to come."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 723.

" The common council agrees that "the following shall constitute a condition in the letting or leasing the Flag Staff on the Battery viz. The flag staff shall not be kept open excepting so far as to permit persons to go on the balcony nor shall any liquors fruits or refreshments of any kind be sold in the flag staff or on the piazza of the Flag Staff by the lessee or by any person under him directly or indirectly on the lords day, under the penalty of the forfeiture of his lease and the sum of two hundred Dollars to the Lessors."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 723–24.

6 The legislature incorporates two coal companies, the North American Coal Co., and the New York Coal Co., organized by separate groups of prominent New York men, the one for the purpose of "finding coal and other mines and minerals, and supplying the public with the same;" the other for "exploring and working mines of coal and other valuable minerals, and for delivering at the city of New-York, coal for fuel at a reasonable price. . . ."—Laws of N. Y. (1814), 37th sess., 103, 106. The charter of the former company was renewed on April 21, 1832, for twenty-one years longer.—Ibid. (1832), chap. 213.

7 A force of 200 British marines surprises Saybrook, Conn.; burns the shipping, spikes the cannon, and retreats in safety to their ships.—Brackenridge, Hist. of the Late War between the U. S. and Gt. Brit. (Phila., 1836), 200.

11 Napoleon abdicates unconditionally and is banished to the island of Elba.—Anderson, Constitutions and Docs. Illus. of the Hist. of France, 1789–1907, 450–51; N. Y. Eve. Post, S 9, 1814. Louis XVIII becomes king.

12 The "Friends of Liberty, Peace and Commerce" (Federalists) hold a meeting at Washington Hall and adopt resolutions adversely criticizing the embargo and non-intercourse measures passed during the administrations of Jefferson and Madison. With "convictions of the manifest imbecility and inconsistency of the dominant party" (Republican), they feel that they can "rely with safety, upon the talents and integrity of those men only who have been educated in the principles of Washington."—Com. Adv., Ap 13, 1814.

13 The state grants the Hosack Botanic Garden to Columbia College, on condition that "the college establishment shall be removed to the said tract of land hereby granted, or to lands adjacent thereto, within twelve years," and it directs the college to send to the trustees of the other colleges in the state "a list of the different kinds of plants, flowers and shrubs in said garden." At the same time, the legislature appropriates $30,000 for the College of Physicians and Surgeons.—Laws of N. Y. (1814), chap. 120; L. M. R. K., III: 946. See also Brown, The Elgin Botanic Garden (1908). For views of the garden see Am. Medical and Phil. Reg., Vol. II (1814); Hosack's Hortus Elginensis, 2d ed. (1811); Portfolio (Phila., 1810), III: 36. The grant was made because of an appeal for aid presented to the legislature by the trustees in March, in which they said: "Columbia College presents a Spectacle mortifying to its friends humiliating to the City, and calculated to inspire opinions which it is impossible your enlightened body wish to countenance.

"The foundation of a new wing to the Edifice, laid by the order and under an Appropriation of your honorable body [see Ap 11, 1792, F 25, 1795, and Je 1797], has been for Years, a heap of ruins solely for want of further public Assistance. . . .

"There is no proper Apartment for the Reception of a decent Library. There is no Hall fit for the Performance of public Exercises. There is no astronomical Observatory which is of essential moment both to our commercial and military marine: a solid basis for such a Structure was laid at the same time with the foundation of the new wing and left unfinished for the same Cause. . . ."—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1754–1904, 99–102. In 1819 (q. v., F 19), the restriction regarding the removal of the college was repealed. The grant of the garden was hardly a helpful gift in 1814, but the land is now (1926) one of the chief sources of revenue to the college. See, further, Mr 14, 1816, and F 27, 1817.

Apr. 13

The embargo act of Dec. 17, 1813 (q. v.), is repealed.—Laws of U. S., 13th cong., chap. 115. See also Guernsey, N. Y. City & Vicinity during the War of 1812–15, II: 53–54. 14

The legislature passes a resolution requesting the governor "to direct an inquiry to be made as to the accommodation which might be obtained for holding the next session of the legislature in the city of New-York; and also to cause an estimate to be made of the probable expense of a temporary removal of the seat of government to that city."—Assemb. Jour., 37th sess., 556; Senate Jour., 37th sess., 268. Gov. Tompkins wrote to Mayor Clinton on this subject on June 17.—Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, III: 478–79. See Ag 15. 15

The Parade, as laid out on the Commissioners' Map, is reduced by the legislature as follows: Fourth and Sixth Aves. are extended northward from 23rd St. through the Parade; 31st St. is extended from Seventh Ave. through the Parade, to Third Ave.; 32nd and 33rd Sts. are extended east from Seventh Ave. to the Eastern Post-road; 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th and 30th Sts. are extended east from Seventh Ave. to Sixth Ave. and west from Third to Fourth Ave.; and Fifth Ave. is extended south from 34th St. to 31st St. Thus, the Parade was bounded by 23rd and 31st Sts., Fourth and Sixth Aves.—Laws of N. Y. (1814), chap. 175. See Ap 25, 1829. "

The legislature appropriates $50,000 for completing the fortifications on Staten Island and $1,000 for furnishing the governor's room in the new city hall. It also authorises a lottery for raising $12,000 for the New York Historical Society, to be used in procuring "books, manuscripts, and other materials, to illustrate the natural, literary, civil and ecclesiastical history of America."—Laws of N. Y. (1814), chap. 200. A further appropriation for the governor's room was made by the common council on May 9 (q. v.). "

The common council passes a vote of thanks to Philip Church for sundry documents, drawings, etc. illustrative of the sewage system in use in England.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 726. 18

The mayor informs the common council that "the Seal of the Mayoralty having become so much worn as to be no longer legible," he has "directed a new one of steel to be made." This he presents to the board, and a resolution is passed that "the Seal sunk in Steel, now presented," be hereafter considered as "the Seal of Mayoralty of the City of New York, and be affixed as such in attestation of all papers and Documents wherein the said Seal is by law and custom to be used." "

It being represented to the board "that the City Seal and the Seal of the Mayors Court" have "by long usage become much worn," a committee is appointed "on causing new Seals to be sunk." It is also ordered that the comptroller "audit the account" and report a warrant "for executing the Mayoralty Seal;" and that he "cause the old seal to be broken up and destroyed."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 727–28. On May 2, a warrant for $100 was reported by the comptroller as paid "on acct Mayty Seal (or Bal)"; and on July 18, another warrant, for $260, for "Mayty Com Counc & Mayors Court Seals."—Ibid., VII: 743; VIII: 16.

This new mayoralty seal is reproduced in Wilde's Civic Ancestry of N. Y. (1913), Pl. 27, and is described on p. 67. The seal of New York City in use in 1913 (reproduced in ibid., Pl. 28), follows closely the design of the 1814 mayoralty seal; the inscription, however, conforming to that on the corporation seal in use from 1686 to the Revolution.—See ibid., Pl. 26 (impression No. 1), and p. 67. For present city seal, adopted in 1915, see Pine, Seal and Flag of N. Y. (1915).

Fair St., between Cliff and Pearl Sts., leading to the ferry at Beekman Slip (see D 27, 1813), is ordered to be opened.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 730–31. "

The commissioners, appointed by the common council to negotiate an exchange of property with the United States government for the property in the rear of the custom-house (see Ja 24), report that successful arrangements have been made (see Mr 30), and request $18,750 with which to purchase land at the Narrows to be exchanged with the United States for the custom-house land. The comptroller is authorised to borrow such money. "

1814 Apr. 18 The land at the Narrows will be used by the United States for permanent fortifications for the defence of the harbour.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 732. See My 2.

May — Thos. N. Stanford issues A Concise Description of the City of New York. It contains "A view of P. M. Stollenwerck's Mechanical Panorama," a copy of the plan of the city drawn by Wm. Bridges and published by Isaac Riley in 1807 (q. v., S 22), and the following (selected) remarks: The upper apartments of the government house are at present occupied "for the use of the Academy of Arts and the Historical Society. The lower part is rented to government for the accommodation of the collector, naval officer and surveyor of the port. The whole building was executed in a style which reflects great credit on the professional abilities of the artists, Messrs. Robinson, Moore and Smith. It was a real ornament to the city, but now through neglect it is mouldering into ruin. . . ."

The water of New York Bay "is little less saline than the ocean, its currents are rapid and powerful. Hence it arises that the port of New York is open in the severest seasons, while others further south are completely locked up with ice. . . . Fortifications have been erected at vast expense at almost every assailable and commanding point. Those at the Narrows, at Staten Island, and before the city, mount collectively more than 350 pieces of the heaviest artillery. Castle Williams, the largest fortress in the United States, stands on the west end of Governors Island, immediately before the city. . . . The different works on the Island of New York which are perfected are, the City Battery, which has been raised upon a foundation of stone at the extremity of the city, and about fifty yards from the Battery or parade ground, it is a circular fort of masonry, and mounts twenty-eight long thirty-two pounders; it has capacious magazines, barracks and cisterns. It is connected with the shore by a regular draw-bridge. The North Battery stands about a mile up the Hudson, and is a semi-circular work of stone, mounting sixteen thirty-two pounders. Fort Gansevoort is about one and a quarter miles further up the Hudson, and is also an enclosed stone battery with magazines, extensive barracks and furnaces for heating red hot shot."—Ibid., 17–18.

"The fire-men are appointed by the Common Council, and are divided into companies, one of which is attached to each fire engine. . . .

"At fires, the members of the Corporation are distinguished by their white wands, with a gilded flame at the top; the engineers by white leather painted caps, with gilded fronts, and an engine painted thereon, and with black speaking trumpets; the fire wardens by hats, with the city arms in front, and white speaking trumpets."—Ibid., 22–23.

There are 14 marine and fire insurance companies in the city.—Ibid., 27.

The state prison "is guarded by a military force consisting of a captain, a sergeant, two corporals, a drummer, a fifer and twenty privates."—Ibid., 28.

The literary establishment of Eastburn, Kirk, & Co. "has been reared on a plan which reflects the highest credit on the zeal of its enterprising proprietors. The spacious and elegant Reading Rooms are furnished with an unlimited variety of the most modern publications, with the best European and American magazines and public journals. . . . The buildings of the establishment have been erected on the scite of old Federal Hall, at the corner of Wall and Nassau streets, and form a real embellishment to the city."—Ibid., 39–40.

". . . The bookselling business has become a very extensive pursuit; and the capital annually employed in literary publications is estimated to exceed a half million of dollars. There are in the city more than thirty book-stores, some of which are very extensive and splendid establishments. The number of printing offices of consequence is about twenty; and the number of journeymen printers employed is about one hundred." There are six daily papers, and many weekly and semi-weekly journals.—Ibid., 40.

The benevolent and charitable institutions number 40 or 50.—Ibid., 41.

The Humane Society "is an association of citizens who originally devoted their principal attention to the relief of the distressed prisoners confined in the debtors goal. Within a few years they have extended their original plan by instituting a soup-house on a large scale, by which the prisoners and indigent persons throughout the city are supplied with wholesome soup, either gratis or for the small consideration of three pence per quart. Between 20 and 30,000 quarts of soup are dispensed annually by this institution. . . . The Corporation have very liberally furthered the views of this society, and have given them a lot of ground in the rear of the Debtors Goal, on which is erected a commodious building for its use."—Ibid., 45. May —

The Manumission Society has "a school-house in the rear of St. George's church yard. The number of children who enjoy the advantages of this seminary is about one hundred."—Ibid., 46.

The engineers and firemen of the city are incorporated.—Ibid., 47.

Mechanics' Hall is "that large and elegant edifice at the corner of Park Place and Broadway. . . . The establishment is rented to Mr. Marcellin, and is one of the most genteel hotels in the city."—Ibid., 47–48.

The New York Fuel Association was organized last autumn "for the exclusive purpose of ameliorating the condition of the poor of the city, during the severity of winter, by distributing among them supplies of the necessary article of fire-wood." During the winter it distributed more than 100,000 loads of fuel to more than 3,000 people.—Ibid., 49.

Since its establishment in Dec., 1809, the New York Bible Society has distributed nearly 10,000 Bibles.—Ibid., 50.

— In this month, Fulton Ferry commenced running from Beekman Slip (foot of Fulton St., New York) to the lower ferry at Brooklyn (Fulton St., Brooklyn), by steamboat. The boat was the "Nassau."—Columbian, My 14 and 18, 1814. The lease had been granted to Cutting and Fulton in 1813 (q. v., D 3 and 27). See also L. M. R. K., III: 942, Blunt, 175, and Man. Com. Coun. (1866), 737.

2 The comptroller reports that he has negotiated a loan with the Mechanics Bank for $18,750, the purchase money for property bought at the Narrows (see Ap 18). The common council orders that a bond for the same be executed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 738–39.

" It is resolved to extend Washington St. from Laight St. to Leroy St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 739.

" The common council orders that steps be taken to increase the width of Pearl St. between Chatham and Augustus Sts. to 50 ft.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 740. On Nov. 14, the street commissioner presented an assessment to the common council for the surplus damages in enlarging and straightening Pearl St. from Chatham to Augustus St., which was confirmed and a collector appointed.—Ibid., VIII: 84.

9 The common council votes to add $1,000 to the $1,000 appropriated by the state (see Ap 15) for furnishing the room in the city hall set apart for the use of the governor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 744–45. The governor's room was in the centre of the second storey of the city hall (its present location).—See Blunt's description under Oct., 1817. A drawing of the room, made in 1830 by C. Burton, is reproduced as A. Pl. 21-a, Vol. III.

" The Exchange Market, erected in 1788 (q. v., O 14), is ordered removed. Those having stands there are to be accommodated in the Upper Fly Market.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 748–49; L. M. R. K., III: 958.

22 In this year was published by Samuel Wood a small handbook for children, entitled The Cries of New-York, which, on this day, was entered for copyright with the clerk of the District of New York. Little wood-cuts illustrate the subjects of the several descriptions, such as a watchman, a fireman, and venders of various fruits and vegetables, of rusks, butter-milk, cat-tails, plaster images, oysters, clams, milk, mint-water, straw, "yest" (yeast), baskets and pails, rags and rope, as well as the bellman, and the chimney-sweep.—See a copy of this issue in the N. Y. H. S., where are also two later forms of the work, published respectively in 1834 and about 1837.

26 The corner-stone of Fort Tompkins, at the Narrows, is laid in the presence of city and state officials. "The new and superb steamboat Fulton took the company from town to the Narrows. She performed her voyage down with great rapidity, and exhibited an elegant spectacle upon the waters of our harbour."—Com. Adv., My 28, 1814. See My 28.

" Isabella Graham and other ladies of the city having petitioned the common council for aid in establishing "a Society for the promotion of Industry," the board agrees to give $250 for rooms over the Economical School and to furnish $500 to procure materials for the use of the employed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 763–64.

" For the support of the New York Free School, the sum of $1,500 is taken from the excise revenue.—Journal B, 54, comptroller's office.

" Between this date and Sept. 12, the common council paid $803.09 for the filling in of Collect lots.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VII: 769; VIII: 32, 52. See Je 5, 1815.

June 2 Wm. Dawson writes a confidential letter from New York to Jas. Monroe, at Washington, informing him of Admiral Cochrane's plans against the United States, which he learned at Bermuda. He says the admiral intends, 1st, to arm the negroes; 2d, to attack New York by way of the Sound; 3d, to attack and destroy vessels at Portsmouth, N. H.—From the original letter with the Monroe papers, in N. Y. P. L.

8 "An Officer" publishes the following open letter to Maj.-Gen. Morgan Lewis: "The Government has confided to you the command of this district, including the City of New-York [see Je 15], a command justly considered the most important in the U. S. because the loss of this City with its monied capital would materially affect the operations of the General and State Governments, besides the ruin and distress it would bring upon ourselves.

"It appears to me that you neglect your trust; in other words, this City is not fortified in the manner it ought to be with the means in your power. . . .

"This city is open or liable to an attack in three ways,

"1st. By vessels of war by way of Sandy Hook.

"2d. By troops landed on the back of Long Island and crossing to Brooklyn.

"3d. By a land and Naval force down the Sound, the land troops disembarking in the Sound, and the fleet aiding their attack.

"From the first of these, (although it appears to engross the whole attention), I think we have nothing to fear, because the British are too prudent to risk their ships against a chain of land Batteries, and too wise to land their men at a wharf which may be raked by a single cannon and annoyed from every building in its vicinity.

"From the other attacks, we have every thing to fear, because the means of resisting them have not been considered or organized. It cannot be denied, for the maps all shew it, that there are several inlets at the back of Long Island where troops may be landed with safety and convenience; and if the landing takes place in the evening, I think it probable that in the morning their cannon upon Brooklyn heights would give the first intelligence of their landing: and if the British should again (as in the last war) occupy those heights which command the City and Governor's Island, I take it for granted, the city must as then be surrendered to them. What are our means of resistance, after the minutiæ of putting up signal poles, fixing places of rendezvous, offering rewards for information of the enemy's landing, &c. the country ought to be well examined and redoubts and breast works of earth thrown up at the most prominent points. But above all, strong intrenchments should be made upon Brooklyn heights, so that in case of necessity troops passing from this city might hold those heights, until the force of the State or at least of the city and harbour could be formed and brought to their relief. Arms should also be now distributed to the militia being, in exposed situations, that they may feel the confidence inspired by good equipments.

"The third attack is the most dangerous, because the extent of shore and the uncertainty of the place of landing seem to baffle precaution, but a prudent general would not omit every thing, would not allow the whole line from Connecticut to the City Hall to be unprovided with a single defence:—yet such is our situation. In making this attack, it is probable the enemy would disembark either at Throg's Neck or Ward's Island, and some measures should immediately be taken to obstruct or prevent an advance from both those points, the more effectual (because it would apply to all landings off this Island) would be to erect redoubts or tetes dupont at the head of Harlaem, Ward's and King's Bridges, and so to place the cannon in them, as effectually to rake the bridges: besides these materials should be provided and kept constantly ready to destroy the bridges, and temporary breast-works should be thrown upon Harlem Heights, &c. &c.

"These are, Sir, the outlines of a defence for this city, to which your attention is particularly invited. . . ."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen.

" Behind closed doors, the common council receives the report of the committee appointed to take into consideration the present exposed condition of the city (see Jl 6). Among a number of resolutions agreed to are the following:—

That the necessary ground be secured upon Brooklyn Heights for a military camp and that the governor be asked to call out sufficient militia to occupy that and another camp located on the Heights of Harlem.

That the governor be requested to increase the munitions of war.

That the commissioner of fortifications be requested to hasten work on the fortifications to prevent the approach of the enemy by the Sound.

That exempts from military duty be organized, shipping be removed from the harbour, and voluntary labour on encampments be procured.

That the president and governor be waited upon.

That plans be made for financing the execution of above resolutions.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 6–11; Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 553–57. See Ag 15.

The committee sent to wait upon the president regarding the 26 defence of the city reports to the common council. The substance of the report follows:

"The Government will call into immediate service 3000 Militia . . . to be considered as part of the States' quota conditionally ordered by the President 22d June

"All the requisite arms & other military stores as well as ordnance for two fortified Camps will be furnished by the war Department except so many muskets as can be supplied from the State Arsenal. Such muskets as the general government may furnish will be considered as the property of the State & be charged against their proportion allowed by the law of Congress for arming the whole body of the militia; the Governor giving a receipt for the same—The Troops will also be furnished with subsistence & camp equipage; but their monthly pay is to be advanced by this Corporation, which will again receive it from the General Government

"Proper & skilful officers (Genl Swift & Coln Wadsworth as your committee are informed) will be directed to lay out the proposed Camps, to superintend the fortifying the same and to provide & inspect the ordnance necessary for the purpose"

The report contains an annexed schedule of military supplies indicating an ample store of everything but muskets and 2,000 of these are reported on their way from Philadelphia, with a large reserve stock at Springfield.—*M. Alderman Wendover presents the following resolutions to the " common council: "Resolved that the Common Council highly approve of the sentiments expressed in the memorial presented by Oliver Wolcott & others [see Jl 20] in behalf of themselves & a number of Citizens of this City on the important subject of taking immediate & effectual measures for its greater security & defence.

"Resolved, that it be earnestly recommended to the Citizens generally of this City to meet in the Park in front of the City Hall on Wednesday next the 3d Inst at 12 O Clock at noon for the purpose of appointing a Committee to enquire if any & what means ought and may be devised, to put this City in a better posture of defence, and in conjunction with the Committee of defence of this Board to pursue all practical measures in concert with the general & state government calculated to prepare for & stimulate our fellow Citizens in the protection & defence of everything we hold dear & valuable in life and to repel any attack that may be made by the Enemy against this City." These were lost by a vote of 11 to 7.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 31. A public meeting was held, however, on Aug. 10 (q. v.).

The common council agrees that the public grounds at the "

8 The American and British peace commissioners, after many delays, begin their conference at Ghent. Great Britain immediately demanded, as a sine qua non of a treaty, the establishment of an Indian territory as a permanent barrier between the western settlements of the United States and the possessions of Great Britain; a revision of the Canadian boundary line by a cession of so much of Maine as lay between New Brunswick and the Quebec line, a revision of the line from Lake Superior to the Mississippi, and the dismantling of Fort Niagara and Sackett's Harbour; and an agreement that the U. S. would never again maintain an armed force on the Great Lakes. The Americans refused to consider these proposals or to refer them to Washington, and when news of their nature reached America, it aroused great indignation (see O 22). Britain, however, receded from her demands, and they were quietly dropped. On Oct. 31, her commissioners asked for the heads of a treaty from the Americans, and after two months spent in discussions and concessions on both sides, an agreement was reached, and the definitive treaty was signed on Dec. 24 (q. v.).—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., IV: 262–73.

" The committee of defence publishes the following notice: "Gen. Swift having furnished the Committee of Defence of the corporation with a plan for the construction of additional works of defence, near Brooklyn, the work will be commenced this morning by the artillery company, under the command of Capt. Andrew Bremner, who have volunteered their services for the day. The committee invite their fellow-citizens to follow their laudable example.

"To facilitate the business, the Committee of Defence announce that they will meet daily at the Mayor's office in the City Hall between the hours of eleven and twelve o'clock, to receive the tenders of similar services, and to arrange working parties."—National Advocate, Ag 8, 1814. See Ag 10.

10 A large mass-meeting, presided over by Col. Henry Rutgers, is held in City Hall Park to consider measures to be taken for the defence of the city, and more especially, to induce citizens to volunteer for work on the fortifications. Marinus Willett makes a spirited address, and resolutions are adopted approving the defensive measures inaugurated by the federal, state, and city governments, and recommending a general enrollment in the various wards for personal work on the defences.—Columbian, Ag 10, 1814. From this time until the middle of November, every able bodied man in the city either helped to fortify Manhattan Island or contributed a pecuniary substitute. A line of forts joined by entrenchments was made from Hudson River to the mouth of the Harlem, and forts were built at Hell Gate, Williamsburg, Brooklyn Heights, Prince's Bay, and Sandy Hook. The people of Brooklyn, Orange, Paterson, and Newark also worked on the fortifications besides the New Yorkers.—Ibid., Ag 11, et seq.; Guernsey, *N. Y. 11 William Jay, writing to his father, says: "Some alarm seems to prevail respecting the safety of the City, but I know not how well it is founded. The Citizens are now engaged in throwing up entrenchments at Brooklyn. There is a great scarcity of money, and stock of all kinds is very low. The stock of four of the Banks, viz.: the Union, the Manufacturing, the City, and the Bank of America, is even below par and some as low as 94. The Bank of America and the Manufacturing Bank have not declared any dividend and therefore instead of giving an interest of 9 per cent. for the last year, they have yielded only 4½. Not withstanding this state of things and the consequent diminution in the income of great numbers of individuals, both in town and country, I can see no change in the manner of living nor more attention than usual to economy. People seem to be now living on their capital and to calculate that before it is exhausted the return of peace will more than repair any inroads they may make on it in the interim."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 376–77. Aug. 11

13 In a letter to Gen. Jacob Brown, Gov. Tompkins says: "The alarm which exists at New York compels me to devote attention to that place; and upon the requisition of the president, I am getting out 3000 troops from the Middle District. " A report presented by the committee of defence is agreed to by the common council and directed to be published.

On being furnished by Brig.-Gen. Swift of the corps of engineers with a plan of additional works of defence, by him deemed necessary to place the city in a state of complete defence, the committee made an appeal to the patriotism of their fellow citizens to furnish voluntary aid in the erection of the works. "The appeal was answered by them with one heart & one mind—prepared for this appeal by the address of the Common Council, every one was a[n]xious to offer his services on the interesting occasion—volunteer associations pressed forward with their overtures all anxious to be engaged in the honorable empl[o]yment of self defence, on the earliest day that could be appointed—In these overtures the Committee remarked with heartfelt pleasure that there appeared to be no distinction of party or situation in life. . . . They all appeared to meet on the ground of self defence as on a common ground . . .

"The works in the rear of Brooklyn were commenced on Tuesday last . . . on each successive day parties of volunteer citizens to the amount of from 500 to upwards of 1000 a day have labored on the works—The spirit of volunteering personal labor seems still to be ardent—many thousands are now on the lists of the Committee waiting their turn for doing duty

"Voluntary contributions to the amount of about thirty five hundred Dollars have been received by the Committee from public Institutions and individuals resident in the City and abroad, as a commutation for personal service & to furnish the Committee with the means of defraying necessary expenses

"The inhabitants of Kings County have in a very laudable manner volunteered their services and the Committee understand that the yeomanry of our Sister State, New-Jersey are unsolicitedly making preparations to tender their services. . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831). VIII: 39–41; Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 559–60.

" It is "Resolved that the members of the common council together with the Officers of the Board will assemble on Wednesday next at 6 O Clock at Beekman Slip Wharf and proceed to Brooklyn to labor at the works there erecting for the defence of the City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 41.

20 "A Citizen of Colour" issues the following notice: "The committee of defence have assigned next Monday [Aug. 22] for the people of colour to contribute their services to work on the fortifications. On this occasion it becomes the duty of every coloured man, resident in this city, to volunteer. The state of New York has evinced a disposition to do us justice. Discarding that illiberal, misguided policy, which makes a difference of complexion a pretext for oppression, she has made the same provision for the security of our rights as for the rights of others. Under the protection of her laws we dwell in safety and pursue our honest callings, none daring to molest us, whatever his complexion or circumstances. And such has been the solicitude in our behalf, manifested from time to time by our legislature, that there is a fair prospect of a period not far distant, when this state will not contain a slave. Our country is now in danger—our patriotism is now put to the test—we have now an opportunity of shewing that we are not ungrateful—that we are not traitors or enemies to our country; but are willing to exert ourselves, whenever or wherever our services are needed, for the protection of our beloved state.—Let no man of colour, who is able to go, stay at home on Monday next; but let every one assemble at 5 o'clock, A. M. in the Park, to join with their brethren in their patriotic efforts."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 20, 1814. 26 "This morning marched through this town, to take their station in the camp, formed for the defence of the city and harbor, the best looking corps of men which we have seen since the commencement of the war.—They are the Trojan Greens from Troy [see 1814], and the Rifle Company from Albany, to the number of upwards of a hundred. . . . With such men as these to defend us, we need not fear even Wellington's veterans."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 26, 1814.

27 Writing from New York to Maj.-Gen. Lewis, Gov. Tompkins says: "The alarming state of affairs renders it indispensibly necessary that an immediate understanding should exist between yourself the Commodore & myself with respect to the order of battle or system of operations to be pursued in the event of an attack upon this City. . . . May I, therefore, request that you will arrange & digest, either seperately, or in concert with Commodore Decatur, & acquaint me with the plan of operation or order of battle proposed, upon the several hypothesis of attack thro' the Sound, either on the Westchester or Long Island side,—of a landing upon any part of the South side of Long Island, or of the approach of the enemy by the way of the Hook, or of a simultaneous attack in two or more directions.

"The Militia of Rockland, Westchester, Queens, Kings, New York & Richmond, together with such as I may be able to get down seasonably from above the Highlands & those now in service are the only corps of the Militia of this State that I shall be able to furnish at short warning. Aug. 27

"Gov'r Pennington informs me that the Militia of Essex & the adjacent [New Jersey] Counties will be ordered by him to obey your requisitions promptly, without waiting for the orders to pass thro' him, & that upon hearing of an alarm he will repair immediately to that part of his State nearest the harbour of New York, to cooperate in its defence. Brigadier Genl. Colfax residing at Pompton, in New Jersey, is to command the detached Brigade of 3000 which is nearest to New-York. . . ."—Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, III: 509–11.

Alexandria, Va., is saved from burning by paying to the British a large ransom of ships, merchandise, and naval and ordnance stores.—Brackenridge, Hist. of the Late War between the U. S. and Gt. Brit. (Phila., 1836), 253. 29

The committee of defence reports to the common council that the ardour of the voluntary citizen labourers continues unabated. In accordance with the recommendation of the military commanders of the United States, the committee has requested the governor to call out 20,000 additional militia for the defence of the city. It is necessary for the city to raise funds in this crisis for the maintenance, etc., of the troops, which, it is expected, will be reimbursed by the general government. For this purpose and in order that the drain on the banks may not be too great, a loan not exceeding $1,000,000 at 7 %, payable in one year, is suggested. Authority is asked of the board to execute matters requiring haste without express delegation of power for that purpose. "The fate of Washington warns us not to remain unprepared—a small expenditure of money might probably have saved our Capital & prevented this disgrace upon our nation and shall the City of New York, the first in the Union in point of importance also fall the sacrifice to a spirit of penuriousness which will count the expense of self protection when all is in jeopardy. . . ." The common council agrees to the requests and suggestions.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 46–48; Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 560–62. "

Gov. Tompkins writes to Alderman Nicholas Fish, chairman of the committee of defence: "Pursuant to a resolution of the Committee of defence requesting me to suggest such further provisions as may be necessary for the defence of this City, I beg leave to submit the following remarks:

"At my first interview with the Committee of the Corporation I had the honor to recommend to them the propriety of purchasing & mounting immediately a quantity of Ordnance & field pieces, & in a Communication to his Honor the Mayor furnished them with information of the resources of Westpoint the Navy yard &c. in Cannon. At the same interview the propriety of employing an agent to purchase materials for tents & to procure other Camp equipage for a considerable number of men was suggested. Whether these subjects have been discussed & decided upon by the Committee I am unadvised, & can only say that if they have not, I would respectfully invite their attention to them.

"Exertions are making to establish a signal on Staten Island to convey notice of an alarm to the Inhabitants of Essex County & other parts of New Jersey, bordering on the Staten Island sound. No telegraphic arrangement has been made in the direction of the Sound, or of the South side of Long Island, with which I have been made acquainted. Prompt measures ought to be taken, either by the Commanding officer of the District or the Committee to convey notice of every movement of the enemy. It is very important also that signals should be established on the North river so as to call down the Militia en masse upon an emergency.

"I will cheerfully issue a general order requiring the Militia as far north as Albany, without any exception, to repair instantly to New York upon the signal being given, whenever I may be made acquainted with the signals established; & will also readily aid in having the signals prepared if the Committee will defray the expence of erecting them.

"Commodore Decatur informed me that the Committee has been so good as to undertake to supply vessels for obstructing a part of the Channel in a dernier resort. It appears to me that vessels should be procured & equipped for this purpose before the moment of pressure & confusion may arrive.

"On Saturday I had the honor to suggest to that Committee the indispensible necessity of erecting a block house & of estab-

1814 Aug. 29 lishing further defences on the Hook to prevent the landing of an enemy & to protect the water battery from an assault in the rear. My conviction of the vital importance of this step to the security of the out post is my apology for again pressing it upon the consideration of the Committee. . . .

"I beg leave to inform the Corporation that I have in contemplation to assemble immediately an additional number of ten thousand militia at this place & beg their zealous cooperation in providing Quarters & other accommodations for them. . . ."—Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, III: 513–14. Tompkins called out the militia on the same day.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 31, 1814.

31 As all the banks in Philadelphia have resolved to suspend payments in specie, the New York banks decide to do likewise.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 31, 1814. Specie payments were not resumed until Feb. 20, 1817 (q. v.).

" About 200 or 300 women of New York perform an hour's work on the fortifications at Fort Greene.—Columbian, S 1, 1814.

" "The Fortifications, at M'Gowan's pass, on the Harlaem road, have acquired a great degree of strength and perfection—and are worth a day's work to go and see them. They are compact and regular, and nearly ready for cannon and artillerists."—Columbian, Ag 31, 1814. See Pl. 82 B-b, and description, III: 554–55.

Sept. — Between Sept., 1814, and June, 1815, the Congress of Vienna, one of the most important diplomatic gatherings in the history of Europe, was held. As a result of its deliberations, the king of Piedmont was restored to his throne, and Genoa was given to him; Belgium was annexed to Holland; Russia retained Finland and Bessarabia and acquired most of the Grand Duchy of Warsaw; Austria recovered her Polish possessions and gained the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom in northern Italy and the Illyrian provinces; England secured Heligoland, Malta, the Ionian Islands, Cape Colony, Ceylon, Isle of France, Demerara, St. Lucia, Tobago, and Trinidad; Prussia received two-fifths of Saxony, Pomerania, and extensive territories on the Rhine; The Papal States were re-established and most of the rest of Italy was divided into independent states; Norway was taken from Denmark and joined to Sweden; Switzerland was increased by the addition of three cantons taken from France.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 3–12.

1 Fort Greene "is nearly ready for a garrison. Cannon for it were landing at the navy-yard this forenoon, and commodore Decatur takes command on Saturday or Monday, with a formidable band. Fort Swift is completed, fort Lawrence is erected, and intermediate lines are throwing up daily."—Columbian, S 1, 1814.

2 Marinus Willett writes from New York to Monroe, emphasizing the importance of commanding the lakes and continuing operations in Canada. "There is at present in this quarter a spirit equal to anything I saw in our revolutionary war. Should the Enemy visit us, I promise myself the pleasure of seeing them once more beat before I die— This would be to me a feast indeed. . . ."—From the original letter with the Monroe papers, in the N. " Writing from Jamaica, L. I., to Jeremiah Mason, Rufus King says: "The Destruction of the Capitol has alarmed our city.—At length we have the expectation of the assembling in and about it of 20,000 Militia; the city advances a million by way of subsistence and I am in hopes that this array of means will discourage the enemy from making any attempt upon us."—Life & Correspondence of Rufus King, V: 415.

" The great "pressure for small change" causes the common council to pass the following resolution: "Resolved that a sum not exceeding $5000 be issued under the direction of the Committee of finance and be signed by such person or persons as shall be authorized by them in behalf of the Corporation the highest notes not to exceed 12½ cents and for the payment of which the faith of the Corporation is hereby pledged."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 48–49. The date of the meeting of the board is not contained in the printed minutes, but it is given as Sept. 2 in the MS. volume. On Sept. 12, the council confirmed the appointment by the finance committee of John Pintard to sign the small bills issued by the city.—Ibid., VIII: 51.

" The common council authorises the committee of defence to appoint one or more persons "to proceed to the Seat of the General Government and there to confer with the proper Department with a view of obtaining its sanction to the appropriation of the Funds of this Corporation towards the defence of this City and Harbour to the end that the repayment by the U. S. for all advances heretofore or hereafter to be made for such purpose may be assumed by the U. S."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 49. Sept. 2

" The common council orders the printing of the following notice: "The Corporation inform their fellow Citizens that Books for subscription to a loan of one million of Dollars for the defence of this City are still open at all the Banks and that they will be finally closed on Monday next at 3 oclock."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 49. On Sept. 26, the finance committee reported that the loan had been effected, and bonds were ordered issued to the lenders.—Ibid., VIII: 55–56.

" The common council requires the road committee to cause the old Boston Road, now leading through the encampment at Harlem Heights, to be closed and another road constructed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 49.

4 About 900 of the militia of Rockland County arrive in New York and pitch their tents on Barn Island, "a short distance above Hurlgate." Nearly 500 Jersey volunteers are encamped in the vicinity of Paulus Hook. "Troops are pouring in from all quarters, and we shall soon have an army of 20,000 men in the vicinity of our city."—*N. Y. 26 Oliver Wolcott and Thomas Morris, in behalf of the federal committee for building a steam frigate (see Je 20), solicit pecuniary aid from the common council, saying in part: "When it is recollected that Mr. Fulton has devised a system of maritime defence which promises to be of such extensive use, and whose disinterestedness has prompted him not only to make a gratuitous tender of it to his country, but to undertake, also, without any pecuniary compensation, the labor of superintending its construction; when also the ship carpenters, Adam and Noah Brown, have expended their last shilling in the building of the vessel, and this under the most discouraging pecuniary difficulties, occasioned 1814 Sept. 26 by advances which have enabled them to fit out with unexampled celerity the brig on Lake Champlain with which the gallant McDonough defeated a superior British force [see S 11], we cannot believe that the patriotic and enlightened body to whom we address ourselves, will hesitate in furnishing the means to enable us to finish so important a work, and which without their aid must remain incomplete. There are now upward of 260 workmen employed in the hull and machinery of the steam vessel. . . ." The corporation thereupon authorises a loan to the U. S. of $26,000 in addition to $20,000 already loaned to the committee, taking as collateral security $40,000 in treasury notes for the repayment of the loan with interest at 7%.—*M. C. 27 Brig.-Gen. Winfield Scott arrives in New York. The front of the Park Theatre is illuminated in his honour.—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 27, 1814.

29 In a letter to Secretary James Monroe, Gov. Tompkins says: "For the defence of the City of New York I have exerted myself to the utmost. Full fifteen thousand of the Militia of this State & about One thousand Sea Fencibles, organized under State authority are now in service in the Third Military District. These with Commodore Decatur's command, the regulars, Sea Fencibles of the United States, Jersey Militia, Corps of exempts & neighbouring Militia left in reserve, will, if well disciplined & commanded be adequate to the defence of New York."—Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, III: 554.

Oct. 10 The freedom of the city in a gold box and the honour of a portrait are voted to Gen. Jacob Brown, the hero of Chippewa (see Jl 5).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 59, 88–89. The portrait was painted by Jarvis in 1815, and now hangs in the city hall.—Cat. of Works of Art, etc., 11. Gen. Brown's letter to Mayor De Witt Clinton, written from "Head Quarters Sackets Harbour Nov: 9th 1814," in reply to the common council's resolutions is preserved in the city clerk's record-room. The honours were bestowed on him, Jan. 28, 1815 (q.v.).

" The common council resolves that a memorial be forwarded to congress on the subject of the loan of $1,000,000 (see Ag 29) made by the corporation to the United States for the defence of the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 60. See O 24.

14 In accordance with its resolution of Oct. 4, 1813 (q.v.), the common council confers the freedom of the city on Commodore Oliver Perry.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 61–62; N. Y. Eve. Post, O 15, 1814.

20 The following appeal to the people is issued: "The Committee of Defence, having reason to believe that this city is in great danger of an attack from the enemy, and that it may reasonably be expected to take place within a few weeks, deem it proper thus publicly to make it known to their fellow-citizens, at the same time they call on them for a renewal of their patriotic labours without delay for a completion of the defences at Harlem, being well convinced that the zeal and activity of their fellow-citizens will, in a few days, place those works in such a formidable situation as to afford an effectual resistance to any force which may be brought against the city. . . ."—Columbian, O 21, 1814.

22 The legislature passes a resolution censuring "the extravagant and disgraceful terms proposed by the British Commissioners at Ghent" (see Ag 8), and recommending to the national government "the adoption of the most vigorous and efficacious measures in the prosecution of the war, as the best means of bringing the contest to an honorable termination, and of transmitting unimpaired to their posterity, their rights, liberty and independence." —Assemb. Jour., 38th sess., 98; Senate Jour., 38th sess., 69.

Oct. 22 " The legislature agrees to present swords to Gens. Jacob Brown, Winfield Scott, Edmund Gaines, Eleazer Ripley, James Miller, Peter B. Porter, Alexander Macomb, Benj. Mooers, and Samuel Strong, as well as to the eldest male heirs of the late Gens. John Swift and Daniel Davis, in recognition of their services on the northern frontier in defence of their country. Commodore Macdonough is voted a sword and 1,000 acres of land.—Assemb. Jour., 38th sess., 101; Senate Jour., 38th sess., 70.

23 Upon appointment by the president, Gov. Tompkins assumes command of the Third Military District and establishes headquarters at the New York city hall.—Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, I: 699–700. See D 10.

24 The legislature appropriates $50,000 for completing the fortifications on Staten Island.—Laws of N. Y. (1814–15), chap. 27.

" The common council resolves that the committee of defence be authorised to negotiate with the war department of the United States regarding the loan of $1,000,000 by this corporation, and that U. S. stock at 80% be taken therefor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 68. For side lights on these negotiations see letters (MSS.), Sec'y of War James Monroe to Nicholas Fish, and Senator Rufus King to Comptroller Mercein, in city clerk's record-room.

" Eben. Stevens presents to the common council a portrait of Robert Monckton, colonial governor of the province of New York, with a letter stating that "part of the Military course of our Revolutionary hero Gates, was performed in the capacity of Brigade Major to Governor Monckton."—From the original letter, in metal file No. 45, city clerk's record-room.

26 "A Friend to Improvements and an Old Engineer" writes to one of the papers: "It may be asserted . . . that there is no city in the world in which there have been more improvements of an useful, ornamental or philanthropic nature than in this, within the last 10 or 12 years. The vast alterations for the better, in respect to our wharves, piers and slips; the widening and extension of so many of our streets; the opening of so many new ones: the elegant manner in which the unsettled part of our city has been lately laid out by the commissioners appointed for that purpose; the very pleasant and salubrious walks . . . on the battery and in the park; the great decoration . . . by the erection of that superb edifice, the City Hall; the building of several new markets, particularly of the Washington . . . and the New Alms House and Penitentiary at Bellvieu . . . the system of the Fire Department has . . . been carried to a degree of maturity which could not possibly be expected in so short a time, and which is certainly far superior to any establishment of the kind in the United States. . . ."—Com. Adv., O 26, 1814.

29 The steam frigate "Fulton the First" (see Je 20) is launched from the ship-yards of Adam and Noah Brown, "amidst the roar of cannon and the shouts and acclamations of upwards of twenty thousand people, who had assembled to witness the event. . . . She measures 145 feet on deck and 55 feet breadth of beam —draws only 8 feet of water, and is to mount thirty 32 pound carronades and 2 Columbiads, the latter to carry each a 100 pound red hot ball."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 29, 1814; Winsor, VII: 460. For view of the launching, see Pl. 83-a, Vol. III. The frigate was at first called the "Demologos."—Dickinson, Robert Fulton, Engineer and Artist, 261–62. It is described in detail in Colden's Life of Fulton, 228 et seq. See also Fulton's own account under N 23. For Gov. Tompkins's estimate, see N 14.

31 "Our city was considerably agitated this morning by a rumour which was running the rounds, that a vidette had arrived from Rockaway Beach with information that 70 sail of enemy's ships of war and transports had made their appearance off that place, shaping their course for Sandy Hook. On investigating the rumour it turns out that a vidette did indeed arrive here this morning from the east end of Long Island, but with information to Maj. Warner, that the number of vessels at anchor in Gardners Bay, opposite New-London, had increased to seven."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 31, 1814.

Nov. 4 In accordance with its resolution of Dec. 17, 1812 (q.v.), the common council confers the freedom of the city on Commodore Stephen Decatur.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 72–74; Diary of De Witt Clinton (MS.) in N. Y. H. S.

5 The Americans evacuate and destroy Fort Erie, and retire to the American side of the Niagara River. This ends the war in that region.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., IV: 69.

1814 Nov. 5 Gov. Tompkins sends to Secretary Monroe a comprehensive report of the military situation in the vicinity of New York City.—Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, III: 585–91.

6 Gen. Jackson, at the head of 3,000 men, appears before the Spanish town of Pensacola, Fla., to drive out the British. The British blew up the fort, on Nov. 8, and retired in ships from the bay.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., IV: 180–81.

9 The fort on Bedlow's Island is named Fort Wood by Gov. Tompkins, and the one on Ellis Island becomes Fort Gibson.—Columbian, N 11, 1814

14 Col. Solomon Van Rensselaer writes from New York to Mrs. Van Rensselaer at Albany: "The Governor is in his new quarters, with all his suite; we have an elegant establishment; live in perfect harmony, and in style; much to do and attend strictly to all duties. . . . If there is no attack on this place this Fall—and none is expected—I shall be with you in a few weeks, when the Governor will return to Albany.

"The militia are sickly and heartily tired of a military life; desertions are frequent and furloughs asked for by dozens every day. We have visited the fortifications at the Hook, Narrows, this Island. . . . All my time is taken up in my profession. I act as aid and not as Adjutant-General. All express their satisfaction at my being here, and much confidence is placed in me by the inhabitants. . . . Lewis has gone to Washington to beg to be retained. Last night we returned from again visiting the troops and fortifications on Long Island and the Narrows, a tour of three days I spent very pleasantly, in which time we reviewed three Brigades, and were received at the different posts with a tremendous roar of cannon. The review of General Boyd's Brigade of Regulars was very splendid, the troops performed well and looked like soldiers. . . . We are just now going out to review the troops."—Guernsey, N. Y. City & Vicinity in the War of 1812–15, II: 373–75.

" Gov. Tompkins writes from New York to Commodore Decatur: "The steam frigate [see O 29] building in this harbour is, I presume, intended to act as a moveable Battery for harbour defence; & is expected to operate most advantageously in a calm, when ships of the ordinary construction would be unmanageable; & she of consequence enabled to choose her position. The experiment of her utility is still to be tried though I think it probable she will answer the end proposed.

"I do not believe however that Vessels of this description would be formidable on the ocean, or in broad waters; or that they would be the most advisable armament for lake Ontario, Ships of the line & frigates form the naval force, upon which alone I should place reliance; either for blockading the enemys fleet on that lake or for conquering it in open fight."—Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, III: 597. See N 23.

15 "The number of garrison and battering cannon and mortars now mounted for the military defence of this post and city amounts to 570 pieces. The largest we have seen is the Columbiad of one hundred pounds. A number of the same pieces of fifty pounds calibre are mounted in Fort Greene. In addition to these thirty more heavy carriages are nearly finished: And the handsome and formidable park of field artillery and battalion guns belonging to the brigades of militia are not included in the enumeration. We may count besides upon one or two hundred active and useful pieces on board the President, gun boats, and vessels of war in port, without including the steam battery Fulton."—Columbian, N 15, 1814.

16 Pres. Madison, by proclamation, recommends that Thursday, Jan. 12, 1815, be observed as a day of public humiliation, fasting and prayer.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 19, 1814.

21 The common council votes that the freedom of the city in a gold box be presented to Gen. Alexander Macomb, and that he be requested to sit for a portrait.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 88. Macomb's letter of Nov. 24 acknowledging the receipt of the resolutions is in metal file No. 45, city clerk's record-room. The presentation took place on Dec. 8 (q. v.). The portrait was painted by Samuel Waldo in 1815.—Cat. of the Works of Art, etc., 10.

" The common council authorises the committee of finance "to extend the issuing of Corporation money bills to a sum not exceeding fifty thousand Dollars."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 88. Facsimiles of the city's paper money, bearing date of Dec. 20, 1814, are in Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 170.

23 Gen. Jonathan Williams having written, in behalf of the people of Philadelphia, to Robert Fulton concerning the construction of a duplicate of the "Fulton the First" for the protection of that city, Nov. Fulton answers from New York on this day, giving an interesting 23 description of the steam frigate. He says:

"much occupied on monday in moving the Steam Vessel from the east into the north River I did not receive your communication of 19 until yesterday Tuesday

Her length is on deck	167 feet
Breadth of beam	56
depth of hole	12
height of gun deck	8
Thickness of Sides	5
power	120 horses

Commenced June 1 will be finished about 1 Janry Estimate for Engine and hull about 150$ [sic]
It will I believe cost Something more her Boilers of copper, which alone will do for salt water, weigh 24 tons All her valves and communications with salt water is Brass. She is pierced for 30 guns Long 32 pounders She has 21 on Board with near 60 tons of material and now draws 9 feet 2 Inches of water with this weight My two Steam boats the car of Neptune and Sultan towed her through the water at the rate of 3½ miles an hour. There is now no doubt that when finished she will run from 4½ to 5 miles an hour in still water The $150,000 estimate presented to the secretary of the navy was Independent of guns coppering Sails Anchors cordage Joiners work and Armament In general All complete she may be estimated at 235 or 240,000 dollars.

"How to construct one from under my eye and elsewhere than at this city I do not know here I have erected workshops tools and machinery Suited to the construction of large engines and heavy works also, all the models of her castings and fixings, which alone is a work of some months, and has cost from 3 to 4000 $ But the hull might be built at Phila—and the principal part of the machinery be made here in the transport of which there will only be land carriage from Brunswick to Trenton which will cost less than to make the models. I must also remark that as this is a new Invention which requires all my care to render it as complete and useful as can reasonably be expected from my present experience, I cannot trust the construction of the machinery or the fitting out of the Vessel to be directed by any one but myself in which I will give every facility in my power to the Gentlemen of Phila."—N. Y. P. L. Bulletin, XIII: 580; Dickinson, Robert Fulton, Engineer and Artist, 261–62; descrip. of Pl. 83-a, III: 557. See N 30, 1814, and My 22, 1815.

"We understand orders have been issued by his excellency the 28 commander of this military district, to dismiss the militia now on duty in this city and its vicinity. Those stationed at Harlem have returned their arms to the state arsenal, and take their departure for their homes and families this day."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 28, 1814. This action was taken because all fear of a British attack upon New York had been given up.—See N 30.

" A deed for lots numbered 107 and 161 on the northwesterly side of William St. is presented by the common council to the "New York Society for promoting the manumission of Slaves and protecting such of them as have been or may be liberated."—M. C. C. (1754–1831), VIII: 90. The grant is made on condition that an African free school be built there within a limited time. The deed was recorded Nov. 8, 1816.—Liber of Conveyances, CXIV: 511.

30 Capt. Thomas Macdonough is ordered by the Navy Department to proceed to New York to take "command of the steam floating battery Fulton First" (see O 29). This was the first appointment of a naval officer as commander of the first steam vessel of war in the history of the world.—Macdonough, Life of Commodore Macdonough, 214. See Ja 6, 1815.

" Col. Van Rensselaer again writes from New York: "On the 25th we had a splendid day; ten thousand troops were under arms, marched through the city and were reviewed by the Governor, after which we dined in the City Hall by invitation from the corporation. I wrote you that in two or three weeks the militia would be discharged, all idea of an attack from the enemy being given up. . . ."—Guernsey, N. Y. City & Vicinity in the War of 1812–15, II: 383–85.

Dec. 2 Gen. Jackson arrives at New Orleans and takes command.—Brackenridge, Hist. of the Late War between the U. S. and Gt. Brit. (Phila., 1836), 279–80.

5 The common council authorises the payment of $250 to Rev.

1814 Dec. 5 John Stanford (see Je, 1813) "as a compliment for past services as a minister of the Gospel rendered at the Alms House and other public institutions in this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 93. There was a similar recognition annually thereafter for many years of the services rendered by this semi-public chaplain of the city's institutions; by 1826, the "compliment" had been doubled (ibid., XV: 250).

6 A paper called The Mid-day Courier. With the Morning's Mails was in existence at this time.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 460.

8 The freedom of the city is formally conferred on Gen. Alexander Macomb (see N 21).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 99–100.

10 Gov. Tompkins transfers his headquarters in New York (see O 23) to "the Government House, State Street."—Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, I: 751.

14 The British capture a small American fleet off Louisiana. This gives them command of the route to New Orleans, but they fail to make use of their opportunity.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., IV: 182–83.

15 The Hartford convention, called by Massachusetts because of New England's dissatisfaction with the war and the present condition of affairs, assembles, delegates from Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and New Hampshire being present. It adjourned on Jan. 5, 1815, after adopting a report urging that separation from the Union be not considered until an attempt to correct the present evils had been made; declaring that the Conscription Bill before congress was unconstitutional; and recommending that each state be permitted to defend herself and to use a part of the federal taxes to defray the expense. If congress did not act, if peace was not concluded, if New England was neither defended by the general government nor given leave to defend herself and pay the cost with the federal taxes, another convention was to be held in June. Five commissioners were dispatched to present the grievances to congress, but on the day they arrived at Washington, news came of the treaty of Ghent, and without showing their credentials or making any announcement, they returned to New England, "followed by shouts of derision from the whole Republican press." —McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., IV: 245–52, 275. Dec. 15

23 The common council agrees to lend $400,000 to the governor in order that he may pay the militia who were stationed in the city during the autumn.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 106–8; N. Y. Eve. Post, D 23, 1814. The money was repaid by the U. S. on Feb. 6, 1816.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 417–18.

24 A treaty of peace between Great Britain and the U. S. is signed at Ghent. All prisoners of war and captured territory are to be returned, and all boundary disputes arising from the treaty of Sept. 3, 1783 (q. v.), are to be settled by commissioners. Both countries pledge themselves to help to secure the abolition of the slave-trade. Concerning the impressment of seamen and the paper blockades, the treaty is silent.—Laws of U. S., 13th cong., 3rd sess., 194–202. For an account of the negotiations leading to the treaty, see Ag 8; also McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., IV: 256–74. News of the peace reached New York on Feb. 11, 1815 (q. v.).

26 An estimate of the value of the fire department establishment totals $51,913.00.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 110–11.

28 The British, under Sir Edward Pakenham, attack Gen. Jackson, and are repulsed.—Winsor, VII: 404; Brackenridge, Hist. of the Late War between the U. S. and Gt. Brit. (Phila., 1836), 284. See Ja 1, 1815.

31 Gen. Joseph G. Swift makes a report, accompanied by a number of maps, plans, and views, to the committee of defence concerning the fortifications which have been erected for the protection of New York City. This very important report is printed in Guernsey, N. Y. City & Vicinity during the War of 1812–15, II: 535–40, from the original now deposited by the city in the N. Y. H. S. Four of the drawings are reproduced as Pls. 82A, 82B-a, 82B-b, and 82B-c, Vol. III. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 89, 104, 236, 361, 393, 400, 416, 420, 480, 489, 497, 552, 592.

CHAPTER V

B.—PERIOD OF INVENTION, PROSPERITY, AND PROGRESS

1815–1841

1815 — IN this year, diplomatic relations between Spain and the U. S., which had been broken off in 1808 (q.v.), were resumed.—Winsor, VII: 498.

— "Soon after the close of the War of 1812, an Englishman who had learned the process of canning in his own country started the business in New York City. By this time, the original method of preserving in glass jars had been modified by the use of cans. This New York firm soon advertised meats, gravies, and soups put up in tins, warranted to keep fresh for long periods, especially during protracted sea voyages. Customers were informed that, if spoiled, the fact could be detected by the head of the can bulging. This preserving method was at first used principally for oysters, lobsters, and salmon. It was established gradually at several points along the coast and became an industry of some importance by 1840."—Clark, Hist. of Manufactures in the U. S., 485.

— In the season of 1815–16, the "Handel and Haydn Society" was organized for the cultivation of sacred music. In 1828, it was said of it: "They have given, at various times, oratorios in St. Paul's Church, at which the most eminent singers in this country have taken a conspicuous part."—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y., 388.

— In this year, the south-west battery was named Castle Clinton in honour of De Witt Clinton, mayor during the war.—8th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. and Hist. Pres. Soc. (1903), 116; L. M. R. K., III: 983.

— In this year, the northern limit of improvements on Broadway was at Canal St.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 604.

— In this year, an assessment was made for opening 125th St. between Third Ave. and the lane leading to Manhattanville (Index to Assess. Rolls, Vol. I), and it was confirmed in August by the supreme court.—M. C. C., 1784–1831, VIII: 281.

— Assessment was also made for opening Second Ave. from North St. to 29th St.—Index to Assess. Rolls, Vol. I. See also descrip. of Pl. 112, III: 616. In opening Second Ave., it passed through the burying-ground of the Methodist congregation.—Doc. No. 76, Bd. of Ald., F 4, 1833.

— A view of the city from Brooklyn Heights, drawn and engraved at about this time by Boquet (probably J. L. Boquet de Woiseri), shows some important details found in no other view. It forms one of a series of six aquatint views, engraved on the same plate, with the title "A View of the First Cities of the United States," reproduced and described in Vol. III, A. Pl. 13.

— In this year, on his return from England where he studied art, Sam'l F. B. Morse organized the N. Y. Drawing Association. From this sprang the Nat'l Acad. of the Arts of Design, of which he was the first president. For brief accounts of his career as a painter, see Tuckerman's Book of the Artists (1867), and Isham's Hist. of Am. Painting (1905).

Jan. 1 — The national debt, principally on account of the war, amounts to $99,824,410.70.—Am. State Papers, IX: 23.

" — The British again attack Gen. Jackson before New Orleans (see D 28, 1814), and are signally beaten.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., IV: 186–87. See Ja 8.

5 — Four buildings in Nassau St. and nine in Theatre Alley are destroyed by fire. The cornice of the theatre was several times on fire, but the flames were fortunately extinguished before doing much damage.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 6, 1815.

6 — In accordance with its resolution of Sept. 26, 1814 (q.v.), the common council confers the freedom of the city on Commodore Thomas Macdonough.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 116–17. William Denning, at whose house in New York Macdonough is staying, writes to his daughter, Mrs. Shaler, in Middletown, Conn.: ". . . He does not seem to like the command of the steam frigate [see N 30] not being used to such a vessel."—Macdonough's Life of Commodore Macdonough, 217. Jan. 6

The British make their final attack on New Orleans (see Ja 1), and are decisively defeated by the Americans under Gen. Jackson.—Winsor, VII: 403–4; N. Y. Eve. Post, F 6, 7, 1815. 8

New York "is thrown into a tumult of joy" by rumours of peace.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 9, 1815. Definite news of the Treaty of Ghent did not arrive until Feb. 11 (q.v.). 9

Certain inhabitants petition that an "efficient Bridge" be built over Canal St. at Varick St. Referred to street commissioner. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 118–19. "

The "President," commanded by Commodore Decatur, is captured outside New York harbour by the British ship "Endymion."—Winsor, VII: 405, 458. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 26, 1815. A court of inquiry to investigate the loss of the frigate was held in New York in April.—Ibid., Ap 28, 1815. 15

The freedom of the city is formally conferred on Gen. Jacob Brown (see O 10, 1814).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 133–35; Diary of De Witt Clinton (MS.), in N. Y. H. S. 28

A national salute in honour of the victory at New Orleans (see Ja 8) is fired from the U. S. frigate "Guerriere" lying in New York Harbour.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 8, 1815. Feb. 7

Col. Lawrence, with 375 men, surrenders Fort Boyer, Mobile, to 5,000 British, with a large fleet, under Gen. Lambert.—Ann. Reg. (1815), 159–61. 11

"Peace—On Saturday evening [F 11], about eight o'clock, arrived the British sloop of war Favorite, bringing Mr. Carrol, one of the Secretaries attached to the American legation, bearer of a treaty of Peace, between the United States and G. Britain. . . . the public expressions of tumultuous joy and gladness, that spontaneously burst forth from all ranks and degrees of people, . . . , without stopping to enquire the conditions, evinced how really sick at heart they were, of a war that threatened to wring from them the remaining means of subsistence, and of which they could neither see the object nor the end. The public exhileration shewed itself in the illumination of most of the windows in the lower part of Broadway and the adjoining streets, in less than twenty minutes after Mr. Carrol arrived at the City Hotel. The street itself was illuminated by lighted candles, carried in the hands of a large concourse of the populace; the city resounded in all parts with the joyous cry of a peace! . . . Expresses of the glad tidings were instantly dispatched in all directions, to Boston, Philadelphia, Providence, Albany, &c. &c." This news report is embodied in an editorial which contains the editor's conjectures regarding the probable provisions of the treaty.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 13, 1815. "

Jas. Sterling, in a letter to Wynant Van Zandt, referring to these events, says: ". . . a handbill is to be Issued from the Office of Lang & Turner . . ."—Wynant Van Zandt Papers (MS.), in N. Y. P. L.

The reception of the news was thus described later by another eyewitness: "Years ago, the office of the old Gazette was in Hanover-square, near the corner of Pearl-street. It was a place of resort for news and conversation, especially in the evening. The evening of February 11th, 1815, was cold; and at a late hour, only Alderman Cebra and another gentleman were left with Father Lang, the genius of the place. The office was about being closed, when a pilot rushed in and stood for a moment so entirely exhausted as to be unable to speak. 'He has great news,' exclaimed Mr. Lang. Presently the pilot, gasping for breath, whispered, 1815 Feb. 11 intelligibly, 'Peace! Peace!' The gentlemen lost their breath as fast as the pilot gained his. Directly the pilot was able to say, 'An English sloop-of-war is below, with news of a Treaty of Peace.' They say that Mr. Lang exclaimed in greater words than he ever used before or after. All hands rushed into Hanover-square, crying, 'Peace! peace! peace!' The windows flew up, for families lived there then. No sooner were the inmates sure of the sweet sounds of Peace, than the windows began to glow with brilliant illuminations.

"The cry of 'Peace! Peace! Peace!' spread through the City at the top of all voices. No one stopped to inquire about 'Free trade and sailors' rights.' No one enquired whether even the national honor had been preserved. The matter by which politicians had irritated the nation into the War, had lost all their importance. It was enough that the ruinous War was over. An old man on Broadway, attracted to his door by the noise, was seen to pull down immediately, a placard 'To Let,' which had been long pasted up. Never was there such joy in the City. A few evenings after, there was a general illumination; and, although the snow was a foot deep and soaked with rain, yet the streets were crowded with men and women, eager to see and partake of everything which had in it the sight or taste of Peace."—Hist. Mag., 2nd ser., V: 207–8.

13 Congress appropriates $500,000 for repairing or rebuilding, on their present sites, "the President's House, Capitol and Public Offices," in the city of Washington.—Acts of Cong., 3d sess. of 13th cong., chap. 41.

" The common council initiates measures for a public demonstration of rejoicing over the conclusion of peace with Great Britain.

The following address to the people is ordered printed in the "several gazettes of the City:"

"The Common Council, in common with their fellow Citizens, appreciating the important blessings which will result to our country from the restoration of peace and sincerely congratulating them on the auspicious intelligence which has been received on that subject [see F 11], inform them, that arrangements have been made for suitable demonstrations of joy whenever intelligence of the ratification of the Treaty shall be received; and particularly that due notice of a time for a general illumination of the City will be given. They also suggest that any partial exhibitions of joy are incompatible with the solemnity of the occasion, & may produce irregularities & disorders. They further inform their fellow Citizens that a Committee of the Board have been appointed to superintend the requisite arrangements."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 142–43; Diary of De Witt Clinton (MS.), in N. Y. H. S.

16 "The Treaty with England is unanimously approved by the Senate," writes Senator Rufus King to Comptroller Mercein.—Original letter in city clerk's record-room.

17 "A letter was received this morning from Secretary Monroe, to our Commander in Chief, saying that the Treaty [see D 24, 1814, and F 11, 1815] would be ratified—and requested that flag vessels might be immediately despatched to the squadrons on our coast, to cease their hostilities. Instantly, the Revenue Cutter, Capt. Brewster was sent down by Gen. Boyd, commander of this District, to offer to the British squadron all the civilities due from one friendly nation to another."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 17, 1815. The treaty was ratified by the senate on this day and the ratification proclaimed by Pres. Madison on Feb. 18.—Laws of U. S., 13th cong., 3rd sess., 194–202.

18 "In commemoration of the Treaty of Peace, The inside of the [Park] Theatre, will, this Evening, be decorated with the Flags of various Nations. The front of the House will be Brilliantly Illuminated, And an Emblematic Transparency exhibited, representing the meeting of Columbia & Britannia."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 18, 1815. See N 14.

20 Not having heard of the Treaty of Ghent (see D 24, 1814), Capt. Charles Stewart in the U. S. frigate "Constitution" engages the British sloops of war "Cyane" and "Levant" off Madeira and forces them to surrender.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., IV: 278–79; N. Y. Eve. Posts, My 22, 1815. See Je 5.

" The common council approves the committee's plans for celebrating peace on Feb. 22.

The city hall is to be illuminated and appropriate transparencies are to be displayed.

A handsome exhibit of fireworks is to be shown in front of the government house. It is directed that neither horses nor carriages appear in any part of the streets of the city south of Chamber St. from seven to ten o'clock Feb. 20

At seven o'clock, three guns are to be fired in succession at the Battery and at the arsenal, and three rockets are to be shown. These are the signals for a general illumination in each house. The lights are to be extinguished at ten.

It is recommended that flags be displayed during the day from the forts and from vessels in the harbour. That a salute be fired at noon and at that time, the bells of the city be rung for an hour.

It is also recommended that the citizens assemble in their respective churches in the morning at the usual hour of service, "there to offer up to the great Ruler of Nations their sincere thanksgivings for the restoration of peace to our Country, and humbly to implore his blessings upon it."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 148–50. Because of unfavourable weather on the 22d, the celebration was postponed until Feb. 27 (q. v.).—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 22, 1815. On March 20, Joseph Delacroix was paid $1,500 for the fireworks.—Ibid., VIII: 173.

Salutes are fired at noon and at 1 o'clock "from the heavy cannon of the forts in this harbor, on the return of peace."—Columbian, F 21, 1815. See also Grand Opening of the New Armory of the 8th Reg't (1890), 12. 21

The following general order is issued by Gov. Tompkins: "The Commander in Chief announces, with the most heartfelt satisfaction, to the Militia of the State of New York, the ratification of a treaty of peace between the United States and Great Britain. In congratulating them on this auspicious event, he cannot withhold an expression of his praise and gratitude for the promptitude and fidelity with which they have on all occasions obeyed those various calls of service in defence of the State, which its safety compelled him to make. . . . 22

"The Commander in Chief is especially charged by the President of the United States to convey to the Militia of this State his thanks for the patriotism, zeal and perseverance so eminently displayed by them in defence of the rights of their country."—Pub. Papers of Daniel D. Tompkins, I: 519–20.

Robert Fulton dies at No. 1 State St.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 24; N. Y. Spectator, F 25, 1815; Dickinson, Robert Fulton, Engineer and Artist, 266. The legislature, the common council, and the societies to which Fulton belonged, passed resolutions of regret at his loss and voted to wear mourning for him. His funeral, which took place on Feb. 24, was attended by officers of the national, state, and city governments, by members of learned societies, and by a great number of private citizens. All business in the city was suspended as a sign of respect, and minute guns were fired from the "Demologos" and the West Battery from the time the procession started till it reached Trinity Church. The body was interred in the family vault of the Livingstons.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 25, 1815; Dickinson, op. cit., 266; Diary of De Witt Clinton (MS.) in N. Y. H. S. 23

In accordance with the plans of the common council (see F 20), a general illumination of the city takes place in honour of peace between the United States and Gt. Britain. "Commerce this day, hastens to shew 'its white feather on the ocean': this being the 12th day after the ratification of the treaty [see F 17], & which, in the second article is fixed upon as the day, after which vessels, shall not be captured on the American coasts from the lat. 24 degrees south to the lat. of 50 north, and as far eastward in the Atlantic ocean as the 36th degree of West longitude, from the meridian of Greenwich, or if captured to be restored."—*N. John Ferguson is appointed mayor of New York, replacing De Witt Clinton (see F 6, 1811).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 163. Wilson says: "The influential political opponents of De Witt Clinton succeeded, in 1815, in displacing him as mayor and having John Ferguson, who was grand sachem of the Tammany Society, appointed in his place. This was done with the understanding that Ferguson was shortly to resign, be made surveyor of the port, and that Jacob Radcliff was to be named as mayor. Accordingly Fergu- 6

1815 son occupied the position only from March to June."—Wilson,

" Richard Riker is appointed recorder of the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 173.

8 The common council re-enacts the "Law to regulate the admission of freemen."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 162. "This was the last adoption of the law relating to the admission of Freemen. . . . At a meeting of the Common Council held on June 18, 1816, the Corporation Council was requested to revise and correct the Laws and Ordinances of the City, and make a speedy report on the same; his report was submitted December 2, 1816, and referred to a committee of laws, who after many sessions finally reported May 5, 1817, sixty-six ordinances, which were approved and ordered to be printed. The committee omitted the law relating to Freemen."—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1885), 399 (footnote). This evidently explains Mrs. Van Rensselaer's statement that ". . . the burgher-right granted to the citizens of New Amsterdam in 1657 survived in New York until the year 1815."—Van Rensselaer, *Hist. 13 The powers assembled in the Congress of Vienna, upon learning that Napoleon has escaped from Elba and has entered France with an armed force, issue a statement declaring that they "will employ all their resources and will unite all their efforts in order that the general peace . . . may not be again disturbed."—Anderson, Const. & Docs., etc., 468–69.

14 An editor remarks concerning the Battery: "While we were exposed to be invaded by an enemy, it has been judged proper for the security of the city, to turn this beautiful promenade into a breast work, and for such purpose it was necessary to tear to pieces, deface, and destroy every vestige of its former beauty.—Now that peace has returned, what a grateful thing would it not be if we could again revisit this delightful evening walk? It would add to the innocent gratification of the citizens, if the restrictions could be removed from the building on which the flag-staff is erected. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 14, 1815. He comes, we presume, for the purpose of concerting measures to re-unite the party at Tammany-Hall, who have of late shewn strong symptoms of distraction and dissatisfaction, which threaten the most mischievous consequences."—*N. " The comptroller is authorised to make arrangements for the establishment of signal poles.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 166. The minutes do not state their position.

" The street commissioner, John McComb, reports to the common council that, as the 3rd Ave. after the first of May will be opened from the Bowery to Harlem River, he recommends that a profile should be made of it and also that it be determined in what way the street and avenues shall be worked.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 168. On April 14, McComb wrote to John Randel, Jr., concerning this matter, asking at the same time when Randel's plan would be finished "& the monuments set."—From original among "Miscellaneous MSS." in N. " "Resolved that the thanks of the Common Council be presented to the Hon[1] De Witt Clinton late Mayor of this City for his able and faithful discharge of the various duties of the Mayoralty particularly for his prompt, judicious, and impartial administration during a period of war, and for his candour and intelligence, as the presiding Officer of this Board."—*M. " The Battery committee recommends to the common council that the Battery be relegated to its former use as a place of recreation and suggests certain improvements.

"The Citizens did voluntar[il]y & without murmur relinquish in a great measure the pleasure they were accustomed to enjoy there, and now that the war is over and the necessity for occupying the Battery any longer for military purposes thereby ceases they will doubtless require to be again gratified with the amusement formerly enjoyed and will expect that those grounds be again taken under the care of the corporation and regulated with such taste as they may be susceptible of. . . .

"Your Committee therefore suggest the propriety of erecting a new Bulk Head on the North River Side to extend from the Mar. point of the Battery in a right line to the Westerly angle thereof, 20 opposite where the old Flag Staff formerly stood, and of appropriating the ground which will be taken from the Government House lot whenever regulated to the filling up such new requisition. . . .

"Your Committee further recommend filling up the Ditches which the erecting of the Parapets which now encumber the Battery, have occasioned, levelling and regulating the walks—manuring and sanding the soil and otherwise improving the grounds."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 170–71. John McComb, street commissioner, was paid $500 on April 3 for expenses at the Battery.—Ibid., VIII: 178.

The legislature gives New York City permission to construct " wooden buildings for ferry houses, on any of the streets or wharves contiguous to the present or future ferries, from this city to Nassau Island, Staten Island, and New Jersey.—Laws of N. Y. (1815), chap. 154.

The legislature requires that all houses between the Battery " and a line drawn from the Hudson River through Jay St. to the East River at Montgomery St. be constructed of brick or stone and roofed with tile or slate, for the more effectual prevention of fires —Laws of N. Y. (1815), chap. 155. It was amended on April 12, 1822, and May 1, 1829.

The legislature passes an act "altering the Time of electing "
Charter Officers in the City of New-York." The election is to commence on the last Tuesday of April instead of on the third Tuesday in November (see Mr 21, 1800). It is provided that officers elected this month shall serve "from the first Monday of December next until the second Monday of May then next ensuing and no longer;" the second Monday in May is to be the regular date for new officers to be sworn in.—Laws of N. Y. (1815), chap. 156.

The Fulton Steamboat Company is incorporated. The pre- 18
amble of the act states that Josiah Ogden Hoffman, Cadwallader D. Colden, and Wm. Cutting and their associates have purchased, of the late Robert R. Livingston and Robert Fulton, a right to the exclusive navigation of the waters of the East River or Sound, "by the means of steam or fire," and to the exclusive use in such navigation of the inventions of Livingston and Fulton; and have constructed a steamboat called the "Fulton," which is now employed in navigating those waters.—Laws of N. Y. (1815), chap. 248.

The legislature appropriates $25,000 for completing the forti- " fications on Staten Island.—Laws of N. Y., (1814–15), chap. 266.

The common council agrees to modify the extent to which 24
Ninth and Tenth Aves. shall be opened. Ninth Ave. is to be opened from Greenwich Lane to the northerly side of 28th St. which street is to be opened to Tenth Ave. and thence to the river. Tenth Ave. is to be opened from this point north to the northerly side of 71st St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 191.

May 1 The common council receives and agrees to accept an invitation from the trustees of St. Peter's Church to attend the dedication of the Cathedral of St. Patrick on Thursday next.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 195. See My 6.

" The common council makes arrangements regarding the sale of the grounds at the government house and adjacent to the Battery. It is agreed to continue Stone St. through the grounds to State St., and that there shall be seven instead of eight lots fronting on Broadway. The property is to be sold at public auction on the 16th under the direction of the comptroller. The sales are further directed to be made on condition that the purchasers of the lots fronting on Broadway and State St. "conform in their buildings to such directions as should be given by the street commissioner respecting the heights of the several water table & several stories of the buildings and of the depth & breadth—and that a conformity of heighth shall be preserved in the several houses to be erected."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 198. See My 8, and Je 5.

6 St. Patrick's Cathedral, begun in 1809, is dedicated by the Right Rev. Dr. Cheverus, Bishop of Boston, in the presence of about 4,000 people. "This grand and beautiful church, which may justly be considered one of the greatest ornaments of our city, and inferior in point of elegance to none in the United States, is built in the Gothic style, and executed agreeably to the design of Mr. Joseph E. Mangin, the celebrated architect of New-York. It is 120 feet long, 80 wide, and between 75 and 80 high. The superior elegance of the architecture, as well as the novelty and beauty of the interior, had for some months past excited a considerable degree of public curiosity, and crowds of citizens of all denominations daily flocked to it, to admire its grandeur and magnificence. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 11, 1815. The cathedral stood at Prince, Mott, and Mulberry Sts.—L. M. R. K., III: 936. Exterior and interior views of the cathedral, as it was in 1853, are in *Illus. " The comptroller presents to the common council the decision of the referees regarding the value of the buildings on the ground lately obtained from the U. S., which valuation is put at $13,000. As Col. Post, who has the deed of cession from the president, does not feel authorised to surrender it until such amount has been paid, a warrant is ordered to issue for $13,000 and another warrant to cover the cost of the furniture when it is valued.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 200.

" The common council agrees to another issue of bills of credit to the amount of $20,000 to accommodate the public until the banks resume specie payment.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 203. On July 3, it ordered an additional issue of small bills to the amount of $30,000.—Ibid., VIII: 249–50.

" The opening of Stone St. through the grounds of the government house (see My 1) is reconsidered by the common council and negatived. It is agreed that the grounds shall be laid out and sold according to a plan presented to the board by the street commissioner. The board agrees that in the purchaser's deeds an agreement shall be included that the corporation's vacant grounds on which the lots front shall never be appropriated for private use.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 203–4. See My 22. Thos. Poppleton's map of the grounds is filed (as Map No. 79) in the div. of real estate, comptroller's office, Municipal Bldg.

May 22 The common council refers to the street commissioner a petition from the inhabitants of Harlem that the opening of a part of Third Ave. be delayed in order to enable them "to collect the grain now growing."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 208–9.

" The common council, upon the receipt of the news of the death of Gen. Jonathan Williams, formerly commanding the Corps of Engineers of the United States, passes the following resolution; "Resolved that they are impressed with a due sense of the important services rendered by him in planning the defences of this City and Harbour, and that they retain a grateful recollection of his many virtues as a man and a Citizen."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 215.

" The common council again changes the plan of the lots at the government house (see My 8). It is decided that the front line of the lots shall be nearly in a line with the present front of the government house; that there be a reservation of ground for public purposes on Whitehall St. of 25 feet front and 33 feet deep; that the said lots be sold on Thursday the 25th inst. [q. v.], under the direction of the comptroller and street commissioner.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 215–16. An advertisement of the sale of the house and lots appeared in *N. Y. Eve. 25 The "lots belonging to the Government House, so called, consisting of seven lots fronting Broadway, four lots fronting on State-street and five on Bridge-street; also, the house and lot corner of Bridge-street and State-street, at present occupied as Head-Quarters," are sold at auction for $158,200. "The corporation purchased this ground of the state for the sum of 50,000 dollars and have yet for sale the Custom-house, military work-shops and various other buildings. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 25; N. Y. Spectator, My 27, 1815; descrip. of Pl. 156-a, III: 838.

The account of the sale in the Com. Adv. is as follows:

"The plot of ground near the Battery, now occupied as a Custom House, Head-Quarters and military work shops, and embracing seventeen elegant building lots, was sold this day at the tontine Coffee House, for the sum of One Hundred and Fifty eight Thousand two Hundred Dollars. The individual lots were bought by the following persons, at the sums annexed to their respective names:—

"Fronting the Bowling Green.

"1.	John Hone,	$10250
2.	J. Leonard,	9500
3.	W. D. Cheever,	9750
4.	E. Anderson,	11000

Post*, My 26, 1815.

" The remainder of the government house property (see My 25) is sold at auction for $6 583. The custom (or government) house is 1815 May 26 purchased by Jacob Barker for $5,050. This makes a total for the property of $164,783. "The Corporation gave for this property 83,000 dollars, instead of 50,000 as we were informed yesterday."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 26, 1815; descrip. of Pl. 156-a, III: 838; M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 223. See My 1. Deeds for the purchased lots were given on June 19.—Ibid., VIII: 243. See D 4. June 1 The following "City improvements" are taking place: "The block (or wedge) in old Hanover Square pulling down—Nassau-Street opening to Cedar-street—the old Government-House taking away and the lots around it clearing—in addition to the usual exertion and alteration of houses and stores, present a busy scene for the bricklayers, carpenters, &c. and promise much amendment in the convenience and beauty of this city, not unworthy of a growing metropolis, rapidly resuming the first rank in commercial activity and importance in the United States."—Columbian, Je 1, 1815. See Jl 1.

4 On this day, a party of officials is to be taken out into New York Bay in the "Fulton the First" (see My 22).—N. Y. Herald, Je 3, 1815; descrip. of Pl. 83-a, III: 557. See Jl 4.

5 The street commissioner reports to the common council regarding the construction of Third Avenue. This report is quoted in extenso as showing the method of constructing roads at this time on Manhattan Island: "as this avenue will become the thoroughfare for all the Eastern travelling, and of course be more used than any other on the Island, it is of the first importance that it should be laid out on correct principles and such as will unite ease and safety with durability." The following are some of the suggestions offered for working the avenue:—

"That the Road be worked to the width of Sixty Feet including the gutters

"2d That forty feet in the center be gravelled from nine to eighteen inches according to the nature of the soil over which the Road will pass

"3d That no hill or rise in the Road shall exceed three degrees of elevation except at two or three situations where on account of the Rock it may be proper to allow a higher rise

"4th That an arch across the Road shall not exceed a half inch to the foot to the middle of the Road, which is about one half of what is usually given."

The natural declivity lengthwise is in most cases sufficient but elsewhere an artificial one must be given.

Difficulty in obtaining gravel is anticipated. When this cannot be done, broken stone should be used for a foundation; the stone should be of as uniform size as possible, "for if there is much variety they will never lye firm and compact as the largest will always work up especially if the bed is clay."

The road should be made by contract under a competent superintendent who is constantly on the ground to see the contract fairly performed. The whole distance should be divided into four parts:—the first between the Bowery and 45th St., the second between 45th and 82d Sts., the third from 82d St. to 105th St., at the fortifications, and the fourth from thence to Harlem Bridge. Forming the road should be in one contract and gravelling it in another.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 224–26.

" In recognition of his exploit on Feb. 20 (q. v.), Capt. Charles Stewart is voted the freedom of the city in a gold box.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 228. The presentation took place on July 25 (q. v.).

13 The common council passes "a Law for the establishment of a Board of Health."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 231.

" After a three years' delay caused by the exigencies and uncertainties of the war, the committee having in charge the memorial presented to the common council by the New York Society Library, The Academy of Arts, The New York Historical Society, etc. (see O 5, 1812), reports favourably, and the board resolves that the almshouse in the rear of the city hall be granted to the various institutions for a term not less than 7 nor more than 21 years.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 232–36.

The third floor is assigned to the Academy of Arts; the second floor to the American Museum; the first floor to the Society Library, the Historical Society, and the N. Y. Literary & Philosophical Society; one room for the display of mechanical inventions, another for a cabinet of mineralogy, a lecture hall and an "apparatus chamber" are also provided. The basement is to be a chemical laboratory.—Eve. Post, Jl 3, 1815. See also plan in Howe, Hist. of Met. Museum of Art, 21. In the following year the paupers were removed to Bellevue, and the almshouse was remodelled. It was henceforth known as the "New York Institution."—*Man. Com. The common council passes the following traffic regulation: "Resolved that no Hackney Carriage shall from and after this day, be placed or Stand in Broad Way, on the West side of the Park until after the first day of October next ensuing Nor shall any Hackney Carriage Stand at the junction of Broadway & Chatham Street Southerly of the poplar Trees at the South end of the Park, under the penalty of Ten Dollars for each offence, to be paid by the Owner or Driver of the Carriage which may be placed or Stand in the manner above prohibited."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 243–44. 19

"We are pleased to learn that Signal Poles, for the purpose of denoting the number and description of sea vessels, as soon as they appear in the offing, are preparing to be erected at the Narrows, upon the old plan, with some improvements to simplify the management of them."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 20, 1815. 20

Napoleon abdicates in favour of his infant son, the king of Rome.—Haydn's Dict. of Dates, 385. 22

A treaty of peace is signed at Algiers by Stephen Decatur and Wm. Shaler, representatives of the U. S., and Omar Bashaw, Dey of Algiers. The Dey relinquishes all claims to American tribute, agrees to surrender all American prisoners and to repay in money the value of property taken from them, and guarantees that the commerce of the U. S. will never again be molested. Having been ratified by the senate, the treaty was proclaimed by Pres. Madison on Dec. 26.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 2, 1816; U. S. Treaties, etc., I: 6–11. 30

The Columbian publishes a letter, signed "Public Spirit," commencing as follows: "The beauty and convenience of our city has so often been sacrificed to avarice, that one cannot but feel some apprehension about the fate of that part of it where at present stands the ruins of the late government house. It has now fallen into the hands of individuals, and although they have an unquestionable right to dispose of it in the most lucrative way, yet should that spot be covered with houses built without taste, and placed with no regard to beauty and proportion, it would excite the indignation of every living citizen and be a source of great regret to our successors." The theme is developed at length.—Columbian, Jl 1, 1815. See S 2. July 1

Louis XVIII enters Paris.—Haydn's Dict. of Dates, 385. 3

A commercial treaty is signed at London by representatives of Great Britain and the U. S. It was ratified by Pres. Madison on Dec. 22.—Laws of U. S., 14th cong., 1st sess., 157–61. See also Winsor, VII: 488. "

"The Steam Frigate Fulton the First, having taken on board a full cargo of consumers, made a cruise to sea, and returned again into harbor in the short space of seven hours."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 5, 1815. See also Colden, Life of Fulton, 227 et seq., and descrip. of Pl. 83-a, III: 557. See S 11. 4

Seven buildings on Market St., three or four on Bedlow St., and about 12 small ones inside the block are destroyed by a fire which rages for an hour and a half and threatens the destruction of all that part of the city. Due to the "unceasing and vigorous exertions of our well organized engine companies," the flames were finally extinguished.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 6, 1815. 5

Jacob Radcliffe is appointed mayor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 261. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 11, 1815. Radcliffe had previously served in this office in 1810 (q. v., Mr 5). His present incumbency lasted until March 2, 1818 (q. v.). See also Mr 6, 1815. 10

Napoleon surrenders to Capt. Maitland of the "Bellerophon," at Rochefort.—Haydn's Dict. of Dates, 385. 15

The common council passes an order directing that "that part of Front St from the intersection of it by South Street at James Slip to Jefferson St be widened to 70 feet by adding 30 feet thereto on the Southerly side—And that front St so widened shall be a continuation of the permanent line & be known & destinguished as South Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 255. 17

1815 July 17 The common council receives a presentment from the grand jury representing as nuisances "Lespinards Meadow—The Collect—The Drain in Chapple Street—The Cellars of many parts of the City particularly near the Fly market—a Soap Factory near the outlet of Van Dam Street & Hetty St—and the broken state of many of the Wharves—They also recommend a strict execution of the Health Laws—Which was (excepting the Subject of the Wharves) refered to the Board of Health—That of the Wharves to the Committee on Wharves—And it was Resolved that it be refered to the Aldermen of the 5 & 8th Wards to consider and report a Plan for regulating Canal Street."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 257–58. On July 3, the jury had complained also of the "keeping of the public gardens on the Sabbath" and the "assemblage of Boys for sport on that day."—Ibid., VIII: 250.

25 The freedom of the city is conferred on Capt. Charles Stewart (see Je 5).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 261–63.

29 The Phoenix Coffee House, at the south-east corner of Wall and Water Sts., is being remodelled for stores.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 29, 1815. For view of the "Phoenix Buildings," see the "Coffee House Slip," in Peabody's Views of N. Y. (1831), and reference to these buildings on p. 31 of that work.

31 The common council votes to borrow $40,000, to complete the establishment at Bellevue.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 269.

Aug. 2 News of the battle of Waterloo reaches New York.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 2, 1815.

14 Chaplain Stanford (see D 5, 1814) recommends to the common council "regulations for the Government of the paupers School about to be established in the new Alms House" at Bellevue.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 274. This long and elaborate document, beautifully written and bearing the date, Aug. 10, 1815, is preserved in the city clerk's record-room. The greater part of Mr. Stanford's life had been spent as a teacher rather than a preacher, so that experience has suggested to him that "seminaries in general are confessedly the springs of society, which, as they flow foul or pure, diffuse through successive generations, depravity & misery; or on the contrary, virtue and happiness. . . . Nations, whose laws are sanguinary, have ever deceminated a great degree of the same spirit in all their institutions for the education of their children. The laws of America having happily been cast in a mould, where justice and humanity are combined: no wonder that our schools should enjoy the salubrity of their benign influence."

The writer believes rewards "prompt to future efforts, provided such encomium be not the effect of private partiality, or breathe a spirit of flattery," and he advocates the purchase of three dozen medals which may be worn "for a day" by deserving children. Likewise punishments are necessary. "In a conspicuous place in the room," he recommends, "let a bench be erected, a plank wide, six feet long, and two feet high, on which delinquents may stand for a given time. Over this should be painted on a loose board, in large capitals the word DISGRACE, which may be suspended by a string; so that, if the school be orderly, it may be taken down, or reversed for the time, which may produce a good effect." On a similar board "hung about the offender's neck, resting on his back, while standing on the plank, with his face to the wall, as unworthy to look on the school," will appear the words "I am a sloven" or "I am a slut," if it is a case of "Dirty hands, face, or feet;" or, in other cases, "I am Idle," or "I am a Swearer," or "I am a Lyar," or "I am a Dunce."

Confinement as a punishment, although a part of the Lancastrian plan, is shown to be accompanied by "inconvenience to the Teacher" and danger to the pupil, and he recalls the incident associated with the "bleu-coat school" in London of "a poor little fellow" being sentenced to "confinement in a dungeon," and then forgotten until after he was dead. Mr. Stanford says, if confinement is to be used, he recommends "a sort of little Cage-Room, with strong laths . . . where the confined may not be forgotten." Even better than confinement, he thinks, is a punishment "practised in some schools in Philadelphia," the scholars being "prohibitted from speaking to the offender until he acknowledge his fault. . . . To a child of the least remains of sensibility, this mode of punishment must be severe." As to corporal punishment, Mr. Lancaster does not recommend it, he says, but "I have been grossly misinformed by a person brought up in his own school, if he did not use it on imperious occasions. It is confessedly the case that many teachers, for trivial offences will keep the instrument of correction in continual motion. This must have a tendency to harden the scholars, subvert the attention of correction, and create a suspicion of the want of prudence and humanity in the breast of the teacher. Still did I not believe that there may be cases which demand corporeal punishment, I must confess that I should be much wiser than Solomon. . . . In application therefore to this part of the subject for this school, I would say, that when a case may demand corporeal punishment, the teacher shall represent the same to the Superintendent, or other appointed by him, who, on examination, shall determine, and order such punishment as may appear necessary. This method may produce a better effect upon a delinquent, and upon the whole school, than being left to a teacher, the warmth of whose temper may possibly mistake the case, & missapply the punishment." The chaplain declares his intention to present at a later time "the Catechism I have made for the moral improvement of the children."—"Sketch to aid in the establishment of the Pauper's School" (MS.), in city clerk's record-room.

About 35 buildings near Mott and Pell Sts., including Zion Church, are destroyed by a fire which starts in a small wooden shop. The "want of water" prevented the firemen from checking the flames in the beginning.—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 1, 1815. 31

Messrs. Albert Gallatin and Henry Clay arrive at New York with the commercial treaty signed in London on July 3 (q.v.).—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 1 and 5, 1815. See S 5. Sept. 1

It is proposed to build a range of buildings opposite the Bowling Green at the foot of Broadway.—N. Y. Herald, S 6, 1815; descrip. of Pl. 156-a, III: 838. This is the former site of the government house. See Jl 28, 1817. 2

A "splendid Dinner" is held at Tammany Hall in honour of Gallatin and Clay (see S 1).—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 6, 1815; Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 870–71. 5

Right Rev. Samuel Provoost, first Protestant Episcopal bishop of the state of New York, dies at No. 261 Greenwich St.—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 6, 1815. On Sept. 7, he was buried with impressive ceremonies in Trinity churchyard.—Ibid., S 11, 1815. 6

Another trial of the steam frigate "Fulton the First" is made. "She is said to have passed through the water at the rate of five and a half miles an hour by the log."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 12, 1815. See also Colden, Life of Fulton, 227 et seq., and descrip. of Pl. 83-a, III: 557. See O 4, 1817. 11

The road committee presents to the common council a contract with E. Jennings to work Third Ave. from the Bowery to Harlem Bridge, which is directed to be executed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 291; N. Y. Spectator, S 2, 1815. 15

The common council directs the superintendent of repairs "to cause the several Piers erected in the City to be numbered beginning at N° 1 at the Battery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 302. 25

Russia, Prussia, and Austria ratify the Holy Alliance, by which they bind themselves, among other things, to be governed by Christian principles in all their political transactions, with a view to perpetuate the peace they have achieved.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 13–16; Haydn's Dict. of Dates, 481. 26

A monthly paper published by Isaac Riley, with the title of Booksellers' Reporter & Literary Advertiser, was in existence at this time.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 385. Oct. —

Aaron Bussing's proposal to cede to the city a piece of land lying between Macomb's Bridge (over the Harlem River) and Eighth Ave., 100 feet in width, to form a new road connecting with Westchester Co., is accepted on report of the survey committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 316–17 (with reproduction of map). See also map of this road, dated Sept. 28, 1815 (which became known as Macomb's Dam Road), filed in the bureau of topography, borough president's office, as map No. 176. As appears by the committee's report, the proposed route was "across the Stone Bridge lately built" by Bussing over the Harlem River.—Ibid. 9

According to a report presented to the common council, the house of industry (see My 30, 1814) has, within a little more than one year, employed 500 poor women, many of whom have been thus enabled to support their children and relieve the city from such public charge; $1,000 is appropriated for the continuance of the work.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 318–19. "

Napoleon lands at St. Helena.—Sloane, Life of Napoleon Bonaparte, IV: 228–29. 16

In a communication to one of the papers, "Civis" states: "Every body sees at the present day the miserable effects of the 21

1815 Oct. 21 contracted views of our ancestors who first settled this city; the manner in which the streets were laid out (if the expression may be used) shews that their conceptions never extended to such a population as throngs the walks even at the present day, and when we look forward to future centuries and consider what may fairly be calculated from the pre-eminent advantages of situation which New-York enjoys, the conclusion is obvious that some alteration in our streets must take place. The thoroughfares between the two rivers are but three, and of these the principal is Maiden Lane, the pavement of which is so narrow that it is with difficulty persons get along without stepping off into the mud of the gutter and under the wheels of carts . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 21, 1815.

31 The first meeting of the vestry of St. George's Church is held in the new edifice on Beekman St. (see Ja 5, 1814).—Anstice, Hist. of St. George's Church, 68. The cost of rebuilding the church and rector's house was $84,075. The church was thus described in 1845, the bell, clock, organ, chandeliers, and smaller galleries being installed at dates later than 1815 when the building was finished:

"It is a plain and unpretending stone structure, with five long windows on each side, over which are the cornices of the eaves. The roof is steep pitched, and has a plain white balustrade running along the gutter. In front, the tower projects slightly in advance of the main building, but the greater portion of it lies within the Church. The extreme length of St. George's is 101 feet 6 inches, and its width is 72 feet 6 inches, covering a space of 7,275 square feet. The tower contains a fine bell and a clock. The bell was presented by Mr. Thomas H. Smith . . .

"The interior of the Church presents a much more beautiful appearance than the exterior, being handsomely finished with lofty columns, having carved capitals of the Corinthian order. The ground floor is divided into three aisles, and on each side of the Church, supported by columns, is a commodious gallery. At the west end, connecting the main galleries, is another, in the centre of which is the choir, containing a handsome organ, set in a mahogany case, and surmounted by a lyre. Immediately above this gallery are two smaller ones, intended for the accommodation of the Sunday scholars.

"The ceiling is painted light stone, in representation of panel-work. From the centre depend three large and splendid glass chandeliers."—Ibid., 69, citing Onderdonk's Hist. Pamphlets (1845).

Nov. 6 The common council appropriates $300 to the managers of the Society for the Relief of Indigent Females.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 333–34.

" The street commissioner is directed to take measures for opening 70th St. from Tenth Ave. to the North River. The proprietors have offered to cede ground free of expense, the money for completing the above is to be raised by assessments on those deemed to be benefitted, and the condition is made that the road when opened and regulated be "considered & treated as a common Highway to be worked and kept in repair as such by the Inhabitants and not by the Common Council or at the public charge."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 338–39.

" The common council receives a report from the committee of defence relating to the efforts made in erecting defences and securing funds, recommending the upkeep of the defences, and lauding the efforts of Gen. Joseph G. Swift who directed the work. It is also recommended that the board arrange for a portrait of him to be painted and hung in the corporation's portrait gallery. The common council directs that such action be taken, and also that the copy of the Minutes of Defence, together with the portfolio of maps and drawings (see D 31, 1814), be preserved among the corporation's archives.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 339–44; N. Y. Eve. Post, N 7, 1815.

14 "The Public is respectfully informed, that, in consequence of the arrival of Commodore Decatur, The Front of the Theatre, will, this Evening, be Brilliantly Illuminated, And a Naval Transparency exhibited, emblematical of his successes during his glorious cruise. Painted by Mr. Jarvis."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 14, 1815.

20 The second Treaty of Paris is concluded between France under Louis XVIII and the allies. France is forced to give up some of her territory, to cede a number of strategic posts on her northern and eastern frontiers, and to pay an indemnity of 700,000,000 francs. Eighteen fortresses are to be occupied by 150,000 allied troops for from three to five years.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 13.

" Russia, Prussia, Austria, and England form the Quadruple Alliance.—Hazen, Modern European Hist., 255.

Dec. 4 The comptroller reports that the sales of the government house lots and buildings thereon (see My 25 and 26) "have been closed & finally adjusted."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 358–59.

" The common council votes an appropriation of $750 to the Society for the Relief of Poor Widows with Children.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 359–60.

18 The road committee orders the expenditure of $490 for the road to Macomb's Bridge, and $508 is advanced "for timber for the Bridge across Harlem Creek."—Journal B, 118, comptroller's office.

21 Macomb's Dam Bridge across the Harlem River is finished.—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 21, 1815. "The Bridge . . . consists of the Dam itself which Mr Macomb was Authorized to erect [see Ap 8, S 20, O 18, 1813, and Ja 10, 1814] and which for the purpose of being used also as a bridge has been made wider and in a more expensive Manner than would otherwise have been necessary. The same Law which Grants permission to build the Dam also grants to Mr Macomb and his heirs forever the Sole and exclusive use of the Water dammed—A grant which at no great distance of time will probably be of exceeding great value."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 83.

25 The board of health urges the people to be vaccinated in order to prevent the spread of smallpox, which has appeared in the city. Six physicians are to visit the various houses and offer to perform the inoculation. The New York Dispensary at the corner of Broadway and Chambers St. will also be open from nine until six.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 3, 1816. See Ja 29, 1816.

30 At a general meeting held at the City Hotel, a memorial to the legislature is adopted in favour of a canal from Lake Erie to the Hudson.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 2, 1816. See also F 19, 1816.

— In this year, a new American power-loom was invented and put in operation in Boston by E. Savage.—Winsor, Mem. Hist. of Boston, IV: 85.

— In this year, the Provident Institution for Savings, the first savings-bank in the U. S., was established in Boston.—Winsor, Mem. Hist. of Boston, IV: 160.

— In this year was published what appears to be the first of a series of pamphlets, which appeared annually through 1840, entitled Names and Places of Abode of the Members of the Common Council, and of the Officers Who hold Appointments under them, &c. &c. The complete series, excepting the issues of 1817 and 1836, is owned by the N. Y. H. S. In the author's collection are those from 1835 to 1840, inclusive. These pamphlets were the precursor of Valentine's Manuals (see 1841), which in turn were succeeded by the City Record of to-day. They contained, however, merely the lists of officials, committees, etc., and sometimes the text of ordinances. For City Record, see Je 24, 1873.

— In this year, John Trumbull returned to New York from Europe, having been abroad since 1808. While here, during this last period, he revived the American Academy of Fine Arts at New York; he painted, in a house on the north-east corner of Park Place and Church St., a series of pictures for the capitol at Washington, and exhibited his works in all of the important cities in the United States.—Dunlap, Hist. of the Arts of Design, II: 55–57, 73. A detailed account of Trumbull's life, together with an estimate of his work and a catalogue of his paintings, may be found in ibid. (Goodspeed ed., 1918), II: 13–76.

— In this year, Wm. J. Bennett, the well-known artist and engraver, came to New York from England. As an engraver he worked principally in aquatint, and produced a large number of fine views, many of points of interest about New York. He died here in 1844.—Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 19–20. See also Dunlap, Hist. of the Arts of Design, III: 45–47. For examples of Bennett's work, see Pls. 98, 104-a, 104-b, 114-a, 114-b, 116, 117; and A. Pl. 18-b, Vol. III.

— An oddly shaped building, commonly called "the pulpit," the property of Bishop Benj. C. Moore, and occupied as a residence by D. Titus, stood at this time in Greenwich Village, at 20th St., between Eighth and Ninth Aves.—See view in Man. Com. Coun. (1864), 818.

— For view of the "White Conduit House," in Leonard St., bet. Broadway and Church St., in 1816, see Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 420.

For view of the Fly Market, cor. Maiden Lane and Front St., in 1816, see ibid. (1857), 542.

1816 Jan. 8 The name of Sugar Loaf Street is changed to Franklin Street in honour of Benjamin Franklin.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 393.

" The common council resolves to remove the Fly Market, and to build a new market on the "Block east side of Beekman Slip to Crane Wharf between Front Street and the River."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 394–97; N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 9, 1816. This was the beginning of Fulton Market, which, however, was not built until 1821 (q.v., Mr 12).—L. M. R. K., III: 959. See also Ja 29, Ag 6, and O 7, 1816 and M 24, 1817.

10 Uzel Freeman, city surveyor, makes a "Map of Inklenberg." —See map No. 83 in real estate bureau, comptroller's office.

17 At a meeting of merchants and other citizens at the Tontine Coffee House, a committee previously appointed reports that the "telegraph" invented by Christopher Colles is superior to all others examined by them, including the English and French. A committee is appointed to recommend the Colles telegraphs to the common council, and merchants and others are urged to subscribe for their establishment in New York.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 18, 1816. See Ag 12.

29 Owing to the alarming spread of smallpox (see D 25, 1815), the common council, cooperating with the city dispensary, appropriates $1,000 for purposes of free vaccination.—M. C. C. VIII: 407–8. On March 11, it urged that publicity be given to the benefits of and opportunities for vaccination. An article prepared for this purpose was ordered inserted in the papers patronised by the board.—Ibid., VIII: 451.

" The common council adopts a memorial to the legislature asking that a law be passed authorising the corporation to take possession of the land at Beekman Slip for a market (see Ja 8), and to pay for it out of the city treasury.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 411; XI: 338. The law was passed on March 29.—Ibid., VIII: 472–73; XI: 338. See Ag 6 and O 7.

" The common council directs that the watch-house at No. 1 Broad St. and the lot on which it stands be sold at auction, and that a survey and map of the ground be made.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 412. The property brought $11,300.—Ibid., VIII: 427–28. This was probably the highest price paid for real estate on Manhattan Island up to this time. The watch-house was demolished in this year.—L. M. R. K., III: 973.

Feb. 5 The Battery, "which was intended as a promenade for the recreation of the citizens, and was, last summer, tastefully laid out at great public expense [see Mr 20, 1815], is now become a place for stroling cows to pasture in, and for hogs to root up into a thousand furrows."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 5, 1816.

12 Jacob Radcliffe is reappointed mayor of New York.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 15, 1816.

" It is resolved that, immediately after May 1 next, the following streets be opened: Second Ave. from North St. to 29th St.; Ninth Ave. from Greenwich Lane to the northerly side of 28th St.; 28th St. from Ninth Ave. to Hudson River; Tenth Ave. from 28th St. to northerly side of 71st St.; Eighth Ave. from Greenwich Lane to Harlem River; Hudson St. from near Laight St. to Spring St.; Chapel St. near Leonard St.; Elizabeth St. to Bleecker St. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 420–21.

19 It is recommended to the common council that St. George's Square be extended and, for that purpose, that the houses and lots at the junction of Pearl and Cherry Sts. be taken according to statute from a line beginning at a distance of 16 ft. from the westerly corner of the house occupied by the Hon. De Witt Clinton and extending 12 ft. from the westerly corner of Frankfort St. This is approved.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 428–29.

" The common council addresses a memorial to the legislature in favour of constructing a canal from Lake Erie to the Hudson. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 430–32; Assemb. Jour., 39th sess., 232. See Ap 17.

26 The "Sunday School Union Society" is organized at the City Hotel.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 26, 27, and Mr 23, 1816; Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 620.

28 The common council accepts the first number of the City Hall Recorder, edited and sent by Mr. N. Phillips.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 443–44. The Recorder contained "Reports of the various Trials of the Criminal Courts." It was published in six volumes from 1816 to 1821.—Roorbach, Cat. of Am. Pubs., 1820–1852, p. 612; Sabin, No. 54440.

Mr 1 The legislature provides for extending Hudson St. northward from Greenwich Lane to Ninth Ave.—Laws of N. Y. (1816), chap. 28. Mar. 1

Lieut. Francis Hall, an officer of the British Army who is visiting America, writes concerning New York: "The houses are generally good, frequently elegant, but it requires American eyes to discover that Broadway competes with the finest streets of London or Paris. New York is reckoned to contain at present about 100,000 inhabitants, and is spreading rapidly northward. I was told that 2000 houses were contracted for, to be built in the ensuing year. There are fifty churches, or chapels, of different sects; a proof that a national church is not indispensable, for the maintenance of religion. 5

"There is a small museum in New York, the best part of which is a collection of birds, well preserved; and the worst, a set of wax work figures, among whom are Saul in a Frenchman's embroidered coat, the Witch of Endor in the costume of a House-maid, and Samuel in a robe de chambre and cotton night-cap. . . . It would be ingratitude to quit New York without mention of its erudite and right pleasant Historian, Diedrich Knickerbocker, whose history of the first Dutch governors of the settlement deserves a favored niche by the side of the revered Cid Hamlet Benangeli, and the facetious Biographer of my Uncle Toby."—Hall, *Travels in Canada and the U. The corporation counsel is directed by the common council to take legal measures for the extension of Beekman St. which will open a direct communication to the river.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 453. "

At a meeting of the trustees of Columbia College, a committee is directed to inquire whether "an eligible site for a College" can be found "at a distance from the City not greater than Art Street." The committee reported on May 6 and was authorised to "negotiate for the purchase, of the representatives of Anthony L. Bleecker deceased, of a piece of ground near Colonel Varick's place, containing thirty-two lots." Two weeks later the committee informed the board that the property could be bought for $700 a lot. This price was considered too high, and the matter was dropped.—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1754–1904, 103. 14

The finance committee and comptroller present to the common council a plan for improving the public property on Hudson River between Dey St. and Partition St. The board approves the following recommendations: "to fill up the Basin between Dey & Partition Streets to the permanent line of West Street to cause to be erected (in conjunction with the Proprietors of the water right adjoining the corporation property on Dey St) a Pier extending & not exceeding 350 feet into the river from the line of West Street also a Pier from about the center of the said Basin extending into Hudsons River about feet and to prolong the present Piers in front of Washington Market to correspond with those first mentioned and further to complete West Street from the Basin aforesaid as far North as the Corporation property extends." It is estimated that the "square of ground (when made) bounded by West, Washington, Dey, and Partition, Sts, will embrace twenty of the most valuable building Lots for Stores in this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 463–64. 25

As the subject of supplying the city with an abundant supply of pure and wholesome water is "highly interesting to the comfort and the health of the Inhabitants," the common council appoints a committee "to consider and report upon the propriety of making an application to the Legislature at their present Session to invest the Mayor Aldermen & Commonalty of this City with all the necessary powers & authority to carry the measure into effect." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 464–65. No report of this committee appears in the minutes. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1845), 217. See Ag 9, 1819. "

29 Rev. John Stanford delivers a discourse entitled "Divine Benevolence to the Poor" before the corporation on the opening of the chapel in the new almshouse at Bellevue. He traces the history of charities in New York, and describes the almshouses of the city since the Revolution. The original MS. is in the N. Y. H. S.; also the same in pamphlet form (1816), of which 500 copies were printed for the corporation, and 100 copies for the use of the author.

8 The American Bible Society is organized at the city hall by delegates from existing local Bible societies (of which there were nine in 1817—see Blunt's Stranger's Guide, 200–1), for the purpose of increasing the circulation of the Bible. Its seat of operations was later a four-storey brick building at 115 Nassau St. between Ann and Beekman Sts., built in 1820. 18 An extensive report on the subject of gas-lights is presented to the common council, in which the manner of making gas is explained and the gradual increase in its use both in Europe and America is traced. Its economical advantage is also urged, the saving being estimated as exhibiting a relation between "Gas lights & Tallow lights about as 1 to 3."

The report closes with the following resolution, which the board approves: "Resolved that a select committee be appointed with powers to institute an experiment on gas lights upon the Plan under the Superintendance of M^r^ Robert Hare and that a sum not exceeding five thousand Dollars be put at the disposal of said Committee to carry the same into effect, . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 553–57. See F 10, 1817.

26 A citizen addresses the following open letter to the common council: "The cleanliness of a city, such as New-York, situated in a warm climate is of the very first consequence. . . . This cannot be obtained without common sewers, constructed some depth under the surface. These, however, could not be kept clean in such a level city as New-York, without a strong current of water being occasionally introduced into them, to sweep off the impurities.

". . . If an hydraulic machine was to be constructed in the East River, near the end of one of the wharves off Peck-slip, any quantity of water required might be sent up by force-pumps, from thence to a reservoir, which might be built on the highest part of June the city, say near the Federal-Hall or Alms-House. The machinery 26 could easily be worked by the tide in the East River, which runs sufficiently strong for that purpose. Once in twenty-four hours, each street could have its common sewer washed out and all its filth and impurities carried off into the North and East Rivers. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 26, 1816.

"The public is respectfully informed that the [Park] Theatre 26 will be opened on Monday, the 2d September. Preparations have been making during the last season and the recess, for various and extensive alterations, which have been suggested to the Managers by their own experience, or offered by their friends as likely to increase the pleasure, the comfort, or the convenience of the audience. An entirely new plan of decoration has been completed for the interior of the house, and the effect produced, is more striking and brilliant than any heretofore seen in America. The owners of the Theatre professed their extreme desire to see the front of it ornamented, but liberally declined appropriating any part of their enormous rent for that purpose—It has been done at the expense of the Managers; and, they trust, the public will duly appreciate their motives in making a heavy expenditure to ornament property not their own.

"Messrs. Robins and Holland, with able assistants, are permanently engaged for the Painting Department; and, the well known character of these artists must insure a rich display of scenic excellence. Mr. Hewitt, formerly of this Theatre, will lead the band. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 26, 1816. See also ibid., S 3, 1816. See, further, S 4.

A correspondent says in regard to the newly decorated Park " Theatre (see Ag 26): "It literally presents the gaiety and elegance of a drawing room, without any alloy whatever of gaudiness. The fronts of the boxes are most tastefully decorated with classical ornaments relieved in gold upon a white ground, and the unity of this preserved throughout the front, relieved by the backs, &c. of the boxes a delicate peach blossom tint. The columns, ostensibly appearing to support the different tiers, give the effect of gold which 1816 Sept. 4 not only contribute to the richness of the whole, but admirably impress, from their massive appearance, the purpose of support to which they are appropriated. The dome is ornamented in harmony of colour and consistency of design with the other parts, forming on the whole the most chaste and pleasing finish that we can imagine the place susceptible of receiving, certainly exceeding all we have before witnessed in similar situations. . . .

"Added to improvements too various to dwell minutely upon, we were presented with a new drop curtain of Grecian architectural design, most admirably executed; certainly a desirable substitute in a classical theatre for the landscape drops we have been accustomed to. . . ."—*N. 8 E. Montule, a chevalier of the Royal Order of the Legion of Honour, writes of New York City: "8th November, 1816—I have already examined this beautiful city (New York), which appears to have been spared by winter; still presenting some foliage of the Italian poplars which decorate Broadway, the principal street of New York, and perhaps the most magnificent in the world[!]. The advantageous position of the city, and its proximity to the sea, render it the best port in America; a forest of masts announce it in the distance, for one of those ports where the commerce of the world is concentrated; from whence its riches are afterwards distributed throughout the interior by means of numerous channels. A vast influx of strangers, gives to New York that lively air which characterizes several cities of Europe, and which is not generally the case, I am informed, with the other American cities: it is large and of a triangular form; some of the streets are straight, with flat pavements on either side, for the accommodation of foot-passengers. The houses, for the most part of brick, are often repainted; they consist of two or three stories, and are decorated by flights of steps, and balconies, tastefully arranged, which produce an agreeable effect, while the streets are built in such a manner, that the stabling and coach houses, never interfere with the main street. Each ilet is divided by two streets, which usually cut at right angles, and to which the yards of the mansion adjoin; it seems, that when the city was first founded, the streets were decorated with poplars and plantains, nearly all of which have perished. Nov. 8

"I never witnessed anything to be compared with the appearance of Broadway;—elegant carriages roll with rapidity the whole length of the street; females fashionably attired, parade the flags, and shops and magazines, as extensive as superbly decorated, occupy the ground-floors of the houses skirting either side.

"The edifices which I remarked in the city, combine freshness and solidity in their appearance, sometimes accompanied by elegance; but the architecture is not always in a good style. The Hospital, the buildings of which are extensive and well-disposed, presents throughout its interior the greatest degree of cleanliness: which is no less observable in the prisons. . . .

"The Palace of Justice is a fine extensive fabric of white marble, which is common enough in this country; it is to be regretted that this monument, upon which much must have been expended, should not be well proportioned, being deficient in regard to elevation. The churches and towers are numerous, and the latter being somewhat in the gothic style, produces a very picturesque effect.

"The Quays, built with cavities, are extremely convenient for accommodating vessels, but very disagreeable for those who are only desirous walking to enjoy the beautiful prospect of the port.

"The Theatre of New York is a fine building. . . . No soldiers of the police are here seen, such duties being performed by the watchmen; upon the least alarm, they instantly assemble, to the number of eight or ten at one spot. being only armed with a stick; these, in conjunction with the firemen, are empowered to yield assistance in cases of fires, which are common in some quarters of the city, where many of the dwellings are of wood.

"The commerce of New York is very extensive, its port possessing an incalculable advantage over all the others of the United States.

"Slavery, which is abolished in many other states, is not in this, and negroes are found in considerable numbers.

"There are some coffee-houses at New York; these establishments, which had their origin in the East, appear to make but a slow progress on this continent; they are appropriated to persons of idle habits, and every one here is occupied with commerce."—E. Montule, A Voyage to North America and The West Indies in 1817 (London, 1821). See also O 4, 1817.

18 On account of difficulty in disposing to advantage of the library building, the New York Library Society asks the common council to release them from the lease of the apartments assigned them in the old almshouse (see My 13). The society feels that less expense will be involved in making necessary changes in their old quarters than in the almshouse. The board agrees to accept the surrender.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 686. On Dec. 9, it accordingly granted larger quarters in the old almshouse to the Historical Society, Academy of Arts, and John Griscom.—Ibid., VIII: 686, 717–18.

" The common council accepts the invitation of Dr. Samuel

1816 Nov. 18 Akerly to attend two lectures on "Inflammable air & its application to economical purposes," at Tammany Hall. The lectures are to be explanatory of the system of gas-lights, successful experiments with which have been completed under the direction of a committee of the board.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 692.

28 "The Forum," composed of members of the bar who debate publicly to improve in the art of public speaking, is opened. The members, limited to 30 lawyers, meet on Friday evenings during the winter at the City Hotel, these meetings being "attended by fashionable and literary audiences, and after the members have been heard on any topic under discussion, the debate is open to the public." There is an admission of 25 cents, and the profits are appropriated for charity.—Blunt's Strangers' Guide, 306.

29 At a meeting at the City Hotel a plan for a savings bank is adopted and directors appointed.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 28 and D 2, 1816. See also Memoir of John Griscom, 162, and N. Y. H. S. Quarterly Bull., April, 1919. The first savings bank in New York was not chartered until March 26, 1819 (q. v.).

Dec. 2 The U. S. government buys the store (see F 11, 1814) which was erected in 1813–14 by Eastburn & Kirk on the site of the old city hall on Wall St. (see F 23, 1813). It occupies the building as a custom-house. The grantors are James Eastburn, Thomas Kirk, and John Downe, and the price is $70,000. The ground measures 51 ft. on Wall St. and 112 ft. on Nassau St.—Liber Deeds, CXVIII: 422 (New York). It is a "handsome brick building . . . 4 stories high," formerly "used as a Book Store and Reading Room."—Blunt's Stranger's Guide (1817), 144. See Pl. 105, also p. 607, Vol. III. The N. Y. Eve. Post (see issues of S 18 and O 28, 1816) is wrong in stating that the building was first purchased by John Jacob Astor and by him sold to the U. S.

" The common council approves the following recommendation: "Resolved that the Clerk of the Common Council be and he is hereby directed and required to take especial charge of the Records, Minutes and Papers of this Board and if there be any now missing, that they be without delay collected together.

"Resolved that a Committee be appointed to provide a Suitable Office in the City Hall for the safe keeping of the same, and for the use of the Clerk and in future that none of the Records be taken from said Office without permission first obtained from the Mayor."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 741.

" It is ordered that the houses in Broome and Washington Sts. be numbered.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 741. See My 18, 1818.

31 Egbert Benson delivers an address before the N. Y. Historical Society upon the subject of early place-names in New York. He includes the original Indian and subsequent Spanish, Dutch, and English names of various parts of Manhattan Island, districts to the north, nearby rivers, etc.; also the Dutch and English names for the islands in the bay and the situation and origin of the early streets.—Memoir read before the Hist. Soc. . . . By Egbert Benson (N. Y., 1817).

— In this year, the first Seminole War began.—Winsor, VII: 406, 438.

— In this year, the first line of American packet-ships with regular times of sailing—the Black Ball Line from New York to Liverpool—was established. This was the only line of the kind until the establishment of the Red Star Line in 1821.—Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 629; N. Y. Eve. Post, N 1, 1817; Mem. Hist. of N. Y., III: 299.

— Writing in 1817 and 1818, respectively, two travellers in America, Henry B. Fearon and John M. Duncan, make passing observations of Boston, in which they compare it in certain particulars with New York. Fearon, in Sept., 1817, says: "Boston has a population of 40,000, yet it is not a city: this arises from an apprehension in the inhabitants, that the powers vested in corporations would be injurious to their liberties. This town is the head-quarters of federalism in politics and unitarianism in religion. It contains many rich men. The Bostonians are also the most enlightened and the most hospitable that I have yet met with . . .

"The state of society in Boston is better than in New York, though the leaven, not of democracy, but of aristocracy, seems to be very prevalent: many of the richer families live in great style, and in houses little inferior to those of Russel-Square. Distinctions exist to an extent rather ludicrous under a free and popular government: . . .

"Boston is not a thriving, that is, not an increasing town: it wants a fertile back country, . . .

"The police of Boston must be very far superior to that of New York; at least, if effects may be taken as the criterion. . . ."—Sketches of Am. (London, 1818), 104, 108.

Duncan, under date of July, 1818, writes: "Boston has much more of the appearance of a British town than New York. Most of the buildings are of a fine white granite, and most of the others are of brick; the streets are very compactly built, and although many are narrow and crooked, all exhibit a degree of order and cleanliness which will in vain be looked for in New York. On a finely rising ground at the upper part of the Mall, stands the State House, a building of humbler pretensions as to size and materials than the New York City Hall, but in situation and architectural outline greatly superior. . . .

"Negro slavery, that bane of American prosperity, has been for a considerable time abolished in Massachusetts, and the blacks commemorate its abolition by an annual procession. . . .

"The Athenaeum was incorporated in 1807, . . .; it marks a greatly advanced state of society, in respect of taste and intellectual refinement, and is of itself a sufficient answer to much of the coarse abuse with which the American character has been assailed. . . ."—Travels through part of the U. S. and Canada in 1818 and 1819 (1823), I: 46, 59, 83, 84–85.

— In this year, the stock brokers of New York established a more formal organization, and adopted a constitution under the name of the "New York Stock and Exchange Board."—Eames, The New York Stock Exchange, 18.

"The rooms where the sessions of the Board were held, from 1817 to 1827, are not easily identified. An early account states they were first held in the office of Samuel J. Beebee, next in a room in the rear of Leonard Bleecker's office, and afterwards in a room in the old Courier and Enquirer Building (the present [1894] 70 Wall Street). The records of the Board refer only to meeting in 1819 in Washington Hall, to the lease in 1824 of the room, 'in the rear of the Protection Fire Ins. Co.,' and in 1825 to the lease of 'Mr. Warren's room'."—Ibid., 26. In 1824, the Protection Fire Insurance Co. was at 41 Wall St, and in 1825, there was a John Warren, broker, at 46 Wall St.—City Directories.

— In this year, the General Theological Seminary was founded. For a brief account of its early development, see Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 561–62; and Perry, Hist. of the Am. Episcopal Church, II: 506 et seq. See also 1818 and My 1, 1819.

— In this year, the Lyceum of Natural History was formed. It was incorporated in 1818, its first home being in the New York Institution (later known as the "New City Hall"—see L. M. R. K., III: 973), where rooms were assigned for its use by the common council. It remained there until 1828, when it was removed to the city dispensary on White St. For its further developments, see Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 562–63.

— In this year, David Longworth issued a map of New York bearing, as an inset, the earliest known reproduction of the Lyne Survey of 1731 (Pl. 27, Vol. I). On Dec. 1, the common council purchased 50 copies of the new map.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 376.

— In this year, a plan of the city of New York, drawn by Thos. H. Poppleton and engraved by Peter Maverick, was published. It is reproduced in Man. Com. Coun. (1855), opp. p. 298.

— In this year, Stephen Ludlam made a survey of Augustus and Chambers Sts. It is filed in real estate bureau, comptroller's office, as map No. 86.

— First St., opened in this year, passed through the cemeteries of 1817 St. Stephen's Church and of the Methodist congregation.—Doc.

— In this year, the firm of J. & J. Harper, printers and publishers, was established at 82 Cliff St. For the history of this firm, now long known by the name of Harper & Bros., see More than One Hundred Years of Publishing.

Jan. A weekly paper devoted chiefly to Irish intelligence is estab-
4 lished by Walter Cox, with the title of The Exile. The last issue located is that of Oct. 18, 1817.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 415.

27 The committee on arts and sciences presents a lengthy report on the experiments made by Dr. Hare upon lighting by gas. The expense is so great in comparison to lighting with oil that the committee do not recommend that the corporation undertake it, although they have no doubt "that Individuals or a Company would find it profitable and they would greatly rejoice to see such a Company established."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 783–90.

" A motion is passed to regulate the ground between the city hall and the old almshouse and to lay down the whole space in grass and border with trees, the same to be thrown open to the public. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), VIII: 791; N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 30, 1817.

31 The legislature authorises the common council to construct "public cisterns" in such manner and at such places as they shall think most advisable, the expense thereof to be assessed among those to be benefitted thereby.—Laws of N. Y. (1817), chap. 25. For a similar authorisation to construct wells and pumps, see Ap 9, 1813.

Feb. "This morning the ice stuck fast in the East river and formed
4 a complete bridge from Brooklyn to Peck-slip, on which several ladies and hundreds of gentlemen crossed and re-crossed without the least difficulty."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 4, 1817. The North River also was frozen over.—Ibid., Ja 29, 1817.

6 Congress authorises the president to employ John Trumbull "to compose and execute four paintings commemorative of the most important events of the American revolution, to be placed, when finished, in the capitol of the United States."—Acts of Cong., 2d sess. of 14th cong., p. 288. The subjects chosen were the "Declaration of Independence," "The Surrender of Burgoyne," "The Surrender of Cornwallis," and "The Resignation of Washington."—Dunlap, Hist. of the Arts of Design, II: 56. "Each picture was to be not less than eighteen by twelve feet, with figures of life size; for which the artist was to receive thirty-two thousand dollars. The execution of this commission occupied him from 1817 to 1824, and in the year last named the four pictures were placed in the Rotunda at Washington, then just finished. . . ."—Kingsley, Yale College: A Sketch of Its History (1879), II: 152–53.

Trumbull then began a new series of his paintings of Revolutionary subjects, of a smaller size than those in the capitol. These he placed on permanent exhibition at Yale College for an annuity. —Ibid.

10 Despite the adverse report of the committee on arts and sciences (see Ja 27), the common council decides that gas be used for lighting the following district: Bowery to Bayard St., Division to First St., Chatham to Duane St., Pearl St. from Chatham to the Friends Meeting House, and the whole of Catharine St., at the rate of $10 annually for each lamp; and that there be three lights to each, of the ordinary length of those used in the Youle's manufactory, the corporation to bear the expense of conducting the gas from the main pipe to the lamps and of lighting and extinguishing the same.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 15. See Ag 9, 1813; Je 18, 1816, and Mr 26, 1823.

15 Stephen Ludlam makes a survey of the Common Lands, following Goerck's map of March 1, 1796 (q.v.). It is filed in real estate bureau, comptroller's office, as map No. 73. See also 1822; and descrip. of A. Pl. 9-b, III: 869.

16 "A Christian" writes to one of the papers that "a few individuals have opened a House for making and delivering Soup gratis to all persons applying, without distinction of age, sex, or condition. This house is situate in Franklin-street, near the Arsenal, and commenced its operations this day. Upwards of 1200 needy persons were supplied; many more would gladly have partook of its bounties but the supply fell short. Arrangements are, however, made for at least double the quantity to-morrow, which will be continued daily, between the hours of eight and twelve o'clock, during the inclement weather.

". . . donations of money, meat, meal, or vegetables, will Feb.
be received at No. 307 Pearl-street, and applied to the above 16 object. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 17, 1817. About 3,000 people were supplied on Feb. 19.—Ibid., F 19, 1817. The distribution continued until March 9. In all, 103,312 rations consisting of a pint and a half each were furnished, and contributions amounting to $1,972.82 were received.—Ibid., F 20, 21, 24, 25, 26, 28; Mr 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 10, 1817.

Times are so hard that a general meeting is held at the City 17
Hotel, and ten committees are appointed to solicit subscriptions in connection with the various wards for the relief of the poor.— N. Y. Eve. Post, F 18, 1817. The sum of $957.50 was collected the first day.—Ibid.

Gov. Daniel D. Tompkins sends to the trustees of Columbia 27
College the following recently adopted resolution of the Regents: "Resolved that it be and hereby is recommended to the Trustees of Columbia College to unite in a consolidation of the funds and property of said College with those of Washington College on Staten Island for which a Conditional Charter has been granted; if the consent of the Corporation of Trinity Church can be obtained; and that it be further recommended to the Trustees of said College, if they approve of the consolidation suggested, to negotiate with the Corporation of Trinity Church the terms upon which said Corporation will agree to relinquish the conditions in their grant to Columbia College, which fix the site of said College in the City of New York, and require that the President shall be a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and report the result to the Regents that it may be submitted to the Legislature at their present session." A committee of the trustees reported against the suggestion on March 27, and the report was unanimously approved.—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1754–1904, 103–4. See also Ag 26, 1820.

The common council approves a plan for regulating the village Mar.
of Greenwich, "the growing Portion of this City." Low lands in 3 and about the village make the regulation necessary. Plans are made to convey water through certain streets, by surface drainage as much as possible, and eventually by a common sewer to the river.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 33. As many of the landowners in Greenwich remonstrated against the plan (ibid., IX: 603), the corporation agreed to modify it (see O 5, 1818). See also A Plain Statement . . . by a Landholder (N. Y., 1818).

Jarvis having copied, by permission of the Stuyvesant family, " a portrait of Peter Stuyvesant, which he hopes the Corporation may wish to place in its portrait gallery, the comptroller is ordered to issue a warrant for $100 in payment for it. An interesting feature of the record is a space left for Stuyvesant's Christian name, suggesting a curious ignorance on the part of the clerk.—M. C. C. (1784–1834), IX: 36.

Between this date and Aug. 12, the common council paid "

begins. Daniel D. Tompkins of New York is the new vice-president. —Winsor, VII: 279, 344; N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 7 and 8, 1817.

Cornelius Ray, president of the Chamber of Commerce when " meetings ceased in 1806 (q.v.), calls the members together and says that "from a variety of circumstances, the meetings of the Chamber of Commerce had been intermitted for a considerable number of years; that at the request of several respectable gentlemen he had summoned the present meeting for the purpose of reviving this once eminent and highly useful institution." New members were proposed, and after this bi-monthly meetings were held in the "Long Room" of the Tontine Coffee House.—Bishop, A Chron. of 150 Years: The Chamber of Commerce of the State of N. Y., 1768–1918, 52–53. See Ja, 1819.

A committee appointed to investigate the causes of the present 5 state of want and misery among the poor of the city reports to a general meeting at the City Hotel that "the most prominent and alarming cause, is the free and inordinate use of spirituous liquors," and that there are about 1,800 licensed tippling-houses. A memorial to the legislature is adopted urging that the abuse be corrected.— N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 12, 1817.

1817 At this date, $68,716.17 in small change bills are in circulation.

17 The name of St. George's Square is changed to Franklin Square, "as a Testimony of the high respect entertained by this Board for the Literary and Philosophical Character of the late Doctor Benjamin Franklin."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 64.

24 The counsel of the board is directed "to make the Necessary Application to the Supreme Court for the Appointment of Commissioners of Estimate and Assessment in relation to the ground to be taken for a Scite of the Market at Fulton Street (late Beekman Slip)" (see Ja 8, Ag 6, and O 7, 1816).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 68. "The land, however, lay in an uncertain state, until 1820, when it was decided to sell it; but the resolution was afterwards rescinded."—De Voe, Market Book, 488; M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 339–41. Interest in the market was revived in 1821 (q.v., F 5), and it was finally erected.

" The horse market is complained of by citizens who represent "the Danger and difficulties to which they and their Families are exposed by the moving and exposing Horses for Sale Immediately before their Houses &c." The board adopts a recommendation that it be moved up Elm St. from the north end of the arsenal extending on Elm St. to the intersection of Canal St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 68. See N 1, 1819.

" The "Committee on the subject of the Collect Grounds" presents a plan of the street commissioner for regulating the ground of Collect and Canal St.; this is read and laid on the table.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 70. See also ibid., IX: 85.

" The names of the streets called First, Second, Third, Fourth, and Sixth Sts. on the Commissioners' Map, running north and south in the Tenth Ward, between Division and North Sts., are changed, respectively, as follows: First St. to Chrystie St. in honour of Lieut. Col. John Chrystie; Second St. to Forsyth St. in honour of Lieut. Col. Forsyth; Third St. to Eldridge St. in honour of Lieut. Eldridge; Fourth St. to Allen St. in honour of Wm. H. Allen, U. S. 31 The legislature, revising the act of March 29, 1799 (q.v.), enacts that every negro, mulatto, or mustee, within this state, born before the 4th of July, 1799, shall be free after the 4th of July, 1827; and that every child born of a slave within this state after July 4th, 1799, shall be free, but remain a servant of the owner of his or her mother, and be taught to read. Provisions regarding the manumission, etc., of slaves are contained in the act. —Laws of N. Y. (1817), chap. 137.

" About 200 of the officers of Gen. Morton's division of artillery and Gens. Mapes' and Ward's divisions of infantry hold a public dinner at the City Hotel in honour of Vice-Pres. Tompkins.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 3, 1817.

" The common council agrees to a recommendation that a lease be given to Mr. John Vanderlyn for nine years from May 13, 1817, of a lot at the corner of Chambers and Cross Sts., fronting 50 ft. on Chambers St. and extending along Cross St. to the Humane Society's soup-house, at an annual rent of one pepper corn. On this lot, Mr. Vanderlyn proposes to erect a "Rotund," a circular brick building 50 ft. in diameter and 30 ft. high with a projection in front and "an elegant frontispiece," making it a "highly ornamental Edifice for that part of the City." In this building, the young artist, a native of N. Y. State and a painter of recognized talent at home and abroad, proposes to exhibit certain paintings to the best advantage. In recommending the lease of the lot for this purpose the committee feels that the building, besides being an ornament to the city, "will encourage the Arts and Sciences, chasten the public Taste and do honor to the Institutions of our City." At the expiration of the lease, the ground is to be restored to the corporation, together with the buildings and improvements, free from any charge, for their own proper benefit and use.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 79. On April 14, the width of the lot was increased to 56 ft.—Ibid., IX: 99–100. 9 Commissary-Gen. Anthony Lamb writes to Lieut.-Gov. Taylor: "The Legislature, at their extra session in November last [see N 12, 1816], authorized me to cause that part of Collect Street which adjoins the arsenal ground in New York, to be filled, agreeably to the regulation of the corporation of that city; and soon after their adjournment, I went down for the purpose of commencing the business, but found that such was the situation of the ground at that time, that it could not be done without manifest injustice to the state.

"The place to be filled is a pond, and is part of that formerly called the Collect, of from six to eight feet deep, the bottom of which is a quagmire; the proportion which the state ought to fill, is probably about one half of this pond; if I had commenced the filling last fall, the earth thrown in on the state's part, would have spread over the ground of other persons; it therefore appears to me proper to delay the business, as justice could only be done by a simultaneous filling, by all the parties interested, and I found that no arrangement of that kind could be made at that time, in consequence of the absence of the persons who owned the ground on the opposite side of the street to that which was to be filled by the state.

"I have procured from the street commissioner of New York, an estimate of the probable amount of the expenses requisite to complete the improvements contemplated by the corporation of said city about the arsenal ground, which I have the honor to enclose. . . .

"The assistant commissary at New York informs me that the corporation have nearly finished filling the opposite side of Collect street, to that which belongs to the state, and that it is necessary to commence on that part immediately; an appropriation to cover that expense will also be necessary, as well as that of White street, which will probably be opened in a short time. . . ."—Messages from the Governors (ed. by Charles Z. 15 An act, "respecting navigable communications between the great western and northern lakes, and the Atlantic ocean," authorising the commencement of canals, is passed by the legislature. By this act, the canal commissioners (see Ap 17, 1816) are empowered to open communication between the Hudson and Lake Champlain, and to connect by canals and locks the Mohawk and Seneca Rivers.—Laws of N. Y. (1817), chap. 262. The Erie Canal was commenced at Rome, N. Y., on July 4 (q.v.). See also Harper's Mag., Ag 1881; and descrip. of Pl. 95-a, III: 582. See, further, S 12 and O 26, 1825.

" The New York Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1817), chap. 264. A school for the deaf and dumb was opened in the New York Institution on May 12, 1818.—Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 631. This was the second institution for the deaf in the United States, the first having been commenced a year or two before in Hartford by Thomas Gallaudet.—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 343. See, further, O 19, 1827.

" In accordance with a memorial from the common council (see M. C. C., 1784–1831, IX: 50–51), the legislature passes a law to equalize the ten wards.—Laws of N. Y. (1817), chap. 285. A Federalist paper calls this an act "to gerrymander the wards in this city."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 17, 1817. A map of the Sixth Ward, bounded by Broadway, Chambers St., Chatham St., the Bowery, and Grand St., drawn by Le Grand Jarvis and dated June 1, 1818, is filed as map No. 205 in real estate bureau, comptroller's office.

21 "We have heard a buzzing rumour that a wish had been ex-

1817 Apr. 21 pressed by many persons in New-York, that a ticket for Assembly should be offered to the electors, to be called the City-Ticket: so called, because it is to be composed of men, not of this or that party, but of talents capable of duly representing us, and advocating our rights and interests, which have been so much infringed upon at the last session."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 21, 1817.

28 An agreement between Great Britain and the U. S. as to naval forces on the lakes is concluded. Each power is to be allowed to keep one vessel on Lake Ontario, two on the Upper Lakes, and one on Lake Champlain.—Winsor, VII: 489.

" John McComb, street commissioner, recommends that an ordinance be passed to fill in Lispenard's Meadow, and another "for the purpose of having that part of Canal Street opposite these low grounds filled in to such a height as to prevent Mud being driven into the Street." The former recommendation is agreed to, but the latter is postponed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 123–24.

May 3 James Oram begins the publication of The Ladies' Weekly Museum, or Polite Repository of Amusement and Instruction. This was a continuation, without change of volume numbering, of the New-York Weekly Museum (see My 7, 1814). It was of octavo size, contained 16 numbered pages to the issue, and had a title-page and index.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 453–54.

5 A communication is received by the common council from James Renwick "on the subject of carrying off the Water from Canal Street which was read and laid for consideration."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 129.

6 John Palmer, an Englishman lately arrived at New York, writes: "Several of us took lodgings at Greenwich, a pleasant and populous suburb of New York. Price of board and lodging, four dollars, or eighteen shillings sterling, per week. At the best taverns and boarding-houses in the city, you cannot be boarded and lodged under two dollars per day.

"The things that most struck me on my first walks in the city, were the wooden houses, the smallness, but neatness, of the churches, the coloured people, the custom of smoking segars in the streets, (even followed by some of the Children,) and the number and nuisance of the pigs permitted to be at large; as to the rest, it is much like a large English town."—Palmer, Journal of Travels in the U. S. of North Am. and in Lower Canada, Performed in 1817 (London, 1818), 6. "In the city of New York, on a moderate Calculation, several thousand pigs are suffered to roam about the streets, to the disgrace of the corporation and danger of passengers. A law was passed, prohibiting their being at large after January, 1818, but before it went into operation, it was repealed."—Ibid. (footnote).

13 The walls of the old Methodist Church on John St. are demolished, and the corner-stone of a new edifice is laid on the same site.—Hist. Mag. (1869), 2d ser., V: 143; L. M. R. K., III: 930. See also descrip. of Pl. 24-a, I: 238. The new church was opened on Jan. 4, 1818 (q.v.).

26 Various legislative measures have delayed the collection of the assessment for Canal St., which contains the ditch for draining adjacent low lands into the Hudson River. The canal committee reports to the common council that, of the $111,850.54 assessed upon individual property-holders, only $13,150.90 has been collected, leaving still due $98,699.64, upon which interest is to be charged from June 19, 1812. The board votes that the collection be made forthwith and that Noah Jarvis, the former collector, be continued as such.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 173–75.

June 7 "Chester Jenings" announces that he has taken the City Hotel. He says: "The shops are converted to the use of the hotel, and thus the former gloomy appearance of the interior is changed to a delightful view of Broadway. . . .

"In addition to twenty new apartments, the large room lately occupied as a book-store, is now an elegant dining-room, 80 feet in length, connected with another of 45, forming an L, 80 by 45 feet. The south front door continues to be the public entrance, and communicates with the gentlemen's apartments.

"The north front door leads to the apartments particularly designed for the accommodation of travelling parties of ladies and gentlemen. An elegant drawing-room, numerous private parlours and bed-rooms contiguous, are exclusively appropriated to this purpose. . . .

"A fashionable circulating library, and splendid reading-room, are directly opposite, and will serve to occupy a leisure hour. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 7, 1817. This ad. is accompanied by a large wood-cut view of the hotel. Cf. Ap 24, 1807. See also descrip. of Pl. 125, III: 689. See, further, Jl 20, 1827. June 7

9 President Monroe, on a tour of the northern and eastern states, arrives at the home of Vice-Pres. Tompkins on Staten Island. "He was complimented on his landing from the steam-boat by salutes from the revenue-cutter and from the batteries."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 10, 1817.

11 President Monroe lands at the Battery, and after reviewing the line of troops there, proceeds up Broadway to the city hall, where he is welcomed by the common council and the Cincinnati. The board obtains apartments for him at Gibson's Hotel in Wall St., and appropriates the picture room in the city hall for his use in receiving visitors. In the evening the Park Theatre, Scudder's museum, and the city hall were illuminated in his honour.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 194–97; N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 11 and 12, 1817. See also Life & Correspondence of Rufus King, VI: 71–73. See Je 12.

12 President Monroe visits Governor's, Ellis, and Bedlow's Islands, and "then passed up the east river to the navy-yard." After receiving company at the city hall, he went to the Academy of Arts, the hospital, and the new almshouse and other public buildings at Bellevue. In the evening, he attended the performance at the Park Theatre.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 12, 1817.

13 President Monroe inspects the fortifications at Brooklyn Heights, and on his return was conducted through the city hall by the mayor and most of the members of the corporation. Later he visited the societies in the N. Y. Institution, the Manhattan waterworks, the hospital, the orphan asylum, and the new almshouse. In the evening he attended a meeting of the American Society for the Encouragement of Manufactures, and was unanimously elected a member.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 13 and 14, 1817. He visited "the State-Prison, Orphan-Asylum, and Alms-House at Bellevue" under the guidance of Chaplain Stanford, and "was pleased to express his great pleasure in witnessing the perfect order of the several schools."—Sommers, Memoir of John Stanford, 217–18.

14 Pres. Monroe sails from New York in the steamboat "Chancellor Livingston," bound for West Point.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 14, 1817. See Je 19.

16 "The high price which meats, vegetables, butter, milk, and in short every thing in our market continue to bear, can be viewed in no other light than the greatest imposition on our citizens, and call, certainly for some general measure of redress. Beef is still eighteen pence a pound, butter two and six pence, because last summer there was a great drought, although the present is one of the most growing seasons ever known—In like manner, our Brooklyn friends got together last July and raised the price of milk one-fourth, because the pasturing was dried up; and finding we bore this well, they had a second meeting, and raised it a second time, because there were spots in the sun; and they still keep it up, still demand the N. P. (new prices,) although the pasturing is uncommonly fresh and fine, and although there are no longer spots to be seen in the sun. And as long as the citizens submit to this extortion, so long it will be practised."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 16, 1817.

" By a vote of 11 to 5, the common council resolves "that an iron fence be constructed in front of that part of the public ground called the Park, commencing at the Engine House opposite Warren Street and running northerly to Chamber Street; thence along Chamber Street to a point in a line with the west end of the New York Institution."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 206; N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Je 19, 1817.

19 President Monroe, having returned to New York, spends the greater part of this day in examining the situation of Sandy Hook, "with a view to the establishment there of extensive fortifications." He is accompanied by Gens. Swift and Scott and Commodore Lewis. "It must be highly gratifing to our citizens to perceive the active interest the Executive has taken in promoting the arrangements for the defence of this city."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 20, 1817.

20 President Monroe leaves New York for New Haven.—Life & Correspondence of Rufus King, VI: 74.

23 The common council directs the street commissioner to ascer-

1817 June 23 tain as nearly as possible the site of the south-west or flag bastion of Fort George, and there locate a monumental stone on which shall be marked the latitude as taken in 1769 (q. v., O 12) by Mr. David Rittenhouse of Philadelphia and Capt. John Montresor of the British corps of engineers; to employ a suitable person or persons to find the latitude of the city hall (see N 23, 1818), and erect a monumental stone near it with suitable inscriptions, from which mileage or distances from the city shall be computed; also that a stone slab be fixed on the top of the city hall cupola with proper marks thereon by which the true direction of the magnetic needle of surveyor's compasses may be regulated and adjusted.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 216–17.

In 1818, a marble pedestal was placed at the Battery to mark the location of the south-west bastion of Fort George. The inscription upon it was as follows: "To perpetuate The Site of the S. W. Bastion of Fort George In 40°42′8″ N. Latitude as observed by Capt. John Montresor, & David Rittenhouse in October 1769 The Corporation of the City of New York have erected This monument A. D. MDCCCXVIII." On April 26, 1819, the committee on arts and sciences was authorised, if found expedient, to take the monument down, and place on its foundation the marble slab previously resting on the top of the monument.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 364. During the excavation in laying the subway, this landmark was unearthed (see Jl 30, 1904) and reinstated through the action of the American Scenic and Historic Preservation Society and the New York Historical Society.—Peterson, Landmarks of N. Y., 21.

29 A New Yorker writes to a friend in Richmond, Va.: "I must relate to you a very novel case of good fortune. Some years past, the unfortunate col. Aaron Burr, sold to John Jacob Astor, a certain property (at that time out of this city, and I believe, his country house) [Richmond Hill] for the sum of forty thousand dollars—reserving the right of redeeming it at any time within twenty years, by paying the principal and interest. One day in the early part of this week, col. Burr tendered the money to Mr. Astor, and demanded his property, (now become invaluable) which Mr. Astor declined receiving: col. Burr then demanded one hundred and fifty thousand dollars—Mr. Astor required three days to decide; and yesterday I had it from most unquestionable authority, that they had compromised, by Mr. Astor's paying colonel Burr $100,000 in cash, by checks on the Bank of the United States." Though Astor denied the truth of this story, it was the subject of conversation in New York for several weeks.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 14, 1817.

16 The grand jury censures the mayor and corporation for gross neglect in the care of the city. The presentment drawn up refers to the "pools of stagnant water, carcases of dead animals, and large heaps of street manure, which are suffered to remain in the very heart of this populous city," the prevalence of forestalling in the public markets, and the inadequacy of the accommodations in the jail and city prison.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 18, 1817.

22 "A Citizen" writes to one of the newspapers: "There is a mixture of meanness and magnificence that seems to have entered into the character of our city, as well as its appearance. Our superb marble city-hall, with the paltry wooden paling that surrounds the park in which it stands, exhibits the proportion that obtains in every thing else. Our honorable corporation, with a commendable desire to raise the reputation of the city by the splendor of its literary and philosophical institutions, are yet content, that in regard to the comforts and decencies of life, it should still remain below the zero of civilization—or perhaps their love of distinction may be gratified, in its being superlatively entitled to the appellation of the filthiest city in the United States, if not in the world— . . . Some idea of the cleanliness of the more obscure parts of the town may be formed from what one sees in Broadway, that elegant avenue, the praises of which our cockneys are never tired of celebrating. In this centre of taste and fashion, and what not, I counted fifteen hogs feeding upon garbage in the space of twenty rods, and twenty-six more full in sight; not to mention dogs, goats, &c."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 22, 1817.

28 A petition from the purchaser of the ground on which the government house formerly stood (see My 25, 1815), opposite Bowling Green, requesting that the block of houses thereon erected may be named "Bowling Green," and the houses numbered, from the east at the corner of Whitehall, is approved by the common council, and the superintendent of repairs is directed to cause the houses be numbered accordingly.—*M. " The canal committee reports to the common council "on the subject of regulating Canal and Collect Streets," and the report is referred back "with a request to report the distance, which the water can be carried on the surface of the Streets; the length and size of the Sewer, the cost of filling and paving, and making the Sewer, and the means of raising the money for completing the same."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 246; descrip. of Pl. 83-b, III: 562. See Je 29, 1818.

Aug. 6 John Quincy Adams arrives in New York, after an absence of eight years abroad as United States minister to Russia and to Great Britain. He was entertained at a public dinner at Tammany Hall on the 11th inst.. and on the following day dined "with the Mayor and the City Corporation at Bellevue six miles out of the city." On the 14th inst. he wrote that he "called upon Mr Trumbull and found him with the frame for his large picture of the Declaration of Independence upon which he is just preparing to begin."—Memoirs of John Quincy Adams, ed. by Charles Francis Adams (1875), IV: 3–4.

9 Henry Fearon, an Englishman visiting America, writes to his friends about New York: "The wholesale stores which front the river, have not the most attractive appearance. The carts are long and narrow, drawn by one horse; the hackney coaches are open at the sides, being suited to this warm climate—lighter and much superior to ours: the charge is 25 per cent. higher than in London. The streets, through which we passed to Mrs. Bradish's boarding-house, in State-street, opposite the Battery, were narrow and dirty. The Battery is a most delightful walk, on the edge of the bay. The houses in State-street are of the first class. The one in which I am now writing is about the size of those in Bridge-street, Blackfriars. The rent is 2400 dollars (540 l. sterling) per annum; taxes are about 80 dollars (18 l. sterling.) The general mode of living for those who do not keep house, is at hotels, taverns, or private boarding-houses. . . . The expense of living here is about 18 dollars per week. There are here at present, the celebrated Commodore Rogers, and several other naval officers; among whom are Decatur, Warrington, and Bidel, all of whom distinguished themselves in the late war: also Mr. Graham, the under-secretary of state, and Mr. Brackenbridge, author of a history of the late war. . . .

"The street population bears an aspect essentially different from that of London, or large English towns. One striking feature consists in the number of blacks, many of whom are finely dressed, the females very ludicrously so, showing a partiality to white muslin dresses, artificial flowers, and pink shoes. I saw but few well dressed white ladies, but am informed that the greater part are at present at the springs of Balston and Saratoga. The dress of the men is rather deficient in point of neatness and gentility. Their appearance, in common with that of the ladies and children, is sallow, and what we should call unhealthy. . . .

"Several hotels are on an extensive scale: the City Hotel is as large as the London Tavern; the dining, and some of the private rooms, Seem fitted up regardless of expense. . . . The shops (or stores, as they are called) have nothing in their exterior to recommend them: there is not even an attempt at tasteful display. The linen and woollen drapers (dry good stores, as they are denominated) leave quantities of their goods loose on boxes in the street, without any precaution against theft. . . . A great number of excellent private dwellings are built of red painted brick, which gives them a peculiarly neat and clean appearance. In Broad-way and Wall-street trees are planted by the side of the pavement. . . . Most of the streets are dirty; in many of them sawyers are prepar-

1817 Aug. 9 ing wood for sale, and all are infested with pigs,— circumstances which indicate a lax police.

". . . An evening stroll along Broadway, when the lamps are alight, will please more than one at noon-day. The shops then look rather better, though their proprietors, of course, remain the same: their cold indifference may, by themselves, be mistaken for independence, . . . I disapprove most decidedly of the obsequious servility of many London Shopkeepers, but I am not prepared to go the length of those in New York, who stand with their hats on, or sit or lie along their counters, smoking segars, and spitting in every direction, to a degree offensive to any man of decent feelings. . . ."—Fearon, Sketches of America (London, 1818), 6–11. 12 The common council receives a communication from John Randel, Jr., which states that he has "taken the elevations of all the Monuments on the First, Third, Eighth, and Tenth Avenues, South of Hundred and fifty fifth Street," for which he is to receive, under contract, $2,500; and that he has "deposited in the Street Commissioner's Office a Map containing the Profile and Elevations of the same." He now asks payment for them, and this is made immediately.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 252–53. See also summary under D 31, 1810.

15 John Jacob Astor pays $408 as rent on water lots. It appears that he is, by far, the largest holder of this form of real estate.—Journal B, 217, comptroller's office.

21 A "New Circus," on Broadway near the stone bridge, is opened by Mr. West.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 21, 1817. Former attempts to establish a circus in this locality had proved unsuccessful.—Blunt, 136. For history of this site, see L. M. R. K., III: 983, under "City Assembly Rooms."

25 By a vote of ten to five, the common council agrees that a market house, 85 x 25, be erected on a gore of land bounded by Grand, Orange, Collect, and Broome Sts., providing the whole expense does not exceed $7,000.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 271–73, 283. This became Centre Market (see N 24).

" The common council of Philadelphia sends to the New York common council a communication urging measures to guard against the frequent explosions of boilers on steamboats. It is recommended that an inspector of steamboats be appointed, and the board directs counsel to petition the legislature to pass a law authorising such appointment.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 269–70.

Sept. 6 As "the reputation of the College, in the view of the public, greatly suffers, from the apparent neglect and decay of its edifices," the trustees of Columbia adopt a plan for the erection of some new buildings and appoint a committee to carry it into execution. The plan is "to erect, at each extremity of the old building, a block or wing of about fifty feet square; each wing to contain two houses for Professors, facing the College Green, and projecting beyond the front of the old building, so as to be on a line with the fronts of the houses on the north side of Park Place. The old building, by means of some interior alterations, will afford ample accommodation for the purposes of instruction, together with a Library and a Chapel." The expense is estimated at $40,000.—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1754–1904, 104–5; Moore, Hist. Sketch of Columbia College, 84. The belfry was added to the college at the same time as the wings.—Halsey, Pictures of Early N. Y. on Dark Blue Staffordshire Pottery, 83, 84. The alterations were completed by Oct. 2, 1820 (q v.). See also F 19, 1819.

Oct. — Blunt's Stranger's Guide to the City of New-York is published, containing a map of the city and views of the city hall, almshouse, and state prison. The following extracts show some of the changes and improvements that have taken place since the city's first guide-book was published (see My 2, 1807):

"In extent, New-York city measures, in length, from the West Battery to Thirty first street, about four miles; and in breadth about one and a half mile. Its circuit is 8 miles. The whole of this space is not yet covered with buildings, but the greater proportion of it is. . . ."—Ibid., 34.

The number of houses is about 17,000, and the population exceeds 100,000.—Ibid., 34–35.

The streets, including lanes and alleys, amount to 252. Broadway "is the Bond-street of New-York, and exhibits in the shops, on both sides, an elegant and extensive assortment of every thing useful and fashionable." Wells and pumps "are to be met with in almost every street; these afford an excellent supply of wholesome spring water to the inhabitants. Most of the private families have also cisterns for rain water in their gardens, which they use in washing clothes. Overseers of the wells and pumps are appointed annually by the magistrates; whose duty it is to cause the wells and pumps to be regularly examined, cleansed, and kept in proper repair under a penalty."—Ibid., 35–38. Oct. —

There are eight markets—Fly Market, Washington Market, Duane Market, Catharine Market, Spring Street Market, Greenwich Market, Gouverneur Market, and Grand Street Market.—Ibid., 38–41.

"There are no lodging houses or furnished apartments here as in England. Strangers, whether familes or individuals, must, on their arrival, board in the place where they lodge. Unfurnished rooms may sometimes be had; but these have been difficult to procure of late, owing to the rapid increase of the population. The usual time of letting houses is previous to the 1st of May. The following is the list of the Hotels: 1. City Hotel, Broadway. 2. Merchant's Hotel, Wall-street. 3. Mechanics' Hall, Broadway. 4. Tontine Coffee House, Wall-street. 5. Bank Coffee House, Pine-street. 6. Tammany Hall, Nassau-street. 7. Washington Hall, Broadway. 8. Commerce Hotel, Pearl-street. . . .

"Of Boarding Houses there is a great variety."—Ibid., 41–42.

"The City Hall is the most prominent, and most important building in New-York. It is the handsomest structure in the United States; perhaps of its size, in the world. . . .

"At the front entrance there are 5 doors leading into the Lobby, the roof of which is supported by 20 square piers of marble. To the right and left, there is a gallery stretching to both ends of the building, the floor also of marble. In this story apartments are allotted to the Chancery, Committee room, Common Council office, Street Commissioner's office, Mayor's office, Board of Health, Sheriff's office, City Inspector's office, Recorder's office, Register's office, Surrogate's office, Supreme Court Clerk's office, Clerk of Session's office, county Clerk's office, and house keeper's room; in all 14 apartments.

"Three stair cases lead from the first to the second story. The principal of these, is in the centre of the geometrical construction, with marble steps; the other two are in the gallery, one towards each of the ends, of a plain form, and the steps of the same materials.—Round the top of the centre stair-case there is a circular gallery, railed in, likewise floored with marble; from which ten marble columns ascend to the ceiling, which here opens and displays a handsome Dome, ornamented in great taste, with stucco, and giving light from the top to the interior of the building. Another gallery, runs in the centre from one end to the other. On this story are the Common Council room, the Governor's room, Comptroller's office, Court of Sessions, District court, Mayor's court, Supreme court, United States' District court, and the offices belonging to the clerk of that court, and of the District court.

"The entrances at the ends lead to the basement story, through the middle of which there is an arched passage or gallery, stretching from one end to the other. Opening into this passage are the Marine, or Justices' court, Police office, Jury room, and Watch office." The common council room "measures 42 feet by 30.—It is fitted up in an elegant and commodious manner for the meetings of the corporation which are open at all times to the citizens. The chair for the mayor is the same that was used by General Washington when he presided at the first Congress, which was held in this city. It is elevated by a few steps on the south side of the room, and surmounted by a canopy. The aldermen sit in a circular form in the room, and at the upper end, immediately beneath the chair, there is a table for the clerk of the council. Neither the Mayor nor Aldermen wear any distinguishing dress or insignia of office. . . ." The governor's room (see Ap 15, 1814) "is appropriated to the use of the Governor of the state, when he visits the city. . . . It is a very handsome apartment measuring 52 feet by 20. It is in the center of the second story and, from the windows there is a communication with the top of the portico in front of the Hall. This is surrounded by a balustrade, and commands a delightful view of the Park, and surrounding objects. The walls of the room are hung with pictures, among which are the principal naval and military heroes who distinguished themselves during the late struggle with Great Britain, executed by Mr. Jarvis, a young artist of this city. The others are the work of Trumbull. The whole display great taste and 1817 Oct. — judgment, and are held to be excellent likenesses. . . ." The rooms for the court of sessions, supreme court, court of chancery, mayor's court, district court of the U. S., surrogate, register, and marine or justices' court are also described.—Ibid., 45–64.

The New York Hospital "comprises the Hospital for the reception of the sick and disabled, the Lunatic Asylum, and the Lying-in-Hospital." A new lunatic asylum is to be erected on a "healthy, elevated, and retired spot, between Manhattanville and Haerlem." —Ibid., 66–74.

The buildings occupied by the almshouse "stand at Bellevue on the banks of the East river, than which there is not a more healthy and pleasant situation on the whole island. The principal building fronts the river, between which there is a piece of ground alloted to recreation. . . . In the rear, at a proper distance, stands a work house three stories high, for the employment of the poor. . . . Including the space on which the penitentiary stands, the ground occupied by the premises extends to about 24 acres, 18 of which are surrounded by a board fence, and 6 by a stone wall, about 7 feet in height. Outside the walls, there is a school house for educating poor children; a bake house; gardener's house and kitchen garden, for supplying the establishment with vegetables: barn; wastehouse, and other necessary offices. . . ." —Ibid., 74–80.

"There are four places of confinement in New-York city; 3 for felons and one for debtors. These are 1. State Prison, 2. Penitentiary, 3. Bridewell, 4. Jail . . ."—Ibid., 104–22.

There are published in the city seven daily newspapers, five semi-weeklies, and five weeklies. There are also three magazines. —Ibid., 124–29.

The Society Library contains about 14,000 volumes estimated at $40,000. Its building on Nassau St. is worth $20,000 additional. —Ibid., 129–30.

There is only one reading-room establishment in the city. It is at the corner of Broadway and Pine St. and is managed by J. Eastburn & Co.—Ibid., 130.

Two schools have been built by the Free School Society; one in Chatham St. and one in Henry St. Land and money for a third have been granted. The Methodists maintain a free school on the Lancastrian plan in Forsyth St.—Ibid., 132–34.

The Park Theatre is under the management of Messrs. Price and Simpson. It accommodates about 2,500 spectators.—Ibid., 135–36.

Vauxhall Garden, situated "near the top of the Bowery," is a "pretty general resort." An equestrian statue of Washington stands in the centre of the garden.—Ibid., 136.

The circus is "a large wooden building near the stone bridge in Broadway" (see Ag 21).—Ibid., 136–37.

"Paff's Gallery of Paintings" is in Wall St. The collection consists of nearly 300 original paintings and about 2,000 etchings and engravings.—Ibid., 137–38.

A mechanical panorama, "representing, in perspective, and in motion, an extensive commercial city," is on exhibition in Broadway, and a naval panorama showing some of the American victories during the late war is at 21 Chatham St.—Ibid., 138–39.

The Battery is the "most delightful promenade in the city. . . On the national anniversary, the citizens resort here in great numbers, to regale themselves in booths erected for the purpose, and the military parades, which have been frequent here, tend greatly to enliven the scene."—Ibid., 139–40.

Bowling Green still contains the pedestal of the statue of George III.—Ibid., 140–41. See Jl 9, 1776.

The Park, covering about 4 acres, is "in the middle of the city." Rows of trees are planted within and around it, and the whole is enclosed with a railing "in which there are a number of gates, through which access may be had at all hours."—Ibid., 141.

Two "Marine Baths" are maintained in the city; one is at the foot of Murry St., the other at Arden's wharf near the Battery. These, "in the bathing season, are much resorted to by the citizens of New-York."—Ibid., 141–42.

The custom-house is at the corner of Wall and Nassau Sts.— Ibid., 144–45.

The Chamber of Commerce meets at the Tontine Coffee House in Wall St. "Merchants and Insurance brokers only are eligible to become members of the Chamber of Commerce."—Ibid., 145–46.

The post-office is at the corner of William and Garden Sts.— Ibid., 147. Cf. Ja 2, 1804.

There are 10 banks in the city, exclusive of the U. S. Branch Bank, and the insurance companies number 11.—Ibid., 151–57. Oct. —

The Fire Department is an incorporated body. The chief engineer and the fire wardens are chosen by the common council. Fire buckets must be kept at every house and manufactory. "Each bucket holds 2 gallons of water, and must always be suspended and ready to be delivered and used for extinguishing fires when they occur."—Ibid., 157–60.

There are 14 incorporated manufacturing companies in the city and also a society for the encouragement of domestic manufactures.—Ibid., 160–67.

Steamboats have been brought to "great perfection." "The number of steam vessels built in the city of New-York, under the direction and superintendance, or according to the plan of Mr. Fulton, is 15. Of these the steam frigate Fulton the First is the largest." There are 3 steamboat ferry companies, the Fulton, the York and Jersey, and the Brooklyn.—Ibid., 167–76.

"There are no less than 53 places of public worship within the city, besides 32 other establishments, all devoted to religious purposes." The churches belong to 17 different denominations.— Ibid., 189–204.

The public slips "are 12 in number: viz. 1. Whitehall-slip, adjoining to the Battery, bottom of Whitehall-street. 2. Exchange-slip, bottom of Broad-street. 3. Coenties-slip, at Coenties-alley near Broad-st. 4. Old-slip, bottom William-street. 5. Coffee House-slip, bottom of Wall-street. 6. Fly Market-slip, bottom of Maiden-lane. 7. Burling-slip, bottom of John-street. 8. Peck-slip, bottom of Ferry-street. 9. James-slip, bottom of James-street. 10. Market-slip, bottom of Market-street. 11. Pike-slip, bottom of Pike-street. 12. Rutger's-slip, bottom of Rutger's street.

"Two Docks, called the Albany Basin, and Corporation Docks, are situated on the banks of the Hudson; the former at the bottom of Cedar-street, and the latter adjoining to Washington-market, at the bottom of Fulton and Vesey Streets."—Ibid., 204–9.

Fort Gates at Sandy Hook, Forts Lewis and Diamond at the Narrows, Fort Richmond on Staten Island, Castle Williams and Fort Columbus on Governors Island, Fort Wood on Bedlow's Island, and Crown Fort on Ellis Island protect the harbour from attack. On Manhattan Island are the West Battery, the North Fort, and Fort Gansevoort. "East of New-York Island, there is a castle situated on a rising ground, which commands the passage at Hell-Gate, leading into Long-Island sound, besides a battery on Hallett's point, with a blockhouse on Mill-rock."—Ibid., 209–14. See also Palmer, Jour. of Travels in U. S. A. and Lower Canada in 1817 (London, 1818), 298–326.

The editor of one of the city newspapers writes: "We have just learnt with astonishment that Gen. Scott, after informing our corporation what he was about to do, has proceeded to dig away the ground preparatory to laying the foundation of a line of brick buildings, upon the Battery, next the water, and which are intended to serve as soldiers' barracks. The late hour at which we come to the knowledge of these facts, will not permit us to examine on what color of right the claim to appropriate this ground to any such use, rests. It must be strong, indeed, to induce the people of this city to submit to it. This public promenade, surpassed by none on earth for beauty of prospect, united with its elegant walks, and equally valuable for health as for pleasure, has been enjoyed in common by the inhabitants time out of mind, unmolested. It can occasion no surprise, therefore, that they should ask by what authority does any one now venture to encroach upon it? . . ." —N. Y. Eve. Post, O 4, 1817. In consequence of this editorial, Gen. Scott announced that the building, "instead of being intended as a barracks for soldiers, . . . was to be an elegant one story building for the accommodation of the staff officers, and would be an ornament rather than an eye-sore."—Ibid., O 6, 1817. In a letter to the mayor of the same date (Oct. 6), Gen. Scott defended the erection of such "staff offices" on the ground that the grant of the premises to the United States expressly provides that occupation may be for fortifications "or for such other purpose as the Public may be immediately interested in." If it is "the wish of the Corporation," he adds, he will "recommend it to the Government to exchange the Premises in question for an equivalent in the City."—From original letter in city clerk's record room; M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 306–7. See O 7. 4

New York "though less regular, is more sprightly and gay than Philadelphia," wrote E. Montule (see N 8, 1816). "A person "

1817 Oct. 4 of my acquaintance conducted me near to Long Island, where lay the Vapor frigate, built by Fulton. It is 150 feet long, its width appearing to me too large in proportion; the thickness of its sides are complete safeguards against the cannon's force; nor can the interior mechanism receive injury. This species of floating fortification will be of great utility in defending the coast, and in case an enemy wishes to board the vessel, you are enabled in an instant to inundate him with boiling water: it is manned in war time by eight hundred men; it is called Fulton the First: I do not understand that they have undertaken to build any more."—A Voyage to North Am., in 1817 (1821), 102.

7 The common council directs Mayor Radcliff to write to Pres. Monroe that the erection of buildings on the Battery (see O 4) is contrary to the wishes of the corporation and of the inhabitants of the city, and to request that he instruct Gen. Scott to suspend operations. The board also orders the street commissioner "to take the usual measures to prevent the erection of any Buildings or obstructions on the Battery," and it passes a law "prohibiting the driving of Horses and Carriages on the Battery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 306–10. On Oct. 8, a number of people collected on the Battery and began to annoy the workers and insult the guards. To prevent trouble, the street commissioner ordered the builder to remove the obstruction, and Gen. Scott agreed to let the matter rest until he heard from Washington.—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 7, 8, 9, and 10, 1817. George Graham, acting secretary of war, informed Mayor Radcliff, by letter of O 24, that the president had yielded to the wishes of the citizens, although he did not relinquish the right of the U. 11 Daniel D. Tompkins, former governor of this state and at this time vice-president of the U. S., enters into the following agreement in regard to running steamboats from New York City: "I hereby acknowledge that in consideration of Adam and Noah Brown's agreement to relinquish to me gratuitously the exclusive right to run steamboats to Staten Island from New York, I have agreed to release to them or their Assigns gratuitously the exclusive right of running steamboats from New York to Shrewsbury in the State of New Jersey—The residue of the grant from the Representatives of Robert R. Livingston & Robert Fulton remains undivided & in common between us and equally owned by us, that is, they one half and I one half and I agree to execute any paper with them or their assigns giving them or their assigns the sole right to Shrewsbury upon their executing to me an instrument granting to me and my assigns the sole right to Staten Island—And the said Adam & Noah Brown having notified me in writing that Thomas Gibbons Esq., of Elizabeth town in the State of New Jersey has purchased of them their said right to Shrewsbury, I agree upon their releasing as aforesaid to unite in a conveyance of said right to Shrewsbury to the said Thomas Gibbons to the extent of our grant from the Representatives of Livingston & Fulton to run to Shrewsbury aforesaid—October 11, 1817.

Nov. 10 The Tammany constitutions of 1813 (q.v., Ag 9) are repealed, and renovations of the original constitutions of 1789 (q.v., Ag 10) are ratified by the "Grand Council of Sachems," and go into effect. Indian terms are reinstated. The preamble to the constitution states that this action is taken because, since the adoption of the 1813 constitutions, "a solemn gloom for three long years the Tammanial horizon has much obscured;—Freedoms refulgent Flame had nearly expired!—a latent spark will soon resuscitate it again, when green eyed jealousy and stalking discord shall be expelled from within the walls of our Antient, our Happy Wigwam; Divine Harmony shall resume her wanted residence, which all the genuine Sons of Tammany will again pledge themselves on the Altar of Freedom to 'Preserve by Concord'."—From photostats (made from originals in Tammany Hall) in MSS. 1818

— In this year, the congress of Aix-la-Chapelle was held, and the five Great Powers agreed to maintain the general peace.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 59.

— Baron Axel Leonhard Klinckowstrom, of Sweden, author of the following observations, was first lieutenant in the king's navy, a member of the Royal Military Scientific Academy of Stockholm, and a member of La Société pour l'encouragement de l'industrie nationale, of France. In the preface to his Bref om de Forenta Staterna, Klinckowstrom states that the expenses of his trip to America were borne by the Swedish government, and that for this reason he considered it his duty to pay this debt by acquainting the general public fully with what he had seen. He sailed from France in 1818 and landed at Newport, whence he proceeded down Long Island Sound, passing through Hell Gate. The following extracts of Manhattan interest, translated and given in outline form, are taken from the Bref om de Forenta Staterna:

"The number of sailing vessels increased more and more after we had passed Hell Gate. The country houses were tastefully built and some of them according to a very noble style of architecture. The white colour of the houses and fences contrasted agreeably with the green parks that surrounded them. Finally the City of New York appeared, with its many ships, and its large harbour, and I can assure you that this picture contained something more fascinating and was so much the more surprising because people in Europe hardly ever have a correct idea of America's rapid growth and are not prepared to find so large and populous a city on a coast where 200 years ago there was only an insignificant little town. The appearance of the city from the shore is, in spite of that, not cheerful, because the houses are not plastered, and besides, they are hidden by the ships and their masts, which in double rows lie at the piers and form one forest of masts. New York, therefore, when you approach it from the sea, can by no means be compared with the beautiful picture which the city of Stockholm offers.

1818 — "As soon as the steamboat had reached the shore, a large number of porters approached the ship to fetch the baggage of the travellers. These people have placards on their coats, with number and name, by which one can recognise them. . . . [pp. 12–13]

"The houses in New York are as a rule painted according to the English style, that is to say, a dark tile color with white mortar lines between the stones. The city would have a very gloomy appearance if the streets were not so wide and light. Here and there one finds on either side of the street trees planted. All the streets have sidewalks, which makes walking easy and agreeable, and in the newer part of the city the streets are straight, but seldom cut each other diagonally. In the whole city there is only one pretty square. . . .

"About a third of the length of the street [Broadway] from the Battery you come across a large 3-cornered place, which is shaded by beautiful trees. Here is the City Hall. It is built in a light and very handsome style. As I have made a correct design of this place, and of Broadway and Chatham St. [see Pl. 85, Vol. III], you will get a good idea of this part of New York, which really is pretty. In the same drawing you will see the costumes worn here and also all the vehicles, from the elegant coach down to the modest push-cart, on which the licensed porter is busily transferring the traveller's goods to the harbour.

"Broadway is, besides, the most frequented promenade, where all new fashions can first be admired. In the cool season, and when the weather is fine, the young dandies and the fair sex promenade on the sidewalks between 2 and 3 in the afternoon. You then have a chance to see serious Quaker and Methodist costumes and grotesque Dutch dress, which contrast strangely with the modern costumes.

"Wall Street offers other scenes. There are found almost all the licensed banking houses. Except for a few shops and private houses, one finds there only banking and money exchange offices. As a rule, these are situated below the level of the street, so that instead of mounting stairs in order to reach the money-lender, which generally is the case in Europe, one descends a small staircase which leads into a pretty cosily furnished basement room.

"At the end of Wall Street is the Tontine Coffee House, which corresponds to Lloyds in London, and which is really the exchange of the city. This building is by no means beautiful and cannot be compared with our exchange building in Stockholm. In the neighbourhood of the Tontine all public auctions are held. Large packages, bundles, and barrels cover the sidewalks.

"Pearl Street contains all the large warehouses. Here everything is sold wholesale. The shops are well supplied with goods and this street is considered the richest, though its appearance is less brilliant than Broadway.

"On the east shore are found the Flymarket and Newmarket, the largest and best supplied markets.

"New York is not as clean as cities of the same rank and population in Europe; in spite of the fact that the police regulations are good, they are not enforced and one finds in the streets dead cats and dogs, which make the air very bad; dust and ashes are thrown out into the streets, which are swept perhaps once every fortnight in the summer; only, however, in the largest and most frequented streets, otherwise they are cleaned only once a month.

"As the street cleaning is not done by the owners of the houses, but by men specially engaged for the purpose, you can easily conceive the amount of dust raised when 20 or 30 street cleaners at one time sweep the street. When it storms the city is enveloped in a cloud of dust.

"Another circumstance no less dangerous to health is the fact that pigs are allowed to run loose in the streets. These pigs have on several occasions caused remarkable scenes, jumping about here and there and bowling over richly dressed ladies. . . . [pp. 104–14.]

"The houses in the city are generally small, but the construction, although not very lasting, is quite pretty. As a rule the houses have only two rooms that are well furnished. The bedrooms are all on the top floor and ill protected against the cold. From the sketches I have added you will get a good idea of the arrangement of the houses.

"Among the hotels and restaurants, the City Hotel, Mechanics Hall, and Washington Hall, are the largest. Our restaurants are very nice, but they cannot be compared to these. The City Hotel is the largest establishment of this sort in the city. There you will find a very large and well decorated hall, which serves as an assembly room. 1818 —

"The drinking water in New York is very bad and salty. Even the so-called Manhattan water, which is pumped up by steam engines and then carried through the city, is not good. But in Brooklyn the water is splendid . . . [pp. 118–24.]

"I have seen an official report of the number of houses which were erected in New York in the course of the year 1818–1819. This list includes no less than 200 houses of all kinds, but you must not believe that these buildings consist of stone or that the construction is very durable. New York contains just as many frame houses as stone houses, but I have only mentioned this to prove to you how rapidly this place develops, in spite of the unfavourable commercial prospects at the present time. The stone houses are, as a rule, only one stone in thickness and are not supposed to last more than 50 years, but the warehouses are stronger." (pp. 131–45.) Klinckowstrom gives a plate and 8 or 9 pages of technical description of the "Chancellor Livingston." (pp. 152–60.)

The two New York views made by Klinckowstrom are reproduced as Pls. 84 and 85, Vol. III.

— In this year was published A plain statement addressed to the proprietors of real estate, in the city and county of New-York. By a Landholder. It relates to "the expenses, inconveniences and oppressions attendant upon the opening and regulating of avenues and streets," with special reference to conditions in Greenwich Village.

— In this year, Clement C. Moore, LL.D., presented to the General Theological Seminary (see 1817) the entire block bounded by Ninth Ave., 20th, and 21st Sts., and the Hudson River. Upon this the seminary buildings were erected in 1825 (q. v., Jl 28).—Early N. Y. Homes, 34. See also L. M. R. K., III: 940, and My 1, 1819. It was in the block above that "Chelsea" stood, built by Capt. Thomas Clarke in 1750 (q.v., Ag 16).

— In this year the Jewish synagogue on Mill St. was rebuilt.—L. M. R. K., III: 929.

— In this year, the frame building of the Chambers St. Presbyterian Church (see 1801) was replaced by a brick edifice.—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 216–17. See also L. M. R. K., III: 931.

— About this year, cottages on the east side of Broadway between Franklin and White Sts. were replaced by handsome residences, owned by Geo. Rapelje, John M. Bradhurst, Samuel Watkins, Richard Kingsland, James Gillender, and William M. Cutting (afterwards occupied by Mr. Astor).—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 596.

— In 1818, A. T. Goodrich reprinted practically the whole of Blunt's Stranger's Guide of 1817, the text, from preface to p. 306 inclusive, being the same. He gave to this reprint a different title-page, however, and, after p. 306, added an "Appendix for 1818." The title-page reads: The Picture of New-York, and Stranger's Guide through the commercial emporium of the United States: containing, also, a description of the environs, with several pleasant tours and summer excursions around the neighbouring country; with a plan of the city, and numerous views of public buildings. New-York: Printed for and published by A. T. Goodrich & Co. No. 124 Broadway, corner of Cedar-street, opposite the City Hotel. 1818. (Cf. the 1818 London ed. of The Stranger's Guide to N. Y., by Blunt, in N. Y. Pub. Library.)

The notice, printed opposite the preface in Blunt's guide, on the reverse of the title-page, signed by the clerk of the Southern District, and showing that Blunt deposited the title of his book, as required by the copyright laws, does not appear in the Goodrich reprint; and the reprint contains no advertisements at end.

The "Appendix for 1818" mentions the incorporation of the Franklin Bank, during the legislative session this year, with a capital of $500,000 and permission to enlarge it to $1,000,000. "The Bank was ordered to be located east of Beekman-street; and the Directors have purchased the spacious mansion in Cherry-street, (opposite the new Franklin Square,) that belonged to the estate of the late Col. Osgood, and which was the head-quarters of General Washington during [the early part of] his residence in New-York [until Feb., 1790, q.v.]. . . . Its operations commenced in July, 1818."

Other financial institutions incorporated in the same session, and described in this "Appendix," were the Mercantile Insurance Co., a marine and life insurance company, its charter being dated April 10, 1818, and its office being at 45 Wall St.; the Franklin

1818 Fire Insurance Co., at 41 Wall St., opposite the City Bank; and — the Union Insurance Co., another life insurance company.

The stage-coach and steamboat lines out of New York are fully described; also the exhibition of the Academy of Fine Arts, the circulating libraries, and several tours to points near New York.

Besides the folded plan of the city (torn out of the copy of this scarce reprint in the author's collection), and the three views, engraved by Hooker, found in the Blunt guide at pp. 45, 74, and 104, the author's copy is extra-illustrated by the addition of the following 23 very rare copper-plate views of public buildings, nearly all of which were engraved by Balch, Rawdon & Co.: "Washington Market" (opp. p. 39), "Fulton Market" (p. 40), "City Hotel," "Mechanics Hall," "Tammany Hall," and "Washington Hall" (drawn by E. W. Bridges, and eng. by N. & S. S. Jocelyn, N. Haven) (all opp. p. 42), "City Hall Stair Case" (p. 47), "N. Y. Hospital" (p. 66), "Columbia College" (p. 80), "College of Physicians and Surgeons, in Barclay-street" (a wood-cut, p. 82), "New-York City Library . . . 1818" (wood-cut, p. 129), "Free School N° 1" (p. 132), "Park Theatre" and "Interior of the Park Theatre" (p. 134), "Panoramic Rotunda and New-York Institution, in Chamber-street" (wood-cut, p. 138), "New-York Battery. 1820" (drawn by C. Burton, and eng. by G. B. King, p. 140), "New York Bank" (p. 152), "City Bank" (p. 154), "Catholic Cathedral" (p. 193), "S^{t} Pauls Church" (drawn by E. W. Bridges, p. 196), "S^{t} Johns Church" (drawn by E. W. Bridges, p. 197), "Brooklyn Ferry" (p. 220), and an unnamed and unsigned view, showing apparently, the veranda of the pavilion and the grounds of the Battery (p. 334).

The earliest publication in which the Balch, Rawdon & Co. views are known to have appeared has not been definitely ascertained. While Stauffer mentions the firm (see Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 14), neither Stauffer nor Fielding mentions the views. Regarding these, Mr. Robert Fridenberg, in a letter to the author, says:

"These Balch, Rawdon & Co. plates appear, not always uniform as to the number, in The Picture of N. Y. and Strangers' Guide, by Goodrich (1828). In the Gilsey sale, 1903, an uncut copy, containing thirteen of these plates, a map and two wood-cuts was purchased by Oscar Wegelin. Mr. Henry Goldsmith has two copies of the book, both with many extra plates. In the W. L. Andrews sale a copy with two maps and seventeen views was sold to E. Scott; and another, with one map and eight views, to O'Keefe. I have had several copies of the book with a different number of plates in each. It would seem that the publisher used up what he had in stock and that the earlier copies sold contained a larger number of prints than those issued later. The plate of Tammany Hall at p. 42 [in Mr. Stokes's 1818 reprint of Blunt] was afterwards enlarged to 2.5 x 4.10, certain additional buildings, including 'S^{t} Johns Hall' at left, being engraved. St. Paul's Church, at p. 196, was also enlarged to 1.15 x 3.9, the old building at right being replaced by the more modern Astor House.

"Besides those in the 1818 book, these are similar: 'American Bible Society Repository. Nassau Street;' (Brooklyn) 'Navy Yard;' '1st Congregational Church, Chambers Street;' 'S^{t} Matthews Church, Walker Street;' and 'Fort Gansevoort'."

— A view of Wall Street, Trinity Church, and the First Presbyterian Meeting, painted between 1818 and 1825, is reproduced and described in Vol. III, A. Pl. 16. This painting has a picturesque quality and an intimate charm equalled by few views within the city belonging to this period. The signs on the buildings seem to fix the date between the years 1820 and 1821. For example, S. M. Isaacs (not Isaacks), whose sign appears beneath the lowest window on the building on the south-west corner of Wall and Broad St., is not found in the city directory at this address until 1820; while T. & W. (not T. W.) Benton, boot makers, occupied in this year the shop seen at the right of the view, on the north-west corner of Nassau St. This firm appears in the directory of 1821 as Thomas Benton & Co. It is, however, quite possible that the old sign and designation were retained, and that the date is a few years later.

The shop on the south-west corner of Wall and Broad Sts. was occupied as a book-store for many years. In 1803–4, Stephen Gould, "printer & bookseller," first appears here, and, with some slight changes in the wording of the firm name, continued at this corner until 1825. In 1821, his address, as given in the directory, corresponds with that seen in the view—"Gould S. Law Bookseller and Law Stationer, old stand, sign of Lord Coke, corner Wall and Broad." In 1825, a stationer named Paul Burstell took over the corner shop, and his name continues to appear in the directories at this address for a number of years. 1818 —

The building on the north-east corner of Broadway and Wall St. (No. 88 Broadway) was at this period owned and occupied as a store by Najah Taylor, "Merchant," who had bought the property in 1809 from the heirs of Colin Van Gelder. This corner building appears in the Holland View of 1799 as a three-storey house with a flat roof. The additional storey and gable were probably added by Taylor soon after his purchase of the property.

Trinity Church, seen at the head of Wall St. on Broadway, was the second church building which occupied this site, and was built in 1788–90, and demolished in 1839 to make room for the present edifice.

The First Presbyterian Church, or "Meeting," on the north side of Wall St. between Broadway and Nassau St., was erected in 1719, and rebuilt in 1810. It was partially destroyed by fire in 1834, and again rebuilt in the following year. In 1844, it was taken down and re-erected in Jersey City.

The painting was acquired from Goupil & Co. more than fifty years ago by a member of the family of the late Miss Mary G. Ward, who bequeathed it to its present owner, Miss Sarah Cooper Hewitt.

Since this description was written, the author's attention has been called to the fact that in the will of Miss Ward, the picture is described as "said to have been painted in the year 1818." As the original description in Vol. III is inadequate in several particulars it has seemed best to revise it and reprint it here.

In this year, Wm. G. Wall, who was born in Dublin in 1792, — came to New York. He became noted for his American landscapes. —Isham, Hist. of Am. Painting (1905), 199.

The new Methodist Church in John St. (see My 13, 1817) is Jan. to be opened on this day.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 2, 1818. The church 4 was 62 feet by 87 feet and cost about $30,000.—Hist. Mag. (1869), 2d ser., V: 143. See also L. M. R. K., III: 930; and S 24, 1840.

"This day will witness the commencement of the line of Amer- 5 ican packets between New-York and Liverpool. The James Munro will take her departure this morning at 10 o'clock."—N. Y. Gaz., Ja 5, 1818. This advertisement of Isaac Wright was the first one to announce the sailing of packets at a stated hour. "From the sailing of this packet we may date the day from whence the commerce of New-York began to increase seven-fold."—Grant Thorburn's Reminiscences (1845), 136–37.

The road committee presents to the common council the draft 26 of a contract, proposed to be entered into with John Randel, Jr., for making a map of the island of New York, and it is referred to a committee. On Feb. 2, this committee reported favourably on the terms of the contract, and the board directed that it be executed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 455, 466–67. The map had been ordered as early as Nov. 9, 1812 (q. v.), but no written contract had been entered into. On Feb. 15, 1819, Randel was granted an extension of time until May 1, 1820, for the completion of the map.—Ibid., X: 249–51. The 92 sheets composing this map, known as the Map of the Farms, bear various dates in 1819 and 1820, and are filed in the bureau of topography, borough president's office, Municipal Bldg. A separate title-page bears the date "1820." See Pl. 86, Vol. III.

Henry B. Fearon writes of Washington, in part, as follows: Feb. "It has been so fashionable with natives, as well as foreigners, — to ridicule the federal city, that I had anticipated the reality of Moore's description of " 'This famed metropolis, where fancy sees

Squares in morasses, obelisks in trees.'

But in this I was pleasingly disappointed.

And Provided further, and the premises hereby granted, are also upon this express condition, any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding, that if the said parties of the second part, or their successors, shall not well and faithfully observe, perform, fulfil and keep all and singular the covenants and conditions above contained, on their part and behalf to be observed, performed, fulfilled and kept according to the true intent and meaning of these presents, then and in that case it shall and may be lawful for the said parties of the first part, in common Council convened, by a resolution or order to be passed vacate this grant, and thereupon the premises hereby demised shall be revested in the said parties of the first part, or their successors as fully and completely as if this Indenture had never been executed.

In Witness Whereof to one part of this Indenture, remaining with the said parties of the first part, the said parties of the second part have caused the Common Seal of the said The New York Gas Light Company to be affixed; and to the other part thereof remaining with the said parties of the second part the said parties of the first part have caused the Common Seal of the City of New York to be affixed the day and year above written.

FIRST AND LAST PAGE OF FIRST FRANCHISE FOR SUPPLYING NEW YORK CITY WITH GAS; DATED MAY 12, 1823. SEE P. 11629.

and twenty four, erect, establish and complete in the said City of New York, good and sufficient buildings, works and apparatus for the preparing and manufacture of Gas, and that they will also cause the pipes for conducting the same, and of sufficient capacity, to be laid, and will also manufacture or cause to be manufactured and supplied, in the most approved manner, sufficient quantities of the best quality Gas, commonly called inflammable Gas, for lighting the houses and public lamps in the street called Broadway in the said City from the Battery to Grand [illegible] manner hereinafter mentioned. And also moreover that from and after the said parties of the second part shall and will at all times from and after the twelfth day of May in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty eight and during the residue of the term of this grant in like manner cause the pipes, of sufficient capacity, for conducting the said Gas to be laid, and will also manufacture or cause to be manufactured and supplied in the most approved manner sufficient quantities of the said Gas of the best quality as well and sufficiently lighting the [illegible] of streets and public places and the public lamps and lamps to be placed to adjoin all and singular the streets and parts of streets lying in the said City, south of the aforesaid line at such periods as the said parties of the first part shall from time to time after the said twelfth day of May in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty eight by resolution or by-law reasonably require of the said parties of the second part. And that all such pipes to be furnished by the said parties of the second part and placed underground for the purpose of conducting the said Gas in all or either of the said streets or parts [illegible] be made and constructed in the most approved manner of cast iron and of the best materials. And also that the said parties of the second part shall and will light such and so many of the public lamps, with the best quality of Gas, as are in the streets or parts of streets of the said City, south of the aforesaid line whenever they shall be required to light the same, or any number of the same by the said parties of the first part, or their successors: the said lamps to be lighted during such times as the public lamps are now required to be lighted in the streets or parts of streets in which the pipes for conducting Gas shall be laid respectively as they may be severally lighted. At a yearly expense to the said parties of the first part not exceeding what would be the expense of lighting and supplying an equal number of the said lamps with oil of the quality generally used for that purpose, estimating the price of oil at the average price of the same in the City of New York during the preceding year. And further that the said parties of the second part shall likewise furnish at their own expense the necessary conductors of metal of sufficient capacity to the Lamp posts; that the lights of the said lamps shall be of a quality, brilliancy or intensity equal to the Gas in use for the public lamps in the City of London: the said parties of the first part however to be at the expense of lamps, lightings up, and at no other expense for fixtures, conductors, repairs, or on any other account whatsoever. And also that the said parties of the second part shall and will at all times give [illegible] notice to the said parties of the first part or their [illegible] of their intention to break up [illegible] for the purpose of laying or repairing the pipes to conduct the Gas and will replace the earth which they may remove in such [illegible] before sunset of the day on which any such opening shall be made. And that the said parties of the second part [illegible] and repair the same in such manner as shall be [illegible] by the said parties of the first part or their successors, or any [illegible] as they may direct and in case the said parties of the second part shall neglect or refuse to do so after being [illegible] by the said parties of the first part or their successors, then it shall be lawful for the said parties of the first part or their successors to do the same at the expense of the said parties of the second part, which expense they shall pay on demand. And that the said parties of the second part will not [illegible] any [illegible] to be made use of in the said streets or parts of streets [illegible] and that they will in all things in every [illegible] conform to such reasonable rules as [illegible] the said parties of the first part or their successors may from time to time [illegible] and establish relative to the opening of streets and [illegible] the pipes and conductors aforesaid. Provided always that nothing in this grant contained shall be construed to prevent any person or persons residing on, adjacent or near to any of the said streets or parts of streets in said City south of the aforesaid line, from erecting on or on his or their own premises, any building or apparatus to light with Gas his or their own house or manufactory 1818 Feb. — "The President's palace, and the Capitol, situated on opposite hills, are the chief public buildings, both of which were nearly destroyed by the buccaneering incursions of our countrymen [see Ag 24, 1814], who acted, perhaps, agreeably to their orders, but certainly in opposition to the feelings, judgment, and character of the British people. These buildings are now rapidly rising into increased splendour. The Capitol, in which are both houses of the legislature, and several public offices, stands on a bank of the Potowmac, seventy feet above the level of that river: it as yet consists of but two wings, intended to be connected by a centre, surmounted by a dome. The architect is Mr. Latrobe. . . . [see also The Journal of Latrobe (N. Y., 1905)] . . .

SECOND AND THIRD PAGE OF FRANCHISE SHOWN ON PL. 65.

"The President's house is at the opposite end of 'Pennsylvania Avenue,' commanding a most beautiful prospect. On each side of it stands a large brick building; one of which is the treasury, the other the war and navy offices. These are to be connected with the palace, which, when completed, would form an ornament even to St. Petersburgh itself.

"Upon a second visit to the Capitol, I explored nearly all its recesses. Marks of the late conflagration are still very apparent, while the walls bear evidence of public opinion in relation to that transaction, which seems to have had a singular fate of casting disgrace upon both the Americans and British. Some of the pencil drawings exhibit the military commander hanging upon a tree; others represent the President running off without his hat or wig; some, Admiral Cockburn robbing hen roosts: to which are added such inscriptions as, 'The capital of the Union lost by cowardice;' 'Curse cowards;' . . . 'James Madison is a rascal, a coward, and a fool;' . . .

"The post-office is a large brick building, situated at about equal distances from the President's house and the Capitol. Under the same roof is the patent-office, and also the national library, for the use of members of congress. . . . The library . . . of but 3000 volumes . . . includes various classes of literature, having been the property of Mr. Jefferson, for which he obtained from the United States 20,000 dollars. The former library, containing from 7 to 8000, was destroyed by our enlightened countrymen. . . ."—Sketches of Am. (London, 1818), 282–85.

2 The common council agrees to a recommendation of the finance committee regarding the sale of the Collect lots at auction on Feb. 20. The list of such lots belonging to the corporation consists of 28 lots and a small gore as follows: 9 lots on the westerly side of Collect St. between Anthony and Leonard Sts., 12 lots on easterly side of Collect St. between Anthony and Leonard Sts., 7 lots on easterly side of Collect St. between Leonard and Franklin Sts., and one gore on westerly side of Leonard between Collect and Orange Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 464–65. The lots brought $25,325.—Ibid., IX: 509.

" It is resolved to erect an engine-house on the lot in Whitehall St. opposite Stone St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 473–74.

12 The independence of Chili is proclaimed.—Winsor, VIII: 331.

18 Cadwallader D. Colden is appointed mayor of New York.—Com. Adv., F 21, 1818. He took the oaths of office on March 2 in the presence of the common council and a gathering of citizens.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 510. He was succeeded by Stephen Allen in 1821 (q.v., Mr 5).

27 The governor is authorised by the legislature "to obtain the consent of the government of Canada, to the removal of the remains of General Richard Montgomery, from Quebec, to the city of New-York, there to be deposited in Saint Paul's church, near the monument there erected to his memory; and that he shall cause such removal to be made, when such consent is obtained, at the expense of the state."—Laws of N. Y. (1818), chap. 10. See Jl 8.

Mar. 11 A detailed report in favour of extending the fire limits of the city is submitted by the committee on the fire department and agreed to by the common council. It is resolved that application be made to the legislature to extend the limits for the erection of wooden buildings in accordance with the committee's report.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 532–33.

16 The common council appropriates $600 annually to the city dispensary for vaccination of the poor, not only at their public dispensary but in the homes of the patients if they wish it. The physicians of the dispensary agree to this plan for all people living south of the following boundary: along the Great Kill near Fort Gansevoort, through Greenwich Lane to Art St., across the Bowery, and through Stuyvesant St. to the East River.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 539–40.

Mar. 16 The common council grants to the Free School Society "the use of the upper part of the Engine House at Greenwich for two years, for the purpose of extending the benefits of the Free School Establishment to the Inhabitants of Greenwich."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 541.

" A catechism "for the use of the children in the school of the Alms House" (see Ag 14, 1815) is submitted to the common council by Chaplain Stanford.

23 At the same time, Mr. Stanford requests "to be permitted to take from the Clerk's Office occasionally one of the volumes of the Minutes of the Council to enable him to complete an historical account of the public Buildings of the City which he is now engaged in."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 549. Subsequently, says his biographer, "this valuable production, written in Dr. Stanford's usual style of elegant penmanship, was presented to the Common Council of New-York, but is now, we fear, irrecoverably lost." A most diligent search, "assisted by the late mayor, Walter Bowne, Esq. and others," has been made "to find this valuable book, which, by means that remain involved in mystery, has been abstracted from the archives of the city."—Sommers, Memoir of John Stanford (1835), xi (preface), 212.

" The common council orders that Collect St. from Pearl to Canal St. be regulated and paved.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 555–56.

" The common council agrees to a recommendation that, as Sheriff and Willett Sts. have been enclosed and used as a nursery and garden for a number of years, ordinances be passed for regulating Willett St. from Grand St. to North St., and Sheriff, from Grand to North St., lest the occupants by possession acquire rights therein.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 556.

30 A resolution is passed directing the counsel of the board to put the common council in possession of the waters between the foot of Roosevelt St. and James Slip, and the waters between the foot of Oliver St. and Catharine Slip, both on the East River.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 573. See D 28.

Apr. — In April and May, Gen. Jackson's operations in Florida (the refuge of the Creeks and Seminoles) resulted in the capture of St. Marks, Pensacola, and Barancas. He also subdued the Seminole Indians in Alabama.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., IV: 430–56.

4 Congress passes "An Act to establish the flag of the United States." It provides that it shall be "thirteen horizontal stripes, alternate red and white: that the union be twenty stars, white in a blue field;" also that, "on the admission of every new state into the Union, one star be added to the union of the flag; and that such addition shall take effect on the fourth day of July then next succeeding such admission."—Pub. Statutes at Large of the U. S., etc., 15th cong., 1st sess., chap. 34; Laws of U. S. (1818), chap. 319. This alteration in the flag was prompted by an inquiry initiated in congress by Mr. Wendover of New York.—Com. Adv., D 12 and 16, 1816. See also the committee's report, reviewing previous congressional legislation on this subject.—Columbian, Ja 8, 1817. See also Je 14, 1777; Ja 13, 1794.

15 The legislature incorporates the "West Point Foundery Assn.," already formed "for the making and manufacturing of iron and brass." They are "engaged in the erection of extensive works and machinery for the making of cannon, cannon balls, and other ordnance; but their capital being found inadequate . . . ," they seek incorporation as a stock company. Among the incorporators are James Renwick and Henry Brevoort.—Laws of N. Y. (1818), chap. 154. Its charter was extended by ibid. (1845), chap. 96. In this foundry, at the foot of Beach St., New York, the first American-built locomotive was constructed.—See 1831.

18 The "Isabella" under Capt. John Ross and the "Alexander" under Lieut. W. E. Parry, sail from the Thames on an expedition to the Arctic. They returned on Nov. 14, but added little to the knowledge of Arctic geography.—Winsor, VIII: 84, 115, 117. See My 11, 1819.

20 The "Lyceum of Natural History, in the city of New York" is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1818), chap. 197.

21 In response to a petition from the common council (M. C. C., 1784–1831, IX: 542–43), the legislature authorises the city to extend the limits of the almshouse grounds at Bellevue so that the boundaries shall be 24th St. on the south, Second Ave. on the 1818 Apr. 21 west, and 28th St. on the north, the extension requiring about seven acres to be taken from individuals.—Laws of N. Y. (1818), chap. 244. See also L. M. R. K., III: 953. A map of the Bellevue grounds from 23d to 28th St., dated July, 1818, is filed in the bureau of topography, borough president's office, as map No. 204.

" The State Library at Albany is founded by act of the legislature.—Laws of N. Y. (1818), chap. 276; supplemented by acts of Ap 18, 1825, and Ap 16, 1827, etc., providing for its enlargement, ibid. (1825), chap. 203; (1827), chap. 293; (1844), chap. 255.

" "Preparations for the rotunda [see Mr 31, 1817] about erecting by Mr. Vanderlyn, for panorama views, have commenced. This building will be at the corner of Chamber and Cross streets, on Park square, and will, no doubt, be completed in a manner so as to be an ornament to the city. . . ."—National Advocate, Ap 21, 1818. See also N. Y. H. S. Quarterly Bulletin, Jan., 1922, 111; and L. M. R. K., III: 974–75. See O 6.

May — John M. Duncan, a Scotchman, writes among other things that the bricks for the New York houses "are made of a very fine clay, which affords a very close and smooth grain, and the buildings are always showily painted, either of a bright red with white lines upon the seams, or of a clean looking yellow. In many of the more recent ones, the lintels and steps are of marble."—Duncan, Travels through Part of the U. S. and Canada in 1818 and 1819 (Glasgow, 1823), I: 26–33. See also D 5.

7 The corner-stone of the building for the Bloomingdale Asylum for the Insane is laid on a plot of 26 acres purchased for the purpose near the seven-mile stone on the Bloomingdale Road, on Broadway, near 116th St., at the present site of Columbia University. —Account of N. Y. Hospital, 11. See also Com. Adv., D 2, 1818; and L. M. R. K., III: 953. It was completed in 1820, and opened for the reception of patients in June 1821.—Earle, The Psychopathic Branch of the N. Y. Hospital. See My 30, 1821.

12 Trumbull's painting of The Declaration of Independence is almost finished. "This picture covers a canvass measuring eighteen by twelve feet, and contains no less than forty-seven portraits, thirty-seven of them taken from the life by Col. Trumbull, and the remaining ten from likenesses drawn by other artists, the originals having deceased before Col. Trumbull had an opportunity to obtain them. . . .

"In order to multiply the copies of this national picture, Col. Trumbull proposes to procure it to be engraved by one of the most eminent artists in Europe, provided a subscription for the prints shall be filled, which will justify him in hazarding the expense. . . . With the view of ascertaining the state of public feeling, and the extent of public liberality, towards this specimen of native genius and talents, he has issued proposals for publishing the prints. The subscription, which is honoured with the names of the four living Presidents of the U. States, was presented to Congress the last winter, and subscribed by a large number of the members of both Houses, as well as by the Heads of the Departments. Col. Trumbull now proposes to circulate it in this city, for the purpose of affording an opportunity to the inhabitants of the place of his residence to patronize the work under consideration. After which, it will be offered to the inhabitants of the other large towns, and, as far as is practicable, throughout the country."—Com. Adv., My 12, 1818; N. Y. H. S. Quarterly Bulletin, (Oct., 1921), 86–87. See also Robert Edge Pine's "The Congress Voting Independence," reproduced as the tail-piece of Vol. IV of the present work, also in Dunlap's Hist. of Arts of Design (Goodspeed ed.), I: 376.

18 The common council resolves "that [the houses in] Broome Street be numbered under the direction of the Street Committee." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 650. See Je 12, 1820.

19 Shortly before this date, the pedestal which formerly bore the statue of George III in Bowling Green must have been removed, for "B" now writes to one of the papers: "I would enquire through your paper why the monument in the Bowling-green, which has remained standing so many years, should at this hour be removed and the materials thrown into the street? What was there odious in this simple memorial of a people's valour and devotion? Why was it left untouched by hands that destroyed the statue of a king, under circumstances that swell the breast of an American with the proudest emotions? . . . Whatever be the motive, as a private individual, I cannot but lament to see this vestige, however obscure, thus removed forever from our view. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 19, 1818; Telegram, Je 16, 1883, cited in Hazelton's Declaration of Independence (1906), 563. See also Jl 9, 1776.

May 25 The "City Intendant" is ordered by the common council to enforce the law regarding swine running at large without rings in their noses.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 653–54.

" The following complaint appears: "Is the City Intendant afraid to do his duty? If he will stand at the Stone Bridge any afternoon from 6 to 8 o'clock, he cannot fail to see the bloods of all descriptions trotting and racing their horses without regard to the laws, careless whom they may mutilate or destroy. . . . On Saturday evening [May 23], near Stone Bridge Broadway . . . a young man was run down by one of the bloods returning from his afternoon ride. . . ."—Columbian, My 25, 1818.

29 At a meeting of merchants and others connected with the commerce of the port of New York, it is determined to erect a church for seamen to be called "The Mariner's Church." Services were first held in a school-room.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 9, 1819. The corner-stone of the church was laid on Oct. 13, 1819 (q. v.).

June — Pierre de Landais dies at the age of 87 and is buried in the churchyard of St. Patrick's Cathedral in Mott St. Landais was with Paul Jones, in command of the "Alliance" in the engagement with the British "Serapis." He was court-martialed for his conduct and his sword broken.

Gulian C. Verplanck, in one of his reminiscences of New York, tells the story of the last years of Landais. "After his disgrace he constantly resided in the city of New York except that he always made a biennial visit to the seat of government whether at Philadelphia or at Washington to present a memorial respecting the injustice done him and to claim restitution to his rank and the arrears of his pay." He had a small annuity which just kept him from abject poverty and he "kept up to the last the habits and exterior of a gentleman. His linen though not very fine, nor probably very whole was always clean; his coat threadbare, but scrupulously brushed; and for occasions of ceremonious visiting, he had a pair of paste knee buckles and faded yellow silk stockings with red clocks. He wore the American cockade to the last and on the Fourth of July, the day of St Louis and the anniversary of the day on which the British troops evacuated the city of New York he periodically mounted his old continental naval uniform, although its big brass buttons had lost their splendour and the skirts & the coat, which wrapped his shrunken person like a cloak, touched his heels in walking, while the sleeves by some contradictory process had receded several inches from the wrists." He retained a certain amount of pride, dignity, and sense of propriety to the end of his life, and an incident is related of his meeting Jones, his bitterest enemy, one day soon after he came to New York. "Although," as Verplanck tells it, "he had determined to insult and punish [Jones] wherever he fell in with him he could not bring himself to offer him any insult becoming a gentleman, but deliberately spitting on the pavement, desired his adversary to consider that pavement as his own face, and to proceed accordingly."—The Talisman For MDCCCXXIX (N. Y., 1828), 331–33.

8 The common council directs that the landing-place of the Hoboken Ferry at Murray St. be removed to the foot of Barclay St. "as soon as the ground in that vicinity shall have been filled in and properly regulated."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 685–87. See also L. M. R. K., III: 942–43.

29 The special committee reporting to the common council regarding a market in the Tenth Ward says: "A large proportion of the inhabitants of this section of the City are mechanics and labouring men, who reside from half a mile to one mile and a half from any of the markets now established: the inconvenience experienced by these citizens, whose time is of the utmost importance to them, may be easily conceived, particularly as the privilege heretofore permitted of selling meat at dwelling-houses in that part of the city has been peremptorily refused by the Board." The board approves the resolution that a market-house 40 x 20 ft. be built about midway on Grand St. between Ludlow and Essex Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 718–19. The market was finished in September.—De Voe, Market Book, 479. On Dec. 14 (q. v.), it was named Essex Market.

" The common council approves reports of the canal committee and the street commissioner for regulating Collect and Canal St. so that the water through Canal St. to the river may be carried off through an underground sewer instead of through a gutter in the middle of the street. "By this regulation Canal Street will be made one of the handsomest streets in the City, and it is our decided opinion that a lot of ground on it would be worth nearly 1818 June 29 double as much as if the water was carried above the surface thro' a deep kennel in the centre of the street: from which consideration we do think that the proprietors of the lots of ground can well afford to pay a very large proportion if not all the expence, which would be about Two hundred and fifty dollars a lot." Sewers are to be made in portions of Chapel and Thompson Sts., each of which will join the Canal St. sewer.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 720–24. See Jl 28, 1817, and My 10, 1819.

July — In this month the operations of the Franklin Bank commenced. —See 1818, supra.

8 In accordance with the law of Feb. 27 (q.v.), the remains of Gen. Richard Montgomery are deposited with civil and military honours beneath the monument erected to his memory by congress in St. Paul's Church.—Com. Adv., Jl 9, 1818; M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 729. The inscription, placed there in 1787 (q.v.), is as follows: "This Monument is erected by the order of Congress 25th Janry 1776, to transmit to Posterity a grateful remembrance of the patriotism conduct enterprize & perseverance of Major General Richard Montgomery who after a series of successes amidst the most discouraging Difficulties Fell in the attack on Quebec. 31st Decbr 1775. Aged 37 Years. INVENIT ET SCULPSIT. PARISIIS. J. J. CAFFIERI. SCULPTOR. REGIUS. ANNO DOMINI cbbcclxxvii." Above this is now added another tablet, reading:

"The State of New York Caused the Remains of Majr Genl Richard Montgomery to be conveyed from Quebec and Deposited beneath this Monument the 8th day of July 1818." See also 21st Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1916), 641–56; and Hunt, Life of Edward Livingston, 245–46. A monograph has been prepared by Mr. Henry W. Kent, of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, to be published in connection with the restoration of the monument.

13 The special committee's report to the common council regarding the Institution for the Relief of the Deaf and Dumb contains, among other matters, the following data: the institution, which was incorporated April 15, 1817 (q.v.), has been in operation for five weeks. The eleven pupils are taught reading, writing and conversing by signs. A more or less successful attempt has been made to teach them to articulate. Only two of the pupils are pay pupils, and the institution is dependent for its existence upon donations. There are over 60 deaf and dumb mutes in the city, and under present conditions the school cannot accommodate more than its present number. The board agrees to the following recommendations regarding aid: that the institution have the free use of a room on the third floor of the old almshouse during the pleasure of the board, to be used simply for the purposes of instruction; that $40 a year be paid for each of ten pupils in needy circumstances for instruction in such institution, and that $500 be appropriated to the organization to be used in carrying on its work.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 738–39; Com. Adv., Jl 15, 1818.

The school for the deaf and dumb soon moved to hired rooms at 41 Warren St. De Witt Clinton was the first president.—A Hist. of the N. Y. Inst. for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb (1893).

18 "A company of adventurers are now operating with the diving bell on the wreck of the British frigate Hussar, which sunk in Hurlgate during the revolutionary war. Two or three years ago a part of the same company labored with considerable success on the wreck and raised property which rewarded them pretty well. The Hussar is known to have had a quantity of specie on board when she sank, which is the grand object of the present labors. The position of the wreck has hitherto prevented the bell from dropping within the hulk; but by great exertion large masses of the wreck are sawed out, and, elated with hope, the persevering adventurers are approaching the golden prize. The bell descends about 60 feet."—Com. Adv., Jl 18, 1818. See N 23, 1780, and Jl 13, 1811.

27 Mayor Colden presents to the common council a report regarding the "City Prison and Bridewell" which contains several suggestions for prison reform. The board appoints committees to act upon the various matters of the report.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 741–43, 760. See S 7 and 28.

Aug. 8 The statement is made that "there is now erecting and finishing, south of Spring-street, no less than 1969 buildings, upwards of 1000 of which are intended as dwelling houses."—Com. Adv., Ag 8, 1818.

10 The corner-stone of the "Seventh Presbyterian Church in the city of New-York" is laid in Sheriff St.—Com. Adv., Ag 12, 1818. See also L. M. R. K., III: 932.

Aug. 22 A boat built to ply between New York and Liverpool as a sailing-packet is launched from the ship-yards of Messrs. Crocker and Fickett at Corlear's Hook. She was later purchased by some gentlemen of Savannah, Georgia, and named the "Savannah." After being supplied with steam machinery and paddle-wheels, she made her trial trip from New York to Savannah in the spring of 1819 (q.v., Mr 27). On May 22, 1819 (q.v.), she sailed from the latter port for Liverpool, and was the first steamship to cross the Atlantic. —Watkins, "The Log of the Savannah," in U. S. National Museum Report (1889–90), 617–22; Preble, Hist. of Steam Navigation, 109–16.

24 The street commissioner is directed to settle with W. Birdsall, the contractor for erecting the iron railing around part of the Park, at 8½ cents per pound.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), IX: 731–32, 775–76. See also descrip. of Pl. 54-b, I: 416.

31 Joseph Lancaster, author of the Lancastrian system of education, delivers a lecture on its advantages, at Free School No. 1 in Chatham St.—Com. Adv., Ag 31, 1818.

Sept. 7 The almshouse committee reports to the common council that "the humane views of the Corporation in relation to the insane have been carried into effect." The male patients have been transferred from the penitentiary to the north wing of the almshouse where they are in charge of a keeper who has been appointed on trial. He has 14 maniacs under his care and as there are accommodations for 30, it is planned to send here insane paupers from the lunatic asylum as soon as the keeper has become more accustomed to his task. Better arrangements are to be made for insane females. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 7.

21 The common council grants to Gov. D. D. Tompkins and Noah Brown the privilege of erecting a ferry-house at Whitehall, not more than 11 ft. square and 15 ft. high.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 33. See also L. M. R. K., III: 944.

28 The common council passes a resolution directing the keeper of the bridewell not to receive any person into custody without a commitment for a public crime according to law. The practice of holding a slave for safe-keeping (see Jl 27) is to be abolished, and slaves now in custody without a commitment are to be released if not called for by their masters after such have been sufficiently notified regarding this regulation.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 39–40.

Oct. 5 In accordance with a report of a special committee, the common council agrees to modify its plan for the regulation of the village of Greenwich (see Mr 3, 1817). The part to be regulated "lies principally between Herring Street . . . and the high ground at and near Broadway."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 49–52. 6 "Col. Trumbull's Painting of the Declaration of Independence, for the Capitol of the United States, is completed, and is now exhibiting at New-York, prior to its being taken to Washington. The portraits of the President, and other leading members of the Congress of '76, are said, by those acquainted with the originals, to be accurately given."—N. J. Jour. (Chatham), O 6, 1818. It is exhibited in the room of the Academy of the Fine Arts, in the New York Institution.—Ibid., O 27, citing the Com. Adv.

" One of the newspapers says regarding the "Rotunda" (see Ap 21): "This neat and ornamental building, near the Institution, is now opened with a Panorama View of the City of Paris, by Barker, and which, for fidelity of design, and elegance of execution, cannot be surpassed. Any person who has been in Paris can designate each spot with perfect ease. We were pleased to see it crowded, and think that Mr. Vanderlyn merits the encouragement which he will no doubt receive."—Com. Adv., O 6, 1818. For further early accounts of the Rotunda, see Dunlap, Hist. of the Arts of Design (Goodspeed ed.), II: 165–68; Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 374; and description, with view, in *N. Y. 16 The grand jury having indicted C. N. Baldwin, editor of the Republican Chronicle, for libel in making a published charge of fraudulent lottery management, he forcefully replies:

"The Grand Jury . . . have indicted nobody for a fraud, a great many for insuring, and us for libelling. And now, ye who have been guilty of fraud in this or any former lottery drawn in this state, tremble!—the truth shall no longer hang enveloped in the mists and clouds cast upon it, by interested, biassed and timid men, for by the powers of an independent and a fearless 1818 Oct. 16 mind, we will make the truth shine out—even if we do 'hurt the sale of tickets in the Medical Science Lottery'! ! A slander has long gone abroad, that our state is so corrupt, that there are no honest men in it. There is one, at least, who, come what will, is not to be moved by the persuasions of party friends, or the threats of powerful adversaries, from his fixed purpose to speak and act uprightly on this great and most interesting occasion.—We are glad to be put upon our defence, for having charged that there was swindling in the management of our Medical Science Lottery. —Whoever chooses to identify himself with the swindlers, by protecting them, let him do so—but if we do not spare him, let him not blame, and he shall respect us."—N. Y. Rep. Chron., S 19, 23, 24, and O 16, 1818, cited in Report of the trial of Charles N. Baldwin, for a Libel (1818), xxi–xxii. For Baldwin's trial see N 10.

19 Commodore Perry and Capt. Heath meet in a duel with pistols on the Jersey shore. It was an act of atonement on Perry's part for having "raised his hand to an officer holding a commission under the government." In the duel he received the fire of Heath, but reserved his own, and this "gallant and magnanimous atonement" satisfied his antagonist.—N. J. Jour., O 27, 1818.

20 A treaty is signed by representatives of Great Britain and the United States by which the boundary line between the latter and Canada is settled; the territory west of the Rocky Mountains is to remain for 10 years in the joint occupancy of both parties, the commercial convention of 1815 (q. v., Jl 3) is extended for 10 years, and the rights of American fishermen are restored to the north and east coasts of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the coast of Labrador, and the Magdalen Ids., but they are not to fish within three miles of the coasts of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, or the southern and western coasts of the Gulf of St. Lawrence.—McMaster, *Hist. of the People of the U. Dec. 5 John Duncan (see May) writes:

"The management of the fire engines in New York is apparently very efficient. . . . The firemen are all volunteers, and principally young men in the middle rank of life; their only reward is exemption from military and jury duty, . . . Every man from 18 to 45 must, unless specially exempted, be enrolled as a militiaman, and muster even during peace eight days a year for military training. Jury duty is still more oppressive, . . .

"The signal of fire is the ringing of the church bells and every fireman must, under a heavy penalty, immediately repair to his post. In the event of a false alarm, the roll is called over at the engine house ten minutes after the last bell has ceased to ring, and a fine is incurred for absence. That each at a fire may readily discover his own engine, a lantern is carried on the top of a pole, with the number of the engine conspicuously painted in transparent figures. The firemen wear a frock-coat and trousers of wollen cloth, covered with thick canvass, and a round cap of very thick leather with a broad rim, somewhat resembling the boarding caps of a man-of-war; within is a thick soft padding to deaden the effect of a blow, and on the outside are two high ridges, crossing each other, to give the cap additional strength. A great deal of rivalry prevails among the various companies, and the young men appear daring even to temerity. Each engine has its own foreman, deputy, and clerk; the companies are independent of each other, but subject to the direction of a chief Engineer, appointed by the city corporation. . . ."—Duncan, Travels through Part of the United States and Canada in 1818 and 1819 (Glasgow, 1823), II: 240–41.

28 The corporation resolves to take the bulkhead and piers between Roosevelt St. and James Slip and appropriate them to public uses as a slip or basin.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 173–74. On April 10, 1819, bonds to the sum of $15,943 were issued to pay for property for this basin.—Jour. B, 270, comptroller's office.

— In this year, lithography was introduced into America.—Analectic Mag. (Jl, 1819), 67–73. See also 1825, and descrip. of A. Pl. 12-a, III: 872.

— During 1819–20, Charles H. Wilson, an Englishman, visited America and thus commented on New York: ". . . The Theatre is, both in point of beauty and magnitude, far inferior to several of our provincial Theatres.—The Churches are all modern, and in their structures, or architectural designs, simply elegant; but the materials, like two-thirds of buildings of every description in America, are wooden.

". . . In a Court of Justice in England it [the wearing of wigs] adds a degree of solemnity; but in America neither wigs, integrity, nor decorum are requisite; it is certainly true, the Judge is indeed exalted upon a higher seat, by which alone you can distinguish him from the poor captive, and the cause, civil or peccant, is invariably decided by the influence of—dollars. . . . The segar is in continual requisition, the eternal companion of judge, councellor, jury, and spectators; you are consequently stupified with smoke, and spit upon as an especial mark of freedom. . . .

"In my perambulations I found a new object of attraction; red flags at several doors, and 'vendue' inscribed thereon—a Dutch term for auction.

"The Police of New York is a strange mixture of inconsistences. —The streets are miserably dirty, as to them is consigned the filth of most houses, and suffered to remain in all seasons, July and August excepted; and you are continually annoyed by innumerable hungry pigs of all sizes and complexions, great and small beasts prowling in grunting ferocity, and in themselves so great a nuisance, that would arouse the indignation of any but Americans. . . . The markets of New York are well supplied with provisions of all kinds, which are in price far less than in the metropolis of England; fish, poultry, and pork, are excellent, but beef, mutton, veal, &c. are far inferior to the same productions in England; . . . and, with the exception of malt liquor, the votaries at the shrine of Bacchus may enjoy, for the fourth part of the sum, the glorious and exhilarating blessings of the Jolly God. . . .

". . . One of these annual memento's [the Fourth of July oration] I attended, in the church of the Rev. Mr. Macleod, and found the theme of this pulpiteer and burden of democratic song, was an unnecessary and malignant invective, in time of peace, 'against the proud English,' as he termed them and concluded an half hour's altiloquent harangue, pitifully delivered, in a kind of dialect which dishonoured both head, heart, and country. . . .

"The parade next demanded a visit; the commanding officer I found a tailor (General Mapes). . . .

"The singularity of a tailor commanding five thousand men, I considered strange, because the old adage with us is, that for the manufacture of one man, nine snippies are requisite. . . . Curiosity led me therefore to enquire if such was usual for officers to be mechanics, or other occupations, and found it was so;—Generals, Corporals, Colonels, Fifers, Majors, Drummers, Captains, Privates, Lieutenants, Serjeants, Ensigns, Pioneers and all, when divested of

1819 the pride and pomp of glorious war, retire inglorious to ignoble
— avocations, with their 'blushing honors thick upon them,' and recount their chivalrous deeds, 'hair-breadth 'scapes,' and all the gallantry of the deadly breach, in the saw-pit or the cobbler's stall. . . .

". . . Females are not taught common industry; it would degrade those gentry, of any rank, to assist in the hay and corn field—their utility and knowledge extends no farther than the manufacture of a pumpkin pye, or the outlines of a silly romance, or ridiculous novel. The continual use of ardent spirits from the cradle, on the part of the males, ruins the constitution, for at thirty, nature becomes torpid. All labour is done by the children of Africa, or the dusky offspring of St. Domingo. . . ."—Wilson, The Wanderer in Am., etc. (Thirsk, 1822), 14–32.

— In this year was published by Moses Thomas, Phila., a quarto volume entitled Picturesque Views of American Scenery, painted by J. Shaw, and engraved by J. Hill. One of the views, "Hell Gate," is reproduced and described as Pl. 87-a, Vol. III. In the description (III: 567), J. H. Hill is referred to as John Hill's nephew; it should read grandson. The book was republished by M. Carey & Son, Phila., in 1820. For the titles of the plates in the reprint, see ibid., III: 567.

— The octagonal pavilion around the flagstaff was still in existence at this date, for it is shown on the Wall view of New York from Governor's Island (Pl. 89, Vol. III). See also descrip. of Pl. 59, I: 435. The pavilion was removed sometime before Aug. 16, 1824 (q. v.).

11 At a "numerous meeting of members of various religious denominations" at the City Hotel, a memorial is adopted urging congress to "devise such a system, and provide for such a plan, as may be best calculated effectually to promote the security, the preservation, and the improvement of the Indians."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 16, 1819.

18 Aside from the extension and improvement of the Battery, it is proposed to take a suitable portion of ground on the East River near Corlaer's Hook and one on the North River near Fort Gansevoort for public walks or promenades. The common council in an endeavour to further the projects passes the following resolutions:

1. That the board reserve all the land under water west of Tenth Ave. from 14th to 19th St., a front of about 1,200 feet for public purposes.

2. That the counsel take the necessary legal measures to vest in the corporation the land and the land under water at Corlaer's Hook south of Grand St. and east of Corlaer's St. to the permanent lines for the like purpose.

3. That application be made to the legislature to obtain a grant of their title to the lands of the Battery and the lands adjoining the same under water to an extent not exceeding 400 ft. for the like purpose.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 201–6. See also ibid., X: 129, 152–54, 343–44, 419.

22 A representation of the "Attack of the Allied Forces on Paris, March 30th, 1814," is advertised for exhibition at the New York Rotunda together with some of Vanderlyn's paintings. An engraving of the Rotunda accompanies the advertisement.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 22, 1819.

25 A resolution is passed to remove the old boat-house on the south side of the Battery.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 176, 214–15.

Feb. At a meeting of the common council on Jan. 25, a memorial
1 was received from John Jacob Astor and others asking the board to sanction an application to the legislature for the appointment of commissioners to adjust the level of those streets and avenues which have not been regulated and to make such models or plans that real estate owners may regulate their lands accordingly. The board, having then voted that it was inexpedient to comply with the request, now takes further action to counteract the effects upon the legislature which the memorial of Astor may produce, feeling strongly that further regulation of streets, etc., should conform to the present plans, and that new commissioners might cause expensive changes in work that has already been done. It is therefore voted that a respectful remonstrance be presented to the legislature against the memorial and petition of Astor and the others.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 223–24. See F 8. Feb. 1

The counsel presents to the common council a draft of a memorial and remonstrance to the legislature upon the subject of regulating streets (see F 1). The board refers it to the committee on applications to the legislature to insert in said memorial a model made in wood showing the heights, levels and courses of the streets as planned to be improved. The committee is authorised to then cause the memorial to be authenticated and forwarded to the legislature.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 233. 8

The common council passes three resolutions: (1) to apply for a law to lay a tax for improving the Battery and paying for Military Square; (2) to reduce, at the option of the corporation, the Military Square; (3) to appoint commissioners, if necessary, to value the lands of Military Square.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 235. "

Legrand Jarvis is appointed a city surveyor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 238–39. "

A presentment of the grand jury to the common council manifests approbation of the corporation's action in reducing the number of dram-shops by at least 500 during the year. A corresponding decrease in the number of crimes is very noticeable, and greater zeal is urged in still farther reducing the number.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 243-44. 15

The legislature repeals the condition made in the grant of the Hosack Botanic Garden to Columbia College (see Ap 13, 1814) that the college be removed to the land, and also grants $10,000 to the trustees.—Laws of N. Y. (1819), chap. 19. See also Com. Adv., F 17 and Ag 28; Columbian, Mr 25, 1819. 19

The common council votes to present the freedom of the city in a gold box to Maj.-Gen. Andrew Jackson, and to request him to sit for a full-length portrait.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 254–55, 256–57. See F 23. "

Spain cedes Florida to the U. An elaborate ball is held at the City Hotel in honour of Gen. Jackson. "The diffusion of light upon an assemblage the most brilliant we ever beheld; the taste with which the room was decorated with nearly two hundred flags, including those of almost all the nations of the world, combined with the military glitter of about two hundred gentlemen in full uniform, interspersed in the dance with the female beauty and elegance of the city, produced an effect of the most pleasing nature."—Com. Adv., F 23, 1819; Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City, 374–75. "

At a special meeting of the common council, the freedom of the city is conferred on Maj.-Gen. Andrew Jackson (see F 19).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 263–65. The form of oath subscribed by him is as follows: "I Andrew Jackson do swear—That I as a freeman of the City of New York, will maintain the lawful franchises and customs thereof: That I will keep the said City from harm as much as in me lieth, and that I will in all things do my duty as a good and faithful freeman of the said City ought to do."—From facsimile in *M. 26 The "Bank of Savings, in the City of New-York" is chartered by the legislature.—Laws of N. Y. (1819), chap. 62. This was the first savings bank in the city. It had been projected in 1816 (q. v., N 29). It opened for business on July 3, 1819 (q. v.).

" The state grants $5,000 to the Free School Society.—Laws of N. Y. (1819), chap. 65.

27 An editorial states: "By an advertisement in this day's paper it will be seen that the new and elegant ship Savannah [see Ag 22, 1818] is to leave our harbour to-morrow. Who would have had the courage 20 years ago to hazard a prediction that a ship of 350 tons burthen would be built in the port of New York to navigate the Atlantic propelled by steam? Such, however, is the fact. With admiring hundreds have we repeatedly viewed this prodigy, and can also bear witness to the wonderful celerity with which she moved through the water. On Monday last [Mr 22] a trial was made of her speed, and although there was at no time more than an inch of steam upon her, and for the greater part only half an inch, with a strong wind and tide ahead, she went within a mile of the anchoring ground at Staten Island and returned to Fly Market wharf in 1 hour and 50 minutes. When it is considered that she is calculated to bear 20 inches of steam and that her machinery is entirely new, it may easily be imagined that she will, with ease, pass any of the steamboats upon our waters."—Merc. Adv., Mr 27, 1819. The ship sailed on the appointed day and arrived at Savannah, Ga., early on April 6.—Smith, "The First Steamship to cross the Ocean," in *D. A. R. Apr. The common council passes a resolution granting the request
5 of persons living near the Bowling Green that they be allowed to plant trees and shrubbery in the Green, keep it in order, and occupy it as a place of recreation. The improvements are to be done under the control of the committee on public lands and places, and the privilege is to continue during the pleasure of the board.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 325. A newspaper says in regard to the intended improvements: "It is understood that a figure fountain is to be made in the centre, the water [of] which will rise to a considerable eminence and fall on a bed of rocks, to be made as nearly natural as possible."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 10, 1819. Such a fountain was built in 1843 (Je 30, q. v.).

7 The legislature directs the canal commissioners to "open communications by canals and locks, between the Seneca River and Lake Erie; between such point on the Mohawk river, where the middle section of the great western canal shall terminate and the Hudson river; between Fort Edward and the navigable waters of the Hudson river, and between the great western canal and the salt works in the village of Salina."—Laws of N. Y. (1819), chap. 105.

12 The legislature directs the appointment of a state "superintendent of common schools," provides for an annual appropriation for the schools throughout the state, and makes regulations for the inspection of schools, examination of teachers, etc.—Laws of N. Y. (1819), chap. 161.

13 The legislature passes an act authorising the secretary of state, under the direction of the governor, to cause the historical records of the state to be bound and arranged. The secretary, John Van Ness Yates, made his report to the legislature on Jan. 4, 1820, in which he presented a synopsis of the several divisions and the character of the public records in his custody. To this report was appended a general catalogue: I, of the Dutch colonial records; II, of the English colonial records: and III, of the state records. From this statement it appears that there were at that time, in the secretary's office, 661 books, 324 maps, and 900 bundles of papers.—From general introduction, N. Y. Col. Docs., I: ix–x.

25 Excepting that of 1794 (q. v., Ja 24), the first Unitarian preaching in New York City occurred on this day, when the Rev. Dr. Chan- Apr.
ning of Boston, preached a sermon in a private house. On May 16, 25
he preached in the lecture-room of the College of Physicians and Surgeons in Barclay St.—Greenleaf, 373. See My 24.

Washington Lodge No. 1, the first lodge of the Independent 26
Order of Odd Fellows in the United States, is organized at Baltimore by five obscure men of the humbler class. In fifty years, it enrolled a membership, throughout the country, of about 600,000 men.—Ridgely, Fiftieth Anniversary of Am. Odd-Fellowship (Baltimore, 1869), 20, 34.

Describing Philadelphia at this time, Frances W. Darusmont, May says in part: "I never walked through the streets of any city with — so much satisfaction as those of Philadelphia. The neatness and cleanliness of all animate and inanimate things, houses, pavements, and citizens, is not to be surpassed. It has not, indeed, the commanding position of New York, which gives to that city an air of beauty and grandeur very imposing to a stranger, but it has more the appearance of a finished and long-established metropolis. . . . The side pavements are regularly washed every morning by the domestics of each house, . . . which adds much to the fair appearance, and, I doubt not, to the good health of the city. The brick walls, as well as frame-work of the houses, are painted yearly. The doors are usually white, and kept delicately clean, which, together with the broad slabs of white marble spread before them, and the trees, now gay with their first leaves, which, with some intervals, line the pavements, give an air of cheerfulness and elegance to the principal streets quite unknown to the black and crowded cities of Europe. . . .

"The State-house [Independence Hall], state-house no longer in anything but name, is . . ., doubtless, a sacred shrine in the eyes of Americans. . . . I was a little offended to find stuffed birds, and beasts, and mammoth skeletons filling the place of senators and sages. It had been in better taste, perhaps, to turn the upper rooms of this empty sanctuary into a library, instead of a museum of natural curiosities, or a mausoleum of dead monsters. [The lower rooms are more appropriately occupied by the courts of law.—Footnote.]"

With reference to society in Philadelphia, this writer makes her observations applicable to the nation at large. ". . . The universal spread of useful and practical knowledge, the exercise of great political rights, the ease, and, comparatively, the equality of condition, give to this people a character peculiar to themselves. . . . The Americans . . . have a surprising stack of information, but this runs little into the precincts of imagination; facts form the ground-work of their discourse. They are accustomed to rest their opinions on the results of experience, rather than on ingenious theories and abstract reasonings; . . . The world, however, is the book which they consider most attentively, and make a general practice of turning over the page of every man's mind that comes across them; they do this very quietly, and very civilly, and with the understanding that you are at perfect liberty to do the same by theirs. . . ."—Views of Society and Manners in Am., by an Englishwoman (London, 1821), 83–86, 118–19.

The General Theological Seminary (see 1817 and 1818) is 1 opened, with six students. The first lectures were held in St. Paul's chapel, afterward in the vestry-room of the chapel, and then in a building on the north-west corner of Broadway and Cedar St., during the winter of 1819–20.—Perry, Hist. of the Am. Episcopal Church, II: 512. In 1820 (q. v.), it was removed to New Haven. See, further, Jl 13, 1822.

The "Contractors for the Canal [sewer] in Canal Street" (see 10
Je 29, 1818) petition the common council for payment, stating that one third of said contract has been finished. The petition is referred to the canal committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 380; descrip. of Pl. 83-b, III: 562. The committee reported, on May 24, that, according to the agreement, the contractors were to receive 25% of their money as soon as one-third of the work was performed, and that such 25% was therefore now due. Collections on assessments being slow, the committee recommended that the money be borrowed from one of the banks, which was approved by the board.—Ibid., X: 419. See Je 28.

Requirements for a degree in medicine are shown in a circular 15 of the College of Physicians and Surgeons. Lectures begin, annually, on the first Monday in November and end on the last day of February, with commencement on the first Tuesday of April. The courses given and the fees required for each are:

1819 "Theory and Practice of Physic, and Obstetrics and the
May Diseases of Women and Children, by David Hosack, M.D. $15 00
15 "Chemistry and Materia Medica, by William James Macneven, M.D. 20 00
"Anatomy, Physiology. and Surgery, by Wright Post, M.D. 20 00
"Natural History, including Botany, Zoology. and Geology, by Samuel L. Mitchill, M.D. 15 00
"Principles and Practice of Surgery, by Valentine Mott, M.D. 15 00
"Clinical Practice of Medicine, by William Hamersly, M.D. 15 00
"Institutes of Medicine and Forensic Medicine, by John W. Francis, M.D. 10 00
"Mineralogy, by Benjamin De Witt, M. D. 15 00"

Attendance is required at "one complete course of all the lectures," and on or before March 20, of the year of graduation, "the candidate shall deliver to the Dean a Dissertation on some subject connected with Medicine or Surgery, written in the Latin, English, French, or Spanish languages." The "fee for matriculation" is $5, and the graduation fees "do not exceed thirty dollars."

The college "enjoys the peculiar advantage," the circular states, "of being able to obtain subjects from the State Prison, under the sanction of an act of the Legislature."—College of Physicians and Surgeons Circular, among the John W. Francis papers, in N. Y. P. L.

21 A "Velocipede" is first used in New York, and is thus noticed by one of the city editors: "One of these new-invented animals we hear made its appearance in our streets this forenoon, with the constructor himself, who, it is said, has made some improvements on the original invention and imported himself by the last arrival from London, in order to supply the market. Horses, it is said, in England, have fallen in price 40 per cent, in consequence of the sudden appearance of these velocipedes. Great speculations, as usual in new articles, are going on."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 21, 1819. A drawing showing "The Velocipede, or Swift Walker," and an article describing its mechanism, appeared in ibid., My 19, 1819. On May 28, velocipedes were being shown at Washington Hall, and people instructed in their use. Orders for them were to be taken at the same place or by R. P. Lawrence, Manufacturer.—Ibid., My 28, 1819. See also ibid., Je 18, 1819. See Ag 9.

It is not generally known that velocipedes were in use as early as the sixteenth century. There is a beautifully made "Unicycle," from the style of its ornament clearly belonging to this period, in the Volpe collection preserved in the Palazzo Davanzanti in Florence.

22 The "Savannah" (see Mr 27) sails from Savannah, Ga., under the command of Capt. Moses Rogers. She arrived at Liverpool on June 20 after a voyage of 29 days and 11 hours, during which she used her engine only 80 hours. She was the first steamship to cross the Atlantic.—Watkins, "The Log of the Savannah," in U. S. National Museum Report (1889–90), 631–34; Smith, "The First Steamship to cross the Ocean," in D. A. R. Mag. (1919), LIII: 293–95; Nat'l Encyclopoedia of Am. Biog., IV: 88. For her subsequent history, see Watkins, op. cit., 634–37; Smith, op. cit., 297–98: and Bullock, "First Steamships to cross the Atlantic," in Conn. Mag. (1907), II: 49 et seq. See also descrip. of A. Pl. 23, III: 879.

24 Excepting that which made its brief appearance here in 1794 (q. v., Ja 24), the first Unitarian society in New York was organized at this time. It was incorporated on Nov. 15 under the name of the "First Congregational Church of New York."—Greenleaf, 373. The corner-stone of its first church was laid on April 29, 1820 (q. v.).

" The common council grants to the managers of the state lottery (M. C. C., 1784–1831, X: 399–400) the use of a room in the lower basement of the city hall in which to draw their lottery.—Ibid., X: 416.

31 The common council resolves that the street commissioner under the direction of a special committee enter into contracts for the construction of a reef of common dock stone around the Battery, the height of which shall reach low-water mark, the top face of which shall be 15 ft. across, and its base 45 ft. through. He is also to contract for driving the necessary piles to designate the line of the reef.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 425–27. See also ibid., X: 129, 152–54, 343–44, 419. See, further, Ja 20, 1820.

Je 9 Wm. Dalton, an English traveller, lands at New York. He writes: "In walking through the streets in search of lodgings, the most striking feature I noticed was the dress of the inhabitants. This was uniformly good. Their complexion appears to be generally sallow. I observed few females in the streets. . . . June 9

"House rents are very high. That in which we lodged during our stay here, though not particularly well situated, and containing only two rooms on each floor, is rented at 400 dollars or about 90l a year. A friend of mine in Wall Street, informed me that he paid for his house, which is about as large again as the one abovementioned, a yearly rent of 2,500 dollars or about 562l. 10s sterling. . . . The houses are built of red brick, in the most elegant style, and the shops are not exceeded in splendour by any in London. On the eastern side of the Broadway the streets are not regular. It is in this part of the city that most of the business is carried on. That side nearest to the Hudson, is built upon a regular uniform plan and contains many elegant streets. . . ."—Dalton, Travels in U. S. A and Part of Upper Canada (Appleby, 1821), 4–13.

The common council resolves that "the Committee on Public Offices have contracted for, and published the Charter of the City [the Montgomerie Charter] with the several amendments thereto, The Edition to consist of Two Hundred & fifty Copies."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 441. 14

The charter was printed, accordingly, in this year, by Grattan and Banks, corner of Spruce and Nassau Sts. Since its grant (see F 11, 1731), the following changes have been made: The number of wards has been increased from seven to nine, and there are now nine aldermen, nine assistants, 18 assessors, nine collectors, and 18 constables, in consequence of the increase in the number of the wards; the mayor and sheriff are now appointed by the council of appointment, instead of by the governor of the province; charter elections are held on the third Tuesday in November, instead of on the feast-day of St. Michael the Archangel; the elective franchise is extended; newly elected officers are sworn in on the first Monday in December, instead of on Oct. 14.—See copy in N. Y. Hist. Soc.

It is resolved to build a pier at the foot of Barclay St. and to extend the pier at the foot of Vesey St. to the permanent line.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 445–47. "

The new Dutch Reformed Church in Market St. is to be dedicated on this day.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 26, 1819. This was the Northeast Reformed Dutch Church erected by Col. Rutgers.—L. M. R. K., III: 935. 27

Weehawk Ferry, since the improvement of the Powles Hook and Hoboken ferries, has fallen into disuse. It is now proposed, however, to revive the ferry and to keep there a good team-boat. The common council approves a resolution that a grant of the ferry be made to Charles Watts for 15 years from May 1 last. The bounds are fixed on the New York side from the northern limit of the Hoboken Ferry to Christopher St., and a quarter of a mile each side of Weehawk on the Jersey side. This, however, does not mean that other ferries may not be allowed within these bounds.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 460–61. See also L. M. R. K., III: 943–44. 28

The canal committee presents to the common council a communication received from the "Contractors for the Sewer in Canal Street" (see My 10), who state that "two thirds of the Contract is completed." The committee recommends that another loan be procured to meet this payment of 25 per cent. of the amount of the contract. Adopted.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 465; descrip. of Pl. 83-b, III: 562. See Jl 12 and Ag 23. "

The Bank of Savings commences operations in the basement of the New York Institution. By July 15, about $20,000 had been deposited.—Unpublished records of the bank; Memoir of John Griscom, 162; N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 15, 1819. For the later history of the bank, see Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 624; 93d Ann. Rep. of the Bk. of Savings (1912). July 3

The canal committee reports to the common council on the subject of "Sewers to be constructed on Thompson, Chapel & Collect Streets as part of the plan heretofore recommended for the regulation of Canal Street" (see Je 29, 1818). Among other things the report states that "the Sewer on Chapel Street being indispensably necessary as a branch of the one in Canal Street, the only question is how far it ought to extend; it is the decided opinion of the Committee that it ought to be extended at least so far as to bury it under the Street which it will do by continuing 12

1819 July 12 it to within One hundred feet of Leonard Street," etc. A resolution is adopted for extending each of these lateral canals.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 478–80. See also descrip. of Pl. 83-b, III: 562.

Aug. 2 Mr. Guille, a Frenchman, ascends in a balloon from Vauxhall Garden to a height of 1,500 fathoms, and then descends by means of a parachute. He landed across the East River. The balloon, which cost more than $3,000, was later found at Fort Neck, South Oyster Bay, L. I., about 30 miles from New York. This was the first actual ascension of a person in a balloon in New York.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 31 and Ag 4, 1819. See also ibid., Ag 7 and 8, 1819. Haswell says this was the first balloon ascension in America.—Reminiscences, 103. Guille made another ascent from Powles Hook on Nov. 20.—Ibid., N 20 and 23, 1819.

9 Mayor Colden presents to the common council a letter from Robert Macomb stating that he has a proposal to make "for supplying the City with Water for all Domestic and Public purposes." The committee on public lands and places is directed to confer with Macomb on the subject.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 503. "The scheme of Mr. Macomb and associates, was to bring the water from Rye pond, and they professed their ability to complete the work in two years, without any aid or compensation from the Common Council, asking only the privilege of laying down the pipes and selling the water."—Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 217. The committee reported on Feb. 21, 1820, but no action was taken by the corporation until March 6, 1820 (q. v.).

" The common council passes a law "to prevent the use of Velocipedes [see My 21] in the public places and on the side walks in the City of New York."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 511.

23 Considering the vast territories which now contribute to New York's food supply, it is interesting to compare the following statement of a century ago: "It is well known that the quantity of fertile land in the immediate vicinity of this City is remarkably small. Our Markets are supplied with vegetables almost wholly from the west end of Long Island and from a very few spots on the Jersey shore. Our hay is principally brought from a distance and few Cattle are fattened for our consumption except in distant pastures. The milk, too, which is used in the City is produced by cows kept in the City itself or its suburbs or else within a very limited tract in its neighbourhood."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 519–21.

" The common council directs the street commissioner to sell at public auction the Corlears Hook Market in Grand St. near Goerck St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 522. See S 6.

" The canal committee receives a request from the "contractors of the Sewer in Canal Street" for payment of the third instalment on their contract. They state that the "Sewer" (see Je 28) is completed "except the curbs and grates to the Culverts, which from the unregulated state of the Streets they are unable to finish, and that the street may not be in a state to have the same completed for some weeks." The committee reports this communication to the common council, stating among other things that "To complete these Culverts will cost from 2 to 3 hundred dollars and the Fourth Instalment, which is payable 60 days after the Sewer is completed, is ample security for their completion." They recommend that payment of the third instalment be made in bonds, payable when the assessment is collected with interest.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 523–24. Such bonds were issued to the amount of $25,647.37.—Ibid., X: 547. See also descrip. of Pl. 83-b, III: 562. See N 8.

Sept. 6 As the yellow fever has broken out at Old Slip and in its vicinity, the board of health recommends that all inhabitants move from the district bounded by the East River and Pearl St., Old Slip, and Wall St.—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 6 and 7, 1819. This alarms the city.—De Forest, John Johnston of N. Y., Merchant (N. Y., 1909), 118. See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 548. See, further, S 17.

" The street commissioner reports that, agreeably to directions (see Ag 23), he has sold the old market-house situated in Grand St. near Goerck St., and that the cupola and bell were taken down for the purpose of being placed in the new (Grand Street) market. The old market-house is removed and the street filled and levelled.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 521–22, 533; De Voe, Market Book, 390. This ended the career of the Corlear's Hook Market which was erected in 1806 (q. v., My 19).

" The board enters into agreements with various persons for making "canals" in Clarkson, Chapel, and Carmine Sts., and in Sixth Ave.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 535.

Alarm over the spread of yellow fever in New York increases. Sept. 17 John Taylor Johnston, in his journal, writes: "Many moving out of town & the lower part of the city pretty well evacuated. One case reported at the foot of Rector St. which seems rather too near home." On the following day he records that "the death of Mr [George] Aspinwall & of his young man Johnson produced a prodigious sensation. Removal from the East side almost universal. Broadway filled all day with loads of goods & furniture going out of town. Some of the public offices removed up to the upper part of Broadway."—De Forest, John Johnston of New York, Merchant (N. Y., 1909), 118. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, S 18, 1819.

Wm. Faux, an English farmer travelling in the United States, 18 arrives in New York from Philadelphia in the midst of the yellow fever epidemic, and describes the city as being "all bustle and confusion. It was like Michaelmas or Lady-day in England; at every door, in almost every street, carts and waggons were seen lading or laden, removing furniture, merchandize, and men from the city to the country. Stores and offices, and firms were closed, or only doing business as if by stealth." The yellow fever was raging and turning citizens out of doors into the grave; . . .

"I saw the once celebrated Aaron Burr, a little lean, pale, withered, shabby looking, decayed, grey-headed old gentleman, whose name is too well known in transatlantic history to need my notice. . . ."—Faux, Memorable Days in Am: being A Journal of a Tour to The U. S. (London, 1823), 155–56. Faux returned to New York in 1820 (q. v., My 4).

The yellow fever continues unabated and additional precautions 20 are taken against it in the business section. John Johnston writes in his journal under this date that the Stock Exchange is "at Washington Hall where the brokers also meet instead of Wall St. The entrances to the infected district shut up by Posts Boards & Railing." On the following day the "Banks had a meeting and resolved not to remove for the present. Still Wall St has a very desolate appearance."—De Forest, John Johnston of N. Y., Merchant, 119. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, S 20, 1819. The previous place of meeting of the New York Stock and Exchange Board was the Tontine Coffee House.—Eames, N. Y. Stock Exchange, 17, 18, 19.

" New York City possesses the reputation of having a medical school (College of Physicians and Surgeons—see Mr 12, 1807) "superior in advantages to any other west of the Atlantic Ocean." From MS. letter of Dr. B. W. Dudley, of Lexington, Ky., in N. Y. P. L. For the substance of a medical education at this period, see My 15, 1819.

Oct. 1 "For the last five days we have had but one case of yellow fever, and the spirits of our citizens, as well as trade, begin to revive. Our stores are well stocked with goods of every description, and merchants from the country, who are desirous of an early fall supply, will run no risk in visiting any part of our city, except Old Slip and its immediate neighbourhood."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 1, 1819. See O 19.

13 The laying of the corner-stone of the "Mariner's church" (see My 29, 1818) to be erected in Roosevelt St. near Cherry St. is announced for this day.—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 12, 1819. The site was at 76 Roosevelt St., and the church became known as the Mariners' M. E. Church.—L. M. R. K., III: 930. It was dedicated on June 4, 1820 (q. v.).

18 It is resolved that Gold St. be widened, straightened, and improved between Fulton and Beekman Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 582.

19 The yellow fever having subsided, the board of health announces that the people who have retired to Greenwich may now return to the city with safety. The board recommends, however, that all houses be ventilated, cleansed, and purified before being occupied.—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 19, 1819.

22 The first boat passes through Erie Canal from Rome to Utica.—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 28, 1819; Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 623.

25 It is ordered that Exchange Slip be filled up.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 592–93.

Nov. 1 Mayor Colden reports that during the period from March 1, 1818, to Nov. 1, 1819, no less than 18,930 foreign immigrants had arrived in New York and had been reported at his office.—Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 572; Lamb, Hist. of the City of N. Y., II: 680.

" It is ordered that the horse-market (see Mr 24, 1817) be removed to the ground included between Spring and Canal Sts.,

1819 and Wooster and Thompson Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X:
N 1 601.

8 The special committee, to whom has been referred the objections against the Canal St. assessment, reports: ". . . The petitioners object to the Assessment because in their opinion all the property intended to be benefitted by the Sewer [see Ag 23] has not been Assessed and of course too great a proportion has fallen on them, and assert that the Sewer was necessary to carry off the water from some ground which is not assessed, particularly the Collect ground and Lispenard's Meadow, and that some of the property which is not assessed is as much benefitted as the lots on Canal Street; that the Corporation possesses no powers but such as are derived from the Legislature, and that the Assessors were bound to conform to the law of the State which authorized the making of the Sewer and directed the expence to be assessed on all those benefitted. They complain that the Assessment is disproportioned and unequal within the limits to which it is confined and state that the Corporation sanctioned a much more extended Assessment when Canal Street ground was purchased for a Water course.

"Your Committee fully agree with the petitioners in the opinion that it was the duty of the Assessors to assess all that were benefitted by the construction of the Sewer, but cannot think with them that this principle was not the basis on which this Assessment was founded.

"In the opinion of the Committee so extended an Assessment as the one alluded to by the petitioners would not have been just and correct when the ground for a water course was purchased at a great expence and the cost paid by all the lots from whence it was supposed the waters would flow into this outlet. The owners thus acquired a right of passage for their water thro' Canal Street as a common water course, and to those at a distance from this Street it could not be particularly interesting what kind of Sewer was constructed, but to the lots on Canal Street and its vicinity it was of the greatest importance, as is fully proved by the result, lots there having increased in value at least 100 per cent, as your Committee are informed since it was concluded to build this expensive Sewer.

"It appears that the Assessment extends on each side of Canal Street about 400 feet and is considerably reduced on each lot as the distance increases, obviously because the nearest are most benefitted by covering what was an offensive open kennel which constantly emitted disagreeable & perhaps noxious effluvia." The committee concludes by resolving "that the Assessment for constructing Canal Street Sewer, as reported by the Assessors, be confirmed," as they have considered each questionable case and believe no more "just discrimination" could have been made. The report and resolution are approved.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 612–13.

16 At a meeting of at least 2,000 people at the City Hotel, resolutions are passed urging congress to prohibit slavery in all states hereafter admitted to the union. An "Address to the American People" on the same subject is also adopted.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 17, 1819.

22 A number of citizens meeting at the City Hotel resolve that they "approve of the plans for preparing a situation on the coast of Africa for the protection of those Africans who may be liberated from the slave traders, and for an asylum to those people of color of the United States who may wish to remove to the land of their fathers." A committee is appointed "to collect funds, clothing, stores, domestic and agricultural implements, and such other articles as may aid those Africans who may wish to remove and in support of the contemplated colony."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 23, 1819. See also ibid., D 2, 1819. The meeting was evidently held in response to the appeal of the Colonization Society for aid in founding what is now known as Liberia.—McMaster, IV: 560–69.

29 A convention of "Friends of National Industry" assembles at New York "to take into consideration the prostrate condition of our manufacturers, and to petition congress for their relief and protection." The convention lasted until Dec. 1. Delegates from Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Ohio, and various cities in New York State were present.—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 7, 1819.

Dec. 6 The common council directs the finance committee to purchase a copy of the Declaration of Independence, published by John Burns of Philadelphia, and to have it suitably framed and placed with the other memorials of the corporation.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 647.

Dec. 6 The common council passes a resolution that the corporation counsel prepare a memorial asking the congress of the United States to pass a law authorising the secretary of the treasury to reimburse the corporation for money paid to individuals at the time of the late war, for damages caused by the erection of fortifications on Long Island or elsewhere; and also to reimburse the expense of equipping and manning gunboats. The board orders that the committee of finance appoint a person to take this memorial to Washington and make explanations, the expense not to exceed $200.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 655–66. On Feb. 7, 1820, J. Morton, clerk of the board, who was sent on this mission to Washington reported that without doubt the corporation would eventually be reimbursed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 723–27.

— During 1820 and 1821, revolutions broke out in Spain, Naples, and Piedmont, and the rulers were forced to grant democratic constitutions. The armies of the Holy Alliance intervened, however, and absolutism was restored.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 49–50, 57, 60–63.

— The population of the city and county of New York is 123,706.—13th U. S. Census Bulletin, 1910; Hough, Statistics of Population of the City and County of N. Y., as shown by the State Census of 1865.

— In this year, New York's reported manufacturing capital was $1,780,950, of which $300,000 was invested in engine works and foundries, $238,750 in sugar refining, and $185,000 in distilling and brewing.—Clark, Hist. of Manufactures in the U. S. 1607–1860, 465 (footnote), citing Dix, Sketch of the Resources of the City of N. Y., 44.

— The comparative wealth of citizens of New York, as shown by tax lists of 1815 and 1820, was published in Man. Com. Coun. (1864), 755–66.

— In this year, James Fenimore Cooper issued (anonymously) his first novel, Precaution.

— The Ladies' Companion was established in this year, and continued until 1844.—North, Hist. & Present Condition of the Newspaper and Periodical Press, 117.

— Owing to lack of funds to support it in New York, the General Theological Seminary (see My 1, 1819) was removed to New Haven in this year. In 1821, a legacy of $60,000 was left by Mr. Jacob Sherred for a seminary in New York, and it was decided to move the General Seminary back to the latter city. It reopened here on Feb. 13, 1822 (q.v.).—Perry, Hist. of the Am. Epis. Ch., II: 512–16.

— Scudder's American Museum is enlarged by consolidation with the Grand Museum. After Scudder's death in August, 1821, the Museum was continued in various hands until 1842, when it was purchased by P. T. Barnum.—Kilroe, Saint Tammany, 176–77; Life of P. T. Barnum, by himself (London, 1853), 77. The Tammany Museum was the first museum established in the city of New York and the second in the United States. It may be regarded as the forerunner of our historical societies and public museums.—Kilroe, 177.

— In this year, the Zion African Methodist Church, on the corner of Leonard and Church Sts. (see Jl 30, 1800), was taken down, and a larger edifice erected on the same site. This was destroyed by fire in 1839.—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 321. See also L. M. R. K., III: 930.

— The west side of Broadway, near the corner of Spring St. (where later the St. Nicholas Hotel was built), was occupied at this time by small shops and residences, with the remains of a Revolutionary fortification in the rear.—See wood-cut view in Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 623.

— At this time, Greenwich St. was lined with small cabinet-making establishments.—Clark, Hist. of Manufactures in the U. S., 472.

— For view of the North Battery, foot of Hubert St., looking south, in 1820, see Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 252.

1820 Jan. 1 By act of the legislature, passed April 12, 1813, the statute of limitations now commences to run against quit-rents. By this act all quit-rents which accrued between the 29th of Sept., 1775, and the 29th of Sept., 1783, and which were due from citizens of New York State or of the United States, are remitted. Quit-rents are also remitted on forfeited estates.—Laws of N. Y. (1813), chap. 119.

3 The comptroller is instructed to pay the contractors "for building the Sewer in Canal Street" (see Ag 23, 1819), $22,032.45, being the balance due on the contract.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 680–81. See Je 1 and Jl 12.

4 Tammany Hall, "on the corner of Chatham and Frankfort-streets, directly opposite to the Park and City-Hall," is offered for lease for a term not exceeding five years. "The advantages to this house are numerous, and few offer to an enterprising person so many chances for good business. It has always been attended by constant boarders, and the general custom of the bar is particularly advantageous. It is necessary to state, that the large room will be reserved for the use of the Tammany-Society every Monday evening, and also to be lighted, and fuel during the time; also, the 12th of May, 4th of July, and 25th of November. This room has been, and is now rented by the occupant at 400 dollars for the season for a dancing school.—There is also a lodge room in which eight different lodges now assemble, and who pay rent for the same to the occupant. On the first floor there is a large bar room, with the necessary fixture, parlor, dining room, which is very spacious, and a small back room. The lodging rooms are very pleasant, and the cellars, kitchen, ice house, &c. commodious. . . . It is proper to state that those who offer as tenants must be men known to be attached to our republican principles. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 4, 1820. See Ap 10, 1824.

10 The board directs the corporation counsel "to prepare a petition to the Legislature, together with a Law authorizing the Corporation to assess on the real & personal estate in this City a sum not exceeding 150,000 dollars, to be applied to the rebuilding and regulating the Battery."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 686–87. The memorial and the bill were ordered authenticated on Jan. 31.—Ibid., X: 715–17.

17 A strong gale and a storm of snow and sleet cause considerable damage in New York. "At 11 o'clock the tide was about a foot higher than ever was before known to our oldest citizens. All the lower parts of the town were inundated, and the water flowed through many houses and stores."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 18, 1820.

25 At a public meeting at the City Hotel, a committee is appointed to solicit subscriptions in aid of the sufferers from a disastrous fire at Savannah which destroyed half the town.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 25 and 26, 1820. The sum of $12,529.26, besides articles of clothing, was forwarded from this city.—Ibid., F 18, 1820.

29 George III dies; his eldest son ascends the throne as George IV.—Macarthy, Hist. of the Four Georges, 480–81. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 11, 1820.

Feb. 7 The common council is informed by letter from Lieut. Smith of the U. S. war department that such department will bear its estimated expense for repairs to and changes at the Battery within its boundaries, provided the sum appropriated by congress for fortifications will permit others being done.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 721. See D 21, 1818, and My 15, 1820.

10 Congress passes an act "to provide for obtaining accurate statements of the foreign commerce of the United States."—Statutes at Large, 16th cong., chap. 11. Under this act, the secretary of the treasury began a series of annual reports containing statistical statements regarding commerce and navigation. For the first three years of these (1821–3), see table No. 9 in the volume (in N. Y. P. L.) labelled Commerce (1824), showing exports and imports by states. See, for example, S 30, 1822.

14 Cadwallader D. Colden informs the common council of his reappointment as mayor.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 732.

" The Park Theatre has been closed for the last six weeks "for the want of support."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 14, 1820.

21 The constitution of the N. Y. Stock and Exchange Board is revised. The text of this revision was published by Francis L. Eames in The N. Y. Stock Exchange (1894), 19–25.

28 A petition of Peter Charles L'Enfant "stating the services rendered by him in devising the plan and superintending the Erection of the Old City Hall for which he received no compensation . . . and praying the Corporation to take his case into consideration," is read in common council and referred to the finance committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), X: 747. For the committee's report, see Ap 17. Feb. 28

Congress agrees to the Missouri Compromise, prohibiting slavery in the territory west of the Mississippi, north of 36° 30′ N. L., except the proposed state of Missouri. It was approved by the president on March 6.—Annals of Cong., 16th cong., 1st sess., 467–69, 1576–88, 2555–59. See also McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., IV: 583–93. Mar. 2

6 A petition from Sophia Usher asking permission "to erect a small building for the purpose of vending Soda Water on the Lot of ground belonging to the Corporation on Broadway between Bridewell and the Park," is referred to the committee on public lands and places.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 2. The petition was rejected on May 29, because "the proposed Building would be an improper incumbrance, and particularly so when the Iron fence is completed on that side of the Park." Mrs. Usher claimed that her late husband (see Je 5, 1811) was "the first person who introduced the use of Soda water in this City or in the United States."—Ibid., XI: 167.

" The common council passes a "Law regulating the salaries and compensations of the Officers of the Corporation of the City of New York."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 15.

" The common council agrees to the report, presented on Feb. 21, concerning the "memorial of Robert Macomb respecting a project for supplying this City with water" (see Ag 9, 1819). The following resolutions recommended in the report are passed:

"Resolved that Robert Macomb and his associates be permitted to lay down pipes in the roads & Streets of this City, whenever it appears to the Common Council that a sufficient quantity is collected in a reservoir at Harlem River . . .

"Resolved that Robert Macomb and his associates shall bind themselves and their successors . . . to transfer at any time when required, after the expiration of Forty years from the completion of the water works all right and interest therein to the Mayor, Aldermen & Commonalty of this City for which they shall receive the cost of constructing the said water works after deducting a proper allowance for use & wear.

"Resolved that the Committee on Public Lands & Places, together with the Counsel of this Board be instructed to prepare a contract and make arrangements with Robert Macomb and his Associates in conformity with the preceding resolution and report the same to this Board and that no rights or privileges be conveyed by these resolutions but only by the contract contemplated to be entered into."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 15–16. The minutes show no further action on this proposal at this time.—Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 217. The subject of supplying the city with water was revived in 1821 (q.v., D 24).

8 The American is established as a daily with a new volume numbering. On March 11, the semi-weekly edition (see Mr 3, 1819) was continued as a country paper with the same title.—Brigham, A. A. S. Proc. (1917), 378. See S 21, 1821.

13 The committee of charity reports to the common council that the directresses of the Society for Promotion of Industry "have finally closed their Institution without any expectation of again re-opening it."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 22.

" The common council resolves that "the Office of Superintendant of Wharves, Piers & Ships be and the same is hereby abolished."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 24.

27 Some of the inhabitants in the vicinity of William St. and Maiden Lane address a petition to the common council, "stating that from the lowness of that part of the City at the junction of those Streets great inconvenience is experienced in times of a fall of rain and praying that a bridge of flat or other stones may be made across Maiden Lane from the westerly sidewalk of William Street, also praying that the old bridge across William Street may be repaired." This is referred to the alderman and assistant of the Second Ward.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 40.

" The common council resolves "that from & after the 1st day of May next, all permits which may have been heretofore granted to persons to sell by Auction in Chatham Square be annulled."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 48–49.

28 The Common Lands in the Ninth Ward being waste and unproductive, and liable to be sold under assessments of the city for opening streets, the freeholders and inhabitants of this ward, who 1820 Mar. 28 are all entitled to these lands under patents granted in 1666, petition the legislature for power to sell; and the legislature appoints Jacobus Dyckman and other trustees with power to sell, institute suits for trespass, &c. Certain funds are thereby created for the public benefit.—Laws of N. Y. (1820), chap. 115.

Apr. 5 The second part of "Henry IV" is performed at the Park Theatre for the first time in New York.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 5, 1820.

12 The legislature authorises the inspectors of the state prison "to advertise to receive proposals for the letting of the state-prison at New-York, and the convicts confined therein, and all such as shall hereafter be sent to that prison: the person or persons so taking a lease of said prison, to feed, clothe and furnish said prisoners with all necessaries of life, necessary medicine and medical attendance in case of sickness, and indemnify the state against all costs and charges of maintaining and keeping said prisoners, excepting the charges of the inspectors." The inspectors are also directed to examine the marble quarries in Westchester and in the city and county of New York and to fix on one of them as a suitable site for a new state prison.—Laws of N. Y., 1820, chap. 185. The prison was sold to the city in 1826 (q. v., Mr 28).

17 The finance committee makes a report to the common council on the petition of Pierre L'Enfant (see F 28), stating that they are led to infer from the city records that his remodelling of the old city hall "was altogether voluntary on his part & that his object was the honor of the performance rather than pecuniary reward." The committee reviews the corporation's offer to him of 10 acres of Common Lands, made on Oct. 12, 1789 (q. v.), and his refusal to accept the same (see Ap 30 and My 14, 1790), also his petition for compensation on Jan. 26, 1801 (q. v.), and his rejection of the $750 voted by the board (see F 16), and then adds: "The foregoing comprises a brief statement of all the facts that have come to the knowledge of your Committee on this subject, and they are such as plainly evince on the part of Mr. L'Enfant a disposition to value his services far above what they were deemed to be worth by the gentlemen composing the Common Council at the time they were rendered. The Committee do not pretend to judge of the value of these services, nor are they willing to decide as to the justice of Mr. L'Enfant's claim farther than what may be inferred from the entries in the Minutes of the Common Council, and from these it is concluded that, whatever his services were, they were rendered voluntarily & without any stipulation for or expectation of a reward. It is a question for the Board to decide, therefore, whether, after the repeated rejection by Mr. L'Enfant of the liberal offers made him by the Common Council, he has still any claim on this Board. The Committee think not & they therefore offer the following resolution:

"Resolved that it is inexpedient to grant the request of P. C. L'Enfant." The report is approved, and the resolution adopted. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 75–76.

20 Comptroller Bleecker reports to the common council that the "valuable improvements made in the City within 4 years past amount to more than $100,000." These improvements are:

"Ground purchased for extending the New Alms house Establishment."

"Two public Slips on the East river at the foot of Roosevelt & Oliver Sts."

"Piers & improvements at Spring St."

"Centre & Essex Markets—Ground & buildings."

"Engine houses in Fayette & Rose Sts. & at Greenwich—Ground & buildings & building a house in Beaver St."

"Iron Fence for the Park."

"Opening Oliver St."

—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 82–84.

24 "Whereas the Pump on the Battery has been useless for several years past, and the well is now in a dangerous situation," the common council resolves "That the Superintendant of repairs have the said Pump removed and the well filled up without delay."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 95.

29 The corner-stone of the first Unitarian Church in the city is laid, on Chambers St., west of Broadway, by a society organized May 24, 1819 (q. v.), and incorporated Nov. 15, 1819, as "The First Congregational Church in New York."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 10, 1820; Greenleaf, 373. It was dedicated Jan. 20, 1821 (q. v.). —See Sermon by Edward Everett on the Dedication . . ."

May 1 The common council resolves "that one of the Assistants to each of the Captains of the Watch in the first District be dispensed with." Then, by a vote of 11 to 7, it reduces the captains' pay from $1.87½ per night to $1.50, the assistants' from $1.37½ to $1.12½, and the watchmen's from $.87½ to $.75.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 111–12.

May 1 "A pear tree, brought from Holland, and planted in the year 1647, is now in full bloom, standing in the third Avenue at the intersection of Thirteenth-street. This is probably the oldest fruit tree in America. About 70 years ago the branches of the tree decayed and fell off, and at that time it was supposed the tree was dying; but without any artificial means being resorted to, new shoots germinated and gradually supplied the room of their predecessors. The tree now is in full health and vigour, and appears to be no more than 30 years old; the fruit ripens the latter part of August, has a rich succulent flavour, and has been known by the name of the spice pear."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 4, 1820. This was Stuyvesant's pear-tree. See L. M. R. K., III: 967. The tree was taken down in 1867 (q. v., F 27).

" Wm. Faux (see S 18, 1819) writes: "I made, on horseback, the tour of York island, about ten miles in length [!] and two in breadth. On one side is the noble Hudson or great North River, and on the other, the East River and Hell-gate, and the beautiful villages of Manhattan, Haerlem, and Greenwich. All the road from the city, to the extremity of, and beyond the isle, is adorned, on both sides, with the country-seats and pleasure-grounds of rich citizens, who, like those of London, every morning and evening drive to and fro in great numbers. Perhaps no city in the world is so happily situated as that of New York, standing on this island, with the sea to the south, and these majestic rivers, from one to two miles wide, on the north and east, the banks of which are very high, and for twelve miles crowned with mansions. The houses on the roads, thus leading through the isle to the city, have each from five to ten acres of green pasture, Park, or pleasure-gardens, which renders them more rural, though less splendid than those on the roads leading to London. I saw from fifty to 100 convicts, heavily ironed, forming a new road for the state; receiving no pay nor shirts, but only food. . . ."—Faux, Memorable Days in Am.: being a Journal of a Tour to The U. S. (London, 1823), 411–12.

1820 May 15 Wm. L. Stone, editor of the Commercial Advertiser, petitions the common council "to be accommodated with a place within the Bar of the Common Council Chamber, for the purpose of taking Notes of, and respecting the proceedings of the Common Council." This petition is referred to the committee on public offices, but no action appears to have been taken.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 135. On Jan. 19, 1824, the editors of several newspapers made the same request, and a resolution granting it was referred to the committee of repairs with authority.—Ibid., XIII: 472.

" The common council receives a letter from Col. Armistead of the U. S. engineer department, which states that, on account of lack of funds, the secretary of war will be unable to "unite with the Corporation in the repairs and improvement of the Battery" (see F 7).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 136.

25 The Park Theatre is destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 25, 1820. It was rebuilt on the same site, and reopened on Sept. 1, 1821 (q.v.).—Brown, Hist. of the N. Y. Stage, I: 24; Ireland, Records of the N. Y. Stage, I: 363, 380. See also descrip. of Pl. 91, III: 577.

26 A panorama of the palace and garden of Versailles, painted by John Vanderlyn and covering 3,000 sq. ft. of canvas, is on exhibition at the Rotunda.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 26, 1820.

27 "The Managers of the [Park] Theatre have the honor to announce to the friends and patrons of the Drama, that they have opened the Theatre in Anthony-street. The total destruction of the Park Theatre [see My 25], Scenery and Wardrobe will produce much inconvenience in the correct representation of many Plays, but the Managers have the pleasure to assure the public that the Theatre will be fitted up in the most convenient manner, and will be rendered cool and pleasant, and they rely upon the liberal patronage formerly afforded them."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 27, 1820. The Anthony St. Theatre was used until the new Park Theatre was opened on Sept. 1, 1821 (q.v.).—Mag. Am. Hist., XIX: 60–61. See also Ap 2 and My 12, 1821.

29 The common council appoints a committee of five "for the purpose of opening a correspondence with the Secretary at War, or other proper Officer of Government at Washington with the view of ascertaining on what terms a relinquishment of the ground and Fort called the West Battery [Castle Clinton] may be obtained for the public use of this City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 168. See O 16.

30 The battleship "Ohio" is launched from the Brooklyn Navy Yard "admidst the firing of cannon and acclamations of thousands of spectators, which crowded the surrounding hills and house tops in the neighborhood. . . . The concourse of people which lined the margin of the East River, from the country and from the City, it is calculated amounted to upwards of twenty-five thousand."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 30, 1820.

June 4 The "Mariner's Church in Roosevelt street" (see O 3, 1819) is to be dedicated on this day. Services conducted by a Dutch Reformed minister, a Methodist, and an Episcopalian are announced.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 1, 1820. See also L. M. R. K., III: 930.

5 On the petitions of owners of property in Canal St., the common council resolves "That the side walk be regulated and the Curb Stones and pavement be laid, on the Northerly and Southerly side of Canal Street between Chapel Street and Broadway."—M. C. C. (1781–1831), XI: 148, 180–81.

8 An exhibition of Francis Guy's paintings is being held at the Shakespeare Gallery near the Park Theatre.—N. Y. Columbian, Je 8; N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Jl 14, 1820. An oil painting of the Tontine Coffee House, made by Guy in 1796–1800, is reproduced as Pl. 69, Vol. I.

12 The common council passes a law authorising the fire wardens to assume the duties of health wardens, "under the direction and controul of the Board of Health."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 179–80, 196.

" The inhabitants in the vicinity of the Abingdon Road complain to the common council of the practise of racing horses in said road, which they refer to as "a great and grievous nuisance."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 192.

" John McComb, the street commissioner, submits to the common council a proposed assessment-roll "for building the Minetta Sewer;" it is confirmed and a collector appointed.—From the original report, with "Filed Papers, 1700–1800," etc., in city clerk's record-room. See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 197.

June 12 The common council adopts a resolution directing that the houses in Market St. and Broome St. be numbered.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 199. See My 18, 1818.

17 The statement is made that a "project is entertained by some of our respectable citizens, to enlarge the public grounds in the centre of the city, by removing the old building opposite the south-east side of the Park, and opening a square from the corner of Chatham-Row and Broadway across Ann-street to Nassau-street and through to Frankfort-street and it is thought that, now, when the theatre is no longer in the way, is the time to carry into execution."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 17, 1820.

22 A fire destroys the block of buildings on Broadway, White, and Walker Sts.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 22, 1820.

26 The common council accepts an invitation from Peter Cooper "to visit an Experiment of an Hydraulic Boat Propelling Machine at Bellvue tomorrow."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 200.

July 10 The common council appoints a committee of five "to select a Scite for a public Bath."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 231.

11 "The surrender of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown, painted by col. Trumbull, for the United States, is now exhibiting at Washington Hall, previous to its being sent to the seat of government."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 11, 1820.

24 The trustees of the Free School Society, in a memorial to the common council, state that they have established five free schools in which about 2,100 poor children are educated, but that they are still "utterly unable to comply with the increasing calls for admission." They are convinced that by a sale of the property in Chatham St., granted to them by the city on Aug. 8, 1808 (q.v.), "they could erect Buildings in other parts of the City, which would accommodate twice the number of Scholars at present accommodated in said Building," and they therefore solicit a grant in fee of the premises. The petition is referred to the finance committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 235–36.

" Garrit Gilbert informs the common council "that a General Index to the Records in the Registers office of the City and County of New York, which had been committed to him was in such a state of forwardness as to enable him to present for inspection the Index of Mortgages." This is referred to the committee on public offices.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 236. On Aug. 7, the committee reported very favourably on the index and recommended an application to the legislature "to place the Registers Office under the Superintendance of the Corporation, that the index's may be kept up, else a considerable waste of money to this Board will have been made."—Ibid., XI: 267.

" A resolution "directing the Iron Fence to be continued around the Park" is presented in common council and referred to the finance committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 251; N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 25, 1820. See F 5, 1821. See also a map of City Hall Park, made in August, 1820, by Daniel Ewen, filed as map No. 220, in bureau of topography, borough president's office.

Aug. — The N. Y. Eye and Ear Infirmary has its inception in a clinic at No. 45 Chatham St., conducted by Drs. Edward Delafield and J. Kearney Rodgers.—Osgood, Hist. of N. Y. City (1884), I: 121–22. See Mr 9, 1821.

4 The mayor of Troy, N. Y., writes to thank Mayor Colden "for the liberal Donation presented by the Citizens of New York for the releif of the sufferers by the late fire" in that place. The chairman of the committee of relief at the same time acknowledges the receipt of $6.227.25 from New York, and adds: "This liberal donation from the Citizens of New York entitles them to our warmest gratitude, and permit us sir, to declare to you and to them that this kindness cannot be forgotten; and that our Citizens will give it in charge to their children to remember, that New-York sympathized with Troy in the day of her calamity and distress, and contributed liberally to releive her poor and unfortunate."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 218, 253–54.

7 Richard Varick makes a proposal to the common council (the particulars of which are not recorded) "respecting the Streets around his place called 'Tusculum'." This is referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 258. With the exception of John Randel, Jr.'s description of 1808 (q.v.), this is the only record found containing the name of Varick's country home. He acquired it on Feb. 8, 1802, as part of 32 lots of land bounded by Hudson (Houston) St. on the south, St. David's (Bleecker) St. on the north, 6th (Sullivan) St. on the west, and 5th (Thompson) St. on the east.—Liber Deeds (N. Y.), LXII: 76. Sullivan St. was 1820 Aug. 7 called Varick St. after this time. The position of the house is shown in Landmarks of N. Y. (ed. by Peterson, and pub. by the City History Club, 1923), 59. For other real estate references connected with the history of this property, see Liber Deeds (Albany), XXVI: 224; ibid. (N. Y.), LXII: 73, 75; Liber Wills, LXVIII:1; Liber Deeds (N. Y.), CCXCIII: 38.

" The common council grants to Philip Hone "the exclusive right of establishing a Ferry to New Jersey from the North boundary of his present Lease to the foot of Charlton Street, and the exclusive right of establishing a Ferry to Hoboken, from thence, up to Christopher Street, for the term of fifteen Years," and annuls the lease made to Charles Watts on Sept. 16, 1819.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 86, 263–64.

12 "Real American," writing to one of the papers, regrets the American Museum has not of late met with sufficient patronage, and says: "I well remember the time when the foundation of this Museum was laid. . . . Mr. Scudder has procured from every region of the habitable globe, a valuable collection of its most extraordinary productions. . . . He, likewise, very lately purchased a museum, the property of a French gentleman, which had been exhibited for some time in a house, near the Park, and added the whole to his own establishment. Other institutions of the kind, which have been attempted in this city, now constitute a part of the American Museum, . . . Amongst other things, he has added the Cosmorama, which is of itself one of the most extraordinary exhibitions, to be seen in this or any other city of the union. The view of many ancient as well as of modern buildings, is exhibited in so striking a manner, as to induce the spectator to believe that he is on the very spot where these venerable buildings formerly stood; but what strikes the mind with the greatest awe, sublimi reverence and devotion, is the view of an eruption of Mount Vesuvius. . . ."—Columbian, Ag 12, 1820. An abridged catalogue of the "Principal Natural and Artificial Curiosities" in the museum appeared in Longworth's Directory for 1820–21.

21 The finance committee presents "a valuation of the whole real estate of the Corporation, together with such of the personal Estate as in their opinion ought to be taken into the calculation." The total is $3,434,718.12.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 282–83. Cf. My 8.

" The committee on public lands and places, after considering complaints against the African burying ground in Chrystie St. and Potter's field, recommend the following "alterations in the former mode of interments:"

"That no Corpse shall be left at any time, without a covering of earth of at least two feet deep, and no grave shall be left from one day to another day, without being entirely filled up with earth.

"No Corpse, shall be deposited nearer the surface of the ground than four feet.

"Nor shall any person whose death was occasioned by any contagous or putrid fever be interred otherwise than in a single grave six feet deep."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 256, 286–87.

26 "We understand that the Regents of the University have granted to the inhabitants of Richmond County, a conditional Charter for a College, to be situated on Staten Island, opposite to the city of New York. . . . We . . . hope that some equitable arrangement will be made between the Corporations of Trinity Church, Columbia College, and the proposed College, by which the funds of the two colleges may be combined, in erecting suitable edifices [see F 27, 1817]. . . . We have not the least doubt, but that the Regents of the University and the Legislature had in contemplation, when they granted the conditional Charter for Washington College, the ultimate Change of the location of Columbia College from the City to Staten Island. . . ."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Ag 26, 1820.

" "A considerable number of handsome brick buildings are now erecting in this city. A Presbyterian church is building in Vandewater-street, and an Independent Church in Chamber-street [see Ap 29]; the latter of which is fronted with white marble. Several of the old Churches are undergoing repairs; and on the North Dutch Church in William-street is erecting an elegant steeple of about sixty feet in height. As lots and materials are low, capitalists will do well to employ their surplus funds in building."—Columbian, Ag 26, 1820.

Sept. 4 The finance committee reports in regard to John Randel, Jr.'s map of the city: "That they have examined the map alluded to, and although the execution of the work does great credit to the talents and ingenuity of Mr Randell, they are nevertheless of opinion, that the scale on which it is drawn is too small for the ordinary purposes of reference, or for which a Map of the City is generally required. Sept. 4

"The Committee are of opinion however, that some encouragement should be afforded Mr Randell for his industry in this laborious undertaking; and they recommend therefore, that four Setts of his Map of the City of New York be subscribed for by the Corporation at $6 75/100 each Map, to be coloured and mounted on Rolers; which agreeably to his proposals to give one Map gratis for every five subscribed, will produce 24 Maps, sufficient to supply each member with a Copy and leave two for the use of the Offices.

"The Committee beg leave to state, that it has been customary to present each person on his becoming a member of the Common Council, with a Map of the City; in order that he may possess the information required in the discharge of his public duties. This has been omitted for the last two years, in the expectation that the Map of Mr Randell would be taken, when compleated for that purpose; but, for the reasons already stated the Map not answering the purposes required, it becomes expedient that others should be provided; and the Committee beg leave to recommend, for that purpose the Map published by David Longworth, as containing all the usefull and necessary information required by the Members of this Board." The common council agrees to subscribe for twenty of Randel's maps and to buy twenty of Longworth's.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 299–300. The Randel map referred to is evidently not the Map of the Farms (see Pl. 86, Vol. III), which is on a very large scale. The reference must be to the map described under April 5, 1821 (q. v.), of which very few copies are known, one of which on satin is in the author's collection. See also descrip. of Pl. 79, I: 473.

Wm. B. Cozens is ordered to be paid $469 "for refreshments furnished to the Cadets of the U. S. Military Academy on their visits on the 11th & 29th August."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 319. 18

Announcement is made from the office of the Manhattan Water Works that, "In consequence of an obstruction by roots, &c. in the main conduits, the supply for the west side of Broadway, will, in a great measure be discontinued until the 21st instant, after which the subscribers will receive an abundant supply by an improvement in the main conduits."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 19, 1820. 19

Between Sept. 30, 1819, and this date, 3,834 passengers arrived at the port of New York.—Arrivals of Alien Passengers and Immigrants (prepared by the U. S. Bureau of Statistics (1891), table 7, p. 64. 30

William Hall and others present a petition to the common council, stating "that they have brought into complete operation a machine for sweeping chimnies called 'Hall's patent sweeping machine'—that for the accommodation of the Inhabitants they have established offices in the several Wards to which application may be made for the sweeping of the Chimnies in the City—They therefore request that the masters of the climbing boys or chimney sweepers, may be compelled to establish offices in the different parts of the City, & that the boys may be prohibited from calling out in the Streets as is now practised by them." This is referred to the committee on arts and sciences.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 323. Oct. 2

The building committee of Columbia College (see S 6, 1817), having finished its labours, renders its final report. The additions and repairs to the college cost $80,741.47.—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1754–1904, 105. "

The owners of hackney carriages urge that the hack stands be abolished, as they are "attended with very demoralizing effects to the drivers employed by them," and the residents near the Park ask that the stand be removed from that vicinity.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 343. 16

The common council passes resolutions "for filling the slip at the foot of Canal Street with good & wholesome earth, & also for the necessary bulk head at the mouth of said slip."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 349. On Feb. 5, 1821, the city allowed $2,500 for filling in Canal St. Basin, and, on Aug. 6 following, a balance of $2,951 was paid.—Journal C, 165, comptroller's office. "

The special committee, appointed on May 29 (q. v.) "for the purpose of applying to the Secretary of War at Washington to ascertain on what terms the Fort called Castle Clinton, & the "

1820 Oct. 16 ground on which it stands might be obtained for the public use of the Inhabitants of this City," reports to the common council that Secretary Calhoun has informed them that President Monroe is willing to grant the fort to the city since "the Position will be useless after the erection of the contemplated works at the Narrows." Monroe, however, has no power to make a gratuitous cession, so he and Calhoun suggest that the corporation make application to congress. The council, thereupon, appoints a committee of three to prepare a memorial to congress "expressive of the wishes of this Board on the subject of Castle Clinton," and to attend to its presentation and to its progress in congress.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 352–53. See D 18.

30 The "Field Officers of the First Brigade of New York State Artillery" present a petition to the common council, stating "that they are informed it is in contemplation to continue White Street, which will cut off a part of the Arsenal yard, and will render it useless as a place of Military parade; & as there is no place yet provided for a Military parade ground they pray the Arsenal yard may be permitted to remain in its present State, until other parade ground is provided." The petition is referred to the street committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 355.

" Sundry inhabitants of Greenwich petition "to be permitted to make use of the upper room of the Watch house, corner of Hudson & Christopher Street, to assemble in for religious worship, until an Episcopal Church, which they are about building, can be erected." This is referred to the finance committee with authority "to grant the prayer of the petitioners."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 356.

Nov. — An important tariff convention composed of delegates from various parts of the U. S. opposed to high tariff rates is held in Philadelphia, and resolutions are adopted in favour of a low tariff and "the encouragement of commerce, which would increase importation but not encourage smuggling."—Scharf & Westcott, Hist. of Phila., I: 603.

9 The Mercantile Library Assn. has its inception in a meeting of merchants' clerks at the Tontine Coffee House.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 9, 1820. See also the notice for this meeting in the Com. Adv., N 3, 1820. A constitution was adopted on Nov. 27.—Post, D 2, 1820. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 549. On Feb. 12, 1821 (q.v.), the library was opened. See, further, F, 1826.

13 James Monroe and Daniel D. Tompkins are re-elected president and vice-president. They had practically no opposition.—McKee, National Conventions and Platforms, 18–20.

" The common council resolves "that the Committee on Finance be authorised to appoint a person to repair to the seat of the General Government with such Vouchers and explanations, as may be deemed necessary to obtain a liquidation of the debt due the Corporation by the United States."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 365. See D 26.

" A resolution is passed by the common council instructing the committee on laws "to examine and report to this Board, whether by charter right or Statute the Corporation possess the authority to levy and collect a tax or duty on merchandize sold on Commission in this City, being the property of non-residents, or on the persons selling such merchandize; and if such authority is vested in the Corporation whether it is expedient to levy such tax or duty."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 365.

" The common council resolves "that an application be made by this Board to the Legislature of this State, without unnecessary delay, for power to forfeit all Hogs or swine found running at large in any Street, Alley or Lane in this City," and that the counsel have charge of the application.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 383.

25 The General Society of Mechanics and Tradesmen founds the Apprentices' Library in the New York Free School building on Chatham St.—Annals of the Society (1882), 60. See Je 13, 1821.

27 The subject of altering the law "relating to Stoops so as to permit them to extend further into the Street" is brought before the common council. The decision is reached that the "present projection of stoops, cellar doors and enclosures that are now allowed to be made on the Streets, are more than is consistent with public convenience; and though a quarter projection would accommodate some persons, it would prove a serious injury to many citizens."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 393.

" The common council appoints a committee to consider the "propriety of enlarging the Park," and the cost of such an improvement.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 400; N. Y. Eve. Post, N 29, 1820. The committee reported on Feb. 5, 1821, that if all the ground between Ann St., Nassau St., and the present Park were added, the cost would be about $334,000.—Ibid., XI: 494. Nov. 27

Edmund Kean makes his first appearance in America, at the Anthony St. Theatre (see Ap 12, 1813), in the character of Richard III.—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 30, 1820. Kean performed here because the Park Theatre, which had burned on May 25 (q.v.), was not yet rebuilt. 29

The common council resolves to apply to the legislature "so to amend the Charter of this City, and the Statutes relating thereto, that the Mayor of the said City may be relieved from the performance of Judicial duties as first Judge of the several Courts of law in this city, and so as that a first Judge be appointed in and for the Court of Common Pleas in the said City,—and that the Recorder may preside in the Court of Sessions therein."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 401. On March 19, 1821, John T. Irving informed the board by letter that he had been appointed by the state "First Judge of Common Pleas in the City of New York."—Ibid., XI: 555. See F 27, 1821. Dec. 4

"On 6 December 1820 a wolf was discovered on York Island near Stuyvesants Woods & Shot at but not taken—he was seen again on the 11th within two or three Miles of the City Hall."—From De Witt Clinton's Notes on "Mazology," in N. Y. H. S. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, D 13, 1820. 6

A committee is appointed by the common council to consider the practicability of employing the paupers in the almshouse and the criminals in the penitentiary in the manufacture of porcelain.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 406. 11

A memorial to congress for the cession of Castle Clinton (see O 16) to the common council is approved by that body.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 420. See F 19, 1821. 18

J. J. Astor's Richmond Hill house is lowered from the hill to the corner of Charlton and Varick Sts. by Simeon Brown. It "was actually removed a distance of 55 feet in 45 minutes, with chimnies standing and without the slightest injury to the house or fixtures. The building is 60 by 50 feet, built of brick and planked over and containing about 130,000 bricks."—N. Y. Daily Adv., D 25, 1820; L. M. R. K., III: 951. In 1822 (q.v., F 21), the place was opened as a public resort. 21

The 200th anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims is celebrated in New York by the New England Society. Religious services are held in the Brick Church, and in the evening there is a dinner at the City Hotel.—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 23, 1820. 22

The common council accepts an invitation from the "Register of the City and County" to honour him by viewing the spacious office allotted to him in the city hall.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 422. 26

" A letter is received by the common council from Messrs. John and Nicholas Haight, "transmitting . . . for the inspection of the Members of the Board a part of a piece of Ingrained Carpeting, manufactured by them in the City, it being the first piece manufactured by them, and, as they believe, the first that has been perfectly made in the United States, with a wish that if it was found to bear a critical examination that it might receive the private testimony of the Individuals of the Board in its behalf."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 422. On Jan. 8, 1821, the committee on arts and sciences reported that the piece of carpeting was "equal if not superior in every respect to the best English Ingrained Carpeting, and that it is a perfect imitation of that article in its best state;" whereupon the resolution was adopted "that this Board view with pride and satisfaction this specimen of the Arts, and the ingenuity and perseverance of our Countrymen in bringing this important branch of Manufactures to perfection in this Country."—Ibid., XI: 448.

" The finance committee reports to the common council "that pursuant to authority granted them [see N 13], they selected and instructed General [Jacob] Morton to proceed to the City of Washington with the Vouchers necessary to establish the claim of the Corporation on the United States Government for monies expended during the late war with Great Britain. That after some discouragement and much delay, he has succeeded in obtaining a settlement of all the items in the account, . . . except that for pay to the arbitrators, against the allowance of which it appears, there is a positive rule of the Treasury Department." The amount received by the city is $36,247. The committee highly commends Gen. Morton's services, and the board decides 1820 D 26 to grant him $1,000 for the same.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 433–35.

27 A public dinner in honour of Edmund Kean is held at the City Hotel.—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 28, 1820.

1821

— In this year, the Greek war of independence began; it lasted until 1829.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 604 et seq.; Haydn's Dict. of Dates, 453.

— Early in this year, the trustees of Columbia College "adopted a new body of statutes, in which the requirements for admission were raised, and the curriculum enlarged and improved." For details, see Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1754–1904, 107–8.

— In this year, the old Bayard mansion, in the block bounded by Grand, Broome, Crosby, and Lafayette Sts., was demolished.—Greatorex, Old N. Y., II: 125. See also 1735, and L. M. R. K., III: 948, 981.

— In this year, the Phœnix Coffee House, at the south-east corner of Wall and Water Sts., was demolished.—See L. M. R. K., III: 980.

— In this year, C. Bunker occupied the large double house at No. 39 Broadway (built in 1786 by Gen. Alex. Macomb, and occupied by Washington in 1790), and established here a hotel called the Mansion House.—Haswell, Reminiscences, 121. For the early history of the ground, see L. M. R. K., III: 977; descrip. of Pl. 56, I: 422; Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 582; ibid. (1856), 518. For view of the Mansion House, see drawing by C. Burton, in the Bourne Series of N. Y. views.

— In this year, H. I. Megarey, of 96 Broadway, began to publish "the Hudson River Portfolio from drawings by Wall made in 1820."—Advertisement on back cover of The Wreath (pamphlet, 1821). The last number of the views was not issued until the autumn of 1825, or early in 1826. One of the plates is reproduced as Pl. 89, Vol. III, and the series is described in III: 571–75. See also Je 26, 1823.

Jan. 8 Henry Brevoort writes to his friend Washington Irving, who is at this time in Europe, concerning affairs in New York, particularly the rivalry between the actors Kean and Cooper, who were dividing public attention. He says: "Our greatest novelty is Mr. Kean. He played sixteen nights in the Anthony St. Theatre to crowded audiences & with enthusiastic applause. A small party of dissentients, composed of Mr Cooper's patriotic admirers protested against Kean's merits . . . Their admirers have declared open war. . . . On New Year's day he [Kean] dined at Jn° R Livingstons with a party of forty persons, among which were Cooper the Bishop and Phil: Brasher! Everything went left handed & a score of absurdities were committed. A public dinner was given him by about thirty persons at the City Hotel which went off very well. Upon the whole I think Kean's success has been as great or very nearly so, as Cooke's although his merits are certainly not in the same rank."—Hellman, Letters of Henry Brevoort to Washington Irving (N. Y. 1916), I: 133–35.

" The common council commends a painting entitled "The Court of Death," the work of Rembrandt Peale, "a native Artist," which is on exhibition at the Academy.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 436. Peale's letter of thanks is found in metal file No. 45, city clerk's record-room.

" The city inspector reports to the common council that the number of deaths during the year has exceeded that of the previous year by 329; that in August "fevers became prevalent, particularly in Bancker Street and its neighbourhood, and confined their ravages, chiefly to the people of colour." There were 299 deaths of the fever in six months, 138 of them being coloured people, "although it is presumed they were not a twentieth part of the population of the city at large."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 440–41.

" The common council is informed by a committee that the maps and surveys of Manhattan Island and its opposite shore completed by John Randel, Jr., have cost $32,484.98.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 449–50. Many of these surveys are preserved in the collections of the N. Y. H. S. and the N. Y. P. L.

12 The city acquires by condemnation proceedings the block bounded by South, Front, Fulton, and Beekman Sts., on which Fulton Market was afterwards built.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), 139.

20 The chapel of the "First Congregational Church" (see Ap 29, 1820) in Chambers St. is dedicated by Prof. Edw. Everett of Harvard.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 20, 1820. This was the Unitarian Church of the Divine Unity, the first Unitarian church built in New York City.—L. M. R. K., III: 936. Jan. 20

This church was described in 1828 as "a very ornamental edifice, the front of which is faced with white marble, with pillars in bas relief [!], and surmounted with a pediment. The interior is very elegant, the pews being finished with mahogany ornaments, carpeted and cushioned; the pulpit is raised on ornamental pillars, with an area and railing in front, before which the pews rise gradually to the rear, . . ."—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 226.

In Oct., 1843, the church being dilapidated, the congregation moved into Apollo Hall on the east side of Broadway below Canal St. In 1845 (q.v.), a new church was dedicated.—Bellows, The First Congregational Church, etc.

22 The North River Steam Boat Co. informs the common council that there are, in the company's woodyard, 500 loads of dried pine wood, "which in the present distress of the poor for fuel they would place at the disposal of the Corporation to be returned to them when requested in the Spring."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 452.

24 A fire which starts in a house in Front St. between Fulton Slip and Crane Wharf destroys about 30 buildings. The loss is estimated at $150,000.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 24, 1821. The property belonged to the city corporation, which took steps toward the collection of insurance.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 464–65. See also Ja 29 and F 5.

25 "This morning both the East and North Rivers were completely frozen over from shore to shore, a circumstance which we believe has not occurred since the year 1780."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 25, 1820. See, however, F 4, 1817.

26 Because of the extreme severity of the weather most of the clergymen in the city have agreed to take up collections in their respective churches to supply the poor with fuel.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 27, 1821.

Feb. 3 An "Esquimaux Indian in his Seal skin canoe" is exhibited "in the North river, opposite the Battery. The novelty of the scene brought together an immense concourse of spectators to witness his manœuvres. . . . About 12 o'clock, he pushed off from the Battery bridge, and with an oar which he held in the middle, with a blade at each end, he propelled his boat through the water with astonishing rapidity, running by and beating several four oared boats with ease. To shew the Indian method of striking fish, or defending themselves on the water, a target was set afloat, and when he approached within about twenty yards of it, he threw a dart several times into it with great exactness. It is judged there were upwards of ten thousand people to witness his extraordinary feats."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 3, 1821.

5 A printed petition, bearing several hundred autograph signatures, is presented to the common council, asking the board "again to consider the propriety of building a Market on the ground near Fulton-Slip [see Ja 8, Ag 6, O 7, 1816; Mr 24, 1817], now made, by the late conflagration [see Ja 24], entirely waste and unoccupied.

"If the Corporation should undertake to dispose of this ground, and not embrace this opportunity to erect a Market, your Petitioners know not where or when it will be in their power to obtain another suitable lot for this purpose, and they deprecate the entailment on posterity of the confined passages, the dirty sewer, the filth, which are, and always will be, attendant on the present Fly Market, as an evil of no common magnitude.

"So confident are your Petitioners, that the erection of this Market may be made a source of revenue, that there are individuals among them, who will take the ground, and erect the Market at their own risk, as to remuneration.

"But, your Petitioners cannot but hope the Corporation have not arrived at such a period of embarrassment, and of want of credit, as to disable them from furnishing the community with a wholesome and commodious Market Place, the scite of which would necessarily combine, for exhibition and sale, a greater quantity and variety of the necessaries and luxuries of life, than are to be found at almost any Market Place in the world."—From the original petition (printed), two copies of which have the signatures written on sheets of paper, fastened end to end and rolled up in two very long rolls, preserved in metal file No. 33, city clerk's record-room. The endorsement on one of these rolls is "Petitions for Removing the market," and, on the other, "Petition 1821 Feb. 5 of . . . In favour of Removing Fly Market." See also M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 466; De Voe, Market Book, 488. See F 17 and Mr 12.

" A committee on the subject reports to the common council that the cost of placing an iron railing around the Park will be $15,622.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 485. The board directed on March 19, that a contract for the mason work of the fence to be placed around the Park be executed, and, on April 2, one for the iron work.—Ibid., XI: 549, 570. See Je 25.

12 The Mercantile Library (see N 9, 1820) is opened in a room at No. 49 Fulton St. For an account of its development, see Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 548–51; Haswell's Reminiscences, 119. See, further, F, 1826.

17 "Franklin," in two open letters to the city corporation, criticizes in strong terms its neglect to erect the market at Fulton Slip, which was projected as early as 1815 (see Ja 8, 1816,) to replace the Fly Market, and questions its right to sell the land granted for the purpose.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 17 and 22, 1821. See F 26 and Mr 12.

19 It is reported to the common council that at the present time a bill is before the senate which authorises the president of the United States to retrocede to the corporation the lands at the Battery, either with or without the works erected thereon by the United States.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 503. However, a letter from Secretary of War John C. Calhoun, read before the board on March 19, stated that a retrocession of the site of Castle Clinton had not been authorised by congress; also that the specific application by congress of the appropriation for fortifications for the current year had put it out of his power to contribute to the repairs of the Battery, and obliged him to rescind the conditional promise of co-operation with the board on the execution of that work.—Ibid., XI: 543. See D 18, 1820, and N 27, 1821.

" A petition is read before the common council from "sundry citizens, . . . Oystermen," complaining that the garrison of the United States troops, stationed on Bedlow's Island, obstructs them "in the pursuit of their occupation, by taking them out of their Boats, and even threatening to fire upon them if they followed their occupation nigh to said island." Referred to police committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 504.

" In connection with the question before the common council of regulating and working Third Ave., the written opinion of John Wells is read, in which he says: "The first enquiry . . . is whether the third Avenue is a Street . . . or . . . a public road or highway. The subject is by no means free from difficulty, tho' from the reflection I have been able to bestow upon it, I incline to consider the third Avenue rather in the latter than in the former light. It is now the direct and nearest road to and from Harlaem Bridge, and if not already, will no doubt soon be substituted almost wholly; for the purposes of travelling instead of the old road. It . . . has been, and for a long time to come can only be valuable as lands for the purposes of agriculture or Country residences."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 515–18.

26 The common council resolves to discontinue the Evening Post as an advertising paper for the board, and to substitute the American in its place.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 520. For comment on this, see N. Y. Eve. Post, F 27, 1821. This action was ostensibly taken because the Post published the letters of "Franklin." Also, the American supported the Republican party, to which the majority of the board belonged.—Ibid., Mr 2, 1821.

" The common council adopts a law to prevent the tolling of bells for funerals. One clause refers to prohibiting the "ringing a Bell of any church in the city on sunday more than one hour before the commencement of Divine service in said church."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 521.

" The common council directs to be transmitted to the legislature a draft of a law to provide for the expense of extending the Battery, together with a memorial which reads in part: "within the last two years in consequence of a violent storm the greater part of the Bulk-head of the West side of the Battery . . . gave way, and a large quantity of earth was washed into the River . . . your Memorialists . . . deem it proper, as well for the purpose of preventing the recurrence of a similar misfortune in future as of rendering the Battery more commodious as a place of recreation, that a reef of rock should be sunk in front of it, a stone wall erected thereon, and that the intermediate spaces between the wall and the Battery should be filled in with earth." For this work it is thought necessary to raise about $150,000.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 521–24. See Mr 26, 1822. Feb. 26

The state appropriates $1,000 for the erection of a monument to those who perished on board the prison-ship "Jersey" during the Revolutionary War.—Laws of N. Y. (1821), chap. 67. See Ja 9, 1823. 27

" The legislature establishes "the court of common pleas, or county court, of the city and county of New-York." This is to take the place of the mayor's court, which dates from the year 1665, succeeding at that time the Dutch court of burgomasters and schepens. The judges of the new court are to be the same as those of the mayor's court (mayor, recorder, and aldermen), plus "a first judge of the said court," this additional official to be named by the governor and council of appointment. He must be "a counsellor of the supreme court of this state, of three years' standing," and he is to hold office "during good behavior, or until he shall have attained the age of sixty." The first judge, or the mayor, or the recorder alone, or together with one or more of the judges, shall have power to hold court. The very same judges shall hereafter have power to hold courts of general sessions of the peace; in other words, both courts, common pleas and general sessions, are to have the new "first judge" added to the bench. As before, the court of general sessions has the power "to hear, try and determine any indictment for any crime punishable with imprisonment in the state prison for life;" the presence of three judges, one of whom must be the first judge, mayor, or recorder, is necessary to hold such court.

The same act provides for altering the seal of the court first mentioned, substituting the words "Common pleas of New-York" for "Mayor's court of the City of New-York."

There is a further clause, fixing the salary of the mayor at not less than $2,000, nor more than $4,000, at the discretion of "the mayor, aldermen and commonalty."—Laws of N. Y. (1821), chap. 72. See Ap 2.

The manuscript volumes, many of them massive, covering the proceedings of this court during the years 1665–1821, are in the custody of the commissioner of records in the Hall of Records.

The N. Y. County Agricultural Show holds its spring exhibition, at "a place called 'Mount Vernon,' on the East River, just above Cato's and the Shot Tower."—De Voe, Market Book, 419. See Ap 11 and S 13, 1808. See, further, My, 1821. Mar. —

Stephen Allen is appointed mayor of New York.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 9, 1821. He took the oaths of office on March 12.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 536. He replaced Cadwallader D. Colden (see F 18, 1818) and was himself succeeded by Wm. Paulding (see Ja 19, 1824). Allen's entire official correspondence as mayor is filed in the city clerk's record-room. See Jl 27, 1852. 5

A large meeting of citizens is held at the city hall for the purpose of "adopting the means for perpetuating the infirmary [see Ag, 1820] for curing diseases of the eye." Funds were raised, and a society of the subscribers formed, who met and organized on Ap 1.—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City (1884), I: 122. See Mr 29, 1822. 9

The common council resolves, because the old Fly Market has become "extremely incommodious, and in the Summer season is so offensive as to be very prejudicial to health," to erect a public market upon the ground belonging to the corporation between Fulton St. and Crane Wharf, and, to cover the expense, to raise $15,000 annually for ten years by tax. The Fly Market is to be removed as soon as the new one is completed.—M C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 539–41. See Mr 16 and Jl 9. The new market became Fulton Market.—See D 10. See also descrip. of Pl. 104-b, III: 606. 12

A state convention having been suggested to revise the constitution, the legislature provides that, at the annual election in April, the voters shall, by ballots reading "Convention" or "No Convention," decide whether they wish such a convention. In case the decision is favourable, it is provided that the number of delegates to be chosen shall be "the same as the number of members of assembly from the respective cities and counties of the state," such delegates to be chosen at a special election on the third Tuesday of June (see Je 19) and the two succeeding days, and to assemble at Albany on the last Tuesday of August (see 13

Mar. to a referendum at a time prescribed by the convention.—Laws

14 As a bill has been introduced in the state legislature to tax bachelors over 28, "for the support of Female Literature," about 200 bachelors meet at the Auction Hotel, 123 Water St., and vote to present a remonstrance to the legislature.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 14 and 15, 1821.

16 A memorial to the common council protesting against the expense of removing the Fly Market and building a new one in another place (see Mr 12), and recommending that the market be merely repaired and enlarged, is being handed about the city for signatures.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 16, 1821.

27 The legislature authorises the common council to extend the Battery into the bay and North and East Rivers a distance not exceeding 600 feet, for a public walk and for erecting public buildings and works of defence. The money required, not exceeding $150,000, is to be raised by tax at the rate of $25,000 a year.—Laws of N. Y. (1821), chap. 172. See Mr 26, 1822.

Apr. The common council resolves to have an ordinance prepared
2 to fix the mayor's salary at $3,000 a year, and the recorder's at $1,500 a year.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 569. See F 27.

" A petition to the common council from John Jacob Astor and John K. Beekman states that they are rebuilding the Park Theatre (see My 25, 1820,) and requests permission to project in front a portico which shall extend to the curb stone, with columns whose bases shall rest on the sidewalk.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 557. The board decides it is "improper to grant it."—Ibid., XI: 603. See My 12.

3 "The filthy state of the streets, is a subject of universal complaint among our own citizens, and of mockery and reproach with strangers who visit us. Scarcely a street, particularly a wide one, but exhibits heaps of mud and dirt of the most offensive kind, raked up in the middle; which is not only obnoxious to the sight, but, also, in a dark night, very dangerous to persons passing in a carriage. The city of New York is entitled to the reproach, which it has acquired, of having the dirt[i]est streets in the Union. . . . [In Boston] by the time the sun rises the streets are principally swept by men hired for that purpose, and the dirt all carted off; so that when the shops open and the inhabitants walk forth, the state of the city is quite clean and the air salubrious. This is certainly ordering matters better than we do. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 3, 1821. See, further, My 9.

5 The editor of the Evening Post says in regard to a map recently issued by John Randel, Jr.: "This map which has just appeared from the hands of Mr. Randall, the well known surveyor of the city commissioners, is the result, we understand, of ten years of personal labor. It comprehends, besides the city and county of New York, Richmond and Long Island, the city of Philadelphia and part of the Delaware and the country adjacent, and part of Connecticut, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts, with much information, respecting both New York and Philadelphia, and their various civil institutions, &c. &c. We view this map of this city, as decidedly entitled to the preference, over any that has ever appeared, for extent, accuracy of information and arrangement. We perform a pleasure, therefore, in recommending it in strong terms to public patronage. One may be seen hanging up in this office."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 5, 1821. Concerning the map, a copy of which on satin is in the author's collection, see also S 4, 1820, and descrip. of Pl. 79, I: 473.

9 The common council grants to the General Society of Mechanics and Tradesmen a 60-years' lease of an "irregular piece of ground fronting on Chamber Street," on which the society intends to erect a school and library.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 579–82. See Je 13.

14 "Kenilworth," which "is somehow in everybody's hands," is adversely criticized by a New York editor.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 14, 1821.

20 "The friends of the real welfare of the city have reason to entertain the most sanguine hopes that they shall be able, by a salutary change of the principal members of the Common Council, to arrest that destructive course of measures, which is driving fast downhill to destruction. Let us once get possession of the minutes of the board, accompanied with a circumstantial and correct history of their proceedings for some time past, including divers trifling items of expence, such as suppers, costly wines at $40 the Apr.
dozen (not forgetting the self appropriations of the untouched 20 overplus,) hack-hire by the great, and other et ceteras, and it would form a pretty picture to be presented to plain, abstemious republicans."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 20, 1821. See Ap 25.

The "New Church in Vandewater-street, lately erected by 22 the congregation under the pastoral care of the Rev. C. F. Frey," is to be opened on this day.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 19, 1821. The Rev. Mr. Frey originally was a Congregationalist (see Je 22, 1817), but in Oct., 1821, he and his church adopted Presbyterianism, and this became the Vandewater Street Presbyterian Church.—Greenleaf, 163–64, 354–55; L. M. R. K., III: 932.

At the regular election on this and the two succeeding days 24 a ballot was taken resulting favourably for a convention to revise the state constitution (see Mr 13).—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 5, 1821. Delegates to this convention were elected in June.—See Je 19.

Another appeal for the election of anti-Tammany city officers 25 and the correction of "Corporation Abuses" is made by Editor Coleman. It states in part: "No one can stand forth and deny the oppressions and abuses of the corporation of this city. No one can deny, that we annually expend about eight hundred thousand dollars. No one can deny, that during the last three years, our assessments on the property of freeholders have amounted to more than seven hundred thousand dollars. No one can deny, that our city taxes, for the last three years, have averaged over two hundred thousand dollars per year, and that the present mayor, Stephen Allen, Esq. has estimated, that our taxes for 1822, must be two hundred and forty-four thousand dollars! We need not mention many other grievances which are intolerable, and which cannot longer be borne in silence.

"For several days past, many overwhelming accusations have been preferred against our city rulers. Enough has been said to consign any administration to lasting scorn and annihilation. No defence has been set up. . . . The friends and hirelings of the common council abandon all ideas of vindication.—They dare not even attempt a justification of our municipal oppressions.

"We must have a change of men and measures. Our charter must be amended—our corporation laws must be revised—our enormous and destructive expenditures must be reduced, or inevitable ruin awaits us. Every candid and reflecting citizen knows and feels that this is true. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 25, 1821.

Ralph Bulkley offers to the common council, under certain 30 conditions, an invention of his called the "Fire Shield," by means of which persons may approach within a few feet of a burning building with safety.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 597.

The finance committee reports to the common council that " the advantages derived by the public from working the convicts at the penitentiary appear to be much less than the cost incurred. It is a question whether "as a punishment, the Working of these Men, has the effect expected to be derived from it," and the fact "that a large proportion of the convictions at the Sessions Court, are Old Offenders," shows that "the System is wrong in some of its essential parts." The chief evil in the present system appears to be the promiscuous confinement of all grades of prisoners, by which first offenders come under the bad influence of hardened convicts. To remedy this, the committee suggests the erection, as soon as possible, of "an addition to the present building, so constructed as to contain such number of cells, as will be at least sufficient to place into solitary confinement those whose habits are so hardened as to require it."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 606–8. See N 8, 1824.

The suburban hotel at 61st St. and the East River, formerly May called Mount Vernon (see Ap 11, and S 13, 1808), is reopened by — Wm. Niblo, under the name of Kensington. It was a popular resort for several years.—Haswell, Reminiscences, 124. See, further, Mr 26, 1826.

Napoleon dies at St. Helena.—Sloane, Life of Napoleon Bona- 5

"We think we may safely challenge any part in the United 9
States, to shew off with the city of Gotham, in point of filthy, dangerous, dusty, dirty streets, gutters and alleys. In all these pleasant particulars we shall, from present appearances outdo ourselves, (and that is saying not a little) the present season. The black regiment of sweepers is dismissed, and our eyes, furniture and clothes will be all the better for it. But that is not enough. The evil is a grievous one, and requires to be reformed altogether.

1821 May 9 But this will never be the case, so long as our corporation persist in making the sale of the dirt in our streets a source of revenue. Never did a more mistaken notion of economy enter the heads of a grave body. When they are content to appropriate the whole profits arising from the manure of the streets, to pay for the labor of removing it, then will the streets of New York be as well cleaned and kept so, as those of our neighbors, Philadelphia and Boston, and not before. The first thing you hear from strangers arriving here in the summer months, is complaints and reproaches against the state of our streets. The practice of cooling some of the principal ones by water-carts is excellent, but to derive the full benefit of this practice it should be preceded by cleaning and sweeping." —N. Y. Eve. Post, My 9, 1821.

12 "Messrs. Price & Simpson have obtained a lease of the Park Theatre for seven years, which will be completed by the ensuing September. Mr. Price left this city yesterday in the James Monroe for London, with a view of reinforcing his company, and bringing out such talent and novelty as cannot fail to secure the managers a rich harvest of patronage. When their exertions for many years are considered, together with their late losses, it is but justice to say, that they merit public protection.

"The proprietors of the Park Theatre, have made considerable improvements in re-building it. It has a light and elegant roof, covered with zinc, and the accommodations of the interior are in every respect improved. It will be more comfortable in winter, and equally as cool in summer; and if the front of the Theatre is rough cast and painted, and a light iron balcony from the second story, it will be a great ornament to the city."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 12, 1821.

14 The common council is informed that four Indians of the Cherokee Tribe have applied to the almshouse for pecuniary relief. The committee on charity is authorised to grant any necessary aid.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 625.

" The collectors of taxes of the several wards inform the common council that on account of the stagnation of business they have not been able to collect "with that facility they formerly experienced."—M. C. C (1784–1831), XI: 626.

21 There are ten markets in the city, and these contain 206 stalls. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 618.

28 Junia Curtis, of Albany, presents a petition to the common council stating that for several years past he has been exploring various parts of the country in search of "Pit Coal." He is now satisfied that quantities of it may be found adjacent to the waters of the Hudson River, and he proposes that the board, as an inducement for searching for that useful article should offer a bounty for its discovery. This is referred to the committee on arts and sciences.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 634.

" The common council authorises the street committee to have the houses and lots in Hudson St. renumbered.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 634. See Ja 5, 1822.

" The superintendent of repairs is directed to purchase a bell for $55 and to place it in the steeple of Centre Market to sound the alarm in case of fire.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 657; De Voe, Market Book, 461–62. See Jl 8, 1822.

" The common council resolves to buy 52 ft. of imported "French Flax Hose" in order to give it a trial. The cost of said hose is $28.41, about half the price of good leather hose.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 657–58. See Jl 21, 1823.

" The common council grants a petition of the justices of the marine court for a railing over their windows, and orders that a railing be erected "around the East end of the Hall similar to the one around the Grand Jury Room."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 660.

30 The governors of the New York Hospital announce to the public that the Bloomingdale Asylum for the Insane (see My 7, 1818) has been completed and will be opened on June 1. "This Asylum is situated on the Bloomingdale road, about seven miles from the City Hall of the city of New York, and about 300 yards from the Hudson river. The building is of hewn free stone, 211 feet in length and 60 feet deep, and is calculated for the accommodation of about two hundred patients. Its site is elevated, commanding an extensive and delightful view of the Hudson, the East river, and the harbor of New York, and the adjacent country, and is one of the most beautiful and healthy spots on New York Island. Attached to the building are about seventy acres of land, a great part of which has been laid out in walks, ornamental grounds, and extensive gardens. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 30, 1821; L. M. R. K., III: 953. For further description, see Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 312; Man. Com. Coun. (1845), 264; Picture of N. Y. in 1846, 44. The asylum is shown in N. Y. Mirror, XI: 241, and in the Peabody Views. In 1892 (q. v., F 18), Columbia College acquired the grounds, and in 1894 (q. v., Ag —) the Asylum moved to White Plains in Westchester County. May 30

The corner-stone of St. Luke's Church is laid, at Greenwich, by Bishop Hobart.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 5, 1821. See also L. M. R. K., III: 933. It was dedicated on May 16, 1822 (q. v.), and is still standing (1926). June 4

"We are informed that Mr. [Edmund] Kean, previous to his departure from this country [on June 6], put into effect his original intention when he first arrived among us, and erected a splendid monument [!] in St. Paul's church yard in this city, to the memory of the celebrated Cooke."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 5 and 7, 1821. The monument is shown on Pl. 90, Vol. III. 7

The common council resolves to accept from the Second Regiment, First Brigade, New York State Artillery, the "Standard which was displayed at the first inauguration of George Washington, as President of the United States." The regiment feels that, "as every thing connected with that illustrous Citizen has a particular interest," this standard possesses "a species of Sanctity," and is "worthy of being preserved to after times," and that the "most proper place of Deposite would be in the hands of the Fathers of our City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 673–74. The letter to the common council offering the flag to the city is preserved in file No. 76 in city clerk's record-room, and is dated June 8, 1821. The presentation took place on June 25 (q. v.). See also N 25, 1822. 11

" The common council grants to Jeremiah Thompson, representative of an association of merchants and shipowners for establishing a telegraphic communication at New York, permission to establish an answering signal at the flagstaff to connect with Staten Island.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 671.

The General Society of Mechanics and Tradesmen (see N 25, 1820) lays the corner-stone of a Mechanics' School and Apprentices' Library at No. 21 Chambers St. (see Ap 9). The building was opened Nov. 26, 1821, and continued to be used until 1858, when a building on Crosby St. was purchased for larger accommodations. —Annals of the Society (1882), 67–68; M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 674; N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 14, 1821. The letter of invitation to the mayor and corporation to attend this ceremony is in file No. 76, city clerk's record-room. See F 16, 1824. 13

On this and the two days following, delegates to the constitutional convention were elected as provided for in the legislative act of March 13 (q. v.).—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 23, 1821; Jour. N. Y. Const. Convention, 3–6. The convention assembled at Albany on August 28 (q. v.). 19

The "Telegraph at Staten Island, recently erected by the merchants of this city, under the direction of Capt. Saml. C. Reid," is tested by a committee of merchants, and there is "scarce a single misunderstanding" of the messages by a boy stationed at the Battery flagstaff. "The simplicity of this machine, and the ease with which it is conducted, exceeds, perhaps any thing of the kind that has been got up in this or any other country. It consists of an upright and a centre, which may be managed by a boy 12 years of age. The alphabet is divided into four parts, with a distinct representation for each division so that only six motions are required to exhibit the 24 characters made use of. The alphabet is devoted to three distinct purposes—1st, substituting Letters for private signals which are much easier exhibited. 2d, references to arbitrary significations; and 3d, Telegraphing in the usual manner by spelling and making sentences."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 26, Jl 3, 1821. 23

The flag which was used at the inauguration of George Washington as first president of the U. S. is formally received by the city from the Second Regiment of State Artillery (see Je 11). The regiment parades in front of the city hall, and its commander, Col. Manley, makes the presentation. An address of thanks is returned by Mayor Allen.—Com. Adv., Je 26, 1821. The flag is still (1926) in the possession of the city, preserved in the Metropolitan Museum of Art. See Ann. Rep. of the Art Commission (1921), 11–17. 25

" The common council passes a resolution extending the eastern line of the park fence agreeable to a map proposed by the committee on public lands and places.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI:

1821 694. On July 9, the board ordered that it be connected with the June iron fence on the upper park.—Ibid., XI: 718–19. On Aug. 20, 25 the fence was being erected around the park in front of the city hall. —Ibid., XI: 768. The mason work for the iron fence (see F 5) included the erection of "four marble columns which support the iron gates at the south-west entrance."—N. Y. Mirror, VIII: 33. See also *Man. Com. 27 "The Church in Pearl street, between Chatham and Cross-st. formerly occupied by the United Christian Friends, has been recently purchased by the New Jerusalem Society, of this City, who are now fitting it up, in a style of elegant simplicity, for a permanent place of public worship. It will be consecrated, we understand, on Sunday next [July 1]."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 27, 1821. See also L. M. R. K., III: 936.

July The project of erecting a merchants' exchange is brought
3 before the Chamber of Commerce and referred to a committee. On Sept. 4, the committee reported that they considered the project expedient and had petitioned the legislature for an act of incorporation with a capital of $500,000. This action was approved.—Bishop, A Chron. of 150 Years, etc., 53–54. See Ja 27, 1823.

5 "Yesterday we were all in a bustle celebrating the 4th July Every native American was quite delighted with the numerous orations, harangues, feu[x]de joie &c which had been preparing for weeks for this purpose—Business here is rather brisker, but not enough yet—In this City the different merchants & Storekeepers have formed Societies for preventing Sales by Auction pledging themselves not to purchase any thing at them for a certain time, What the Auctioneers will do I know not."—From a letter written by George N. Gracie, of New York, to his uncle, July 5, 1821, in Tomlinson collection of N. Y. P. L.

" Peter Jay writes to his father: "There is now so much idle capital in the City that upon pledges of stock money can be borrowed at 5 pr. Ct. Stock of all kinds is enormously high; even 5 pr. Ct. Stock sells at 7 pr. Ct. above par . . . There is generally a fashion in the money market as elsewhere. Some years ago it was the fashion to employ capital in Manufactures; nobody does so now."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 452.

" The "Block House, on Mill Rock, Hell Gate," built in 1814 (q.v., Jl 15), is consumed by fire.—National Advocate, Jl 7, 1821.

9 Several inhabitants having petitioned for the erection of a new market on the "Canal Street Basin," the finance committee reports unfavourably on the project. It states that the city has recently taken measures for the removal of the Fly Market at an expense of $200,000, the reason assigned being that the Fly Market "stood over a sewer," and that therefore "the presence of the Mammoth Sewer of Canal Street" should be a valid objection against building a market on the site alluded to. The committee feels that a compliance with the petition would be "a wanton waste of public Treasure," and that "Individual speculations ought not to be encouraged by misapplications of public Money." The common council therefore resolves to deny the request.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 714. See Mr 12 and Ag 20.

" A law concerning the imprisonment of slaves is presented by the mayor to the common council, and is passed.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 725.

" The city pays Tucker & Woodruff $1,000 on account for building the Park fence (see Je 25).—Journal C, 159, comptroller's office; M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 727. On Oct. 15, they received $2,500 for mason work for the fence.—Ibid., XII: 70. See also Ag 20.

14 George Youle acquires the property on the East River between 53d and 54th Sts. on which he later built his shot-tower (see O 6).—Man. Com. Coun. (1869), 884, citing Liber Deeds, CLIII: 449–54; L. M. R. K., III: 963–64; descrip. of Pl. 102-a, III: 601.

23 A recommendation is presented to the common council that, in the construction of wharves, spaces be left between the planks, in such a way as to enable persons who might accidentally fall from them into the river to regain the top of the wharf.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 732.

" The common council resolves that the engine and hose-cart house on Broadway near the bridewell be removed; and that the superintendent of repairs be authorised to contract for building a one-storey brick house for Engine No. 25 on the piece of ground opposite the Rotunda.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 736–37.

" The board grants engine No. 28 to the inhabitants of Manhattanville, and passes a resolution to build an engine-house there. July
—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 738. 23

The common council empowers the watch committee to devise a painted plate which the city watchmen may wear while on duty, if they prefer, on the front of their own hats, instead of wearing the caps now in use.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 746. Special caps had been worn by the members of the watch for over a century. "

A public meeting at the city hall having been called by certain 25 clergymen "for the purpose of devising measures to prevent the profanation of the Lord's day," a proceeding which many New Yorkers consider "an attempt to encroach upon the liberties of the citizens," a great number of people assemble at the appointed time, and place, vote down the clergy, and resolve "That the citizens of New York deem it inexpedient, that the Clergy should interfere with the local concerns of the city, or the Police thereof, and that such interference is highly improper."—*N. Certain inhabitants of the southern part of the city inform 20 the common council that "when the intended Removal of the Fly Market shall take place, they will be put to great inconvenience unless accomodated with another market nigher to them." They ask that a market be erected at Old Slip.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 765–66. See O 1.

The board passes a resolution to open 34th St. from the easterly " side of Second Ave. to Third Ave.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 776.

A committee reports to the common council that John C. "
Stevens and Robert L. Stevens agree to put on the ferry from Barclay St. to Hoboken, in place of the two team boats now in use, a "very superior steam Boat from 90 to 100 feet on deck, and 42 feet beam," to be built of the best cedar and oak. The committee believes that, among other advantages, the "Steam Boat will make the passage in less than half the time taken by the Team Boats."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 777–79. See Ap 22, 1822.

The city pays B. Birdsall $4,000 on account for the "Iron Fence " at the Park."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XI: 782. On Oct. 15, he received an additional $2,000.—Ibid., XII: 70. On Dec. 10, $2,500 more.—Ibid., XII: 143. See also Journal C, 173, comptroller's office; and Jl 9. See, further, Ap 15, 1822.

"The Board appointed to select an address for the opening of 23

A convention of delegates to revise the state constitution (see 28
Je 19) assembles at Albany, and "every thing wears an auspicious appearance," writes Ogden Edwards, counsel to the corporation and one of the delegates, to Mayor Allen. Daniel D. Tompkins is chosen as presiding officer.—From the original letter, filed in city clerk's record-room; Jour. N. Y. Const. Convention, 3–7; N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 28, 1821. 1821 Sept. 3 A "Tremendous gale" strikes New York causing much damage. "When the gale was at its height it presented a most awful spectacle. The falling of slate from the roofs of the buildings, and broken glass from the windows, made it unsafe for any one to venture into the streets. . . . The tide, although low water when the gale commenced, rose to an unusual height, overflowing all the wharves and filling the cellars of all the stores on the margin of the East and North rivers. Great quantities of lumber, and other property on the wharves, have either been floated off or been damaged. . . .

"The wharves on the North river are all injured, the frame work being generally started from the foundation. . . . The Steam Boat dock at Market field street is destroyed. The Battery is partly inundated, the earth washed away as far as the first row of trees, and the lamps in front of the Flag staff, together with the benches, all carried away. . . . The wharves on the East river were very much injured, some entirely destroyed—all so much so that its dangerous for carts to venture on them. . . . Some houses were unroofed and blown over, in the upper part of the city. One in Broadway, near the Lead Factory was blown down and killed ten cows. . . . A number of trees were prostrated in the Park. . . . The brick bats, tile, slates, lead, &c. from the tops of houses, and limbs of trees, were flying in every direction. A man was struck by a sign board in the Bowery, and had his arm broken—The Bloomingdale Road we understand is almost impassable by the falling of trees." Besides this, five boats were destroyed and eight injured in the wharves of the city, about ten chimneys were blown down, and many ships in the harbour were damaged.—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 4 and 5, 1821.

29 Gas-lights are tried at the Park Theatre, and found to be very satisfactory. "The color of the light is whiter than that of oil, & more brilliant. We understand that the proprietor proposes to the owners of the theatre, to furnish ample light for the house at a much less expence than it is done at present, and will warrant it will be not only free of smell, but what is of more consequence, free of that degree of smoke which is not only injurious and offensive to the eyes, but proceeding from lamps, is nearly ruinous to the light silk dresses of the ladies."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 1, 1821.

Oct. 1 A letter is received from Michael Paff tendering to the common council a large medallion of the late Gen. Washington, to be placed in the scroll or filigree work of the centre gate at the south end of the park. Referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 37.

" A memorial is received by the common council stating that a desire has been expressed by several citizens "to adorn the Columns at the South End of the Park, with the Busts of the Four late Presidents of the United States;" also to place in the centre of the park a statue of the "Great Washington." Referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 37. See Mr 6 and 18, 1822. A list of articles deposited in the corner-stone was published in N. Y. Com. Adv., O 2, 1821. When the columns were removed, this account was reprinted in the same paper, for Dec. 17, 1847, and a discrepancy noted between the articles enumerated in 1821 and those found.

" The common council passes the following resolutions:

"Resolved that whenever the Corporation shall deem it expedient to Remove Fly Market, that part thereof known as the Fish Market be carefully taken down and the Materials removed to the Old Slip.

"Resolved, that a Market be built at Old Slip [see Ag 20] between Water and Front Streets, under the direction of the Market Committee, and that such part of the above materials as are suitable be used in the construction thereof."—*M. "The new stone Shot-Tower, erecting by Mr. G. Youle [see Jl 14], at Bellevue between the New Alms House and Kensington House, and which had attained the height of about 110 feet," falls, "breaking off about 16 to 20 feet above its base."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 8, 1821; descrip. of Pl. 102-a, III: 601. The cause of the occurrence is ascribed to "the repeated heavy blasts among the rocks in the neighborhood, jarring the wall while green."—*N. In a letter to his father, Peter Jay says that, at the convention for revising the state constitution, "The discussion [regarding the appointment of justices of the peace] has produced violent animosity between the followers of Mr. V. Beuren and the N. York delegation, and the latter seem to me to be alarmed and to be acting feebly."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 453. See N 15. 10

The corner-stone of an English Lutheran Church is to be laid in Walker St. near Broadway on this day.—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 20, 1821; M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 55. This became St. Matthew's.—L. M. R. K., III: 929. The church was opened on Dec. 22, 1822 (q. v.). 22

Joseph Cowell, the comedian, arrives in New York. In 1844, he wrote the following impressions of his first visit to the Park Theatre: "The exterior of the threatre was the most prisonlike-looking place I had ever seen appropriated to such a purpose. . . . The house was excessively dark; oil, of course, then was used, in common brass Liverpool lamps, ten or twelve of which were placed in a large sheet-iron hoop, painted green, hanging from the ceiling in the centre, and one, half the size, on each side of the stage. The fronts of the boxes, were decorated, if it could be so called, with one continuous American ensign, a splendid subject, but very difficult to handle properly, but this was designed in the taste of an upholsterer and executed without any taste at all; the seats were covered with green baize, and the back of the boxes with whitewash, and the iron columns which supported them covered with burnished gold! and looking as if they had no business there, but had made their escape from the Coburg. The audience came evidently to see the play, and be pleased, if they possibly could, with everything; the men, generally, wore their hats; at all events, they consulted only their own opinion and comfort in the matter; and the ladies, I observed, very sensibly all came in bonnets, but usually dispossessed themselves of them, and tied them, in large bunches, high up to the gold columns; and as there is nothing a woman can touch that she does not instinctively adorn, the varied colours of the ribands and materials of which they were made, were in my opinion a vast improvement to the unfurnished appearance of the house."—Cowell, Thirty Years passed among the Players in Eng. and Am. (N. Y., 1844), Part II, p. 57. See O 31, 1822. 24

As a result of a resolution on the subject adopted on July 1 (M. C. C., 1784–1831, XI: 726), an ordinance is presented to the common council prohibiting the practice of "Washing Horses at the Public Pumps in the City, and of Dyers and Scourers washing articles of their trade at the Pumps." This is passed by the board under the title of a "Law respecting the Public Pumps and to prevent the Drying of Cloth in the Streets."—Ibid., XII: 92. 29

The state constitutional convention, which began its session on Aug. 28 (q. v.), ends its labours, and 98 out of 106 delegates append their names to the amended constitution. The engrossed document is deposited with the secretary of state, together with an "address to the people," a part of which reads: "Probably, the amended constitution, now submitted, is not, in all its provisions, in exact accordance with the desires of any individual member of the con- Nov. 10 1821 Nov. 10 vention; but in the spirit of mutual concession and compromise, we have come to a result which we hope the people, actuated by the same spirit, will approve and ratify." By a resolution of the convention, a special election was fixed for the three days beginning "on the third Tuesday of January next." at which time ballots for or against the amended constitution shall be cast.

The following are some of the significant changes embodied in the new constitution: The long preamble of the former document (see My 8, 1777) is entirely omitted. The senate is to consist of 32 members, who must be freeholders. The assembly is to number 128. Members of the legislature are prohibited from receiving any appointment from the governor or senate during their term, and members of congress and persons holding judicial or military offices under the U. S. are declared ineligible. Compensation of members shall not exceed $3. per day. The governor's term is shortened from three years to two. The present governor, as well as the members of the present legislature, shall continue in office until Jan. 1, 1823, and hereafter the political year shall begin on Jan. 1 instead of July 1. Whereas the first constitution made no distinction between blacks and whites in qualifications for suffrage, the "person of colour" must now meet a more rigid test as to residence and property holding. The council of appointment is abolished. Judges are to be named by the governor with the consent of the senate; other state officers, in general, are chosen by the legislature; mayors of cities, including New York, are selected by the common councils, and it is provided particularly that the common council in New York shall appoint justices, assistant justices, and their clerks. The provision of the old constitution making clergymen ineligible for any civil or military office, after being a subject of much debate, is continued. Lotteries are prohibited. A census is to be taken once in ten years instead of once in seven, and a new article is introduced (Art. VIII) providing for amendments.—Jour. N. Y. Const. Convention, 523–60; Lincoln, Const. Hist. N. Y., I: 192–221, 637–756. For a comment on the amended constitution, by Peter Jay, one of the delegates from Westchester Co., see N 15. The document was ratified by the people, Jan. 15, 1822 (q.v.).

12 Mayor Allen sends a communication to the common council stating that the great number of tavern licenses issued gives a "facility to the procurement of Ardent Spirits which was of incalculable injury to the Morals, the property and the Happiness of Society," and recommending an application to the legislature for permission to lay a higher duty upon such licenses and thereby restrict the number.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 96; N. Y. Eve. Post, N 16, 1821. On Dec. 24, the board directed the counsel to draft a law reducing the highest price for a license from $55 to $30, increasing the lowest price from $10 to $15, and providing that licenses should be granted by a board of commissioners instead of by one person.—Ibid., XII: 161–63.

15 Peter Jay writes from New York to his father: "The Convention adjourned on Saturday [Nov. 10, q. v.], and I immediately went on board the Steamboat and arrived here on Sunday Morning. You will see the new Convention [constitution] in the newspapers. Many of the Democratic members were dissatisfied with it, but did not dare to separate from their party. I think its chief defects are making the right of suffrage universal, rendering the judges of the Supreme Court dependent, and vesting the power of appointment in almost all instances in the Legislature. There seems to be a passion for universal suffrage pervading the Union. There remain only two States in which a qualification in respect of property is retained. When those who possess no property shall be more numerous than those who have it the consequence of this alteration will, I fear, be severely felt. . . .

"The builders are now roofing the new houses in Walker Street. The Lutheran Church in that Street is begun, and the foundation nearly done."—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, IV: 454–55.

22 "This day, at 12 o'clock, will be added, to the American Museum (where it will remain a few days only) Williams' Patent Railway and Fancy Coach. The persons sitting in the coach can move themselves forward very rapidly, with a slight exertion. There is one now in the Boston Museum, which is much admired, particularly by the ladies, being a pleasant exercise. (This also shews how steam will drive carriages.) Also, a carriage, similar to one the Hon. Wm. Gray has on his wharf in Boston on which one man drew 4,500 lbs. This Railway, the patentee considers far cheaper than any other (good) one ever offered to the public, in Europe or America; he will attend, to give further information on the subject; he believes that a Railway, on this cheap plan from New Brunswick to Trenton, &c. to carry passengers, &c. by steam, would be very useful and profitable."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 22, 1821. Nov. 22

27 The government of The Netherlands, through the minister of the colonies, on this day authorised the sale at public auction of certain books and papers belonging to the old East and West India Companies, of a date prior to 1700, which were stored at Amsterdam, and which "by dampness, vermin and repeated removals had been considerably damaged, and become defective and useless." Under this order were apparently included practically all the records of the Assembly of the XIX, the records of the Amsterdam Chamber of the West India Company, and the records of New Netherland prior to the administration of Director-General Kieft, which at different times had been sent to Holland for examination by the directors of the company. Much original material bearing upon the history of New Netherland was thus lost, and there is therefore much uncertainty regarding the period of first settlement.—New Neth. Docs. (Huntington Library, 1924), ix–x. See also report of J. Romeyn Brodhead on his researches, printed in the general introduction of N. Y. Col. Docs., I: xxv, and Stokes's Iconography, II: 161.

" Another memorial to congress in regard to the ceding to the corporation of Castle Clinton, and the ground at that place formerly granted to the United States, is approved by the common council.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 113. A letter was received on Feb. 18, 1822, stating that the law reconveying to the corporation the ground occupied by Fort Clinton had passed the house and had gone to the senate.—Ibid., XII: 230. On July 8, 1822, word was received that in pursuance to a law of the United States authorising the cession of Castle Clinton and the adjacent grounds to the corporation when they are no longer wanted for public defence, the president had directed the commandant of the department to report when Castle Clinton could be evacuated.—Ibid., XII: 458–59. See F 19, 21, and 24, 1823.

" The common council receives word from John Vanderlyn that he has finished the portrait of President James Monroe, and that he invites the board to view it in the Rotunda (see Je 21, 1824), where it now hangs. He is also painting the portrait of Gen. Jackson.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 114–15.

" Melatiah Nash recommends to the common council that a room in the city hall be appropriated to a clock, and to such astronomical instruments as would be required to regulate the same by celestial observations; that a competent person be appointed to regulate this clock, from which the public clocks in the city may be regulated, and that this person keep a register of meteorological observations. Also that a permanent circle be established near the city hall, through which a true meridian line being drawn, and a magnetic needle suspended in the centre, the actual variation of the compass would be shown, and the diurnal and annual change of the magnetic variation be obtained. Referred to a committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 115. For the carrying out of the suggestion regarding the clock, see My 19, 1828; N 16, 1829; My 17, 1830; F 7 and My 2, 1831; Ja 12, 1832.

Dec. 10 The Society for the Prevention of Pauperism calls the attention of the common council to the situation of the numerous intelligence offices in the city, saying that they are "nurseries of Idleness and vice" which ought to be brought under municipal control, and licensed in the same manner as pawnbrokers and venders of second-hand clothing.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 133. On April 1, 1822, the mayor stated to the board that an act for the better government of the almshouse, and also one relating to the intelligence offices in the city, had just been passed by the legislature.—Ibid., XII: 295.

" A memorial is received by the common council from the directors of the New York Eye Infirmary stating that the institution had been founded in this city for the cure of indigent persons afflicted with blindness and other diseases of the eye. The institution is now in complete operation, and the number of cases presented to it far exceeds any expectation. Eleven hundred persons have been under its care so far. The funds for this work coming from the voluntary contributions of individuals are wholly inadequate, and therefore the patronage and aid of the corporation are requested. This was referred to the committee on charities.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 134–35.

1821 Dec. 10 The common council agrees that the stands in Fulton Market (see Mr 12) be leased at public auction to the highest bidders on Dec. 18 for five years. No stand, however, is to be rented for less than $100.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 139–40. On Dec. 11, the butchers held a general meeting and protested against the conditions of sale.—De Voe, Market Book, 490–92. Only a few stands were rented on Dec. 18, and, after several conferences between the corporation and the butchers, a second sale was held on Jan. 3, 1822, when most of them were disposed of.—Ibid., 492–95. See Ja 17, 1822.

24 The common council resolves that a committee of five be appointed for the purpose of ascertaining and reporting on "the best and most practicable means" of supplying the city of New York with an "ample supply of pure and wholesome water;" that this committee have power to cause and procure any plans, drawings, surveys, estimates, and calculations relative to the subject which may be needed; that the expense shall not exceed two hundred dollars.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 168–69. The committee was appointed on Jan. 7, 1822.—Ibid., XII: 175. See Mr 6, 1820, and Ap 1, 1822.

— In this year, the U. S. Government bought at New York, the steamship "Decoy" (6 guns) and the steam galliot "Sea Gull" (3 guns); and began the construction here of the frigate "Sabine" (44 guns).—The Navy of the U. S., 1775 to 1853 (Wash., 1853).

— In this year, the American edition of Rees' Cyclopedia, in 41 volumes, with six additional volumes of plates, was completed in Philadelphia. It contained 147 engravings, and up to this time was the most costly publication attempted in the U. S.—Scharf & Westcott, Hist. of Phila., I: 605.

— "The trade of New York has increased beyond all precedent since the peace with Britain in 1815. Formerly Philadelphia had the greatest share of the commerce of the United States, now the case is altered; 'the duties annually collected in the single port of New York being equal to two-thirds of the whole amount of duties collected in the United States. One great drawback to the prosperity of Philadelphia is the long navigation from the ocean to the city (about 130 miles), and the river being frozen sometimes for two or three months in winter. The harbour of New York has been frozen only once since 1780," namely during the winter of 1821, when people walked over to Staten Island.—Neilson, Recollections of a six years' residence in the U. S. of Am. (Glasgow, 1830), 39.

— "The building, commonly known by the name of the Bridewell, is occupied in its middle apartments by the keeper and his family. The East wing, or end, is called the Bridewell; and the West end, the City Prison. [The rooms are described.] . . . A whipping post was erected a few years since in the Bridewell yard; but the infliction of the punishment was found to be so revolting to the feelings of the Community, that the post has been removed. . . . They [the prisoners] are frequently seen chained to wheelbarrows, and occupied in repairing the public roads between New-York and Haerlem . . . The new buildings constructing on the bank of the East River [at Bellevue], three miles from the City, and now nearly completed, will supersede the use of those, which are at present occupied. [The buildings are described.] . . . New-York almost everywhere wears the vivid appearance of an entirely new city. Indeed, a great part of what was old has been either pulled down or burnt down; and wherever this has been the case, has been rebuilt in a handsomer manner. . . . Hackney coaches are now employed in considerable numbers. . . . The surface [of the island of Manhattan] has naturally very little beauty, and nothing which approximates to grandeur. The soil, also, is generally indifferent, and in most cases lean. A considerable portion of it is still unproductive; consisting of marshes, cold and dreary, or of rocky and desolate elevations. The surface rises in an undulatory manner, as you advance towards the North. The acclivities are numerous, and frequently easy; and the vallies are open, and sometimes graceful. Art has here extensively beautified the surface, and enriched the soil, throughout the Southern half of the island, and probably at a future period, these improvements will be extended over the whole. About six miles of the Northern end are little cultivated. The remainder is set at small distances with cheerful habitations, with well-stocked gardens, and neat enclosures: while the heights, and many of the lower grounds, contain a rich display of gentlemen's country seats, connected with a great variety of handsome appendages. No part of the United States has such a numerous collection of villas within so small a compass; nor is any ride in this country made so cheerful by the hand of art, as the first six miles on the Bowery road; and, indeed, the whole distance to Haerlem Bridge. . . . Between Haerlem heights, and the bridge, is built the village of Haerlem on both sides of a small creek. It contains about seventy or eighty houses; most of them neat; and among them several country seats, belonging to citizens of New York; together with a church, of the Dutch communion. The appearance of this village is cheerful and pleasant. On a plain at a small distance from this village are the New York race-grounds."—Travels, by Timothy Dwight, 448–84. 1822 —

In this year, the congregation of the First German Reformed Church sold its building at 64–66 Nassau St. to the South Baptist Church and moved to 21 Forsyth St.—Liber Deeds, CLIX: 405; CCCVII: 552; L. M. R. K., III: 928, 935. —

In this year, Scottish weavers built their homes and workshops in West 17th St., between Sixth and Seventh Aves., and named the locality "Paisley Place." Forty years later, these buildings were still standing.—See view and description in Man. Com. Coun. (1863), 631–33. See also Ap 26, 1813. —

In this year, Isaac T. Ludlam, city surveyor, made a map of the Common Lands, to show how the old lots laid down on Goerck's map of March 1, 1796 (q.v.) were affected by the laying out of avenues and streets under the commissioners appointed in 1807. Ludlam's map is filed as Map No. 135, in bureau of topography, borough president's office. See also F 15, 1817; and descrip. of A. Jan. 5 "It will be admitted by every one that as a measure of general convenience nothing of a minor kind, presents itself to the consideration of the corporation, more urgent than the numbering of our houses or lots. The suggestion has often been made, sometimes so far attended to by the Board as to induce them to appoint a person to undertake it, but it has never been accomplished. Last year a formal petition was presented in favor of one particular street and granted [see My 28, 1821]; but it was found out that it was too late in the season, as the city directory was made up to square with the old numbers. But it was proposed by a Committee that the numbering of all our houses should be postponed to the present year, and that the work should then be begun in sufficient season, to extend it to the whole city. The time has arrived; and we humbly hope that one or two competent persons will be speedily appointed to enter upon the business and to proceed without interruption till it shall be finished."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 5, 1822. See Mr 4.

7 Evan Lewis, vice-president of the American Convention for the Abolition of Slavery, informs the common council by letter of a resolution passed by the convention on Nov. 29 thanking the board for the use of the common council chamber for this meeting. He also wrote at some length of the objects and the vast importance of the cause in which the convention was engaged.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 174–75.

" The common council resolves that "Cross Lane" be received by the corporation as a public street agreeable to a map filed in the street commissioner's office by Samuel Jones in 1806.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 180. Cross Lane was east of Broadway, between Bleecker and W. 4th Sts. It is now known as Great Jones Alley, and as Shinbone Alley.

15 At a special election held on this and the two following days, the new constitution, adopted by the convention of 1821 (q.v., Ag 28 and N 10), was approved by the voters of the state.—Lincoln, Const. Hist. of N. Y., I: 192, 752, 754. Several of the most important provisions took effect on the last day of February, 1822, the legislature took the oath to support it on the first Monday in March, elections under it were held on the first Monday in November, and the whole went into effect on Dec. 31.—Ibid. See also Mr 4, 1822, and Ja 6, 1823.

17 "The revenue arising from Fulton Market is much greater than the most sanguine of its friends ever calculated upon.—That part of it which has already been rented, amounts to nearly $29,000 per ann. and when it is completed and the whole under

1822 improvement, it will yield a revenue rising of 30,000 dollars.—
Jan. When the other markets are disposed of upon a similar plan and 17 regulations, as the Fulton Market, . . . then will not only the revenue of the city treasury be much increased, but the citizens will be better accommodated."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 17, 1822. The market was opened on Jan. 22 (q. v.).

22 Fulton Market is opened for business.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 23, 1822. It is shown in Halsey's Pictures of Early N. Y. on Dark Blue Staffordshire Pottery, 159. De Voe quotes a newspaper of this date as stating: "The Fly Market, or, as our forefathers used to call it, the Vlie, is to be deserted this day. The bustle commenced yesterday, and many an epicure, who for years has been habitually fatting upon the good things of the Fly, will hereafter be gratified by visiting the Fulton Market."—De Voe, Market Book, 238. See also, descrip. of Pl. 25, I: 245. Fulton Market was abandoned in 1914.—N. Y. Times, Ap 22, 1914; L. M. R. K., III: 959.

27 The Greeks proclaim their independence of Turkey.—Emerson, Hist. of the 19th Cent., II: 685.

Feb. The common council receives a letter from Charles E. Dudley,
4 mayor of Albany, stating that the corporation of Albany, believing that the distance between Albany and New York was less than the regulations of the post office "had fixed it at," had caused a survey to be made, which resulted in reducing the distance so that letters now pay 12½ cents, instead of 18 cents as formerly.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 204–5. On March 18, the common council resolved that one half of the expense of this survey, or $121.87, be paid to the corporation of Albany.—Ibid., XII: 281–82, 334. See also Journal C, 230, comptroller's office.

13 J. Bennett, of Philadelphia, addresses a petition to congress in which he states that he has invented "a machine by which a man can fly through the air—can soar to any height—steer in any direction—can start from any place, and alight without risk of injury," and asks that a special law be passed securing to him and his heirs for 40 years "the right of steering flying machines through that portion of the earth's atmosphere which presses on the United States, or so far as their jurisdiction may extend." The petition came before congress on March 25, and after some joking about it, it was laid on the table.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 28, 1822.

" The General Theological Seminary (see My 1, 1819, and 1820) re-opens, with 23 students, in the rooms of the Trinity Church school, on the N. E. corner of Canal and Varick Sts.—Perry, Hist. of the Am. Epis. Ch., II: 516. It was incorporated on April 5 (q. v.). The corner-stone of the first building was laid on July 28, 1825 (q. v.).

18 Mayor Stephen Allen addresses the common council on the subject of the employment of the convicts and others confined at the almshouse, to the advantage of the public and the improvement of those employed. He concludes with the recommendation that the sum of $3,750 be spent for the erection of a stepping-mill at Bellevue. This is approved.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 230. On Aug. 5, the mayor reported that he had examined the stepping-mill now erecting at Bellevue for the purpose of employing convicts in grinding grain. One wheel of this was already completed, and it seemed to answer the expectation "formed of it."—Ibid., XII: 488–89. James Hardie, in 1824 (q. v.), published a History of the Tread-mill, containing a plate showing it in action. See also, O 28.

" The common council resolves that a committee be appointed to commemorate in a suitable manner the adoption of the new constitution of the state of New York by the free suffrages of the people.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 242.

21 The common council agrees to unite with sundry bakers and dealers in flour in a petition to the legislature asking "that the Law in relation to the inspection of Flour be so amended as that all Flour whether for home consumption or otherwise Should be subject to inspection." There are at present about 5,000 barrels of flour in the city short of weight, and since last March there have been offered for inspection 1,542 barrels which were on an average more than three pounds underweight. As there are about 20,000 families in the city, each consisting of about 6 persons who consume one pound per person per day, this makes an annual total consumption of 224,475 barrels, and, at the above-mentioned loss of three pounds per barrel and at the present price of $6 a barrel, the total annual loss to the community amounts to $20,610.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 247–48. The law requested was passed on March 29.—Laws of N. Y. (1821), chap. 117. Feb. 21

" T. Patrick announces that he and Capt. J. Dench have "taken that beautiful House which so recently attracted thousands to see lowered from the top of what was called Richmond Hill, the property of J. J. Astor, Esq. [see D 21, 1820]. There will be a very spacious and handsome garden enclosed and laid out for the purpose of giving grand Gala Exhibitions of Fireworks, Concerts, &c.—The house will be fitted up for the reception of the most genteel company, with Music room, Reading Room, &c. all the daily papers in the city, Wine, Liquors, &c. of every description and of the best quality."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 21, 1822. The house and grounds now became known as "Richmond Hill Garden."—Haswell, Reminiscences of an Octogenarian, 133; L. M. R. K., III: 951; descrip. of Pl. 55-a, I: 417. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 17, 1822. See, further, D 23.

23 The Massachusetts legislature passes "an act establishing the city of Boston." This is known as its first city charter, and by it the municipal government of Boston was changed from the town form to that of a city. The charter was approved by the people on March 4, and the new city government was organized in Faneuil Hall on May 1 with John Phillips as mayor.—Winsor, Mem. Hist. of Boston, III: 215–25.

Mar. The adoption of the new constitution (see Jl 15) is celebrated 4 as a "jubilee" in New York City. Flags are displayed on the forts, the shipping, and the public buildings, church bells are rung, and salutes are fired from 52 pieces of cannon (representing the 52 counties in the state). Gen. Morton's corps of artillery parades from the Battery to the city hall. At 2 p. m., the corporation received the congratulations of the citizens and the military. In the evening, the city hall, the Park Theatre, and other public places were illuminated.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 4, 1822.

" The council adopts a resolution to number the houses in Forsyth, Hudson, Harman, Cherry, and Greenwich St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 256.

6 At a general meeting at Washington Hall, it is resolved "That an equestrian statue of bronze, with appropriate ornaments and inscription, be erected in some conspicuous part of this city, to the memory of George Washington, the illustrious Father of his country, in a style commensurate with his fame, and comporting with the dignity and character of the metropolis of this important state." A committee of 18 prominent persons is appointed to carry the resolution into effect and to confer with the corporation on the subject.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 7, 1822; descrip. of Pl. 100, III: 592. See Mr 18 and Ap 4. For earlier unsuccessful attempts toward this end, see D 15, 1802, and Ja 20, 1806.

18 The common council appoints a committee to confer with a committee already appointed by a meeting of the citizens of New York City on March 6 (q. v.), for the purpose of adopting measures for erecting a statue of General Washington.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 263. On Dec. 9, the board was informed that the cost of erecting this statue would be $50,000.—Ibid., XII: 584–85. See O 1, 1821, and Ap 14, 1823.

22 The legislature authorises the common council, if necessary, "to cause public markets to be erected and kept over the waters of the East and North rivers adjoining to any of their docks or wharves in the city of New-York."—Laws of N. Y. (1822), chap. 51.

" The legislature grants a charter to the New York Mechanic and Scientific Institution—Laws of N. Y. (1822), chap. 88. Its charter, constitution and by-laws were printed in a pamphlet in 1823. One of these is in the N. Y. P. L.

23 The "property on Wall-street owned by Judge Verplanck, occupied at present by Mr. Morewood, comprising three lots, or about 74 feet front, by 120 feet deep," is purchased by the directors of the U. S. Branch Bank. "It is an excellent scite for a superb edifice."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 25, 1822. The deed was dated March 27, and recorded on April 11 in Liber Deeds, CLIX: 315. The property was at the present 30–32 Wall St. The Verplanck mansion was demolished in this year, but the epidemic of yellow fever delayed the erection of the bank building, the corner-stone of which was not laid until May 23, 1823 (q. v.).—Fay, Views of N. Y., 52; L. M. R. K., III: 924, 975. See also Ap 22, 1823. For the early history of this property, most of which was included in the grant from Gov. Kieft to Jan Jansen Damen on April 25, 1644 (q. v.), see 22d Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1917), 592–620. See also descrips. of Pl. 166, III: 848, and A. Pl. 12-b, III: 872.

1822 Mar. 26 The common council is informed that the arsenal owned by the United States is inconveniently situated, and that the government is desirous of exchanging its situation for one in, or near, this city on the North River. The subject is referred to the committee on public lands and places.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 289.

" The committee to which were referred the improvements at the Battery reports to the common council that contracts have been made for 2,000 tons of stone; that these with the quantity received from Bellevue will be sufficient in all probability to protect the grounds from further waste.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 289–90. At the meeting on May 13, the board directed that the contracts be executed.—Ibid., XII: 375. See F 26, 1821.

29 The "New-York Eye Infirmary" is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1822), chap. 78. The next year, the legislature granted the institution $1,000 a year for two years.—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City (1884), I: 122. See also Laws of N. Y. (1824), chap. 245; ibid. (1826), chap. 293, and later laws. In 1864, the charter was amended, and the society's name changed to its present form, "The N. Y. Eye and Ear Infirmary."—Lossing.

30 Congress authorises the reconveyance to the city of New York of "the Tract of Land on and near the west head of the Battery, (so called,) in the City of New-York, heretofore granted to the United States by the Mayor and Corporation of said city," whenever it is no longer required "as a military position for the defence of the Harbor of the City of New York;" as well as to cause "the works erected thereon to be dismantled, and the materials thereof to be disposed of."—Acts of Cong. (1822), chap. 17.

" The corner-stone of a new Christ Church is to be laid in Anthony (Worth) St. near Broadway on this day.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 29, 1822. The congregation of the Ann St. Church had purchased the Anthony Street Theatre property at the present 79–85 Worth St. and demolished the theatre. The new church was built on the theatre site and opened on March 29, 1823 (q. v.).—Mag. Am. Hist. (1888), XIX: 60–61; Greenleaf, 65–67; L. M. R. K., III: 932, 982.

Apr. 1 A cartman petitions the common council for relief from a fine incurred by bringing a cask of water to the City Hotel on Sunday morning.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 292.

" The finance committee, to which was referred a resolution providing for the fixing of rent upon some of the public offices in the city hall, reports to the common council that previous to the building of the city hall the public officers generally kept their offices at their own homes, so that when a person had business with several of them he must go half round the city to find them. This was a great public inconvenience. In order to remedy this, and for the greater safety of the documents kept by these gentlemen in their offices, when the city hall was built rooms were assigned to them in that building. These rooms were accepted not as being more convenient to the officers, but for the public accommodation and safety, and that the great law offices might be near each other. The resolution was lost.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 306–7.

" The special committee appointed to ascertain the practicability of supplying the city with good wholesome water (see D 24, 1821) reports to the common council in part as follows: The committee has examined the lakes forming one of the sources of the Bronx River known by the name of Rye Ponds; these lakes are situated in Westchester County, about 30 miles from New York City, and consist of "two handsome and extensive sheets of water in an elevated position and surrounded by hills of considerable altitude." The surface covered by both lakes is about 270 acres. The waste water flows in a westerly direction until it unites with the main stream of the Bronx River; "and it is believed that both lakes are replenished by numerous springs of pure water rising in their vicinity."

The committee was accompanied by John McComb, late street commissioner; Robert Macomb, "who furnished them with a profile of a survey made under his direction with a view to ascertaining the practicability of bringing the water of the River Bronx to this city;" and C. Amos White. "one of the principal Engineers in the employ of the Commissioners of the lake Erie and northern Canals." The last named made an actual measurement and estimate of the quantity of water discharged from these lakes, which proved to be 1,000,000 gallons in 24 hours when the water was at its lowest gauge. The committee also examined the Bronx River at several situations on its progress south, and particularly at its junction with Mill Brook. At this juncture it is the plan "to direct the river and carry it through Mill Brook about one and three quarters of a mile in a South-west direction then to cross a rough piece of ground by excavating a hill which is said to be 52 and a half feet high, to Morrisania creek and through the aforesaid Creek to near its junction with the Harlaem River, and from thence to Macombs's Bridge. At the bridge it is proposed to raise the water with the power created by damming the river and the aid of Pumps to a reservoir to be erected on an eminence a short distance from the bridge on this Island, and from thence to be brought to the city through the means of Pipes or aqueducts." Apr. 1

The committee proposes that $500 "be appropriated for the purpose of obtaining a survey and profile of the whole line of country between this city and the main Source of the River Bronx . . . together with an estimate of the probable cost of compleating the project of supplying this city with good and wholesome water." This is adopted.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 309–11. See N 25, 1822 and Mr 10, 1823.

" The common council adopts a resolution that Maiden Lane be enlarged and improved from William St. to Pearl St., so that it shall be about 53 feet wide.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 316. See Ja 20, 1823.

2 Acting upon complaints as to impositions, high charges, and delays in the operation of the Fulton ferry, a select committee of the state senate reports that the company, in open violation of that clause in the contract whereby it is bound to keep "both of their ferry boats constantly employed on the said ferry," frequently uses its steamboats "for the purpose of towing ships above the harbor of New-York, in consequence of which, passengers are subject to detention." They are "persuaded that the ferry boats employed at the public ferries, where the crossing is so immensely great as that between New-York and Long Island, ought not to be employed in other business, except from ferry stairs to ferry stairs."—Senate Jour., 45*th sess.* (1822), 280–81. This led to the enactment of a law (see Ap 17).

4 The proceeds of the last discussion of the American Forum this season, which is to be held on this evening, are to be presented to "the General Committee appointed to take measures respecting the erection of an equestrian statue to the memory of Gen. George Washington."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 1, 1822.

5 The General Theological Seminary is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1822), chap. 150. See F 13, 1822, and Jl 28, 1825.

11 The Turks defeat the Greeks at Chios and massacre about 40,000 inhabitants.—Haydn's Dict. of Dates, 210, 453.

15 The common council receives from John Randel, Jr., a letter enclosing a pamphlet containing observations concerning the course of the Erie Canal at its eastern termination. This is referred to the committee on bringing water to the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 322.

" For material and mason work on the Park fence $683 is expended, and for additional labour on the marble pillars $55.—Journal C, 233, comptroller's office. See Je 25, Jl 9, Ag 20, 1821.

17 In "An Act for regulating Elections," the legislature provides that in New York City (and throughout the state as well) elections shall be held during a three-day period beginning the first Monday in November.—Laws of N. Y. (1822), chap. 210. Elections had begun on the last Tuesday in April (see Ap 11, 1815). On Apr. 7, 1830 (q. v.), the time was changed again—to the second Tuesday in April.

" The legislature passes an "Act to regulate the Public Ferries between the City of New-York and the Island of Nassau" (see Ap 2). The law makes "ferrymasters or the owners of ferry boats" liable to a penalty of $5 "for a longer detention of passengers, than is now allowed by law" except in case "the wind, weather, or ice, shall render the crossing dangerous," or in case of "detention by accidents or casualties." The penalty is increased tenfold if the boats are "employed in any other business than from ferry stairs to ferry stairs, except to relieve vessels in distress."—Laws of N. Y. (1822), chap. 241.

18 "Eight hundred rose trees and other shrubbery have been planted by some ladies in the Park, and they implore the young and thoughtless to allow them to remain there unmolested."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 18, 1822.

22 The common council adjourns to view the new steamboat which has just been completed by the Messrs. Stevens for use on the ferry between Hoboken and Barclay St. in this city (M. C. C., 1784–1831, XII: 336), and at the next meeting approves the 1822 Apr. 22 new boat, and grants a lease to these gentlemen.—Ibid., XII: 340. The boat started running on May 11 (q.v.). See also Ag 20, 1821, and Jl 21, 1823.

29 A letter is read before the common council "stating that Mr. Waldron Beach had invented a Submarine Steam boat which might be advantageously employed in Destroying Ships of War that might have hostile intentions against the City and recommending it to the Attention of the Corporation."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 338.

May 4 Congress appropriates $100,000 to defray the expenses of missions "to the independent nations on the American continent." Spain filed a spirited protest against this recognition of the independence of her former colonies.—Winsor, VII: 501–2.

11 The "beautiful Steam Ferry Boat, built by the Messrs. Stevens to ply between this city and Hoboken" (see Ag 20, 1821, and Ap 22, 1822), commences its trips. "The construction of this boat, which unites all that is desirable in speed, convenience, safety and economy, is highly creditable to the gentlemen who planned it, and, in fact, to the mechanical ingenuity of the country. . . ." —N. Y. Eve. Post, My 14, 1822. The boat was the "Hoboken." —Haswell, Reminiscences of an Octogenarian, 133. See also Transactions of Inst. of Naval Architects (1899), XLI: 89; Booth, Hist. of N. Y. City, 687.

13 The council adopts a resolution to build a wall and fence along the east end of the Battery on a line commencing six feet westerly from the southeasterly corner of the Battery and extending on a parallel line in a direction that will meet the present line about 130 ft. below State St.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 365–66. See also Ja 10, 1820, and F 26, 1821.

" The common council grants a petition to remove the liberty-pole at present standing in the Fifth Ward, corner of Church and Leonard Sts., to the triangular plot at the junction of Chapel and Provoost Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 382.

18 Ellwood Walter, a youth of 18 from Philadelphia, writes in his diary: "In the course of the morning we stopped at a room in Broadway, where some singular pieces of Mechanism are exhibited —made by Maillardet of Switzerland. The most wonderful of these was called the 'American Magician.' The machine being wound up, and set in motion, a printed question, pasted on Copper plate, is placed in a little drawer provided for the purpose—a figure representing the Magician, would then rise, wave a rod which it held in one hand, and after looking over a book, in the other, strike a small door, which immediately opens, and exposes an answer suitable to the question proposed—I offered several different questions and received a correct answer in every instance."

The duelling ground where Hamilton was killed by Burr was also visited. "A handsome marble monument erected to the memory of Hamilton on this spot, was thrown into the river several years ago by direction of the legislature of New Jersey— from a belief that the honour thus paid to him would tend to encourage the dreadful practice, by which he came to an untimely end."

On the last day of his visit, Pearl Street Meeting was attended —the house, quite small and old (demolished in 1824). The preacher was Elias Hicks, father of the Hicksite Quakers. "The 'snows of long years'," says the visitor, "have whitened the head of this great and good man—and Time seems to be fast undermining a strong and robust constitution; but he still possesses the same energy of voice and manner—the same powerful eloquence, that touches the heart, and convinces the judgement."—A Journal of Travels by Sea and Land, to the Island of Manhattan (MS.) by John Jacob Underdunk (pseudonym for Ellwood Walter). Mr. Walter subsequently became headmaster of the "Westchester Boarding School for Boys" (see Peterson, Landmarks of New York, 137). 27 Alderman Mann presents the following resolution to the common council: "Resolved that a journal of the Proceedings of the Common Council be printed for the use of the members and that it commence with the minutes of the Present Board." This is referred to a committee.—M. C. C., XII: 401. On June 24, the committee reported that because of the expense they believed it to be inexpedient at present to cause the journal of the board to be printed. The resolution was lost.—Ibid., XII: 446.

June 1 The accommodations of Fulton Market may be estimated from the statement that rents were received from 19 butchers' stalls, 24 hucksters' and three sausage stands, one butcher's cellar, and the room in the west wing of the market.—Journal C, 261, comptroller's office.

10 John Eveleth calls the attention of the common council to his new invention, a dredging-machine used in cleaning channels of rivers.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 406–7. On July 8, the board authorised a committee to treat with Mr. Eveleth for the exclusive right for New York City of his patent, and also of his services in superintending its construction. The total cost had been estimated at $7,750.—Ibid., XII: 467–68. At the next meeting the board directed an agreement with Mr. Eveleth to be executed.—Ibid, XII: 486–87. On Oct. 14, a resolution that the mud machine, now building, be coppered before launching was adopted.—Ibid., XII: 537.

" The common council grants the request of a number of inhabitants "of the vicinity of the Market about to be erected at Old Slip" (see O 1, 1821) that a cupola for a fire bell be erected on the market.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 419. See Je 24.

Aug. 3 Several cases of yellow fever having broken out in Rector St., removals from the vicinity "are hourly going forward."—N. Y.

1822 Aug. 3 Eve. Post, Ag 1, 2, and 3, 1822; M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 491; XIV: 576–634. On Aug. 5, the board of health advised "all persons residing or doing business in Rector street between Lumber and Washington streets, or its vicinity" to move therefrom.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 5, 1822 See, further, Ag 7.

6 A New York editor, commenting on Sir Walter Scott's latest work, "The Fortunes of Nigel," says: "The report that a copy of Sir Walter Scott's last novel had arrived, set the city in an uproar, caused more running about & put more tongues in motion, than the appearance of any marvelous object since the days of the Stranger's Nose at Strasburg, which according to Shawkenbergius, caused hardly less excitement. It has already been struck off in three editions, and set the publishers at Philadelphia, New York and Boston, by the ears. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 6, 1822.

7 Because of the yellow fever, the board of health resolves that the following district be fenced off: "Rector street at the intersection of Lumber-st. Greenwich street at the southern intersection of Lumber street—Washington street, from Pier No. 3 and including pier No. 4, Greenwich-st. at the intersection of Carlile-street, and Washington at the intersection of Carlile."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 7, 1822. This district "lies within a quarter of a mile of the Battery on the North River."—Ibid., Ag 8, 1822. See Ag 9.

9 The board of health orders that Rector St. at the intersection of Broadway and Lumber St. at the intersection of Thames St. be fenced off because of the spread of yellow fever. This is done to include Trinity and Grace churches in the enclosed area, "thereby preventing any collection of persons in those places."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 9, 1822. See Ag 23.

19 The common council passes a law forbidding for the present the interment of dead bodies in the graveyard of Trinity Church.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 510; N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 21, 1822.

23 The custom-house is removed to Greenwich because of the yellow fever.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 23, 1822. 4 The board of health cautions the people against approaching that part of the city within the following limits: "beginning on the Hudson river, at pier No. 19, at the foot of Dey-st. running up Dey st. to Broadway, down Broadway to Maiden lane, down Maiden-lane to William st. down William st. [to] Beaver st. along Beaver st. to the Bowling Green, crossing the Bowling Green to Marketfield st. and along Marketfield st. to the Hudson River." The board further announces "that all that part of the city to the east and north of the City Hall, and which contains three-fourths of the population, is perfectly healthy, and may be frequented with the utmost safety."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 4 and 5, 1822. See S 8.

8 "The yellow fever which broke out some time ago, has continued increasing. A few days ago, on the approach of an individual, he was assailed by a number of half-famished cats, which would have devoured him had he not fled. Carts were employed day and night in removing furniture and goods, so that the city appeared as if in a state of seige. . . . Upon a moderate calculation it is supposed that upwards of fifty thousand people have been thrown out of the city. . . ."—Upcott collection, VI: 411 (at N. Y. H. S.). Sept. 8

14 "The Board of Health have, by a Committee, commenced an experiment with lime, charcoal, tanners bark and ashes, to disinfect the atmosphere in the lower part of the city, and have placed the disposition of the materials and workmen under the charge of Dr. Roosa, who distributes the antisceptic articles in the cool of the night.—Barclay street, Broadway from the Park to Courtlandt street, part of Chatham row, part of Beekman street, and William street from Beekman street to Fulton street, have been covered with lime; Fulton street from Broadway to William street has been also covered with tanner's bark. The committee under whose direction this experiment is making, feel sanguine in its success, if they are not checked in the experiment, for want of means. The appropriation made by the Board is small, amounting to only $750. In consequence of this, the committee have requested the several churches in or near the infected district to cover their respective burying grounds with lime."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 14, 1822. 30 The arrivals at New York during the year ending Sept. 30, 1822, numbered 4,116.—Arrivals of Alien Passengers and Immigrants (1891), table 7, p. 64.

" During the year ending on this day, the amount of tonnage "entered" and "cleared" by the state of New York, was 217,538 tons incoming, and 185,666 outgoing. Massachusetts, which stood second among the states, registered 176,627 tons entered, and 135,834 tons cleared. For comparison with other states, see Statements of Commerce and Navigation of the U. S. (1828), 165.

" In answer to a petition from the clergymen of various denominations, the common council recommends that the citizens set apart Oct. 11 as a day of "public Humiliation and prayer," in order to implore "the Supreme ruler of the Universe to Stay the disease now prevailing among us . . . and in his infinite mercy to restore health to the City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 529–30.

— Wm. Newnham Blane, an English traveller, arrives at New York during the yellow fever epidemic. He writes: "We anchored just below the battery, at the point of the island on which New York is built, and getting into a boat rowed round to Greenwich, which, though once a separate town, now forms part of the City. Looking up the streets that run down to the water, I perceived they were all barricaded at the upper ends, and strewed with lime. The houses of course were all shut up and deserted; and out of a population of 120,000 inhabitants, not more than 7 or 8,000 remained in the city; and those only in the higher and more healthy parts. . . .

"For my own part, I wonder that the inhabitants are so seldom visited by this scourge. The town is very large, and is built on the flat point of the island, on a great deal of what was low marshy ground. There is no such thing in the whole place as a sink or common sewer. All the filth and soil is collected in pits, of which there is one in every house. . . . Moreover, their contents, instead of being carried to some distance from the town, are conveyed to the nearest slip, or quay, and thrown into the water. . . .

"The streets in the lower part of the town are notoriously filthy, and the stranger is not a little surprised to meet the hogs walking about in them for the purpose of devouring the vegetables and offal that are thrown into the gutter.

". . . But what may also contribute to produce unhealthiness, is the very foolish and absurd practice of burying the dead within the town. Some of the church-yards have become so full, that they are raised several feet above the level of the neighbouring streets. Indeed the bodies in many places have been buried three deep. . . ."—An Excursion through the U. S. and Canada during the years 1822–23. By an English Gentleman (London, 1824), 7–12. Blane returned to New York in 1824.—Ibid., 315–19.

Peter Neilson, a traveller from Scotland, also reached New 1822 Sept. — York during the epidemic of 1822, and thus described conditions: ". . . We remained at anchor all night, and next morning proceeded up the river, passing the city on our right, which truly presented a picture of desolation, the numerous wharfs being entirely bare of vessels, not a soul to be seen stirring about, the streets covered with lime and charcoal, and guarded at each end by a high fence, and the doors and windows of every habitation and store closely shut. We cast anchor opposite to a part of the town deemed sufficiently healthy, nearly three miles above the point which forms the Southern boundary of the city. On going ashore, the bustle that prevailed was beyond description, nearly the whole of the business-part of the city being removed out to the fields which skirt the suburbs. An immense variety of temporary wooden buildings, . . . were speedily erected for the accommodation of the citizens; and the business transacted here during two months was prodigious; some of these buildings were fitted up as hotels, where 200 or 300 people were boarded, but the accommodation for beds, &c. at such a time, may easily be conceived to have been none of the best. For such accommodation, however, people were very happy to pay an extravagant price; and in many instances, in the first hurry of the business, until a sufficiency of booths were erected, respectable persons were obliged for nights to bivouac in the fields. This may give an idea of what formidable terrors the first appearance of the yellow fever creates. . . .

"In this irregular and temporary city in the field, you might find in one groupe, banking-houses, insurance offices, coffee-houses, auctioneers' sale-rooms, dry goods, hardware, and grocery stores, milliners' shops, barbers' shops, and last, though not least, a suitable proportion of grog and soda-water shops. In the bustle and confusion which prevailed from dawn to sunset, you might easily trace, in the anxious visages of the thousands who acted on this busy stage, one overwhelming, unvarying passion—the desire of gain. This state of matters continued till nearly the end of October, when a slight black frost appeared, which instantly dissipated all fears on account of yellow fever, and the consequent numerous removals back to the city, resembled the breaking up of the camp of some great army."—Neilson, Recollections of Six Years Residence in the U. S. A. (Glasgow, 1830), 4–16.

Oct. 26 The "favourable state of the weather, the advanced season of the year, and the reduced number of cases reported to the Board for several days past" induce the board of health to announce that the citizens may return to all parts of the city with safety except that which was the seat of the infection. The board recommends, however, that all houses be cleaned and aired before being occupied. Up to this time there have been 401 cases of yellow fever in the city, 230 of which were fatal.—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 26, 1822. See O 29.

28 The mayor presents the following communication to the common council: "On the 18th day of February last [q.v.] the Mayor had the honour of presenting to the Board a report recommending the erection of a Discipline Mill at the Penitentiary and he has now the pleasure to inform them that the necessary buildings & machinery was compleated on the 7th day of September last. and on the 23d of that month was put in full operation. . . .

"The building is of Stone thirty feet by Sixty and two Stories high That part occupied by the Wheels on which the Prisoners work is separated from the Mill by a Strong Stone Wall so that no communication is had with those who feed and tend the Mill and those who perform the labour on the wheels. . . . two wheels [are] now in operation

"Each wheel is calculated to give employment to 32 Prisoners sixteen on each wheel at once and a bell is so arranged as to Strike every ½ minute when one of the Prisoners on the wheel comes off and another goes on by which each man works Eight minutes and rests the same time The Average quantity of Grain ground per day is from 40 to 50 bushels which it is presumed may be increased to 60 or 70, should it be found on further experience that the prisoners can be made to perform a severer task without injury to their health. . . .

"There are always a numerous class of Prisoners in the Penitentiary & Bridewell consisting of female Prostitutes and vagrants for whom little or no employment could be provided but it has been found by late experience that the operation of women on the tread wheel in proportion to their weight is equally usefull as that of the men, there is then this additional advantage arising from the erection of the Mill that this class of Prisoners will now be made to earn their bread by the sweat of their brow. Oct. 28

"In carrying into effect our penitentiary System much difficulty has always been experienced in finding suitable employment for the Prisoners but it is hoped that the introduction of the Discipline mill will in a great measure supply the deficiency and that the effects of the labour performed will not only result to the advantage of the Public but the reformation and benefit of the Convicts; . . . Should the advantages arising from the experiment be equal to the expectations of the Common Council it is hoped that additional Mills will be erected at the Penitentiary and one at least at the Bridewell in order that the time now employed by the Prisoners in plotting mischief may be profitably disposed of. [See F 18, 1822, and Ja 20, 1823.] There is however one essential improvement in our Penitentiary System in addition to the Mill which appears to be absolutely necessary for the introduction of a proper discipline in our prisons and that is the provision of a sufficient number of Cells for solitary confinement and as retiring places for the Prisoners after the labour of the day has been performed by which means they will have an opportunity for reflection free from the baneful influence resulting from the present method of confining 15 or 20 of them in a single room. [See Ap 30, 1821, and O 15, 1824.] . . . The prevalence of the Calamity [yellow fever], with which our City has been afflicted for the last three months has prevented the presentation of this report until this time."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 539–42; N. Y. Eve. Post, O 30, 1822. See also Hardie, Hist. of the Tread-mill (1824), which contains a plate showing the mill in operation.

The common council agrees that the east wing of Fulton Market " "be appropriated for the use of the Sellers of Fish and such other part of said market as may not be occupied by licensed Butchers be appropriated to country people for the sale of meat the production of their own farms, or by them brought to market for sale." —M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 543–44; De Voe, Market Book, 499–500.

"Already Broadway presents a scene of happy confusion. 29 Every one is anxious to return to his own house and fireside. And few are willing to wait to use the salutary precautions recommended by the Board of Health and by Dr. Hosack."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 29, 1822.

"The public is respectfully informed that the Park Theatre 31 will open, on Monday next, with the comedy of the Soldier's Daughter. . . .

"During the recess, the Theatre has been entirely repainted and ornamented, from a design of Mr. Cowell's and executed by Mr Cowell and assistants.

"Various engagements have been made and every exertion used to render the Theatre worthy of public support. In the course of a few nights the Managers will have the honour of offering to the public, Mr. Matthews, the most distinguished Actor of the present day."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 31, 1822. See N 7.

Charles Matthews makes his first appearance in New York, Nov. at the Park Theatre in the comedy "Road to Ruin," and the farce 7 "Monsieur Tonson."—N. Y. Daily Adv., N 7; N. Y. Eve. Post, N 8; N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., N 9, 1822. A view of the interior of the theatre, painted by John Searle and showing Matthews and Miss Johnson in a scene from "Monsieur Tonson," and many prominent New Yorkers in the audience on this memorable evening, is reproduced as Pl. 91, Vol. III.

"We observe that a Lithographic Press has been established 19 at Washington, by a Mr. Henry Stone, who is spoken of as being well acquainted with that beautiful art. We wish him every success; but we are much afraid he will not find patronage sufficient in this country. A trial was lately made in this city, and the most beautiful and accurate plates imaginable produced; but the person engaged in the business was compelled to abandon it from the want of public support."—N. Y. Spectator, N 19, 1822. See also descrip. of Pl. 95-a and A. Pl. 12-a, III: 584 and 871–72.

The mayor, Stephen Allen, presents to the common council a 25 number of suggestions which have come to him "during the late calamitous season" of the epidemic. He says, "Although there is a great diversity of opinion among medical men on the subject of the origin of the Yellow fever, it is nevertheless pretty generally agreed that our quarantine regulations ought to be strictly enforced, and . . . that the most scrupulous attention should be 1822 Nov. 25 given to the removal of every vestige of nuisance calculated to injure the atmosphere of the city." He proposes an amendment to the health law. He speaks of the filthiness of the streets, and suggests that this might in a measure be remedied if the "Streets were swept by the inhabitants every day in the week (except Sunday) instead of twice a week as at present." He also says, "Much inconvenience has been experienced for the want of a commodious . . . place to which the sick who are afflicted with malignant disease may be conveyed. Instances have occurred where no persuasion could induce a person labouring under disease to consent to a removal to the marine Hospital; and the unavoidable delay at times occassioned by the State of the winds and tides has been attended with serious consequences to the sick.

"A Public Hospital for Fever patients at a convenient distance from the City would be a very important acquisition, and would tend to prevent the spread of disease as well as to do away many of the objections now made against a removal to Staten Island."

A sufficient supply of pure water is another important matter. "On this subject all has been done by the Committee that it was practicable for them to perform considering the magnitude of the undertaking. They have made arrangements with Mr [Canvas] White a Civil Engineer of repute to examine the several sources from whence a Suply is likely to be obtained, and to furnish them with correct surveys and Profiles of the heights and distances and they are daily expecting him to commence the undertaking." These suggestions are referred to a special committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 556–60. Regarding the fever hospital, see Ja 13, 1823; in reference to the water supply, see Mr 10 and N 24, 1823.

" A number of citizens petition the common council that the bridge at the foot of Hubert St., which connects the North Battery with the city, may be converted into a public wharf. This is not granted, because the property belongs to the United States.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 574. On Jan. 20, 1823, another petition requested the common council to make application to congress for a reconveyance of the bridge and the North Battery, since they were "now of no importance for military purposes & would be of great convenience to the neighbourhood."—Ibid., XII: 672. On Feb. 24, a letter from the secretary of war informed the board that the retention and preservation of the North Battery was considered essential so long as other defences than the existing ones were incomplete.—Ibid., XII: 741–42. See O 27, 1823.

" The common council resolves to procure a standard which they may present to the second regiment of the first brigade of New York State artillery in return for the one given to them (see Je 11 and 25, 1822).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 578.

Dec. 9 A note from Lieut. Voorhies, of the ship "Washington," U. S. N., states that he has submitted to the common council a model for raising water by pumps, which may be of use in the conveyance of water to the city (see Ap 1 and N 25).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 584.

" As Essex Market (see D 14, 1818) is situated, "in a Street which the public convenience requires should in no wise be obstructed," the finance committee recommends that it be removed "whenever another one shall have been built in that vicinity." The market committee is thereupon directed "to select a suitable site for the erection of a market in the vicinage of Essex Market."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 593–94. The latter committee presented a report on Dec. 28, which was then laid on the table, but on Jan. 6, 1823, was referred to the finance committee.—Ibid., XII: 624 630. This committee reported on May 26, but the report was not entered in the minutes.—Ibid., XIII: 96. Suggestions for a site were offered on June 23 and referred to the market committee.—Ibid., XIII: 136. See also De Voe, Market Book, 481. For the final decision, see O 27, 1823.

16 Notice is published of the second annual meeting of the Mercantile Library Assn. to be held in "the Long Room of the Tontine Coffee House" on Dec 17, at which "members of the Chamber of Commerce, and the Merchants generally," as well as "Clerks who feel an interest in the Institution," are invited to attend.—*Com. — In this year, John Pintard predicted that the population of New York would amount to 260,000 by 1840, 520,000 by 1861, and more than 800,000 by 1875. He also estimated that "before the close of the century the population of this city will equal, if not outvie London, the most populous metropolis of Europe, and excel in numbers, New Orleans possibly only excepted, any city in the New World."—Man. Com. Coun. (1860), 625.

— In this year, Isaac Holmes, an English traveller, wrote concerning New York: "The harbour of this city is sufficiently capacious to contain all the vessels in the world . . . when those canals which are projected . . . which will unite the Hudson river to the Lakes and the great western waters, are completed, New York will at some future period 'become a rival for the commerce of the world.' At present, about one thousand vessels arrive there annually from foreign ports, besides two thousand five hundred coastwise. . . . House-rent is excessively high at New York. A common mechanic will have to pay about 15l. a year for only two rooms. A two-story house, well situated in the city, and suitable for a respectable tradesman or shopkeeper, will be from 100l. to 120l. a year. . . . It is not uncommon, in Broadway, to pay for a single shop, well situated, 250l. per annum."—Holmes, An Account of the U. S. A., derived from actual observation, during a residence of four years in that republic (London, 1823), 264–68.

— In this year, John Lozier certified that the Manhattan Company had laid only 23 miles of pipes.—Wegmann, N. Y. City's Water Supply, 1658–1895, 12.

— In this year, the Rose Street meeting-house of the Society of Friends was built, as better accommodations were required for the women's yearly meeting.—Onderdonk, Annals of Hempstead (etc.), 102. See also Greenleaf, 116–17. A view of the interior of the church as it was in 1853 appeared in Illus. News, I: 381.

— In this year, an organ was placed in St. Mark's Church at a cost of $1,150.—Memorial St. Mark's Church (1899), 54.

— In this year, the congregation Shearith Israel sold an unused portion of its cemetery on Chatham Square, 45 x 88 feet, to the Tradesmen's Bank.—Pubs., Am. Jewish Hist. Soc., No. 6, p. 133.

Jan. 3 "About 20 feet of the steeple of the Brick Meeting in Beekman-street, has been cut down, and to great advantage. It is safer and looks better, and the whole has been painted and the ball and vane newly gilt. The scaffolding erected to the very summit of the steeple, was much admired for its symetry and boldness. The whole church has been repaired, and the Pastor, Mr. Spring, is ready to resume his functions."—National Advocate, Ja 3, 1823.

4 Since April, 1821, 36 ships, exclusive of brigs, schooners, sloops, steam vessels, etc., have been launched at New York.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 4, 1823.

6 The members of the common council take the oath prescribed by the new state constitution, and, in accordance with the powers delegated to them (see N 10, 1821), proceed to the election of a mayor. Stephen Allen is chosen.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 631–32; N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 7, 1823.

9 The Tammany Society issues the following address to the public: "The citizens of New York, will specially recollect, that, in the year 1808 [q. v., My 26], an appropriate vault or tomb was constructed by Tammany Society, at the Wallabout, opposite to the city of New York, and that, after thirty years neglect, a portion of the remains, were then collected, of the eleven thousand five

1823 Jan. 9 hundred citizens, soldiers, and sailors, of our revolutionary war, who had perished in doleful dungeons and pestilential prison ships, and whose bodies were thrown in heaps into the earth, at the said Wallabout, frequently when life was scarcely extinct.

"These relics are yet repeatedly collected, as the beating rains of heaven discover the places of their deposit, and are carefully interred into the vault, denominated 'The Tomb of the Martyrs;' and which yet remains destitute, even of an inscription stone!

"At the time of the general interment of those remains, in 1808, the hope was fondly cherished that, from individual donations, an appropriate monument would speedily have arisen, and the work rendered complete, which should transmit to future generations, the entire devotion of those heroes; who rather chose death, than enlist in the service of the enemy! though they were incessantly offered liberation on the dishonorable condition.

"The exertions to erect a monument over the tomb then failed; though our state legislature had granted an appropriation, from the sale of lands of one thousand dollars in aid of the proposed work [see Ap 11, 1808]. This sum being inadequate to do justice, in workmanship, to such a national object, the donation was not applied for, nor was the sale of the public lands made.

"After the lapse of nearly fourteen years, the above sum was applied for by the Tammany Society, to whom the original appropriation had been made; when by a subsequent law of 1821 [q. v., F 27] the Legislature granted the sum of one thousand dollars, in cash, to Benjamin Romaine, to be accounted for by him towards building such a monument as had been originally intended.

"That sum is now received from the state treasurer, and plans and estimates of the work, in a variety of forms, have been had, all of which, again prove the total inadequacy of that amount to erect a monumental structure, suited to that eventful period of our national history. With the present means in hand, it cannot be made equal to several church yard inscriptions, and far inferior to that raised at West Point by the Cadets, commemorative of a single death of one of their members. . . .

"It is now confidently hoped and fully believed that, the patriotic citizens of New-York, freed from all party distinctions, will no longer delay a work through a deficiency of means, to do justice to an object of such magnitude, and so specially their own; that they will now cause the same to be graduated on a plan suited to a scale of the nation. . . ." Subscriptions for the monument are solicited, a committee having been appointed to unite with the city corporation and other bodies in furthering the work.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 9, 1823. See S 18.

13 Mayor Allen reports to the common council that the city is in debt to the extent of $1,088,500, due partly to the yellow fever epidemic of last summer. He adds: "It is a fact which will not be Controverted that the ease with which Spirituous liquors can be obtained the cheapness of the article and the facility afforded by the large number of places opened in this City for its retail is the cause of ruin to thousands of our population and has filled our Alms House and Penitentiary with Pauperism and crime, and assuming this as a fact is it not both just and equitable that a revenue should be raised on an article from which arises such injurious consequences to the Community?"—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 652–64. See Ja 7, 1822, and O 13, 1823.

20 The common council resolves "that the improvement of opening [widening] Maiden lane [see Ap 1, 1822] will commence on the first of May next & all buildings are to be removed within 20 days thereafter."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 679.

" The mayor asks the common council "Whether it is not just & equitable that the School established by the Corporation at the Alms-house at which upwards of 200 Children are educated on the Lancasterian plan ought not to be considered, as it is in fact, a free School; and therefore entitled to a proportion of the money appropriated for the establishment & maintenance of Common Schools in this City."—M. C C. (1784–1831), XII: 680. On Feb. 24, the board directed that a bill be sent to the legislature applying for an amendment to the law that would accomplish this object. —Ibid., XII: 734.

" The mayor reports to the common council that since the erection of the "stepping-mill" (treadmill) at the penitentiary he has received applications from various parts of the United States for a plan and description of the machine. The board resolves that 100 copies of the report on this subject be printed for the mayor's use.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 689. See O 28, 1822, and Ag 18, 1824. Ebenezer Storer, the lessee, writes to the committee in charge of the affairs of the Tontine Coffee House that his rent is so high as to prevent him from saving a reasonable profit, and asks that it be reduced. He says that "such has been the improvement of the City, and the multiplication of Hotels and private boarding houses, since the Tontine Coffee House was considered a principal one, and such is its local situation, that it cannot offer those inducements to Gentlemen & families to reside in it, to insure anything like a compensation to the incumbent for the expense & care requisite to effect such an object. From its age and structure this building is incapable of being made a desirable residence, without extensive and costly repairs, . . . A number less than 40 or 50 boarders would afford no profit; and when I found that I had to provide daily an expensive table, for the probable number of 30 to 50, and had but 7 or 10 to partake you may well suppose that I found it necessary to dispense with this branch of my business, to save myself from a heavy daily loss. . . . It has enabled me to get along better and to pay my rent punctually. That it has not been disagreeable to the merchants, I have their testimony. For two seasons, the last summer particularly, I suffered severely from the necessity of shutting up the House, in consequence of the fever [see O 29, 1819], which deprived me of two months business, . . . I now offer to keep the house on the same terms for the next year, as the present year ending 1 May . . . making every exertion for the convenience & accommodation of the merchants who assemble at the Exchange . . ."—From the original letter, in vol. lettered N. Y. Tontine Coffee House, in N. Y. H. S. See My 2. 3

The minister, elders, and deacons of the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church remonstrate with the common council against the passage of a law forbidding the interment of the dead south of Canal St. except in private vaults.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 694. Later several other churches made a similar protest.—Ibid., XII: 709. See Mr 31. 4

The salary of the "Crier of the Court" is fixed by the common council at $200, instead of all fees.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 728. 17

" The common council resolves to ask the legislature for authority to pass such ordinances as they may from time to time deem necessary for the purpose of regulating "all theatrical and Equestrian Exhibitions all exhibitions of Rope & Wire dancing or performance of Slight of hand; all public gardens and generally all shows and exhibitions for gain at which any music shall be performed excepting such exhibitions of science or mechanical ingenuity or natural Curiosity or exhibition for Charitable purposes or improvements in any arts or science as the Common Council may permit." Also that such amusements must be licensed by the mayor of the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 730. See O 13.

There is exhibited at the Park Theatre this evening "the most novel, splendid, and brilliant object ever displayed in an American Theatre, A Looking-Glass Curtain, equal in size to the Drop Curtain. Mar. 10 A letter is read in the common council from a committee appointed by the "County of Dutchess Putnam Westchester & the Western Part of Connecticut adjoining those Counties to ask of the Legislature an Act of Incorporation to make a Canal in Sharon in Connecticut, to New York or the tide water of the Hudson River near Croton." They say in part: "The Object . . . is to go to the City of New York in preference of the north river near the Mouth of the Croton and for this purpose we are instructed to consult & Concert with New York gentlemen how this object can be effected We have conversed with several of the New York delegation & other gentlemen from your City here who unite with us in opinion that it is practicable to make a Canal to your City combining the double object of navigation and supplying the City with water. At the request of several gentlemen from your city we have agreed to suspend our application to the Legislature until you may have the opportunity of taking this subject into consideration. . . . It may not be improper to state that we have this day seen Col Young the Canal Commissioner who unhesitatingly gave us his opinion that the Canal water will be good for City use by settling and filtering in a Reservoir." The special committee on supplying the city with good and wholesome water reports on this subject that they believe the plan is feasible, and that the contemplated canal would add to the business as well as to the comfort of the inhabitants of the city by supplying them with an abundance of wholesome water. They say: "To have brought to the City a Stream of Pure Water 20 feet wide by 4 feet deep that shall discharge more than 20 millions of gallons each day in the Year. Calculated for drink and culinary purposes for extinguishing Fires for cleansing our Streets and yards washing our clothes for supplying our extensive marine with this necessary element in its purity and for every other object connected with Health cleanliness & Comfort besides the great advantages in a Commercial point of View by bringing to this Market the produce of a large district of fertile Country is certainly of sufficient importance to induce the Common Council to embrace the opportunity of securing the privilege offered them even should they never make use of it." A memorial is sent to the legislature praying that a charter may be granted for the canal.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 766–71. See Ap 1, 1822, and Jl 14, 1823.

14 Mr. George Youle has erected a new shot-tower on the spot (see O 6, 1821) where the first was started, and though it is not yet completed he has begun the manufacture of shot.—*N. Y. Eve. The sub-structure is visible to-day (1925).—Peterson, Landmarks of N. Y. (1923), 73.

17 The mayor, as president of the board of health, reports to the common council that he has been directed by the board of health to issue early in May a circular to be left at each house in the city appealing to the good sense of the inhabitants as to the propriety of their removing from their premises every species of filth on the days designated for the purpose; and of adopting other precautionary measures for the preservation of health, in order that "no act may be neglected which may appear calculated to insure to our citizens this inestimable blessing."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 777–79.

24 The legislature passes an act providing for the erection of a fever hospital in New York City, and authorises the common council to raise the money therefor by lottery.—Laws of N. Y. (1823), chap. 82; M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 669–70. See Je 23.

26 Samuel Leggett, Moses Cunningham, George Youle, Thomas Morris, Wm. S. Coe, and others, are incorporated as the "New York Gas Light Company," with a capital of $1,000,000.—Laws of N. Y. (1823), chap. 85. This was the first gas company chartered in New York. Its charter was unlimited in duration.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIX: 315. See, however, My 12. Mar. 26

29 Christ Church in Anthony St. (see Mr 30, 1822) is consecrated.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 26, Ap 2 and 11, 1823. There is a view of it in Onderdonk's Hist. of the Prot. Epis. Ch. (1844).

30 The "most furious snow storm that has been experienced in this quarter for more than twenty years" starts early this morning and continues throughout the day. Several houses are blown down, windows are broken, and some of the trees in the Park are "prostrated." About 40 ships in the vicinity of the city are injured and about 15 sunk.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 31, 1823.

31 The Pennsylvania legislature incorporates the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., with power to construct a railroad from Philadelphia to Columbia, in Lancaster Co. " It is resolved by the common council that the name of Grand St. be substituted for Desbrosses St. from Thompson to Varick Sts.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 808.

" The common council passes a law respecting the interment of the dead. This imposes a fine of $250 for opening, after June 1, any grave "which lies to the Southward of a line commencing at the centre of Canal Street on the North River and running through the centre of Canal Street to Sullivan Street thence through Sullivan st. to Grand Street thence through Grand St. to the East river." Neither shall it be lawful to inter in any vault or tomb south of the aforesaid line.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 811. See F 4, 1823, and Je 6, 1825.

" A special committee is appointed by the common council "to Select a Suitable Site for a public Burial Place to be called the City Burying ground."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 812. See Je 9.

Apr. 1 The "greatest concourse of people, of all descriptions, that has been witnessed on a similar occasion for many years" assembles at the city hall in response to a call by Mayor Allen, and adopts resolutions remonstrating against a tax bill which has passed the assembly and is pending in the senate. Among the resolutions are the following:

"Resolved, That the provision of the proposed law, which levies upon the capitals of incorporated companies for State purposes fifty per cent, or one half, more than upon any other personal property, is a partial and unjust legislation against a particular Section of the State; that description of property being principally confined to the city of New York."

"Resolved, That to impose a tax on the capital of non-residents, vested in the stock of incorporated companies, or in credits to individuals; and to include in the assessments, all personal property under the control and custody of Agents, whether consigned to the commission merchant for sale; transportation to a sister State; or exportation to a foreign country, is unwise & impolitic; that it must drive away capital and commerce from this to other cities; destroy our navigation, injure agriculture, and impoverish all classes of citizens."

"Resolved, That the proposed law adopts a system of policy in regard to the city and county of New York, ruinous to the landed interest, and intolerably burdensome to the Mechanic, and other labouring classes of the community; as it leaves for city and county purposes, fifteen cents only on a hundred dollars of the tax on the stock; when fifty cents on the hundred dollars must be imposed for the like purposes on every other description of personal property and real estate."

"Resolved, That the proposed law will not only operate as a partial tax upon this city, but proceeds upon the unwarrantable presumption, that its citizens are unwilling to bear their just proportions of the burdens necessary for the support of government; a presumption as odious as it is unjust, as unjurious as it is unfounded in fact, and which our principles and honour, equally call upon us to repel." A committee of prominent citizens is appointed to present the resolutions to the senate.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 2 and 3, 1823. A memorial against the tax bill was adopted by the common council on April 2.—Ibid., Ap 2 and 17, 1823. The bill, however, was passed by the senate on April 18 by a vote of 18 to 8.—Ibid., Ap 21 and 23, 1823. It received the signature of the governor and became a law.—Ibid., Ap 25, 1823.

1823 Apr. 1 Trinity vestry adopts the following resolution in regard to St. John's Park (Hudson Square): "That the said square shall remain hereafter an ornamental square without any buildings being erected therein, and in case all the lessees of the lots fronting on said square shall agree to maintain the same at their own expense as a private square in proportion to the ground which they possess fronting the square that it shall remain as a private square, but otherwise, or if the proprietors of the lots do not so maintain the square, then that it be ceded to the city corporation as a public square."—N. Y. Times, My 25, 1913. On June 9, the lessees acceded to the arrangement. The square was then fenced in for the exclusive use of the adjacent residents.—Ibid. See also descrip. of Pl. 106-a, III: 609. See, further, D 29, 1823.

9 James Blackwell and Elizabeth, his wife, deed Blackwell's Island to James L. Bell, in consideration of $30,000.—Liber Deeds, CLXVIII: 137.

10 The legislature authorises the mayor and common council, whenever they shall think it necessary to determine the future permanent regulation of any streets or avenues below 34th St. which were laid out under the act of 1807, to appoint three commissioners whose duty it shall be to cause surveys, maps, profiles, etc. of the ground to be made and to mark thereon what in their opinion ought to be the future permanent regulation. These shall be deposited in the office of the street commissioner and notice thereof published in the papers. The common council may confirm, reject, or refer the same to new commissioners. When accepted, the levels delineated on the maps shall be permanently fixed and established, and assessors shall be appointed for apportioning the expense of the regulation.—Laws of N. Y. (1823), chap. 128. The application of this statute to the grounds lying between North and 14th Sts., The Bowery and East River, caused a serious problem in grading and in determining the proper method of disposing of surface waters. This extended to 1826, and in that year was published in a pamphlet, containing the action of the common council, committees, city surveyors, counsel, etc., and entitled Report of the Street Committee on the subject of Regulating the grounds between North & Fourteenth Streets, The Bowery & East River (1826). On Nov. 27, 1826 (q.v.), the common council resolved to ask for the repeal of the act.

14 The special committee on the subject of erecting a statue to the memory of George Washington (see Mr 18, 1822) brings the following resolution before the common council: "Resolved that an election by Ballot be held in the Several Wards . . . for the purpose of receiving the votes of all persons assessed for taxes . . . on the question . . . whether a sum not exceeding $50,000 Shall or Shall not be raised by tax on the Real & Personal Estates in this city in such annual Amounts as will Sink such sum to be raised with interest in Ten years the money thus to be raised to be applied to the erecting of a Statue . . . in this City to the memory of General George Washington."

Whereupon Mr. Cowdrey presents this resolution in reply: "The Common Council reciprocating and applauding the patriotic feelings and motives of their fellow Citizens who have presented their memorial having for its object the erection of a monument emblematical of the Illustrious Character of George Washington . . . believing that any undertaking of the kind referred to . . . would disappoint rather than gratify public Expectations with regard to the Commemoration of him who was 'First in War First in peace First in the hearts of his Countrymen.'

"Therefore Resolved that the said Memorial . . . be placed on the files of the Common Council." This is adopted.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 20–21. See O 13.

22 "We are informed that the window frames and sashes of the new and elegant building now erecting in Wall street as the U. S. Branch Bank [see Mr 23, 1822], are to be of solid brass, and imported from England. This valuable and safe improvement has superceded the material of wood in all the new banking establishments in London. We trust our brass founders will take the hint, and not suffer Birmingham to supply what they can so easily make in their own city."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 22, 1823. The corner-stone of the bank was laid on May 23 (q.v.).

23 "Whereas it is desirable that a channel should be opened, through which the city of New-York, and other parts of this state, may receive a supply of stone [anthracite] coal, which is found in the interior of the state of Pennsylvania," the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company is incorporated to connect these two rivers by a canal.—Laws of N. Y. (1823), chap. 238. On Nov. 19, 1824, the company was authorised to employ $500,000 of its capital in banking, the bank to be situated in New York City, and the institution was opened at 13 Wall St. For the further history of the company and its trial of the first locomotive brought to the U. S., see N. Y. Times Mag., Ap 22, 1923. See also My 1829. Apr. 23

Samuel Davis, having invented a machine for raising sunken ships, has formed a company to raise the frigate "Hussar" and the sloop "Mercury," which sank, with a large amount of specie, in the East and Hudson Rivers respectively during the Revolutionary War, and is about to commence operations. A drawing of his machine is being exhibited at the Tontine Coffee House.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 29, 1823. See Ag 27, 1824. 29

When Bethuel Bunker took a lease of the Tontine Coffee House on this day (N. Y. Eve. Post, My 2, Je 10, 1823; and see Ap 2, 1811), John McComb made a pencil drawing of proposed alterations at the end of the coffee-room, estimated at $735. This is preserved in the vol. lettered N. Y. Tontine Coffee House, at N. Y. H. S. For a humorous account of the entertainment provided by Bunker, when these improvements were completed, see Com. Adv., Je 12, 1823. See, further, 1826. The Commercial Hotel, at 119 Pearl St., formerly the residence of Gen. Moreau, where meals are "dressed in the French and English style," and where English, French, and Italian are spoken, was one of the smaller hotels of note at this period.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 2, 1823. "

The corner-stone of the Houston Street Reformed Dutch Church is to be laid on this day at the south-west corner of Greene and Houston Sts.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 3, 1823; L. M. R. K., III: 935. See also Corwin's Man. of the Ref. Ch. in Am., 1005. 5

"Home Sweet Home," composed by John Howard Payne, is sung for the first time, at the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden, London, by Maria Tree, in the first performance of "Clari, the Maid of Milan."—Kobbé, Famous Am. Songs, 3; Brainard, John Howard Payne (1885), 27–30. 8

The first franchise to supply the city with gas is granted by the common council on this day, when it gives the New York Gas Light Company, on certain conditions, the sole and exclusive privilege and right of laying pipes under ground for conducting gas to light the public lamps and the houses and buildings throughout that part of the city south of line running from the East River through Grand St., Sullivan St., and Canal St. to the Hudson River. The conditions of this grant (which the company was to hold for 30 years—that is, until the 12th of May, 1853) were: 12

That before the 12th of May, 1825, they should erect and complete good and sufficient buildings, works, and apparatus for the preparation and manufacture of gas; cause the necessary pipes to be made of cast iron, and to be laid; and manufacture and supply in the most approved manner sufficient quantities of the best quality gas, commonly called inflammable gas, for lighting Broadway from Grand St. to the Battery. The uncertainty of the term "best quality of gas" was settled between the parties by making the London gas a standard. The contract stipulated that the light of the lamps should be of a quality, brilliancy, or intensity, equal to the gas in use for the public lamps in the city of London. The gas company also stipulated that failure to comply with these conditions would be sufficient cause for the common council to annul their contract.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XII: 792; XIII: 60–62, 75; XIX: 315. The conditions were performed within the time limited (see My 11, 1825). See also Je 11, 1824.

The common council amends the law relative to the establishment of a board of health so that the board shall hereafter consist of the mayor, recorder, and aldermen.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 73. See O 9, 1826. "

The first performance in the Washington Theatre, corner of Broadway and Prince St., occurs.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 19, 1823. 19

The corner-stone of the U. S. Branch Bank (see Mr 23, 1822, and Ap 22, 1823) is laid at Nos. 15–17 Wall St. (These numbers were changed in 1845 to Nos. 30 and 32 Wall St.) The stone and a bottle which was deposited by the proprietors of the N. Y. Gazette, containing a City Directory, Stranger's Guide, etc., were 23

1823 May 23 exhumed in 1883 when one of the vaults was repaired.—Mag. Am. Hist. (1883), X: 15; L. M. R. K., III: 924, 975. The building (later the U. S. Assay Office) was ready for occupancy on April 14, 1824 (q.v.).

24 Mr. Hedderwick, a Glasgow printer, gives the following unfavourable account of New York and other parts of America on his return to Scotland: "As a whole, New-York can scarcely be said to be more than an overgrown sea-port village in a state of progressive transmutation towards the order and rank of a civilized city. The streets of New York are not to be preambulated with impunity by either the lame, or the blind, or the exquisitely sensitive in their olfactory nerves; to use an American phrase, a person must be 'wide awake,' not to dislocate his ankles by the inequalities and gaps in the side-pavements, or break his legs by running foul of the numberless moveable and immoveable incumbrances with which they are occupied.

"Both New York and Philadelphia have what are called slips formed in their harbours, which are indentations cut into the land for the accommodation of a greater quantity of shipping than could be contained in the same space if only ranged along wharves facing the water. In N. York, the slips, run up a considerable way in the centre of buildings, as it were in the middle of streets; and being built or faced up with logs of trees cut to the requisite length, allow free ingress and egress to the water, and being completely out of the current of the stream or tide, are little else than stagnant receptacles of city filth; while the top of the wharves exhibits one continuous mass of clotted nuisance, composed of dust, tar, oil, molasses, &c. where revel countless swarms of offensive flies.

"So far as I am able to judge, the English language is universally spoken in greater purity than it is in Britain. . . . Drinking spirits and water is the usual practice of both sexes. . . . It is reckoned quite indecorous in an American to get drunk, and instances of drunkenness are certainly more rare than in Britain. . . .

"The Erie Canal, in the state of New York, is deservedly celebrated for its length; but its width and depth does not surpass the small Canal between Glasgow and Paisley; it is unnavigable for nearly one half of the year, and were it not for the precaution of drawing off the water at the commencement of winter, the Canal would be so thoroughly frozen as to require a great proportion of the other half to thaw it. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 15, 1823, citing Glasgow Chron., My 24.

26 The common council accepts an invitation from John Vanderlyn to visit his panoramic painting of the "Garden of Versailles" at the Rotunda.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 80. Another invitation, to visit the painting of the "Palace and Garden of Versailles," was accepted on July 1, 1824.—Ibid., XIII: 781.

" The committee on the almshouse and penitentiary makes an interesting report to the common council: ". . . Poverty and Criminalty are the necessary attendants upon social life. And the duty of meliorating and reforming where it is possible is largely devolved upon this Corporation who are charged with the interests of more than 130000 inhabitants of various pursuits & Callings occupying a point of land easily acessible and holding out temptations & allurements no less to the daring the profligate and the needy adventurer than to the enterprising the industrious or the oppressed inhabitant of the Civilised World.

"We are Consequently not behind other Cities of equal numbers and in Circumstances otherwise similar in the Catalogue of mendicity & Crime. And while we have to boast of our admirable Situation for trade and Commerce the public spirit of our Citizens and a State of general prosperity the reverse of the picture may be seen in the destitute and abandoned situation of many [of] the houses of relief and punishment that have become necessary the Constant accumulations of these arising Chiefly from indolence & profligacy and the heavy demands that are consequently made upon the industrious the prudent and the exemplary portions of our Inhabitants for their Support." In speaking of the 1,376 inmates of the almshouse the committee says, "It was a subject of remark that the Old and infirm spend much of their time in reading their Bible. . . .

"The children also receive a full share of the attention of the officers having charge of this Institution There are four schools in which they are taught the most useful branches comprehending reading writing & the fundamental rules of Arithmetic. . . . When they arrive at suitable ages they are bound out as apprentices pursuant to the Act of Legislature.

May 26 "The attention of the Commissioners and Superintendant appears to be indefatigably engaged to produce the greatest sum of utility and advantage to the public and to the paupers under their Care, and one Law seems to prevail the Law of Kindness."

In regard to the penitentiary they say: "All will agree that as yet no sufficient rule has been discovered or applied for the reformation of offenders or to deter others by the force of examples Long periods of confinement Hard Labour as it is called Infamous & even Capital Punishments have not effected the desired object. Crimes have still been perpetrated and torrents of human blood have rolled in vain in Countries w[h]ere the penal Code has been Sanguinary and vindictive And in our favored Country where the opposite System has prevailed and the reformation of offenders has been proposed to be sought by milder methods it is not yet found that better Consequence[s] have been produced. . . . The Corrective that remains to be attempted . . . in Cases not Capital is solitary Confinement under proper and judicious limitations. . . . In . . . cells secluded from the light of Day . . . shut out from the face of any living [being] except of the keeper and doomed not even to hear him Speak the voice of Consience that inward and universal monitor would be heard by the Convict in tones not loud but deep and after it had excited a disposition and determination to reform & while the subject of this operation should be overwhelmed with Contrition if at the Same time it should be said to him or her 'Go and Sin no more lest a worse thing come upon thee' there might be some probability that the stings of Conscience would be continued and its pangs felt at least for some space of time after the Imprisonment should have ceased. . . .

"The Committee Cannot Conclude without especially Commending the Stepping Mill as an Instrument of Punishment. The subjects condemned to it become exhausted and Spiritless and humbled under its operation. . . . If solitary confinement cannot be thoroughly adopted perhaps more stepping mills would be found to answer the invaluable purpose of preventing the Commission of Crimes by the influence of fear and dread of this wholesome but severe corrective whatever may be said of the Personal reformation of offenders."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 89–95. See Ja 20, 1823, and Ag 18, 1824.

June 9 In accordance with the report of its special committee (see Mr 31), the common council resolves that the land lying between Fifth and Sixth Aves., 40th and 45th Sts., be appropriated for a public burying-ground or potters' field. This land "contains upwards of twenty six acres and is at the distance of three miles and a quarter from the City Hall. Its situation is high and pleasant and well calculated as to Soil for the Purpose in view." The committee also recommends that "so much of it as shall be deemed necessary be immediately enclosed by a permanent wall properly secured at the top to prevent all intrusions, with two gates one on the fifth Avenue the other on the cross road leading from the Bloomingdale to the Middle road. . . . The whole to be surrounded and intersected with rows of trees of a proper description."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 116–18; descrip. of Pl. 145, III: 715. See Je 23. The site was later reduced to include only the land now covered by the N. Y. Public Library and Bryant Park (see D 20, 1824).

12 Proposals are published for erecting in New York a new theatre to be called the "American Opera House."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 12, 1823.

13 Gen. Winfield Scott informs Mayor Allen by letter that "Castle Clinton has been vacated," and that he is prepared "to turn over the work & its appurtenances to the Corporation of the City of New York according to the terms of the Act of Congress on that Subject" (see Mr 30, 1822). He adds that "Captain Bender of the U S Quartermasters department" has his instructions regarding it. The latter wrote to the mayor on June 16 (under which date the correspondence was entered in the minutes), that Gen. Scott had directed him to deliver the work, with its keys, to the proper person designated by the common council; and that "Boys and evil disposed persons are . . . constantly employed in a wanton destruction of the buildings." The board directs that the committee on lands and places receive the cession, and take the premises under their care.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 131–32; N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 17, 1823. See Je 20.

" Gen. Morton's division of artillery is reviewed by Gov. Yates "in the Park in front of the City Hall." Previous to the review the common council presented the second regiment of N. Y. State

16 The board orders that houses in Elm St., from Broome to Spring St., be numbered.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 132.

19 "We observe, with pleasure, the rapid progress of the work now in full operation on the Battery. The wall is in great forwardness, and in two months will be completed. The filling in goes on well, and we are gratified in observing, that the pools of water which were left, and which had become offensive, are to be filled forthwith with clean gravel. The Castle, we hope will not be demolished, but be converted to a use of which it is susceptible, from its prominent location. As a fortress of defence, it is of no consequence to the city; but as an ornament, and as a place of resort to an overgrown and crowded population, with some improvement, it presents advantages which cannot be too highly appreciated."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Je 19, 1823. "An Old Citizen," writing on June 20, agreed that Castle Clinton ought not to be demolished, but should be "converted into a productive source of income to the city." He added: "The removal of the present flagstaff to the centre of the ground within the castle, in connexion with the Telegraphic establishment, is very properly in contemplation; and if the corporation sees fit to extend the improvements, one of the most delightful walks in the world can be made on the top of, and all around the castle, which in the hottest weather, would be most agreeably cool and reviving. Such an enviable, cheap, and convenient retreat, with passage ways or galleries from the circle to the different stories of the centre building, would command universal patronage of citizens and strangers; and a respectable keeper of such an establishment could well afford to pay to the Corporation a liberal annual rent."—Ibid., Je 20, 1823. See also ibid., Je 25, 26, S 19, 1823. For the leasing of Castle Garden, see Je 21, 1824.

20 Capt. Bender (see Je 13), on the part of the U. S., turns over Castle Clinton to a committee of the common council.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 23, 1823; descrip. of Pl. 94-b, III: 581. See Je 21.

21 "A" writes to one of the papers: "I am sorry to hear it suggested as at all advisable or proper to retain that large red wart, which bad military tactics, in an unpropitious hour, and at an enormous cost, fixed on the fair face of our city. We all take a pride in our Battery-walk. Enlarged as it will soon be; and this nuisance castle removed, the world cannot exhibit such a promenade.—The view, full, broad and expansive, of our glorious bay, without obstruction from the Battery, would be without rivalry, even at Naples. It belongs to the taste and reputation of our city, that it should be cleared from all obstructions. The inhabitants of the remotest corner of the city, are as much interested in it, as a matter of pride and public spirit, as they are in the City Hall, Alms-house, and New Asylum. The castle is given up and abandoned as a work of defence—It obstructs the view of one half the bay, at whatever point you stand:—I am sure the corporation will not consent to metamorphose such a structure, on such a place, into a tavern. Strangers would laugh at us, and we should soon wonder at our own folly."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 21, 1823. See Jl 12.

23 The common council resolves that the newly selected city burying-ground (see Je 9) be fenced in and set out with trees.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 138–39. The "fence" consisted of a stone wall, the corner-stone of which was laid on Oct. 11 (q. v.). The wall was topped with locust posts (see D 20, 1824).

" The finance committee reports to the common council on the subject of the lottery lately granted by the state to the corporation for the erection of a fever hospital (see Mr 24), that after considering the many "Complicated operations Connected with business of this description and the hazards to which the Board might be subjected as well from those operations themselves as from the fluctuations to which the Common Council is liable by its Constitution and that these fluctuations would greatly increase the hazards of loss in the drawing of the Classes of this Lottery which is estimated would occupy a Series of about Five Years commencing at the period of about Eleven Years from the present time the Committee are of opinion that a Sale of the Grant . . . would be most for the advantage of the Board and would be most favourable to the immediate Commencement and rapid Completion of the Hospital" The common council thereupon resolves to accept the grant of the said lottery; also to sell the same to Mr. Yates for $19,000, which sum should be appropriated to the building of the hospital,—providing that the corporation be released from all responsibility to the state for the payment of the $40,000 mentioned in the act of March 24, 1823; and from all responsibility of the lottery and payment of its prizes; indeed, "All responsibility whatever in Consequence of Said Grant except only the building of Said Hospital."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 143–45. On July 7, the board decided to dispose to John B. Yates of all rights to raising this money by lottery.—Ibid., XIII: 165, 167–68. See O 21. June 23

Wm. G. Wall announces that he is about to issue two views of New York. His advertisement states: "Correct views of the City of New-York, have long been a desideratum, and it has been a subject of surprise, that no attempt has been made to exhibit to the public, the leading features of a city, which possesses so great an interest from its political and commercial importance, as well as from the natural beauties of its situation. Mr. Wall has been induced by these considerations, to offer to the patronage of the public, two aqua tinta engravings of this City, from drawings taken, one from Weehawk, the other from Brooklyn Heights; in the choice of which points of view, he has been determined by their affording the most favorable view of the city, and conveying the most correct impression of the beauties of the Bay, and the surrounding scenery. 26

"Every exertion will be made to obtain the best possible execution of these engravings, an artist of known and approved skill having been engaged for the purpose.

"The views will be ready for delivery about the month of August"—Com. Adv., Je 26, 1823.

A writer, commenting on this advertisement on July 2, said that Wall was the "gentleman to whose magic pencil the public are indebted for those elegantly executed landscapes which compose the 'Hudson River Port Folio' publishing by Mr. Megarey" (see 1821), and added: "The views taken by Mr. Wall are the most accurate descriptions that we have seen. One of them is taken from Brooklyn Heights, near the Distillery of the Messrs. Pierponts, and the other from the Mountain at Weehawk. Mr. W. at first made a drawing from the high land back of Hoboken; but the view from Weehawk is far preferable, as it not only affords a commanding prospect of the city but also of the whole of our beautiful harbor, with all the islands, &c. The pictures may be seen at Megarey's Bookstore, Broadway; and the work is so far advanced that one of the plates is compleated."—Ibid., Jl 2, 1823. The Wall views are reproduced as Pls. 92 and 93, Vol. III, and described in III: 577–80, where the date depicted is given as 1820–3. The original water-colours are in the collection of Edward W. C. Arnold.

James Gallatin having returned to New York on June 2 after many years spent in Europe, writes in his diary: "A horrible day here; the noise of the July 4 celebration intolerable . . . only about three private coaches in New York—no means of getting about. The streets absolutely filthy and the heat horrible. I have been nearly every night for a long walk. No roads—no paths. I never realized the absolutely unfinished state of the American cities until I returned. The horrible chewing of tobacco—the spitting; all too awful. We have had a charming and hospitable reception, but all is so crude."—A Great Peace Maker. The Diary of James Gallatin, 244. July 4

A New York paper suggests that Castle Clinton be converted into public baths. "It would yield a greater revenue to the city than any other plan that has been proposed respecting it. Bathing might easily be rendered a fashionable as well as a healthy amusement."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 12, 1823. 12

The Sharon Canal Company applies to the common council for aid in making a survey for the purpose of ascertaining the practicability of bringing into the city the waters of the Croton River. Referred to the water committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 168. See Mr 10, and N 24. 14

Chief Engineer Thomas Franklin reports to the common council that he is about to make the experiment of substituting hemp hose for the leather hose now in use. This, if successful, will cut the cost in half.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 173–74. See also, My 28, 1821. 21

The board of health reports to the common council that it is about to issue a recommendation to the citizens to discontinue the unhealthful practice of sprinkling the streets with water from the slips.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 177. It was published in N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 23, 1823. "

The common council grants to John C. and Robert L. Stevens "

1823 July 21 the right to put on the ferry to Hoboken, about to be established at Canal St., a substantial steamboat similar to the one now in use at Barclay St. The lease to be given provides for a term of 15 years at the following rentals: for the first five years, the yearly rental of one cent "if lawfully demanded;" for the next five years, $50 a year; and for the residue, $200 each year. The boat must make a trip at least once every hour from sunrise to sunset. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 182–83; L. M. R. K., III: 943. See Ap 22, 1822.

30 The question of whether Sir Walter Scott is the author of the anonymous Waverly Novels is causing "considerable excitement" in New York.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 21, 24, 26, 28, 30, 31, Ag 1, and 2, 1823.

31 Trinity vestry resolves to build a new house for the rector on Hudson Square "as soon as they could get a good offer for the house and lot on Vesey Street." Hudson Square was at this time "one of the finest, if not the finest, in the city. It contained specimens of almost every American tree, with others of foreign sorts." —Dix, Hist. of Trinity, III: 59; IV: 235; descrip. of Pl. 106-a, III: 608–9.

2 The first issue of the N. Y. Mirror appears, under the full title The New-York Mirror, and Ladies' Literary Gazette. This title was reduced to the shorter form in 1831. It was first edited by Samuel Woodworth (author of "The Old Oaken Bucket"), and continued by Geo. P. Morris, N. P. Willis, and Theo. S. Fay. With the issue of April 14, 1827 (Vol. IV), full-page engraved views began to appear. New York City views first made their appearance with that of the "Lafayette Theatre," in the issue of Oct. 26, 1827 (Vol. V). Many of the engravings in this journal were the work of Asher B. Durand and James Smilie, from drawings by A. J. Davis, architect. These illustrations average about 9 x 6 in. A complete list, taken from William Loring Andrews' The Journey of the Iconophiles around New York in search of the historical and picturesque (1897), 41, and arranged alphabetically, follows (those marked "S" being small vignettes, printed six on a page):

The Mirror came to an end with Vol. XX, Dec. 24, 1842.

" The regular dramatic season at the Park Theatre having terminated, as usual, on July 4, the "Pavilion Theatre, Chatham Garden, is the present centre-point of attraction for beauty, taste, and fashion; being the most tasteful, elegant, and convenient establishment of the kind, in the United States." This is described in detail.

"The City Theatre [see Jl 2, 1822] is about to be re-opened. . . ."

"The Circus, in Broadway, has also a dramatic corps attached to it, for the performance of Melo-Dramas, Pantomines, Ballets, &c. But as neither of these kinds of entertainment belong to the legitimate drama, they cannot properly be noticed in this department. The same remark will apply to the Amphitheatre and Circus, in Richmond-Hill Garden."—N. Y. Mirror, I: 5–6. See also Mr 6, 1824.

4 The common council resolves to relinquish its right to the irregular pieces of land formed by the junction of First and Second Sts. and North St., called the "Children of necessity."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 202. On Nov. 10, the council referred to a committee a draft of a bill to the legislature praying that the map or plan of the commissioners be further altered "so that the Piece of Land laid out as a Market place & those Irregular Pieces called Children of Necessity may be abolished & Discontinued."—Ibid., XIII: 350.

" The board agrees to reduce Avenue A to 80 ft. in width, and Avenues B, C, and D to 60 ft.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 202–3.

" The common council grants to the trustees of the New York Free School Society permission to establish a free school at Bellevue, the schoolroom in the almshouse there to be used for this purpose. —M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 205. See O 25, 1824.

9 "We are disposed to believe that New-York, at the present period, stands unrivalled, (in this country at least) for rapid growth, and public improvement. . . . But of all the corrections lately made, or resolved upon, we know of none more important than the widening and improving of Maiden-lane. This Herculean task is now nearly completed, . . . The Gas Company, we understand, will be ready to throw a new and brilliant light on this subject, before the commencement of winter.

"The Battery.—The improvements now making to this delightful promenade, will be all completed the present season, when we may challenge every section of the United States for its equal in prospect, salubrity, and beauty. Its form . . . is semi-circular, defended by a formidable stone parapet, against which the waves may spend their fury in vain. This wall is surmounted with posts of hewn stone, which are to be connected with iron railings and pickets. . . ."—N. Y. Mirror, Ag 9, 1823.

11 In a report to the common council the "unparalleled growth" of the city is mentioned, and the statement is made that the "duties required to be performed by the Street Commissioner and his Assistant are at least four fold to what they were ten years ago."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 216.

25 The Walton house, built in 1752 (q.v.), is turned into a boarding-house.—N. Y. Daily Adv., Ag 25, 1823. See also L. M. R. K., III: 953. The item of 1752 contains three typographical errors: "Dunlop" should be Dunlap; "Netherland," Netherlands; and "1781," 1881.

"N. B. The above goods have been carefully selected and 1823 bought for cash, and will be sold on reasonable terms to those

Sept. who will please to favour him with their commands."—N. Y. Daily Adv., S 2, 1823. For the beginning of the Stewart building on the east side of Broadway, see Ap 7, 1845.

4 An "original portrait of Columbus," which was obtained by Mr. Barrell, the American consul at Malaga, Spain, from a convent lately suppressed at Seville, and presented by him to the U. S. government, is placed for a short time on exhibition in the gallery of the Am. Acad. of the Fine Arts. It will be permanently placed in Washington.—N. Y. Daily Adv., S 3 and 4, 1823.

5 A twenty-foot cross, bearing the inscription "Sacred to the cause of the Greeks," is erected on Brooklyn Heights and dedicated by the "ladies of New York."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 6, 1823.

15 A resolution is passed to extend and improve Houston and North Sts. "in such manner that they may form a junction between Broadway and the Bowery road. . . ."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 264–65.

18 Artists who may be desirous to contract with the Tammany Society for erecting a monument to the prison ship martyrs (see Ja 9) are invited to send in their proposals to Benjamin Romaine, 27 Hudson St., on or before Sept. 29. "The design of that portion of the Monument now under consideration to be erected, is about eighteen feet high from the lowest line of the base-step to the top of the facie that rests on the cornice—the diameter at the bottom step, fourteen feet; the basement, or pedestal, twelve feet diameter, being a figure of thirteen sides, intersected by thirteen rusticated pilastres, to be connected by arches over the thirteen inscription tables alternately inserted between the said pilastres. [A footnote states: "The tables, each representing one of the old thirteen states, are to be thus inscribed, (example): State of New York. Beneath this Mausoleum are entombed the remains of 1200 of her Revolutionary Sons, Martyrs to Liberty."] See the design No 27. Hudson street. The pedestal rests on a cavetto sima-recta, or inverted ogee, and plynth. The pedestal will be four feet six inches high, and surmounted by a proportinate sima-recta (or inverted ogee,) and a plain facie four inches thick; the last mentioned member receives the plynths of thirteen Doric columns eight feet high, including caps and bases; diameter of the columns one foot at the bottom of the shaft. The columns extend to a circle of about thirty-three feet, having the appearance of an open temple accessible on all sides. The columns support a cornice of due proportion, on which rests a facie ten inches thick, intended to bind the cornice and columns into one solid structure. It is intended that the monument be elevated by a substantial foundation wall of the best masonwork, and raised four feet above the surface of the earth. It is required that the whole work be made, during the coming winter, and erected and completed by the 4th day of July next, of the best American White Marble."—N. Y. Eve. Post, S 18, 1823. The time for sending in proposals was later extended to Oct. 12.—Ibid., S 30, 1823.

29 It is resolved by the common council that the committee on lands and places be authorised to plant in the Park and on the Battery 100 ornamental trees of large size, not less than 12 inches diameter at the butt.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 283.

30 From Sept. 30, 1822 (q.v.), until this date, 4,247 passengers arrived at New York.—Arrivals of Alien Passengers and Immigrants (1891), table 7, p. 64.

Oct. At a public meeting at the Tontine Coffee House the following
6 resolutions are passed:

"1st. Resolved, That we consider the union of the Western waters with the Hudson, by means of the Grand Canal, an event that imparts glory to the state and honor to the nation.

"2d. Resolved, That we consider that this event calls for expressions of public congratulation.

"3d. Resolved, That the city of New York has a deep and lively interest in the completion of the Grand Western Canal.

"4th. Resolved, That in consequence of the foregoing considerations, this meeting deem it proper and expedient to send a delegation to the city of Albany, to communicate to the meeting to be held there on Wednesday next [Oct. 8], the congratulations of the city of New York on the introduction of the canal waters into the Hudson.

"5th. Resolved, That such delegation consist of seventy two citizens of the city of New York, to be nominated by the chairman of this meeting."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 6, 1823.

8 The "entrance of the first boat from the Great Western Canal of this state into the Hudson" is elaborately celebrated at Albany. Oct.
Dr. Samuel L. Mitchill of New York pours into the canal a bottle 8 of water from the Pacific Ocean and another from the Atlantic Ocean, and then delivers a congratulatory address. Wm. Bayard, chairman of the New York delegation (see O 6), also speaks.—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 10 and 11, 1823.

The "only Mummy ever brought to America" is on exhibition 10 in "the first room of the passage leading to the Academy of Arts, New York Institution."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 10, 1823. The mummy came from "the Catacombs of ancient Thebes."—Ibid., O 14, 1823. See also ibid., O 25, 1823, which contains an illustration of the top of the mummy case and an explanation of the Egyptian characters thereon. Another mummy was brought to New York in 1824.—Ibid., Ag 10, 1824.

The common council proceeds to the ground selected and 11 appropriated by them for a city burial-ground (see Je 9), to witness the laying of the corner-stone of the wall which is to surround the cemetery.—Com. Adv., O 14, 1823. See also L. M. R. K., III: 927. Work on the ground was almost finished on Dec. 20, 1824 (q.v.).

A lengthy and important communication from the mayor is 13
read before the common council. The first subject to which he requests attention is the application for an act to lay a duty on "Strong and Spirituous liquors and to regulate Inns and taverns." He says: "In most of our Sister Cities the tavern keeper is a distinct calling from the Grocer and unless he is able to furnish his house with the necessary beds and bedding for the accommodation of travellers or boarders, he is not permitted to receive a license; and the Sum charged for the priviledge in some Cities is in proportion to the rent of the house he occupies, and in others varies in amount from Sixteen to Sixty dollars. Tippling Shops are therefore unknown and the number of houses where liquor may be obtained to be drank on the Premise are very few when compared with this City where every person who can raise ten dollars for his licenses and as much more as will purchase a few gallons of liquor is enabled to Establish what is usually termed a grocery.

"That there are many respectable Citizens who take License to Sell liquor to be drank in the house is freely admitted but it is presumed that could a measure be adopted, that would Separate the tavern keeper from the Grocer they would cheerfully acquiesce in it. . . . And although the use of the Article can neither be prohibited or prevented altogether it may nevertheless be lessened by an increase of the price for the license which would . . . tend to reduce the number of places at which it is to be obtained." Mayor Allen also recommends that application be made for laws "to prevent the improper introduction of Alien passengers into this City," to increase the fees for the privilege of running a hackney coach, to authorise the corporation to regulate theatrical amusements by license, and to amend the health law so that the board may permit "vessels from healthy Ports with Healthy Crews after their having been discharged in the Stream and properly cleansed and ventilated under the Inspection of an officer to come to any wharf east of Rutgers Street on the East River or north of Hubert Street on the North river between the 1st day of June and October in any year."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 300–15. See O 22, 1827.

The common council accepts an invitation to see a model of an " equestrian statue of Washington by Signor Causici, a pupil of Canova.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 291; descrip. of Pl. 100, III: 592. See O 25 and 27.

The "Washington Museum," at No. 253 Broadway, opposite 14 the Park, is open.—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 14, 1823. On Dec. 30, it was advertised to open permanently.—Ibid., D 30, 1823. De Voe states in his Index (MS.) to newspapers, now in N. Y. H. S., that this afterwards became Peale's Museum; see, however, 1825.

The common council authorises a committee to purchase sun- 21 dry lots of Mrs. Ann Rogers near Bellevue for the purpose of erecting a fever hospital (see Mr 24 and Je 23).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 321–22. The land was between 23d and 24th Sts., east of First Ave.—L. M. R. K., III: 953. See D 29.

"A model in plaister of an Equestrian Statue of Washington, is 25 now exhibiting at the City Theatre, Warren-street, executed by Signor Causici [see O 13], an Italian artist and pupil of Canova, which is considered by good judges to be as fine a piece of statuary as any to be seen in Europe. Signor C. was induced to devote his attention to the production of this specimen of the arts, in consequence of understanding that the citizens of New York were de-

1823 Oct. 25 sirous of having a statue erected to the memory of their immortal Chief, that which he has modelled is about 13 feet in height, and is remarkable for its correct likeness of Washington, and the spirit displayed throughout the whole. The fiery steed on which the hero is mounted, bears as close a resemblance to life as any Equestrian Statue we ever beheld. . . . We are informed that the Corporation on Saturday last [Oct. 18] visited the exhibition, and were highly delighted with the spirit, taste, and effect which the artist had infused into the execution, and that they have since intimated to Signor Causici their intention to patronize his efforts, by calling on the public to furnish the means of rearing a marble, or bronze statue, after the model he has constructed. The expense of the former will be about $50,000; of the latter $60,000.—Bronze has decidedly the preference over marble, as it lasts for ages; while the latter is extremely subject to decay, especially by exposure. Meanwhile it has been thought advisable that the Corporation should cause the model to be removed to the Park, in front of the City Hall, and placed on a pedestal elevated to a proper height. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, O 25, 1823. The statue was criticized by "Os Frontis" in ibid., O 29, 1823. See also ibid., O 30 and N 11, 1823. See O 27.

27 Residents of the vicinity of the North Battery petition the common council that the bridge to this fort may be converted into a public pier for the landing of wood and other articles.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 322–23. On Dec. 8, the board resolved that a correspondence be opened with the secretary of war to obtain this request.—Ibid., XIII: 389. On March 1, 1824, word was received that the use of the bridge as a public landing place for vessels bringing country produce to the city was granted to the corporation upon the condition that the bridge be kept in repair by the board, and that the United States have free passage over it at all times.—Ibid., XIII: 570. On March 15, the common council resolved to accept the bridge under the given conditions, and to cause repairs to be begun as soon as the necessary possession thereof should be obtained by the corporation.—Ibid., XIII: 604–5. See N 25, 1822, and Ag 29, 1825.

" In a report to the common council the statement is made that the city hall is entirely fireproof, and that it is in the centre of the city.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 334. The upbuilding of the city north of Chambers St. is thus indicated.

" The change in the city charter that was effected on April 7, 1830 (q. v.), had its origin in a report presented on this day to the common council favouring the "reorganization of the City government." It is "laid on the table," but the board directs that it be published in the newspapers and also printed for the use of the members. The essential feature of the report is a bicameral council in accordance with "the general and all the state governments of the American union, and with the governments of most, if not all the large cities in the different states." It is claimed that "the additional checks and guards . . . thereby produced . . . would be of the greatest advantage to the interest of all concerned; and the owners of property would receive an additional security in relation to expenditures and plans of improvements that would be every way desirable to them." One branch would be called the "Select Council," to consist of the mayor (who would preside), recorder, and ten aldermen elected from the ten wards, these aldermen to have a three year term and not all to retire at the same time. The other branch, to be designated "Common Council," would consist of 20 members, two elected from each ward annually, and would choose one of their own number to preside. Each branch would "possess concurrent powers, with a negative on each other's proceedings." Each branch would "nominate candidates for office, and if they disagree, the choice to be determined by joint ballot."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 335; N. Y. Eve. Post, O 28 and 29, 1823. See D 15.

" The common council, having attended the exhibition of the model of an equestrian statue of Washington by Mr. Causici in Warren St. pursuant to invitation (see O 13 and 25), resolves that "His Honour the Mayor be requested to Signify to Mr. Causici the high Satisfaction experienced by this Board in witnessing his Splendid Performance as an artist, and his success in the difficult & bold undertaking of Executing a Striking representation of that revered & exalted Character 'whose Memory . . . Will be adored while Liberty Shall have Votaries & Whose Name Shall triumph over Time'."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 343. Mayor Allen's letter is among "Filed Papers" in city clerk's record-room. On Nov. 24, the board received a letter from Causici stating that he was obliged to remove the statue from Warren St., and asking the help of the corporation in this regard. A committee was authorised to erect a temporary building in which to place the model.—Ibid., XIII: 364. See My 10, 1824. Oct. 27

" The common council, having examined the free schools of the city pursuant to an invitation from the Free School Society, passes a resolution praising "the great improvement made by the Children in the different branches of useful Knowledge," the "neatness and Cleanliness in the Apartments and regularity in the Deportment and habits of the Children," the zeal of the teachers, and the "benevolence and public spirit" of the trustees.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 344.

" The common council authorises the market committee "to purchase for a market place those Seven lots of Ground situated on the North side of Grand Street between Ludlow & Essex Street containing in front and rear One hundred Seventy five feet and in Depth Each side Eighty Seven feet provided they can be obtained for a Sum not exceeding Eight thousand Eight hundred dollars." The new market is to replace Essex Market (see D 9, 1822).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 344–45. A deed for 14 lots from Nicholas Gouverneur was presented on Dec. 8.—Ibid., XIII: 381. The new Essex Market was begun in 1824, and finished in the early part of the next year. It was situated opposite the old.—De Voe, Market Book, 481.

Nov. 10 A fair is opened at the state arsenal, corner of Elm and White Sts., "for the exhibition and sale of domestic manufactures."—N. Y. Eve. Post, N 10, 1823.

15 Work on the capitol at Washington is nearing completion. For particulars regarding its present status, see N. Y. Mirror, I: 124, citing the National Intelligencer and presenting a wood-cut view of the building. Improvements in "the President's house" are also nearly completed. Improvements in other buildings in Washington are noted in the same article.

23 The corporation pays $4,000 for building a wall at the Battery.—Journal C, 439, comptroller's office.

24 At the request of Canvas White, the engineer employed by the common council to survey ground through which water to supply the city might be brought from the Bronx and other sources, the board decides to invite Judge (Benjamin) Wright, one of the canal engineers, to accompany him in his examination of these routes.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 364. See Ap 12, 1824.

" The common council resolves that "Bridges of Flat Stones" be placed across some of the streets in the third ward.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 389.

Dec. 2 President Monroe enunciates the "Monroe Doctrine."—Winsor, VII: 281, 502, 524. See also N. Y. Eve. Post, D 4 and 5, 1823.

" At a public meeting at the Tontine Coffee House the following resolution is passed: "Resolved, That this meeting esteem it highly becoming the people of the United States, to sympathize with the Greeks in their present struggle for liberty, and as far as can be done without interfering with the prerogative of Government, to render them every possible aid towards the promotion of their emancipation." A committee of 70 is appointed to receive subscriptions in aid of the Greeks and to memorialize congress to recognize their independence.—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 3, 1823. For the activities of various societies and wards in raising money, see ibid., N 21, D 6, 15, 16, 17, 19, 20, 22, 26, 27, 30, and 31, 1823; M. C. C. (1874–1831), XIII: 393, 434; N. Y. Mirror, I: 59, 167, 182. See also Ja 1, 8, and My 3, 1824.

4 St. Thomas's Episcopal Church has its inception, at a meeting, in a residence at Hester and Broome Sts. (a good residential section of the city), which was called to consider building an Episcopal church "above Canal street,"—at this time out in the country.—N. Y. Times, N 25, 1923. The building was commenced immediately, in this year, at the north-west corner of Broadway and Houston St.—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 216. For laying of corner-stone, see Jl 27, 1824. See, further, L. M. R. K., III: 934.

8 A committee reports to the common council that the dry measures hitherto used in this city have not been in conformity with the state standard, and that those used on one side of the city have varied from those used on the other. Deeming it a matter of vital importance to the commerce of the state to have a uniform standard, they have procured a complete set of copper measures from

1823 Dec. 8 half a bushel down to a pint, from the state sealer; they have caused these to be deposited in the office of the street commissioner.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 384.

15 The common council unanimously agrees that the corporation of this city ought to consist of two branches (see O 27), "each having a negative on the proceedings of the other."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 402–5. A bill to this effect was approved on March 1, 1824, and directed to be transmitted to the legislature.—Ibid., XIII: 565–66. The law was passed on April 3, 1824 (q.v.), but was not ratified until April 7, 1830 (q.v.).

19 At the annual meeting of the Society for the Prevention of Pauperism, at the City Hotel, the establishment of a "House of Refuge for Juvenile Delinquents in the City of New York" is strongly recommended, and the Society for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents is thereupon organized for the purpose.—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 23, 1823, and F 14, 1824.

22 The committee on applications to the legislature submits to the common council an amendment to the "Act to lay a duty on Strong Liquors," which provides that the mayor and two aldermen shall issue the licenses hereafter. This is adopted.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 415. A certified copy of this law was laid before the board on April 26, 1824.—Ibid., XIII: 681. See O 13.

23 The well-known poem, beginning "'Twas the night before Christmas," written by Clement C. Moore, LL.D., at "Chelsea," his ancestral residence in New York, is first published in the Troy Sentinel, of this date. See Ag 16, 1750.

29 It is reported to the common council that the front of the fever hospital is to be placed "90 feet east of the first Avenue and the North end on the South line of 24th Street." Paupers and convicts are at work clearing the ground and quarrying stone for the foundations. The building will be much larger than absolutely required for a fever hospital, as, in all probability, it will seldom be needed for that purpose; consequently the basement will be fitted for the accommodation of lunatics.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 435–36. See N 25, 1822, and N 21, 1825.

" Hudson Square is to be preserved as an ornamental park (see Ap 1), a project being abandoned to divide it into building lots. The reason why the square has remained so long unimproved appears to have been as follows: The vestry of Trinity Church sold the lease of the lots fronting the square for the term of 99 years, subject to an annual ground-rent, and incumbered with certain restrictions respecting the manner of building. Prospective buyers objected to lease-hold property and to such restrictions. These objections are now removed, the vestry consenting to sell the reversion of the lots in fee-simple, allowing the buyers until May first, 1824, to consider it. "More than nine tenths of them have already accepted the terms. We may now, therefore, expect that buildings will be erected with all convenient expedition in this desirable part of the city. The Vestry of Trinity Church deserve much credit for setting the example, by building a spacious house for their Rector, fronting on Hudson Square, to be occupied by Bishop Hobart."—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 29, 1823.

31 The balance in the city treasury is $28,460.72, and the city debt is $1,078,415.68.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 451.

— In this year, the United States of Mexico was established, with Guadalupe Victoria as president.—Winsor, VIII: 227.

— In this year was published in New York The Hist. of the Treadmill, by James Hardie. This mode of punishment, in operation at the almshouse, is described, with "a general view of the penitentiary system." Among important timely observations, there is a chapter on "measures to be enforced to lessen the number of crimes." See Ag 18.

— In this year, the first New York City directory to give a list of the streets was published by Thomas Longworth.—See copy in N. Y. P. L.

— "New York viewed from a distance at which the eye can take in its full length, from Hoboken for instance, or the heights of Brooklyn, has the air of a metropolis. The long line of shipping before the wharfs, the numerous lofty spires and turrets, the steam-boats incessantly moving; all these manifest it to be a place of vast importance. A walk through it, however, dissipates much of the idea of grandeur excited by a distant view. With the exception of Broadway, Hudson Street, and Greenwich Street, there are few streets deserving particular notice. Most of the steeples are of wood, appearing mean to those accustomed to the sight of stone ones. Of the public buildings, the City Hall and St. Paul's church, are the only two of tasteful architecture. The Catholic cathedral is large but not beautiful. There is no exchange for the merchants, and the shops are less splendid than the size of the city would lead one to expect. But when the feelings of disappointment have subsided, and the pedestrian knows what to regard, he may find enough to gratify. Broadway extends the whole length of the city, dividing [it] into two nearly equal parts. It is wide, and in several parts planted with trees. The houses are built of red brick, and are lofty and spacious. . . . 1824 —

"The streets are not so cleanly swept as they should be; the reason for which is, that it is left to each housekeeper to sweep before his own door, instead of sweepers being appointed by the corporation. Pigs are suffered to run at large, a thing of which many of the inhabitants are ashamed, but which the greater part contend for as contributory to the healthiness of the city! The animal and vegetable matter thrown into the streets would, it is contended, putrify and taint the air, were it not for the pigs. . . ."—A Summary View of America By an Englishman (London, 1824), 22–24.

— A Census of the New Buildings erected in 1824, arranged according to materials and number of stories; documents, interesting to the Christian, the Merchant, the Man of Inquiry, and the Public in General, is the title of an 8vo volume by James Hardie, published in New York in 1825.

— During this year, there were erected in the city, principally in the 8th, 9th, 10th, and 11th Wards, more than 1,600 houses—"720 of brick or stone, 503 brick fronts, 401 of wood: 49 were one story, 1,293 two stories, 228 three stories, 49 four stories or upwards. A corresponding and great increase took place in the value of real estate, especially in the northern parts of the city, and in the environs, particularly at Brooklyn. Also, a great enlargement of population."—Goodrich, Picture of N. Y. (1828), 129.

— In this year, the Second Unitarian Society in the city was started, and its church built at the corner of Prince and Green Sts. This was burned in 1838. In 1827, this society united with the Chambers St. Unitarian Church to found a burial-ground on 2d St.—Bellows, The First Congregational Church, &c. (1879). See also L. M. R. K., III: 937.

— The Friends meeting-house on Pearl St., erected in 1775 (q.v.), between Franklin Square and Oak St., is taken down, and its place supplied by stores and dwellings.—Greenleaf, 116–17; Onderdonk, Annals of Hempstead, 102; L. M. R. K., III: 928.

Jan. — Canvas White (see Ap 1, 1822) presents to the common council a report of his investigations of the feasibility of obtaining a water supply from the Bronx River. He thinks favourably of the idea and states that the supply from the Bronx will be sufficient for many years, and when necessary it can be supplemented by conducting water from Byram River to Rye Pond or from Sawkill River to the Bronx. In his opinion, the only way in which the Croton River can be utilized is by building an aqueduct along the Hudson.

White outlines four plans by which water may be conducted from Bronx River to New York. Two of these provide for a dam across the river near Williamsbridge and a canal thence to a small reservoir at Macomb's Dam, from which the water may be pumped, by utilizing the action of the tides, to a receiving reservoir on Manhattan Island. Thence it is to be conducted through a line of 30-inch cast-iron pipes to a distributing reservoir near the city. Plans 3 and 4 are for a gravity supply, the water being taken from the Bronx at the pond of the Westchester Cotton Factory, which by means of a dam is to be raised six feet, to an elevation of 62 feet above the Park, thence to the Harlem River and the city as in Plans 1 and 2. The estimates vary, according to the plan, from $921,711.00 to $1,949,542.65.

Benjamin Wright (see N 24, 1823) submits a report at the same time, in which he agrees with White.—Wegmann, N. Y. City's Water Supply, 1658–1895, 14–15; Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 217. No action on the reports was taken by the common council, according to the minutes. See, however, Ap 12.

1 On this day there were 326 vessels in New York harbour.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 8, 1824.

" A "Bachelor's Ball" is held in aid of the Greeks (see D 2, 1823), and the sum of $266.44 is raised.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 12, 1824; N. Y. Mirror, I: 183. See Ja 8.

1824 Jan. 8 A grand military ball is held at the Park Theatre for the benefit of the Greeks and in honour of Jackson's victory at New Orleans. About 2,000 people are present. "The interior of the theatre presented a most brilliant appearance. The pit and stage were covered with a new flooring, and marked out for twenty cotillions. The stage represented a most magnificent grotto, inlaid with glittering isinglass and pearly shells, illuminated with a thousand lamps. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 9, 1824; N. Y. Mirror, I: 183, 191; M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 417.

" A prominent New York editor observes: ". . . there is not a city in the world which, in all respects, has advanced with greater rapidity, than the city of New-York, within these ten years. Whichever way we turn, new buildings present themselves to our notice. In the upper wards particularly, entire streets of elegant brick buildings have been formed on scites which only a few years ago were either covered with marshes, or occupied by a few straggling frame huts of little or no value.—The improvements in the vicinity of Canal street are, perhaps, the most extraordinary. Almost a city of itself has sprung up there, and on what, only two or three years ago, was a stagnant pool, prejudicial to health, and entirely unproductive, we now behold at least 250 good substantial dwelling houses, many of them occupied by people of fashion; and such is the spirit for building in the neighborhood of this street, that present appearances indicate an equal number of new houses before the end of the present year. In Greenwich, too, and along the Bowery, the number of houses is fast increasing. In the former, property has considerably risen in value, and the opening of streets and avenues which have recently taken place must gradually promote that rise. Nor can it be doubted that the trade consequent on the Navigation of the Grand Canal and the branches connected with it, will in a few years cause the whole of the shores of the North river in this direction, to be covered with stores and yards for receiving, packing, and shipping the products to foreign ports. Already is our coasting trade unrivalled; and the amount of duties on imports and tonnage greater than the whole of Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk and Savannah, put together. . . . We have likewise a greater number of packet ships than all the ports of the Union collectively. . . ."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 8, 1824.

19 Gen. William Paulding is elected mayor by the common council. He took the oath of office on Jan. 26.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 503, 509–10; N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 20, 1824. He succeeds Stephen Allen (see Mr 5, 1821); and was himself succeeded by Philip Hone on Jan. 3, 1826 (q. v.).

" In his annual statement to the common council of the fiscal concerns of the city, the mayor reports that the "City debt in 1816 amounted only, to $600.000, but owing, principally, to the heavy demands upon the Treasury for improvements projected by the Common Council of 1814 and 1815, amounting to nearly half a Million of dollars, and the want of a regular system in making the calculations of the probable receipts and disbursements . . . the debt has been increased to $1,300.000."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 485.

" The city inspector reports to the common council that during the previous year the "Deaths by Consumption were Six Hundred and eighty three. . . . The Yellow Fever menaced our City during the Summer months, but, owing to the vigilance of our public authorities, under the protection of Providence, its progress was soon arrested, one fatal case was only reported as such, which was brought here from Havanna, by the Ship Diana. . . . It is to be regretted that the Small Pox or a disease very analogous to it, has made its appearance in our City, and still continues, eighteen persons died of this complaint in November and December. Its return after its having disappeared in this City, since July 1818, should urge with increased energy the practice of vaccination."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 494–95. On April 26, the trustees of the city dispensary reported that 2,844 persons had received the "Kine Pock" inoculation through the medium of the society during the past year.—Ibid., XIII: 692. See Ja 17, 1825.

" The common council resolves that the side walks around the Park shall be flagged.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 498.

22 The "Market Place," reduced in size in 1815, ceases to be a market-place, is no longer reserved for public uses, and streets and avenues are to be continued through it.—Laws of N. Y. (1824), chap. 10. See the Randel Survey, Ap 1, 1811.

Jan. 26 M. M. Noah writes to the mayor: "A new invention for boring the earth for pure water, has been in successful operation in England for the last three years. In a late journey through one of the Southern States, I saw one of the machines in operation, formed from a plan or drawing, and became at once convinced that a similar apparatus would facilitate us in ascertaining beyond any doubt, the quality of water on this island, and the probable quantity which can be conveyed to the city.

"I have great pleasure in acquainting you, and through you the Common Council, that I have not only furnished myself with the necessary drawings of the machinery but have made several improvements upon them, and feel perfectly assured, that a depth of 400 feet can be bored with this apparatus; and from its portable nature, it can be conveyed to any spot where a probability exists of striking upon a vein of pure rock water.

"There appears to be no doubt that a number of Springs can be found in a line from the North to the East River, commencing above the junction of Bowery and Broadway, and continuing the survey to Harlem Heights, and water of a soft and pure quality be found in sufficient quantity to supply all our wants, which, being raised and conveyed into reservoirs, can with ease, be piped throughout the city.

"I have lately been exploring the ground over which that fine sheet of water called the Collect formerly flowed, and which has been so improvidently filled in. Had it been merely one spring, its recovery would have been doubtful: but as there were several, which, united, covered something like three or four acres, and was always considered exceedingly deep, I am impressed with the belief that by boring with this apparatus, through about thirty feet of earth filled in, and pursuing it through mud and gravel, to the depth of from 70 to 100 feet, we shall probably arrive at the water as it was formerly used, and if found to be pure, measures may then be adopted to recover this invaluable gift, by sinking the proper basins and reservoirs.

"If the improvements in the neighborhood of the collect shall have impaired the quality of the water, we have still the opportunity left of making the experiment, within a few miles of the city, where the hills have not been levelled.

"The Manhattan Company, I learn, have been lately furnished with a similar apparatus, and will also commence boring for water on this plan. That company is very zealous in efforts to improve the character of the water, and make discoveries of new and pure sources, and therefore will promptly co-operate in any experiment, for the attainment of this laudible object. . . .

"I make this communication to the Common Council, in order that any contemplated measure, by which the funds of the city may be pledged for this object, may, for the present, be suspended, and I shall be happy to confer with any Committee which the Common Council may deem proper to appoint, feeling assured that a deep interest will be felt by our citizens in any attempt that may be made to furnish more pure and wholesome water, than that which we are now under the necessity of using."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ja 29, 1824. This is referred to the water committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 511. See N 24, 1823, and Ja 17, 1825.

" It is resolved to open Eighth St. from the Bowery to Sixth Ave.; also, to open Fifth Ave. from its commencement to 13th St.; and to extend Thompson St. from the southerly line of Amity Lane (between Bleecker and Amity Sts.) to Fifth Ave.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 515–16. Regarding Fifth Ave., see also Fifth Avenue pub. for Fifth Ave. Bank (1915). This date marks the beginning of this avenue's history, the centennial of which was celebrated in Nov., 1924.—See the June, 1924, bulletin of the Fifth Ave. Assn.; N. Y. Times, N 15 et seq., 1924. See also, S 27.

" It is resolved that the thanks of the common council be presented to the Hon. Stephen Allen, late mayor, for the able and faithful manner in which he discharged the arduous duties of that office; and that he be asked to sit for his portrait to be placed in the gallery of paintings in the city hall.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 517.

Feb. 2 The trustees of the city dispensary petition the common council for permission to purchase the lease granted by the corporation to John Vanderlyn of the land on which the "Rotunda" is built. They desire it for the "Sole purposes of the Dispensary and as a place to receive the poor applying for Medicines and Attendance."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 519. A year later 1824 Feb. 2 they again petitioned, stating that the great increase of the number of applicants for relief rendered the house occupied by them "inconvenient for want of sufficient room." The panoramic rotunda (see Je 21, 1924) would better accommodate the 8,000 to 10,000 people who have applied for help during the past year.—Ibid., XIV: 337. See D 19, 1825.

" William B. Astor, president pro tem. of the American Fur Co., and others, petition the common council to make application to the legislature for an alteration of the health law prohibiting bringing furs from the interior of the United States during the summer.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 520. On March 1, the board decided to comply with this request.—Ibid., XIII: 582–83.

4 The steamboat "Oliver Ellsworth" is launched from the shipyard of Messrs. Isaac Webb & Co.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 5, 1824. See also ibid., My 7, 1824.

8 The new Dutch Reformed Church at the corner of Broome and Green Sts. is to be opened on this day.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 6, 1824. See also L. M. R. K., III: 934.

9 The steamboat "Linnæus," to ply between New York and Flushing, is launched from the yard of Messrs. Lawrence & Sneeden.—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 9, 1824.

16 The General Society of Mechanics and Tradesmen of New York City asks the common council that the annual rent of $125 reserved on their lease may be remitted because their resources are not sufficient to extend their library as they wish.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 538–39. On Dec. 6, a resolution of thanks was received by the board from the society for the "generous relinquishment of five Years, of the Ground rent on which their Institution is erected, as a contribution, in aid of the funds for the purchase of Books for the use of the Library."—Ibid., XIV: 164. On Dec. 19, 1825, the "Apprentices Library" committee presented the board with a catalogue of the 242 volumes purchased with money donated by the corporation.—Ibid., XV: 101. See Ap 9, 1821.

" The committee to whom was referred the subject of the propriety of digging out Henry St., reports to the common council that the present seems to be the proper time, as much earth is wanted for filling the Battery and "the meadows at Manhattan Island."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 541. For the "Manhattan Island" here referred to, see L. M. R. K., III: 966.

28 A benefit performance is given at a circus on Canal St., between Broadway and Elm St.—N. Y. Daily Adv., F 28, 1824. On March 5, a "New Circus, Canal Street," was advertised.—Ibid., Mr 5, 1824.

Mar. 1 Word is received by the common council that, in a message to the legislature, the governor of New York has expressed the opinion that no further docking out in the East River is proper. The opinion of the board is requested on this subject. A committee (M. C. C., 1784–1831, XIII: 570), to whom this was referred, reported on March 15 that the governor feared that the docking out in the East River might injure navigation by increasing the rapidity of the tide. He thought too that a survey of the harbour should be made and laid before the legislature. But the committee had no knowledge of any such inconvenience at the present time, nor that any further docking out was intended, nor that there was any necessity of a new survey of the harbour. The report was approved.—Ibid., XIII: 610–12. In this report mention was made of the fact that the charter of the city granted to the corporation all the "ground covered by water on Hudson river from Bestavers Kilitie [see L. M. R. K., III: 966] to the South of the Street described as running before our fort in New York to Hudson River."—Ibid., XIII: 610.

" The corporation agrees to convey to the Society for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents the piece of ground lying at the junction of the Bloomingdale and Old Post Roads, on which the U. S. arsenal is situated, as soon as a release can be obtained from the federal government. The property is to be used for a "House of Refuge."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 578–79. The managers of the institution completed the purchase from the U. S. government in June, and intended "as soon as possible to have these premises put in proper order for the reception of juvenile delinquents."—Com. Adv., Je 15, 1824. The deed from the city was directed to be executed on Nov. 22.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 139–40; Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 762. The House of Refuge was opened on Jan. 1, 1825 (q.v.). See also L. M. R. K., III: 954.

" The subject of converting the debtors' "Gaol" into a criminal prison comes before the common council. The committee reports that for a long time the keepers of the prison have complained that the building is too small, and inconvenient for the purposes for which it is intended. Until within a few years, when public attention has been directed to the moral discipline attained by classifying offenders, no objection was made to the indiscriminate assembling of the young, old, the felon, the unfortunate, or indiscreet in the same hall. That such classification should be made, no one can now doubt. As an illustration, the case is cited of a "decent man" who was imprisoned in one of the rooms with notorious felons; in the course of the night he was robbed and injured by them. "At this moment a man charged with murder and who ought in common humanity to be allowed the priviledge, if he be guilty, of making his peace with God, is exposed to the interruptions and ribaldry of the abandoned wretches confined within the same hall." In cases of sickness, no accommodation in the bridewell can be afforded to the patient. The building now used for the confinement of debtors being larger and more commodious than the bridewell, if converted into a criminal prison, would obviate many of the inconveniences which at present exist, and it would be an easy matter to provide a suitable place for a debtors' jail. The board resolves to bring this subject before the legislature.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 580–82. See D 20. Mar. 1

On the same day, the board refers to a committee a resolution that the jail and buildings on the ground lying between Free School No. 1 and the Park be removed, and so much of the public property be disposed of as will pay for building a place suitable for a city prison.—Ibid., XIII: 591.

4 A general meeting of citizens of all parties is held at the City Hotel, and resolutions are adopted protesting against the tariff bill now before congress.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Mr 5, 1824. The bill was passed by the house of representatives on April 16 by a vote of 107 to 102.—Ibid., Ap 19, 1824. The senate passed it, with amendments, on May 13.—Ibid., My 17, 1824. See also ibid., My 20 and 22, 1824.

6 "A new brick, fire-proof building, of a capacity for fifteen hundred auditors, has been erected in Chatham Garden [see Ag 2, 1823], for theatrical representations, and will be opened about the first of May, . . ."—N. Y. Mirror, I: 251, 295. See My 17.

15 "Isaac Wright and Sons" and others petition the common council for a lease of the flagstaff (on the Battery) for the ensuing year, for they find the "telegraphic Establishment at the Flag Staff is of great utility to the Merchants and Ship Owners of the City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 595.

22 John C. and Robert L. Stevens obtain a lease for a ferry "from a place on Hudson River in the City 80 feet West of Washington St. At the termination of an intended St. 30 ft. wide, between ground the site of the late Canal St Basin on the north and ground of Alexander L Stewart on the South to Hoboken on the Jersey Shore."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 626. See "Hoboken Ferry" in L. M. R. K., III: 943.

29 The "Society for the reformation of Juvenile Delinquents in the city of New York" (see Mr 1) is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1824), chap. 126; Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 627–28. Its charter was amended in 1826.—Laws of N. Y. (1826), chap. 24.

" The common council resolves that it will "afford to the Corporation & to their fellow Citizens very great Satisfaction if the Legislature will be pleased to meet in this City, at their autumnal Session," and that suitable apartments will be provided.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 644. On April 26, word was received that the speaker of the assembly wished to make "known to the Corporation the high sense which the Assembly Entertain of the Public Spir[i]t and liberal offer" of the common council.—Ibid., XIII: 680–81.

Apr. 3 The legislature passes a law "to alter the organization of the Common Council of the City of New York." The law embodies the features of a report submitted to the common council on Oct. 27, 1823 (q.v.), and agreed to unanimously by that body, Dec. 15, 1823 (q.v.). The act is not to become effective unless ratified by a majority of the electors.—Laws of N. Y. (1824), chap. 155. It failed of ratification. See My 31.

" David Hosack and other physicians and private citizens testify to the injurious quality of the water supplied by the Manhattan Company.—Certificates, relative to Manhattan Water in N. Y. (1824?).

10 The legislature authorises the corporation of New York City "to cause to be erected and built, or to appropriate any building

1824 Apr. 10 or buildings already built, at one or more places within the said city and county of New York, as the gaol of the said city, for the confinement of persons on civil process," also one or more places "as the city prison or bridewell."—Laws of N. Y. (1824), chap. 213. See Mr 9, 1829; Jl 12 and Ag 23, 1830.

" Tammany Hall "has been taken by the U. S. Circuit & District Courts, at a rent of $1,500 per annum, for the purpose of its regular sittings; the Tammany Society to be allowed, as formerly, to meet for the election of their officers, and the transaction of their ordinary business, but no public meetings are allowed to be held there while it is occupied as a court room."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 10, 1824. See S 13.

12 The legislature authorises the canal commissioners to borrow $1,000,000 for the completion of the Erie and Champlain Canals.—Laws of N. Y. (1824), chap. 255.

" The committee on supplying the city with water reports to the common council that Canvas White (see Ap 1, 1822, and N 24, 1823) "has examined the practicability and Estimated the Expense of furnishing this City with a Sufficiency of wholesome water," that he has also examined "Several routes and plans by which it Seems practicable to accomplish this desirable object," and that "These routes & Plans are delineated on a Map and noticed in a Report of Mr White [see Jan.] now in the possession of your Committee." The board thereupon pays White $1,100.15 for his services.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 658.

15 Work on the Delaware and Chesapeake Canal is begun, at Newbold's Landing.—Scharf & Westcott, Hist. of Phila., I: 608.

19 In response to a previous general notice, between 8,000 and 10,000 people, embracing all classes and all political parties, assemble in the Park, and condemn the legislature's removal of De Witt Clinton as one of the Canal commissioners. They also extend thanks to him for his 14 years' service "in the prosecution of the Grand Western and Northern Canals, without salary or reward."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 20, 1824. Similar action was taken in Albany.—Ibid., Ap 21, 1824. See also ibid., Ap 28 and My 15, 1824.

" Announcement is made that "The Works of the Manhattan Company are now in the most complete order, and the public may be assured of a steady and regular supply of water. They can supply some thousand houses more than formerly, having upwards of twenty five miles of pipe through the city. The quality of the water is as good as can be found; and the Company having lately replaced many of the old [pipes] with new ones, the water will be received clearer and in better order than heretofore. The expense of conducting the water in leaden pipes from the main pipes to dwellings is much reduced, and unless when the distance is very great, will not exceed 10 to $12 per house. The Company Guarantee to those who subscribe for the water, a regular supply at all seasons of the year."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 19, 1824. See Ag 7.

22 The "first public exhibition of Gas lights manufactured by Mr. Timothy Dewey, agent of the Gas Light Company in this city," takes place in a house at 286 Water St., the first house in New York to be lighted by gas. "All doubt as to its practicability was at once removed. In point of economy, safety, and cleanness, it appeared perfectly obvious that this mode of lighting our streets, public buildings, manufactories, and dwelling houses, surpasses every thing of the kind that has hitherto been attempted by oil or candles."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 23, 1824. See also ibid., Ap 24 and My 12, 1824. See Je 23. The statement that No 7 Cherry St., the home of Samuel Leggett, first president of the N. Y. Gas Co., was the first to be lighted by gas, in 1825 (see view in Man. Com. Coun., 1861, p. 308), appears to be an error.

26 The name of Fly Market St. is changed to Maiden Lane.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 694. See also De Voe's Market Book, 170–71.

29 "It would appear that our citizens are at last to be accommodated with an Exchange; the Directors of the Merchants' Exchange Company [see Ja 27, 1823] having purchased the Buchanan property in Wall street, as a suitable place for erecting a building. It cost about $100,000, has a front of 114 feet, including Wall street House; and extends backwards to Sloat Lane." —N. Y. Eve. Post, Ap 29, 1824. See also L. M. R. K., III: 925. Apr. 29

The sum of $31,932.29 has been "collected and transmitted by the committee of the Greek fund in this city [see D 2, 1823] to Baring, Brothers & Co. London, to aid the Greeks in their struggle for liberty."—N. Y. Eve. Post, F 13 and My 3, 1824. May 3

Signor Causici (see O 13, 25, and 27, 1823) informs the common council that "the Model of the Equestrian Statue of Genl Washington will be compleated next Monday," and that Mr "Persico," an Italian artist, has assisted him in finishing it. The board resolves to view the statue.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 713. See also ibid., XIII: 733; and descrip. of Pl. 100, III: 592. This was evidently a new model. See, further, Jl 1 and 3. 10

Three members of the common council who attended the examination of the children of the African Free Schools, at the schoolhouse, No. 5 Mott St. near Prince St. (M. C. C., 1784–1831, XIII: 681), report highly satisfactory work done by these pupils. "The whole together furnished a clear and Striking proof of the value of the Monitorial System of Education and of the Public Spirit & useful labours of those of our fellow Citizens who by their Zeal and perseverance & for no other reward than the pleasure of doing good have been able to produce such Specimens of improvement in the hitherto neglected and despised descendants of Africa." This mental and religious training enables them to "look forward to the time when through their instrumentality in part the degradation that belongs to their Colour and their name shall be wiped off & Ethiopia shall Stretch forth her hands unshackled by Slavery and unstained by the pollutions of Ignorance and Idolatry."—Ibid., XIII: 713–14. "

The city allows $600 for the vaccine department of its dispensary.—Journal C, 318, comptroller's office. This step is probably taken to prevent the recurrence of the epidemic of 1822. "

The Chatham Garden Theatre (see Mr 6) is opened.—N. Y. Eve. Post, My 17, 18, and 19, 1824. It is on the north side of Chatham St., between Duane and Pearl Sts., running through to Augustus St. (now City Hall Pl.). A temporary structure had been erected here in 1822.—Brown, I: 84; L. M. R. K., III: 983. See My 9, 1925. 17

The common council receives a report from a committee of the grand jury which has visited the lunatics' apartments at the almshouse. It states that these rooms are totally insufficient for the safe keeping of sane persons, much less of lunatics.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 732–33. 24

At a special election, the law providing for a division of the common council into two branches fails of ratification by a small majority. A newspaper comments: "The apathy that has prevailed on this occasion is astonishing. There are fifteen thousand voters in this city, and only about four thousand votes have been taken. While the friends of the bill have individually remained at home, in the full assurance that everybody else would go and vote 'Yes,' its opponents, by raising the ridiculous cry of 'Lords and Commons,' have rallied out enough to put an end to the matter."—N. Y. Spectator, Je 4, 1824. 31

The N. Y. Gas Light Co. having erected in Franklin Square "an iron Lamp post, of the kind in use in London, for the purpose of shewing the corporation and citizens of New York the superiority of this description of light over any other," it is lighted this evening, "to the gratification of hundreds."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 12, 1824. On June 21, the common council accepted an invitation to visit the lamp post on June 23 (q. v.).—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 774, containing facsimile of letter to Mayor Paulding from the manager of the company. June 11

The corner-stone of St. Mary's Church at Manhattanville (see F 4) is laid on this day.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 12, 1824. 15

The recorder presents the following preamble and resolution to the common council: "Whereas the Senate and House of Representatives have lately by a concurrent resolution requested the President of the United States to give to the Marquis De La Fayette, an invitation to Visit this Country, and to Communicate to him the Assurances of grateful and affectionate attachment still cherished towards him by the Government and the People. 21

"And as a further demonstration of respect, Congress directed that a National Ship of the line ['Cadmus'], should be offered to the Marquis for the purpose of Conveying him to the U States.

"And it being understood that the invitation has been given 1824 June 21 and accepted, and that our distinguished Visitor may probably, shortly arrive at our City, Influenced as this Board is by a respectful deference to the Constituted authorities of the General Government and animated by the highest esteem for the public and private virtues of the Marquis De La Fayette, It is therefore resolved, That the Corporation of the City of New York, acting in behalf of their fellow Citizens will receive and treat, the Marquis De La Fayette, as a Guest of the Nation."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 774–75. See Jl 19.

" The common council is petitioned by people living near the 9-mile-stone "to have the 10th Avenue opened from the Seat of Mrs Hamilton to that of Mr. Jumel." Referred to road committee.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 757.

" The common council rules that booths may be erected around the Park, and let to individuals for Independence Day, as a convenience to the large number of people who crowd into the city for this celebration.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 769–70.

" The common council resolves that, since disorder and confusion are introduced into the fire department by admitting occasional volunteers to assist the various fire companies and to assume the dress and authority of firemen, hereafter they will dispense with the services of such volunteers.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 774.

" The committee on lands and places reports to the common council that Castle Clinton has been leased for 5 years to Francis B. Fitch, Arthur Roorbach, and J. Rathbone, at the annual rent of $1,400. The counsel of the board is authorised to prepare the lease.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 733, 775–76. On July 19, in petitioning the corporation for a lease for 10 years, the lessees stated that they had already expended over $3,000 in improving Castle Clinton, and that they were contemplating other improvements, even more extensive; also that the name had now been changed to Castle Garden.—Ibid., XIII: 791. On Nov. 22, the common council resolved to execute the lease of Castle Garden under certain conditions, among which were that no billiards or gaming of any kind should take place on the premises, neither should dancing be allowed without the mayor's permission.—Ibid., XIV: 145–46. See Je 16, 1823, and Jl 3, 1824. See also L. M. R. K., III: 983.

23 "The building for manufacturing gas from oil, is going on rapidly under the immediate inspection of Timothy Dewey, Esq., the agent and manager of the company. The pipes having now arrived, and all arrangements completed, the laying of them will be commenced immediately, and there is no reason to doubt that a part of Broadway, and probably, of Pearl-st. will be lighted with gas the ensuing winter. This evening the corporation visit the establishment in Water Street [see Ap 22] and also the Lamp, in Franklin square [see Je 11], which will be brilliantly illuminated.—There is now only one opinion as to the great advantages which our city will derive from this improved mode of lighting our streets, manufactories, public buildings and dwelling houses."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 23, 1824. The gas-works were on the s. e. cor. of Centre and Hester Sts.—L. M. R. K., III: 962. See, further, Jl 16.

" A letter to the editor of the Post complains of the need of a watch-house in the First Ward. It states: "A few years ago, the corporation sold the old watch house at the corner of Broad and Wall-streets [see Je 3, 1793, regarding its origin], and purchased a lot in Beaver street, for the purpose of building a watch-house there, which was erected and then let out, and the watch sent to the City Hall. There has been a watch-house in this part of the city from its first settlement, till within a few years."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 23, 1824.

27 The "New Church on the corner of Prince and Orange [Marion] streets" is to be opened on this day.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Je 26, 1824. This was the Prince Street Universalist Church.—L. M. R. K., III: 937.

July 1 A request of Messrs. Causici and Persico (see My 10) for permission to exhibit to the public, in the building where it is now placed, the new model of an equestrian statue of Washington is referred to the committee on arts and sciences.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 780.

" The watch committee reports to the common council that they have "learnt with great Concern, that the lower part of the City is infested by a gang of Robbers, who have recently entered by Night several Warehouses. . . . Our City has been so long exempt from the horrors of midnight Robbery that it is feared the Citizens have relaxed in those precautions necessary for the preservation of their property."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 782. July 1

The following announcement is issued: "The Committee appointed two years ago [see Mr 6, 1822] to devise measures for erecting an equestrian statue of General Washington, though delayed in their progress, have never lost sight of the object of their appointment, and they have now arrived at the conclusions which are herewith submitted. 3

"It has been ascertained that an equestrian statue in bronze, of colossal size, may be erected and completed for the sum of $40,000—a sum much less than had heretofore been estimated as necessary, . . .

"They [the committee] propose then, that meetings shall be held in every ward, for the purpose of organizing a large committee, which shall go round the ward and receive from every individual whatever sum, however trifling, his means may enable him to contribute . . . The Committee suggest Monday, 12th July, as a proper time for meeting. . . ."—Com. Adv., Jl 3, 1824. See O 11 and N 18.

" "Messrs. Rathbone & Fitch, who have leased of the Corporation the Castle at the Battery [see Je 21], have nearly completed their improvements, and this splendid place of resort will be opened to the public this evening. . . . Under the inner arcade, are erecting fifty boxes, ventilated by the port holes of the Castle. Each box contains a table and seats for eight persons. The circular walk on the top, covered with an awning, is upwards of 500 feet in length, and 14 feet in width. On this platform or walk are on both sides benches extending the whole 500 feet, and across the ends. From this walk, the waters of our Bay, the Narrows, the Hudson, and interesting landscapes, &c. are in full view, with all the bustle of our floating commerce. . . . In addition to the improvements above mentioned, there are several apartments, such as a commodious bar room, sitting-rooms, kitchen, &c. and we understand if the proprietors can obtain an extension of their lease, they will erect commodious ball and dining rooms. It is calculated, that about two thousand persons may now find comfortable seats on and within the walls of this Castle. With that discretion so important in establishments of this magnitude, the Castle Garden must become the most fashionable and healthy place of resort in this country; and as the price of admittance will be but a mere trifle, and within the reach of all, we hope that the honorable Corporation will see the propriety of extending the lease so far as to induce the occupants to continue their improvements, which have already cost them upwards of $3000."—N. Y. Gaz. & Gen. Adv., Jl 3, 1824.

The citizens connected with the various New York literary societies hold a dinner at Washington Hall in honour of "the venerable Judge Trumbull of Connecticut, the author of M'Fingal, one of the earliest and most deservedly popular of American authors." Chancellor Kent presides, and Fitz-Greene Halleck, Gulian C. Verplanck, John Pintard, Gen. Swift, and Dr. Mitchill are among those present.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 16, 1824. 15

"We observe with pleasure that the works of the Gas Light Company are rapidly progressing. The building [see Je 23] is considerably advanced, and the main pipes have been laid in Canal st. as far as Broadway, where the ground was opened this morning to continue them to the Battery. The pipes imported, have been found on trial, to be perfectly tight. All is bustle and activity, under the immediate superintendance of Mr. Dewey."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 16, 1824. The committee on making arrangements for the reception in this country of the Marquis de Lafayette, composed of Recorder Richard Riker, Aldermen Philip Hone, Asa Mann, and George Zabriskie, reports to the common council. They have taken spacious apartments for the marquis, his family, and suite, at the City Hotel, and an equipage has been provided which shall be constantly at his service; they have endeavored to avoid all unmeaning pomp or parade, for "Vain and ostentatious ceremonies would be equally unacceptable to our illustrious visitor, as opposed to our republican habits. There are occasions, however, where the American people choose to pour forth their feelings in acts of unrestrained hospitality, munificence and even profusion. Such will be the case when the Marquis arrives in our City."—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIII: 794; Post, Jl 20, 1824. See Ag 15. 19

1824 July 19 The common council accepts from Capt. Henry Robinson the gift of an engraved likeness of the Marquis de Lafayette which they direct shall be framed and hung in the gallery of portraits in the city hall.—M. C. C., XIII: 793; N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 20, 1824.

27 The corner-stone of St. Thomas's P. E. Church is laid at the north-west corner of Broadway and Houston St.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Jl 24, 1824; N. Y. Mirror, Je 20, 1829; L. M. R. K., III: 934. Permission was given on Aug. 18, 1824, by the common council, to place a railing in front of the building.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 34. The church was finished and opened Feb. 23, 1826 (q. v.).

29 The naval officers hold a dinner at the City Hotel in honour of James Fenimore Cooper.—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 7, 1824.

Aug. 2 The common council agrees to take the triangular piece of ground included between Grand, Harman (East Broadway), and Scammel Sts. for a public place.—M. C. C. (1784–1831), XIV: 21. This became Grand Street Park.—L. M. R. K., III: 969.

7 ". . . The want of a regular and abundant supply of pure and wholesome water, acknowledged on all hands to be essential to public health, has been long felt among us, and a remedy for the evil long talked of, but without the least prospect of its being accomplished. . . . Sometimes we are told that the Corporation has seriously resolved on taking measures to bring in water; at other times we are informed that this is to be done by a company, who have applied to the legislature for a charter of incorporation. But amidst all these assurances, year after year is allowed to pass without a single step being taken to obtain the necessary supply, which, we are informed, might be obtained at a comparatively small expence, and within a reasonable period, if proper measures were adopted."—N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 7, 1824.

13 Arthur Burtis writes to the board of health that, on this day, he has "closed the Pest House at Kips bay," which, he says, "was opened on the 9th day of november 1823." He reports on the number of smallpox patients received there (224), of whom 60 died. He has spent over $2,000 for its support.—From the original MS. in metal file marked "Filed Papers 1700–1800," etc., in city clerk's record-room.
